The Romans adopted the practice from the Greeks, and ſo it came into uſe among the Celtæ in the weſtern world. In Britain, urn-burial was not confined to the Romans, for we learn from Pomponius that the druids uſed to burn and bury; and it is affirmed, that Bellinus, brother to the Britiſh king Brennus, was burnt. Cæſar ſays that burning was practiſed in Gaul; and ſince we learn from Tacitus, that the Britons were ſoon brought to build temples, to wear the gown, and ſtudy the Roman laws and language, it is no improbable conjecture, that they ſoon alſo conformed to their cuſtoms in burial.

The Saxons, Jutes, and Angles came from parts where burning was antiently practiſed, and the Germans, from whom they deſcended, uſed it, as Tacitus affirms.

In Denmark and Norway many urns have been found, very different from thoſe of the Romans, as may be ſeen in Wormius; whence it ſhould ſeem, that the Danes very antiently burned the dead; indeed Frotho the Great made a law, that princes and great commanders ſhould be committed to the fire, tho' the common ſort had grave-interment. It was alſo the cuſtom of thoſe people to diſtinguiſh the remains of the moſt noble among them, by placing large ſtones in circles about them.

The urns we find are neither uniform in figure, nor of one capacity; the largeſt contain about three gallons, ſome not much above half that meaſure. Some have handles, ears, and long necks, but moſt are of a circular form; many are red, ſome black, ſome covered with brick or tile, and ſome have earthen covers adapted to them, whilſt great numbers have no covering, but the earth preſſed into them. Some have lachrimatories, or tear-bottles, attending them, either as ſacred to the Manes of the deceaſed, or paſſionate expreſſions of their ſurviving friends, who, with hired tears, ſolemnized their obſequies.

Where we find D. M. [Diis Manibus] we commonly meet with Pateræ, and veſſels of libation, upon old ſepulchral monuments. An urn preſerved by cardinal Farneſe contained the heads of ſeveral gods and goddeſſes, an ape of agate, a graſshopper, an elephant of amber, a cryſtal ball, three glaſſes, two ſpoons, and other things, which probably the deceaſed took pleaſure in; and in ſome urns we find money, rings, darts, and pieces of broken armour. It has been conjectured, that the money was intended as a fee for old Charon; but whatever was the deſign, the putting coins in urns, and the preſent practice of burying money in the foundations of noble buildings, are laudable means of chronological diſcovery, and poſterity will applaud them.

As the time is uncertain when the practice of burning the dead began, ſo is that of its ceaſing alſo. Macrobius affirms that it was diſuſed in his days. In Minutius's time, it was objected againſt the Chriſtians, that tho' they did not heſitate, for the cauſe of religion, to give their bodies to be burnt when alive, yet they condemned[w] the practice of burning after death; ſo that we may conclude with great certainty, that it ceaſed about the time of the converſion to chriſtianity; and as the Romans confeſſedly practiſed it after they poſſeſſed Britain, the urns we find here are generally attributed to them, or to the Britons romaniſed. But to return from this digreſſion to my former ſubject.

There was a Roman teſſellated pavement found in a garden in Dyer-ſtreet, belonging to a houſe the property of Mr. Joſeph Small; another was lately diſcovered in digging a cellar in Mr. Cripps's houſe, belonging formerly to the family of the Georges; and another was found, a few years ago, in digging the vault under the ſhambles at the Boothall; and without doubt many more are left for future ages to diſcover. Theſe probably belonged to the halls or principal rooms of ſome great officers under the prætor, or chief magiſtrate that governed the town. The teſſellated pavements were of two orders. Thoſe of the nobler kind, which had uſually the figure of Apollo, or ſome other deity upon them, were called Megalographia, in contradiſtinction to the other ſort of them, on which were repreſentations of moſt inferior beings. This ſort was ſtiled Ropographia. But what thoſe were, of which I have juſt been ſpeaking, is uncertain, as there is no drawing of them, and the works themſelves are deſtroy'd, to the regret of the lovers of antiquity.

The coins that have been found here are chiefly thoſe of Antoninus, Diocleſian, and Conſtantine.

Three Roman conſular ways meet at this place, the great Foſs-way, the Irminſtreet, and the Acman-ſtreet.

The Foſs comes from Scotland, and enters this county from Warwickſhire, by Lemington. It paſſeth thro' Moreton-henmarſh and Stow, by Bourton on the Water, and Northleach, and croſſing the river Coln at a place called Foſs-bridge, leads directly to Cirenceſter.

The Acmanſtreet-way, but ſometimes called the Ickenild-way[x], croſſeth Oxfordſhire, and coming to Broadwell-grove, where it is very high and perfect, enters this county at the pariſh of Eaſtleach, and joins the great Foſs-way about a mile north-eaſt of Cirenceſter. Four miles and a half weſtward of the town, it leaves the turnpike-road, at a place called Jacuments-bottom, but more truly Acman's-bottom, and enters Wiltſhire near Kemble, in its ſtraight courſe to Bath, the Accmannerceaſtep of the Saxons.

[x] 'The Ickenild-way paſs'd not far from it, [Witney] on the 'right Hand in its Courſe to Cirenceſter, where all the four great 'Ways croſs'd.' Diſcourſe concerning ſome Antiquities found in Yorkſhire, publiſhed at the end of Vol. 1. of Leland's Itin. p. 119. The Foſs, on the weſt of Cirenceſter, ar far as Bath, is by ſome writers called the Acmanſtreet-way, and thus Leland makes the number of the Roman ways meeting here, to be four.

Another of the great Roman ways, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Irminſtreet, leads from Caerleon in Monmouthſhire, through Glouceſter and this place, to Cricklade, and ſo on to Southampton[y]. Mercury was thought to preſide over the highways, and the Germans worſhipped him by the name of Irmunſul, whence, according to Mr. Camden, this Roman way derives its name.

The notion which ſome have entertained of theſe roads having been thrown up by one Mulmutius, long before the birth of Chriſt, is now generally exploded. Iſidore's teſtimony, that highways were made almoſt all over the world by the Romans, in which they employ'd the ſoldiery and the people, that they might not grow factious by too much eaſe, goes a great way in determining to whom they ought to be attributed; but further, there are antient records, which ſay, that In the days of Honorius and Arcadius there were made in Britain certain highways from ſea to ſea. And here it may be proper to obſerve, that we derive the cuſtom of placing mile-ſtones on our turnpike-roads from the Romans, for at the end of every mile, along their great roads, pillars were erected by the emperors, with figures cut in them to ſignify the number of miles. Hence Sidonius Apolonius,

Antiquus tibi nec teratur agger,
Cujus per ſpatium ſatis vetuſtis
Nomen Cæſareum viret columnis.

Nor let the antient cauſey be defac'd,
Where, in old pillars, Cæſar's name's expreſs'd.

By the ſides of them were alſo the graves and monuments of famous men, to put the traveller in mind of his own mortality; whence aroſe that uſual apoſtrophe, Siſte Viator, in monumental inſcriptions.

The learned antiquary before mentioned, in his account of Radnorſhire, has ſhewn, that large heaps of ſtones, confuſedly piled up together, are common in Wales, Scotland, Ireland, in the north, and probably in other parts of England, and are called by the Britiſh name Karneu, Karned-beu, and Kairn, which he underſtands to be a primitive word, ſignifying a heap of ſtones. He is of opinion, that moſt of them were intended for memorials of the dead, not only becauſe he obſerved, near the ſummit of one of them, a rude ſtone monument in the form of a coffer or cheſt, but alſo, becauſe it was antiently the cuſtom to throw up large heaps of ſtones for ſepulchral monuments, and in later times, more particularly over the graves of malefactors: What led me to this obſervation, is a piece of ground on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the town, juſt without the old city wall, which goes by the name of the Querns, or Kairns, full of ſuch large heaps of ſtones, but now, in length of time, covered with herbage. Large monumental ſtones have been dug up there, as already taken notice of from Dr. Stukeley, who concluded from thence, that the Querns was the common burying-place of the antient city of Cirenceſter; but, notwithſtanding the name, I am far from thinking thoſe heaps of ſtones are ſo many funeral piles, but rather, that they are heaps of rubbiſh, made by digging for ſtone to raiſe the city wall, or ſome other large buildings.

I muſt not, however, leave the Querns, without firſt taking notice of a plot within it, of an elliptical form, called the Bull-ring, the longeſt diameter of which is ſixty-three yards, the other forty-ſix. Round it is a mound or wall of earth, thrown up to the height of about twenty feet, ſloped on the inſide with ſo much exactneſs as to manifeſt the hand of care and deſign; and I am of opinion, that there were originally rows of ſeats, or ſteps, one below the other, from top to bottom; but time has much defaced them. There are two avenues to this area, (eaſt and weſt) and on the north ſide alſo is another ſtrait approach, between two ſtone walls, lately diſcovered by people digging for ſtone. It is directed to the centre of the area, and about thirty inches wide between the walls, which were deſigned to keep up the high bank of earth on each ſide. Probably this is a Roman theatre, or elſe one of thoſe places where antiently people met at the Gurimawrs[z], which were held in ſpacious places, incloſed with earthen banks, having room ſufficient for thouſands of people within. But tradition is ſilent as to the uſe of it; nor do I find the place itſelf taken notice of any where in hiſtory. Mr. Camden mentions one ſomething like it in Weſtmoreland, called King Arthur's Round Table, which he thinks might poſſibly be a juſting-place.

[y] In an eſſay concerning the four great Roman ways, at the end of the 6th Vol. of Leland's Itinerary, I find Mr. Camden cited for his obſervation, (p. 240) that 'Several towns lye on and near the laſt mentioned cauſeway, that retain the word arn in their names, as Sharncote and South Sarney, between Cricklade and Cirenceſter, and North Sarney about two miles above the latter upon the river Churn, and Sharnton about three miles from Glouceſter. All which have taken their appellations from the Britiſh word Sarn, which imports ſtratum, or pavimentum, and in Wales we have ſuch an one called Sarn Helen to this day.' But I differ in opinion from that learned antiquary, reſpecting the names of the above places, for the following reaſons: The C in thoſe names had originally a hard ſound, as the ſame letter in Corneceaſtre, Curineceaſtre, alſo had; for I apprehend that the name of the town and of the villages had one common ſource, that is, Corin, or Churn, the name of the river on which both the Cerneys are ſituated: Cerney, therefore, is only a ſmall deviation from Churn-ey, i. e. the water Churn. And as to Sharncote, which is adjoining to South Cerney, on the contrary ſide of it from the Roman road, I ſuppoſe it to be nothing more than Cerney-coed, ſo called from the Britiſh word coed, which ſignifies wood, as having been antiently a woody place.

[z] Guiredd, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies truth, and mawr, great; ſo that the word may ſignify the ſcriptures, or great truths. It is generally agreed that theſe circular places have been appropriated to religious purpoſes, and probably ſome parts of the ſcripture hiſtory were uſually repreſented in them, for the inſtruction of the people.

2. Of Military Affairs, and other memorable Events.

This town hath ſeen many great events and memorable tranſactions. From Oroſius's manner of expreſſing himſelf, one might be induced to think it a place of note in the time of Julius Cæſar. The third battle, ſays he, which that general had with the Bryttas, was near the river which men call the Temeſe, near thoſe fords which are called Wallingford; after which, not only all the inhabitants of Cyrnceaſtre ſubmitted, but the whole iſland.

Some ſay the emperor Conſtantine was crowned king of the Britons here, whilſt others inſiſt that York has a better claim to that honour; however it is certain, that Cirenceſter was a very conſiderable place in that emperor's time.

Under the Heptarchy, it lay within the kingdom of Mercia, which, as it appears by Ethelwerd, was divided from that of the Weſt Saxons by the river Avon; but in the year 577, this city was won from the Britons of Mercia, who had 'till then defended themſelves in theſe parts with great bravery againſt the Weſt Saxons, by whom they were totally routed that year at Deopham, [Dyrham] under two of their leaders, Cuthwin and Ceaulin. Three Britiſh princes, Commeail, Condidan, and Fariemeiol were ſlain in battle, and the cities of Cirenceſter, Glouceſter, and Bath fell into the hands of the enemy; and ſoon after, Cirenceſter was made a frontier garriſon againſt the Mercians.

About fifty years afterwards, anno 628, Penda, king of Mercia, endeavoured to recover this place from the Weſt Saxons, and meeting Cynegils and Cwichelm, (the king and his ſon) near Cirenceſter, with great forces on both ſides, a bloody battle enſued; when, according to Huntingdon, both armies having abjured flight, they were parted only by the darkneſs of the night; and this engagement not being much in favour of either party, they made peace the next morning, which continued but for a ſhort time. The Weſt Saxons, however, remained maſters of Cirenceſter, 'till Peada, the firſt chriſtian king of Mercia, and ſon of Penda, retook it from them in the year 656.

From that time, either no very intereſting tranſactions happened here, for a ſpace of two hundred years, or our hiſtorians have taken no notice of them. But in the year 879, the Danes, under their leader Godrum, having been routed by king Alfred at Ethandun in Wiltſhire, ſurrendered their caſtle in that neighbourhood, and made peace with the king, on condition that they might have leave to quit the kingdom; and accordingly they came immediately from Chippenham to Cirenceſter[a], and remaining here one whole year, went afterwards to the eaſtern parts of the kingdom. This Godrum, or Gothrum, is probably the ſame that Polydore Virgil and others call Gormon and Gurmond, an African tyrant.

It is mentioned in the Britiſh Annals, that the ſame Gurmundus, after beſieging this city a long time in vain, at laſt ordered wild-fire and combuſtible matter to be tied to the legs of ſparrows, and letting them fly, they lighted on the houſes and ſet them on fire, by which ſtratagem he took the city; whence Giraldus calls it the City of Sparrows. Alexander Neccham, from the ſame annals, writes of it thus:

> Urbs vires experta tuas, Gurmunde, per annos
> Septem. . . . . . .
> A city that experienc'd Gurmund's power
> For ſeven long years.

But it ſhould be remembered, that poets are not always good hiſtorians; nor is there the leaſt reaſon to believe that Gurmund, if he be the ſame with Aſſer's Godrum, was longer here than one year, unleſs we ſuppoſe it to be before his convention with king Alfred.

The next memorable thing taken notice of to have happened here, was in the year 1020, when king Knute, after his return from Denmark, held a general council of the kingdom, at Eaſter, in this town, in which Ethelwold was outlawed.

Here was a caſtle on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the town, and tho' I have not been able to diſcover when nor by whom it was built, our hiſtories give us a more certain account of its deſtruction; for in the year 1142, the town having been made a garriſon for Matilda the empreſs, againſt king Stephen, he came ſo ſuddenly and unexpectedly upon the caſtle, as to ſurpriſe and burn it. However it was ſoon afterwards rebuilt, and held out againſt the king by the earl of Leiceſter's conſtable, who at length ſurrendered it, to procure better terms for his maſter on his ſubmiſſion. This caſtle was garriſoned by the barons who took up arms againſt king Henry the Third; but that king ſoon recovered it, and cauſed it to be immediately demoliſhed.

When the barons took up arms againſt king John, in the 16th year of his reign, the royal army was drawn together at this place; and again, upon a like occaſion, this was the rendezvous for the army which king Edward the Second aſſembled, to cruſh the confederacy formed by the earl of Lancaſter and the lords of the marches, againſt Hugh le Deſpencer the king's favourite.

But this place is more remarkable for the ſuppreſſion of the rebellion raiſed by the dukes of Aumerle, Surry, and Exeter, and the earls of Glouceſter and Saliſbury, and their adherents, in the 1ſt year of king Henry the Fourth. This ſignal ſervice was effected by the bravery and conduct of the mayor, as he is called in our hiſtories, and about 400 of the townſmen only. Thoſe noblemen had formed a conſpiracy to ſeize and aſſaſſinate the king, at a tournament at Oxford, to which he was invited. The plot was committed to writing, and each conſpirator had a copy, ſigned and ſealed by all the confederates. Afterwards, Aumerle being at dinner with his father the duke of York, the latter obſerv'd a paper in his ſon's boſom, ſeized it, and reading the contents, order'd his horſes to be ſaddled immediately. Suſpecting his father's intention, Aumerle rode full ſpeed to the king at Windſor, and diſcovering the conſpiracy, obtained pardon before the duke arrived. The other conſpirators ſuſpecting themſelves diſcovered, raiſed a numerous army to ſurpriſe the king at Windſor. But Henry having alſo aſſembled 20,000 men, marched to give them battle, which ſo diſcouraged them, that they retreated to Cirenceſter, and encamped without the gates. The chiefs quartered in the town, but the mayor perceiving that the gates and avenues were unguarded, aſſembled 400 men in the night, ſeized the gates, and attack'd the four noblemen in their quarters. The duke of Surry, and earl of Saliſbury were taken, and beheaded on the ſpot; but the duke of Exeter, and the earl of Glouceſter, eſcaped by the tops of the houſes to the camp, which the ſoldiers had abandoned, and fled; imagining, from the noiſe and tumult of fighting in the town, which had been ſet on fire by the rebel party, that a detachment of the king's troops had entered it. The duke of Exeter and earl of Glouceſter were taken ſome time after, and loſt their heads in the ſequel. The heads of Surry and Saliſbury were ſent to London, their bodies having been buried in the abbey; but the head of the latter was reſtored, and his body removed to Buſtleſham, now Biſham in Berkſhire, where he had founded a priory for canons of the order of St. Auſtin, dedicated to Chriſt Jeſus and the virgin Mary, valued at the diſſolution at 327*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*

The king, for this great ſervice done him by the men of Cirenceſter, granted them all the rebels goods, and four does in ſeaſon out of his foreſt of Bredon, and one hogſhead of wine out of his port of Briſtol. And to the women, he granted ſix bucks in right ſeaſon, and one hogſhead of wine out of the ſame port. See Appendix, N°. 1. Afterwards, in the 4th year of his reign, the ſame king granted to the town, a court of Staple for merchandize, erecting a corporation of a mayor and two conſtables, and others the commonalty, for the encouragement of trade, by the execution of the Statute Merchant. But this charter, after a long ſuit in the Exchequer, was decreed to be cancelled, 37 Eliz.

All theſe events ſhew the town to have been large, and of great account, in the times of which I have been ſpeaking; but even in later ages, it has been the ſcene of remarkable tranſactions; for here, as I find it in Corbet's Hiſtory of the Military Government of Glouceſter, was the firſt forcible oppoſition to king Charles the Firſt, in the year 1641, by inſulting lord Chandois, then lieutenant of the county, who was at that time executing the commiſſion of array. The rabble encompaſſed him, and forced him to ſign a paper, promiſing that he would no more attempt to put it in execution. His lordſhip eſcaped unhurt in his perſon, but his coach was cut in pieces.

This place was garriſoned, ſoon after, by the parliament's forces, and about the firſt of January, 1642, was threatened to be ſtormed by the main ſtrength of the king's army, which came before it; but after ſtaying two days, withdrew to wait for a reinforcement of horſe and artillery, and returned again on the 30th of the ſame month, under the command of prince Rupert, who aſſaulted the town on the 2d of February, of which action the following is a ſhort account, drawn from one publiſhed by his highneſs's chaplain. The prince had two eighteen pounders, and four field-pieces; and a mortar-piece to throw granades. Proper diſpoſitions being made, the attack began at an incloſure between Mr. Poole's houſe (now the ſite of lord Bathurſt's houſe) and that of the Barton. The aſſailants being twice reinforced, beat the townſmen from the hedge, to the garden wall of the Barton. Mean while, a ſtrong body, under general Wilmot and colonel Uſſer, attack'd and burnt the Barton houſe, whence the townſmen were driven, and afterwards purſued by 500 of colonel Kirk's men, to the firſt turnpike, (a kind of barricado) by Cicely hill. Lord Wentworth, who had the command of the right wing of the army, was to have fallen to the ſouthward, on the right hand of the mount, now called Griſmund's Tower; but being miſled on the left hand of it, was flanked by a battery of two ſix pounders, erected on the mount, and annoyed by the muſquettry from a high wall before them; which thinking it difficult to force, they drew to the left, into the lane leading to Cicely-hill, and joining colonel Kirk's men there, entered the barricado, or turnpike, together. Colonel Scrimſour, with a party of horſe, then puſhed into the town, and drove all before them. Colonel Fettiplace, who was the governor, captain Warneford, and Mr. George, one of the members for the borough, with many others, were taken priſoners in the town, and together with ſuch of the fugitives as were taken in their flight, were ſecured in the church. Great numbers of arms were found in the houſes, and drawn out of the river, to the amount of upwards of 3000, for this place had been a magazine for the country.

This town was afterwards made quarters, ſometimes for the king's army, at others for that of the parliament. After the ſiege of Glouceſter was raiſed, the earl of Eſſex beat up the king's quarters here, and drove ſir Nicholas Criſp and colonel Spencer, with their two regiments of horſe, out of the town. In this action he took 400 horſe, and 30 cart-loads of proviſions, which was a ſeaſonable ſupply to his army.

Here alſo was the firſt bloodſhed in the laſt revolution, in the year 1688, when lord Lovelace, being on his march to join the prince of Orange with a party of horſe, was attacked by captain Lorange of the county militia, animated by the duke of Beaufort, who was a zealous man for king James. The captain was proprietor of Haymes in this county, and tho' both he and his ſon loſt their lives at that time, his men overpowered lord Lovelace, took him, and carried him priſoner to Glouceſter jail, having ſlain ſome unfortunate gentlemen at the ſame time.

The

The ſummer aſſize for the county was held here, by lord chief juſtice Scroggs and ſir Robert Atkyns, on account of a peſtilentical diſorder being at Glouceſter, in the year 1679.

3. Of the antient and preſent State of the Hundred of Cirenceſter, and its Subdiviſions; of the Borough, the Manor, and other Eſtates.

This place very antiently gave denomination to a hundred, which, at different times, was more or leſs extenſive. Soon after the conqueſt, as we find in Domeſday-book, it included the following places, viz. Achelie, Benwedene, Circeſtre, Dunteſborne, Hunlafeſed, Nortcote, Penneberie, Preſtetune, Stratone, Sudintone, Torentune, Turſberie.

In the ninth year of the reign of king Edward the Firſt, the ſheriff of the county returned, that in the hundred of Cirenceſter are the underwritten vills, viz. Baudinton, Cirenceſter, Cotes, Daglinworth, Down Ampney, Dryfeild, Dunteſburne, Hampton Moyſey, Preſton, Sodington, South Cerney, Upampney.

By comparing the two accounts, it is obſervable, that Cotes is a new name, and ſtands, in the ſheriff's return, in the room of Hunlafeſed, Torentune, and Turſberie, as we find them ſet down in Domeſday-book. Achelie, Nortcote, and Penneberie, ſpecified in the Domeſday account, are not mentioned by the ſheriff, becauſe, at that time, they were conſidered as members only of ſome of the vills ſet down in his return. Daglinworth, in the latter account, is ſubſtituted for Stratone in Domeſday, which latter is not ſet down as a vill in the above-mentioned ſheriff's return; whereas the former is no where to be found in the general ſurvey; I conclude, therefore, that both thoſe places, eſpecially as they join together, were, 'till ſome time after the ſheriff's return, reputed to be one vill or pariſh only, which took denomination, at firſt from Stratton, but afterwards from Daglingworth, 'till it came to be divided into two pariſhes. It is alſo remarkable, that both the Ampneys, Dryfeild, and Hampton Moyſey, which in Domeſday-book are placed in Gerſdon hundred, are returned by the ſheriff as belonging to that of Cirenceſter.

Afterwards, another very material alteration took place in this hundred. In the fourth year of the reign of king Henry the Fourth, the town was erected into a kind of corporation, and two conſtables placed over it, whereby it became a diſtinct juriſdiction. The out-pariſhes, with Minety, were ſevered from it, and held a ſeparate Torn or court, which for diſtinction was probably called The Out Torn and Minety, but now vulgarly, and as I conceive corruptly, Crowthorne and Minety. The hundred was the property of the abbat, who choſe rather to have the people of his houſe under the juriſdiction of the conſtable of the Out-Torn, than ſubject to the officers of the borough, or In-Torn, which alone retained the name of the hundred of Cirenceſter. Thus the abbey and all its precincts and offices became diſtinct from the borough, and have continued ſo ever ſince.

From that time the hundred and the borough have been commenſurate.

The borough is divided into ſeven wards, i. e. Dyer-ward, Cricklade-ward, Caſtle-ward, Goſditch-ward, Dollar-ward, St. Lawrence-ward, and Inſtrip-ward. To each ward two wardſmen, or petty conſtables, are annually appointed at the leet; where alſo two high conſtables are appointed, whoſe authority extends over the hundred and borough.

This borough ſent repreſentatives to a great council 11 E. 3. and by the grant of queen Elizabeth, in the thirteenth year of her reign, it ſends two members to parliament. At firſt, only the free burgeſſes were electors, but on the occaſion of a conteſted election, in the reign of king James the Firſt, it was determined, that the inhabitants houſholders, not receiving alms, ſhould make the election; but the houſe of commons, Nov. 4, 1690, reſolved, That the inhabitants of the borough of Cirenceſter, being inmates, have no right to vote in electing burgeſſes to ſerve in parliament; and by their reſolution of Dec. 1, 1709, the inhabitants of the Abbey, the Emery, and the Spiringate-lane have not a right to vote in ſuch election. The number of electors is between ſix and ſeven hundred.

The arms of the town are, A Phœnix in Flames, alluding to its having riſen out of the aſhes of the antient city, as the young phœnix is ſaid to proceed from the aſhes of the old one.

Cirenceſter gives the title of baron to William duke of Portland, whoſe anceſtor, by letters patent dated Apr. 9, 1689, was created [b] baron of Cirenceſter, viſcount Woodſtock, and earl of Portland.

Richardus Corinienſis was ſo called becauſe he was born here. He was a monk of Weſtminſter, and is famous for collecting an Itinerary, in the 14th century, of Roman Britain, from ſome remains of records drawn up between the years 138 and 170, by the authority of a Roman general, ſuppoſed to have been Lollius Urbicus, governor of Britain under Antoninus Pius; which work was a long time loſt to his native country. Mr. Bertram, an Engliſh gentleman, diſcovered the manuſcript at Copenhagen, in 1747. A copy having been tranſmitted to the late Dr. Stukeley, he publiſhed a tranſlation of the Itinerary, part with a comment, in 1757, and in the ſubſequent year the whole work was printed at Copenhagen, and a few copies ſent to England as preſents.

Here are three fairs in the year, viz. on Eaſter-Tueſday, July 18, and Nov. 8. The two cloth-fairs mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns, one in the week before Palm-Sunday, the other in the week before the feaſt of St. Bartholomew, are both diſcontinued.

The property of the hundred deſcended with the principal manor, which is next to be conſidered.

The manor of Cirenceſter is of the antient demeans of the crown, of which Domeſday-book gives the following particulars:

'King Edward had five hides of land in Cireceſtre hundred. There are five plow-tillages in demean, and thirty-one villeins, with ten plow-tillages. There are thirteen ſervi, and ten bordars, and three mills of 30*s.* ſome meadow, and two woods of 50*s.* And there are two free men who have two plow-tillages. The queen hath the wool of all the ſheep. In the time of king Edward, this manor paid three buſhels [modios] and a half of corn for bread, three buſhels [modios] of barley, and ſix ſextaries and a half of honey, and 9*l.* 5*s.* and 3000 loaves for the dogs. It now pays 20*l.* 5*s.* and twenty cows, and twenty hogs, and 16*s.* inſtead of the eaves, and 20*s.* for the new market, of which St. Mary hath the third penny.' D. Book, p. 67.

The church of St. Mary held two hides in the hundred, which will be taken notice of in its proper place; and there were two other manors in the vill, thus particularized in the record;

'A free man held two hides of land in Cireceſtre, 'and paid 20*s.* and did ſervice to the ſheriff 'throughout all England. Earl William put this 'land out of farm, and gave it to one of his men.'

'William the ſon of Baderon held two hides in 'Cireceſtre, and Hugh holds them of him. There 'is one plow-tillage in demean, and one villein 'and a half, and four bordars, with one plow-'tillage. There are two ſervi. It was worth 100*s.* 'now 70*s.* Aluui held this land.' D. B. p. 73.

It is impoſſible, at preſent, to diſtinguiſh between the two laſt manors with any degree of preciſion; but I conjecture that the firſt of the three continued in the crown 'till it was granted, with the juriſdiction of the ſeven hundreds, by king Richard the Firſt, to the abbat and convent of Cirenceſter. Sir Robert Atkyns is imperfect in his account of theſe manors and their appendages; which is the more remarkable, as he himſelf claimed to be the proprietor of ſome of them. I will give the beſt account I can of them, from the materials in my poſſeſſion.

When the townſmen of Cirenceſter ſuppreſſed the rebellion againſt king Henry the Fourth, they petitioned the king to be incorporated; whereupon the king directed his writ to the eſcheator, to inquire what damage others might ſuſtain if he ſhould comply with their requeſt. The eſcheator returned the king's writ, the petition, and the inquiſition, which he had taken at Glouceſter, 4 H. 4. into the court of chancery, where they were exemplified, and whence I have extracted the following particulars: 'The jurors ſay, that the 'town of Cirenceſter and the town of Mynety, 'with the appurtenances, make and are the manor 'of Cirenceſter, and were ſo in the time of king 'Richard the Firſt. That the church of St. Mary 'of Cirenceſter is of the foundation of king Henry 'the Firſt, and within his patronage. That king 'Richard the Firſt gave to God, and the church 'of St. Mary of Cirenceſter, his whole manor of 'Cirenceſter, with all and ſingular the appurte-'nances, and with the town of Mynetie, which is 'a member of the ſaid manor, and with the ſeven 'hundreds to the ſame manor, and to his farm 'belonging, and with all other the appurtenances, 'to be holden of the ſaid king and his ſucceſſors 'for ever, at the rent of 30*l.* a year, with [c] Soca, 'Saca, Thol, Them, Infangtheof, and Outfang-'theof, Hamſoca, and Girthbriche, Blodewite, 'Murder, Foreſtall, Flemsfleet, Ordeal, and Oreſt, 'within time and without, and in all places and 'with all cauſes which may be. And that the 'rent of aſſize of the ſaid manor of Cirenceſter 'is 143*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* yearly, payable to the abbat. 'And that the ſaid ſeven hundreds are but as one 'hundred, and time out of man's memory have 'been uſed as one hundred before the making the 'aforeſaid deed, and belonging to the ſaid manor 'of Cirenceſter, and are holden at the town of 'Cirenceſter, from three weeks to three weeks, in 'a certain houſe called the Tolſede[d], ſituate in the 'middle of the ſaid town. That the manor of 'Cirenceſter is the antient demean of the crown, 'and that to the ſaid manor belong two free te-'nants, William Erchbald and the holder of the 'court, and that all other tenants to the ſaid 'manor, in the aforeſaid town of Cirenceſter and 'Mynetie belonging, hold all their lands and 'tenements according to the cuſtom of the manor 'of Cirenceſter.'

Hence it is evident that this is the ſame manor with that mentioned in Domeſday-book to have been held by king Edward; which, with the hundred of Cirenceſter, the ſeven hundreds, and other particulars granted to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were part of the poſſeſſions of that abbey 'till it was diſſolved. Yet, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, Ela, counteſs of Warwick, held the hundreds of Cirenceſter and Briſtwoles Borough 11 E. 1. and the abbeſs of Lacock in Wiltſhire was ſeized of the hundred of Cirenceſter 12 E. 1. But 15 E. 1. the king's writ of Quo warranto was iſſued againſt the abbat of Cirenceſter, for the liberties of the ſeven hundreds, and his claim was allowed. At the diſſolution of the monaſtery, all theſe particulars reverted to the crown.

The hundred of Cirenceſter, Crother', Brightwaldes barrowe, Reſpegete, Bradley, Langtre, and Myntye, and the ſeven hundreds of Cirenceſter, were afterwards granted to ſir Thomas Seymour, lord Seymour of Sudley, as I find it recited in a ſubſequent grant of them to ſir Anthony Kingſtone, 6 E. 6. of which I have an office copy.

Sir John Danvers died ſeized of the manor 37 Eliz. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, Henry Danvers earl of Danby, who built a large houſe on the weſt ſide of the town, and made the famous phyſic-garden, for the public uſe of the univerſity of Oxford. The manor and hundred were afterwards ſold to Henry Poole, whoſe ſon and heir ſir William Poole, in 1645, aſſigned them, with their appurtenances, and levied a fine thereof to the lady Poole, his mother, (in lieu of dower) for her life, and after her death, to her daughter Anne Poole, and her heirs; which Anne was married to James earl of Newburgh, and previouſly thereto, and in conſideration thereof, ſhe releaſed to him the manor, borough, and town of Cirenceſter, with their appurtenances and franchiſes, to the uſe of him and his heirs. Charles was his heir. He married Frances ——, who ſurvived him, and whom he left the premiſſes in fee. She ſold them in the year 1695, to ſir Benjamin Bathurſt, father of the Earl of Bathurſt[e], the preſent proprietor; between whom and Mr. Chamberlayne there is a diſpute concerning the right to the ſeven hundreds.

[d] The lower part of the Tolſede, or Tolſey, is now converted into a grocer's ſhop, in the Butter-row, and the rooms over it are part of a dwelling houſe.

[e] His Lordſhip's anceſtors were ſeated at a place called Bathurſt, in Suſſex, not far from Battle abbey, of which they were diſpoſeſſed, and their caſtle demoliſhed, in the troubleſome times of the diſpute between the houſes of York and Lancaſter.

Lawrence Bathurſt was ſeated at Cranebrook in Kent, within three miles diſtance of the antient ſeat; and held lands at Staplehurſt in the ſame county, beſide his paternal eſtates at Cranebrook and Canterbury. He left iſſue three ſons, Edward, anceſtor to the Earl of Bathurſt; Robert, of Horſemanden in Kent; and John, who had lands in Staplehurſt, by his father's gift.

Edward, the eldeſt ſon of Lawrence Bathurſt, was ſeated at Staplehurſt, and among other children, had Launcelot Bathurſt, alderman of London, who, in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, was poſſeſſed of the manor of Franks, in the county of Kent. He married Judith, daughter of Richard Randolph, of London, by whom he had iſſue four ſons and three daughters, Randolph, Launcelot, Edward, and George Bathurſt; Elizabeth, married to John Brown, eſq; Mary, wedded to Edmund Peſhall, eſq; and Suſan, eſpouſed to Robert Owen, eſq. From the eldeſt ſon, Randolph Bathurſt, the family at Franks deſcended, now extinct in the male line.

George Bathurſt, youngeſt ſon of the ſaid Launcelot, in the year 1610, married Elizabeth Villiers, daughter and coheir of Edward Villiers, of Howthorp, in com. Northampton, deſcended from an anceſtor of George Villiers duke of Buckingham, and had with her the ſaid manor of Howthorp, where he ſettled, and had iſſue twelve ſons and four daughters. Several of the ſons died in the ſervice of king Charles the Firſt, during the civil war. Thoſe who ſurvived were Ralph, Villiers, Henry, Moſes, and ſir Benjamin. Ralph was educated at Trinity-college in Oxford, for a divine, but during the civil war ſtudied phyſic, and was employed as a phyſician in the navy. At the reſtoration, reſuming his former function, he became fellow of the Royal Society, preſident of Trinity-college, and one of the king's chaplains; and on June 28, 1670, was inſtalled dean of Wells. He died on the 14th of June, 1704, and was buried in the chapel of Trinity-college, which he built at his own expence, and was highly eſteemed for his learning.——Villiers Bathurſt was judge-advocate of the navy, in the reigns of king Charles the Second, and king William and queen Mary, and died in the ſame poſt in the reign of queen Anne.——Henry was attorney-general of Munſter, and recorder of Cork and Kinſale; but he and Moſes dying without iſſue, their eſtates deſcended to their youngest brother, Sir Benjamin Bathurſt, who, in the reign of king Charles the Second, was elected governor of the Royal African Company under his Royal Highneſs James duke of York; alſo governor of the Eaſt India Company, in the years 1688, 1689. He was afterwards treaſurer of the houſhold to the princeſs Anne of Denmark on the eſtabliſhment of it, and was appointed cofferer when she acceded to the crown. Sir Benjamin died Aug. 27, 1704, and was buried at Pauler's Pury in Northamptonſhire, leaving iſſue by Frances his wife, daughter of ſir Allen Apſley, of Apſley in Suſſex, knight, three ſons, Allen, Peter, and Benjamin; and one daughter, Anne, wedded to Henry Pye, of Farringdon in Berkſhire, eſq.

Allen, the eldeſt ſon of ſir Benjamin Bathurſt, ſerved in parliament for the borough of Cirenceſter, from the year 1705. In queen Anne, in conſideration of his own great merit, and the long ſervices of his father, was pleaſed to advance him to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by letters patent dated Dec. 31, 1711. In the year 1742, his lordſhip was ſworn one of the privy council, and the ſame day appointed captain of the band of gentlemen penſioners, but reſigned his office in 1744. In 1757, he was conſtituted treaſurer to his preſent majeſty, then prince of Wales, at whoſe acceſſion to the throne, he was continued in the liſt of privy counſellors, but declined accepting any employment, on account of his great age. His lordſhip married Catherine, daughter and heir of ſir Peter Apſley, knight, and heir of ſir Allen beforementioned, by whom he had iſſue ſons and five daughters. Her ladyſhip died in the year 1768, aged 79, and was buried in a vault in Cirenceſter church.——Benjamin the eldeſt ſon, born Aug. 12, 1711, married Elizabeth, the daughter to Charles lord Bruce. He was choſen one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Glouceſter, in the 8th parliament of Great Britain, and was alſo choſen one of the members for the borough of Cirenceſter, in the year 1754. He died without iſſue Jan. 23, 1767; and his lady died Nov. 11, 1771, and are buried at Siddington St. Peter.——Henry Bathurſt, his lordſhip's ſecond ſon, applying himſelf to the ſtudy of the law, ſoon became eminent in his profeſſion, and was ſucceſſively appointed ſolicitor-general and attorney-general to Frederick prince of Wales. On the 2d of May, 1754, he was made one

His lordſhip holds courts for the hundred of Cirenceſter in the borough; and thoſe for the ſeven hundreds are held by Thomas Horde, eſq; and the reverend Mr. Chamberlayne, within their reſpective juriſdictions.

Soon after his lordſhip was poſſeſſed of the above eſtate, by the death of his father, he purchaſed a large one, adjoining to it, of ſir Robert Atkyns; and taking down the old houſe, built the preſent manſion upon the ſite of it. It has a free-ſtone front next the town, but a high wall, lined with ever-greens, prevents the view on that ſide.

This ſeat is diſtinguiſhed by its extenſive and elegant plantations. The park is well ſtock'd with deer. The entrance to it is at a lodge on the north ſide of the houſe, by a ſpacious gravel-walk, lined on each ſide with a row of ſtately elms. At a ſmall diſtance from the entrance, to the left, is an oblique proſpect of the north-weſt front of the houſe, with a fine ſweep of lawn before it, and a grove of lofty trees on either ſide. Turning to the right, the walk divides; one branch of it leads to the terras, the other runs by the ſide of it, in a ſerpentine direction, above a mile in length, finely arched and ſhaded by the plantation through which it paſſes. At ſuitable diſtances it communicates with the terras, where are ſeveral buildings and benches for the convenience of reſting and proſpect. At the end of the ſerpentine walk is a ſmall building, called Pope's Seat, perhaps becauſe that great genius frequently retired thither, when he viſited his noble friend at Cirenceſter. There is a lawn before it, to the centre of which eight viſtas are directed, which terminate with the proſpect of neighbouring churches, and other agreeable objects. One of thoſe objects is a fine lofty column in the midſt of the deer-park, on which is placed the ſtatue of queen Anne, larger than life. This pillar is near a mile diſtant from the houſe, behind which ſtands the beautiful tower of the pariſh church of Cirenceſter, ſo directly in the centre of it, with their fronts parallel to each other, that an obſerver at the pillar might be eaſily induced to believe the tower to be a part of his lordſhip's houſe, were it not of a different colour.

The terras is ſheltered on the north-eaſt by a thick plantation of wood, with a moſt agreeable border, or lining, of ſhrubs and evergreens. It commands a diſtant proſpect of the north of Wiltſhire, and terminates at a handſome octagonal building, about a mile from the houſe. In the middle of the terras is a large pair of gates, for a communication between the deer and lodge-parks. At theſe gates is ſeen a large lake of water, a little to the right of the houſe, which looks like a part of a conſiderable river; but 'tis only a pleaſing deception, for nature hath dealt her favours to this place with ſo ſparing a hand as to that element, that there is not perhaps a perennial ſpring to be found within it. This agreeable effect is produced by planting clumps of trees to conceal the extremities of the lake, which is one of the numberleſs inſtances of that fine taſte, every where to be ſeen in the diſpoſition of this place, all laid out and perfected in the manner we now ſee it, in the life-time, and by the particular directions of the noble proprietor. The eye is no where offended with the appearance of bare walls, nor can it judge of the extent of the park, as the country about it is taken into view, over foſſees and concealed boundaries made for that purpoſe, where they have the beſt effect.

Adjoining to the deer-park weſtward, are the lodge-park, and Oakley Woods, particularly meriting the traveller's attention. Of theſe I have attempted a ſhort deſcription under the tithing of Oakley. I now return to Cirenceſter.

As to the other eſtates in Cirenceſter, mentioned in Domeſday-book to be held by lay-men, it is impoſſible for me to give a diſtinct account of the deſcent of them; but I apprehend a part was granted to the abbey-church, of which hereafter, and a part paſſed in the following manner.

Ralph Cuſron was ſeized of twenty acres in Cirenceſter 3 H. 3. and Jeffry de Erchebald, whom I take to be a deſcendant of the free man mentioned in Domeſday-book, held an eſtate in Cirenceſter 36 H. 3. William Erchbald, a deſcendant of the ſaid Jeffry, was found to be a free tenant here, by the eſcheator's inquiſition, 4 H. 4. Philip Smith and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Cirenceſter and Cheſterton, to the uſe of ſir Giles law, and one of the juſtices of the court of common pleas; ill when, by ſucceſſive re-elections, he had ſat in parliament or the borough of Cirenceſter from the year 1735. In 1770, he was appointed one of the lords commiſſioners of the great ſeal; nd his majeſty was alſo pleaſed to advance him to the dignity f a baron, by the title of baron Apſley, on the 22d day of anuary, 1771; having on the 12th day of the ſame month, ppointed him to the important office of lord high chancellor of reat Britain; which office he continues to diſcharge with great bilities and honour. His lordſhip married Anne, daughter and eir of —— James, eſq; who dying without iſſue, he wedded, condly, Tryphena, daughter of Thomas Scawen, of Maidwell, Northamptonſhire, by whom he has iſſue two ſons and three aughters.—John Bathurſt, third ſon of Allen earl of Bathurſt, reides at Saperton in this county, and remains unmarried.—Allen, he fourth ſon, was fellow of New-college, Oxford, and rector of everſtone and Saperton in this county. He died unmarried, the year 1768. ——— His lordſhip's five daughters were Frances, married firſt to William Woodhouſe, eſq; who died knight of the ſhire for Norfolk, May 31, 1735; ſecondly, to James Whitſhed, of Hampton Court in Middleſex, eſq; one of the preſent repreſentatives of this borough. —— 2. Catharine, married to Henry-Reginald Courtney, eſq; brother to ſir William Courtney, bar^t. afterwards created viſcount Courtney. — 3. Jane, married to John Buller, of Morvall, in Cornwall, eſq; and knight in parliament for that county. —— 4. Leonora, married to colonel Edward Urmſtone, of the firſt regiment of foot-guards, now a major-general. —— And 5. Anne, married to the reverend James Benſon, LL. D. the preſent chancellor of the dioceſe of Glouceſter.

In conſideration of his lordſhip's great merits, his majeſty was pleaſed to advance him to the dignity of an earl, by the title of Earl of Bathurſt, of Bathurſt in Suſſex, by letters patents dated Aug. 12, 1772.

His lordſhip's arms are, Sable, two bars ermine, in chief three croſſes pattee Or. CREST. On a wreath, a dexter arm in mail embowed, holding a club with ſpikes, all proper. SUPPORTERS. Two ſtags argent, each gorged with a collar gemel ermine. MOTTO. TIEN TA FOY.

Bruges,

Bruges, 17 H. 7. and ſir Edward Seymour, ſon of Edward duke of Somerſet and the lady Catharine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cirenceſter, to the uſe of the king, 7 E. 6. Thoſe lands are now divided between a great number of proprietors.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are five tithings, or hamlets, in this pariſh, all in the hundred of the Out-Torn, or Crowthorne and Minety, of the following names, viz. 1. Spital-gate, now vulgarly and corruptly called Spiringate-tithing. 2. Wiggold. 3. Cheſterton. 4. Barton. 5. Oakley.

1. Spital-gate tithing lies on the north and eaſt ſides of the town. The abbey of Cirenceſter had its hoſpitium, for the entertainment of ſtrangers; and the entrance to that part of the abbey was called the Spital-gate. This gate gave denomination to the tithing in which it ſtands, and to an adjoining farm. There are other lands in this tithing, called the Almery-farm, from the almery of the abbey, to which it belonged. The Almery-gate is alſo ſtanding. Both theſe farms were granted to Richard Maſter 6 Eliz. and are now the property of Thomas Maſter, eſq; who has a fine ſeat, with handſome gardens in this tithing, built on, or near, the ſite of the antient abbey, and therefore called the Abbey-Houſe, of which more may be ſeen in the account of the abbey.

2. Wiggold lies on the north-eaſt of the town, beyond the forementioned tithing. John Biſſet, chief foreſter of England, died ſeized of Wiggold 25 H. 3. His wife Alice ſurvived him, and held Wiggold in dower. After her death, the manor deſcended to his four daughters; Margaret, married to Richard de Rivers; Ela, Iſabel, and Edith; which laſt was called Edith lady of Wiggold. Roger Normand purchaſed a charter of free-warren in this manor 9 E. 3. which was confirmed 15 R. 2. William Boys and others held lands in Wiggold and Cirenceſter 32 E. 3. Sir William Nottingham was ſeized of this manor 1 R. 3. and William Pole and Anne his wife levied a fine of it to George Prater 3 E. 6. Mr. Talbot and Mr. Grey were proprietors of it in the year 1711, but Mr. Talbot and Mr. Townſend are the preſent lords of this manor. The tithes of Wiggold, belonging formerly to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to Thomas Erſkyn, viſcount Fenton, 5 Jac. but Thomas Maſter, eſq; is the preſent impropriator. The tithe of hay, and all privy tithes, belong to the miniſter of the pariſh.

3. Cheſterton, ſituate on the ſouth and ſouth-eaſt ſides of the borough, the name of which has in it a kind of evidence of its antiquity; for the Saxon Ceaſtre, (and ſo our Cheſter,) comes plainly from the Roman Caſtrum; and Mr. Burton has obſerved, that the name is given to ſuch places only where the Romans built their Caſtra. But the antiquities found in this tithing have already been largely ſpoken of in the former part of this account, under the name of the Leauſes, which lie within it; to which the reader is referred.

Jeffry Langley was ſeized of Cheſterton 2 E. 1. Edmond Langley held this manor of Henry earl of Lancaſter, by the third part of a knight's fee, 2 E. 3. John Langley was ſeized of it 38 & 39 H. 6. Iſabel, the widow of Walter Langley, held this manor 14 E. 4. It afterwards deſcended to William Arundel, as heir to his father, 20 Eliz. and he had livery granted to him the ſame year.

Robert D'Oiley, ſon of Nigel, gave the tithes of Cheſterton to the monks of St. Peter of Glouceſter, when Serlo was abbat. Sir John Nelthorp is the preſent impropriator. The tithe of hay and privy tithes belong to the miniſter, as in Wiggold.

The earl of Bathurſt, Thomas Maſter, eſq; and the reverend Mr. Thomas Coxe, have very conſiderable eſtates in this tithing.

4. Barton-tithing includes a conſiderable tract of land on the weſt ſide of the town, beſide the Barton-farm; which great farm belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and was granted to Richard Berners 36 H. 8. and livery of it was granted to Gerard Croker 15 Eliz. It was veſted in Sir Richard Onſlow, ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, during part of queen Anne's reign, who ſold it to Allen Bathurſt, eſq; now earl of Bathurſt, the preſent poſſeſſor, whoſe deer park lies in this tithing.

5. Oakley-tithing lies further weſtward of the town. Of this place Domeſday-book gives the following account:

'Roger de Laci holds Achelie. There is one 'hide and a half. Leuuinus held it, now Girard 'holds it of Roger. There are two plow-tillages 'in demean, and two villeins, with a prieſt, having 'two plow-tillages and a half. There are nine 'ſervi. It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' D.B. p. 76.

'Giſlebert the ſon of Turold holds one hide in 'Achelie of the king, and Oſulf holds it of him. 'Keneuuard held it in the time of king Edward. 'There are two plow-tillages in demean, and three 'bordars, and ſix ſervi. It was worth 40*s.* now '[only] 30*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

'Turſtin the ſon of Rolf holds one hide in 'Achelie. Brictric held it for a manor of king 'Edward. There is one plow-tillage in demean, 'and three villeins with three plow-tillages. There 'are ſix ſervi, and four acres of meadow. It was 'worth and is now worth 50*s.* Girvius holds it 'of Turſtin.' p. 78. Thus far Domeſday-book.

In the exemplification of the charter of king Henry the Firſt to the church of Cirenceſter, it is thus expreſſed: 'I have alſo granted a water 'courſe, and the wood called Acley, with the 'foreſt, and all its lands, and I retain to myſelf 'nothing out of the wood beſides my hunting, 'and the abbat may not plow up [or aſſart] any 'part of it.'

This eſtate was part of the poſſeſſions of the abbey 'till its diſſolution. Sir Thomas Seymour, uncle to king Edward the Sixth, obtained a grant of Oakley woods, in the firſt year of that king's reign; but he being attainted, they were granted to John duke of Northumberland 6 E. 6. after whoſe attainder, they reverted to the crown, and were again granted, 2 Eliz. to ſir Thomas Parry, who died ſeized thereof 6 Eliz. and his ſon had livery granted him the ſame year. The laſt mentioned family ſold them to ſir John Danvers, who was poſſeſſed of them 37 Eliz. at the time of his death. They were afterwards purchaſed by ſir Henry Pool, whoſe ſon, ſir William Pool, ſold them to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, of whom they were bought by the earl of Bathurſt, the preſent proprietor of them, and of the whole of this extenſive tithing.

The truffle is a vegetable production found in ſufficient abundance in Oakley woods.

Theſe woods deſerve our particular notice. Near the middle of them, on a riſing ground, is the point from which, like ſo many radii, ten cuts or ridings iſſue. The largeſt, about fifty yards wide, has the lofty tower of Cirenceſter to terminate the view; others, directed to neighbouring country churches, clumps of trees, and various diſtant objects, produce an admirable effect. Concealed as it were in the wood, ſtands Alfred's-hall, a building that has the ſemblance of great antiquity, with a bowling-green, and many beautiful lawns and agreeable walks about it. Over the door oppoſite to the ſouth entrance, on the inſide, is the following inſcription, in the Saxon character and language:

Dis is þ fryþe þ Ælfred cyninc 7 gyðrun cyninc 7 ealles angelcynnes witan. 7 ealreo cob þe on eartenglum be oþ ealle gecþen abbaþ 7 mid aþum gefæstnod for hi selfe for heora gingran. ge for geborene ge for ungeborene ðe goder miltre hecce oþþe ure;

Over the ſouth door is the following Latin tranſlation:

FOEDUS quod Ælfredus & Gythrunus reges, omnes Angli ſapientes, & quicunq; Angliam incolebant orientalem, ferierunt; & non ſolum de ſeipſis, verum etiam de natis ſuis, ac nondum in lucem editis, quotquot Dei miſericordiæ divinæ aut regiæ velint eſſe participes ſanctè rejurando ſanxerunt.

Primò ditionis noſtræ fines ad Thameſin evebuntur, inde ad Leam uſq; ad fontem ejus; tum rectà ad Bedfordiam, ac deniq; per Uſam ad viam Watelingianam.

Behind this building is a ruin, with a ſtone over the chimney-piece, on which, in antient characters relieved on the ſtone, is this inſcription:

IN · MEM · ALFREDI ·
REG · RESTAVR:
ANO · DO · 1085.

It would have been inexcuſable in the topographer to have paſſed by ſo curious a place without notice; but the hiſtorian would have been equally culpable, who ſhould not have informed the reader, that this building is an excellent imitation of antiquity. The name, the inſcription, and the writing over the doors, of the convention between the good king and his pagan enemies, were probably all ſuggeſted by the ſimilarity of Achelie, the antient name of this place, to Ægleа[t], where king Alfred reſted with his army, the night before he attacked the Daniſh camp at Ethandun, and at length forced their leader Godrum, or Guthrum, or Gormund, to make ſuch convention.

Windſor, Richmond, and Stow have been ſung by their reſpective bards; ſo the park and woods of this place are the ſubject of a ſhort deſcriptive poem, by Mr. Edward Stephens, not wholly deſtitute of ſentiment.

Of the Abbey.

King Henry the Firſt built the abbey church, which he began in the year 1117, and compleatly finiſhed it in fourteen years. This church was dedicated to St. Mary and St. James. But before the conqueſt, here was a rich college of prebendaries, ſays Leland, but of what Saxon's foundation no man can tell. It was antiently endowed with lands and poſſeſſions, of which Domeſday-book gives the following account:

'The church of Cireceſtre holds of the king 'two hides in Cireceſtre hundred in elemoſinage, 'and held them of king Edward quit from all 'cuſtom. There are ſix acres of meadow. This 'is now, and was then worth 40ſ.' D. B. p. 73.

And further in the ſame book, in the regiſter of lands belonging to Roger de Laci, at Wiche, now Painſwick, in Biſley hundred, it is alſo recorded, that 'Saint Mary of Cireceſtre holds one 'vill (as I read it) and part of a wood in this 'eſtate. King William granted it to her. It is 'worth 10ſ.' p. 75.

Reinbaldus, a prieſt, and a very eminent perſon of his time, was dean of this collegiate church. He was alſo chancellor to king Edward the confeſſor, and, as ſuch, ſet his hand to witneſs the charter of privileges granted by that king to the abbey of Weſtminſter[u]. Beſide his eccleſiaſtical and other preferments, he held in this county four hides in Amney, ſeven in Driffield, one in Northcote, and eight in Preſton, and in other counties very conſiderable eſtates, which, at his death, devolved to the crown.

King Henry having placed regular canons in the abbey church, and obtained pope Innocent's licence, and the conſent and approbation of the archbiſhops, biſhops, princes, and barons of the kingdom, as I find it expreſſed in the exemplification of his charter, (Appendix, N°. 13.) endowed it, among other things, with all Reinbald's eſtates. And king Richard the Firſt further increaſed its revenues, in the 9th year of his reign, by annexing to it the juriſdiction of the ſeven hundreds, as will appear by the exemplification of that king's charter, 4 H. 4. an abſtract of which is given in the account of the manor and hundreds, to which the reader is referred. And king John, in the firſt year of his reign, confirmed all theſe grants to the abbey by his charter, which ſee alſo in the Appendix, N°. 14.

There was a rent of 30*l.* a year reſerved out of the manor of Cirenceſter, and the ſeven hundreds, to be paid into the exchequer at Michaelmas, which was ſettled, by king Edward the Firſt, on queen Margaret, as part of her dower. This rent was afterwards granted to Edmond de Woodſtock, the king's brother, 13 E. 2. and again, 1 E. 3. to Edmond earl of Kent, who was beheaded at Winchester. And John earl of Kent was ſeized of the ſame rent 26 E. 3.

The lands of William of Cirenceſter, in Minety, were granted to this monaſtery 5 Joh. and a new farm was granted to it in the 17th year of the ſame reign.

The abbat of Cirenceſter held Crinclewood, containing thirty acres, 9 E. 2. And Walter Wrilock and others granted two meſſuages, one toft, twenty-ſix acres, a yard-land, four acres of meadow, with other particulars, to the abbey, 13 E. 2. William Erchebald and others, for the church of Cirenceſter, were ſeized of ſeventeen meſſuages and twenty acres in Cirenceſter, 16 R. 2.

This monaſtery obtained a grant of a fair 17 Joh. and it had another grant of fairs in the town of Cirenceſter 37 H. 3. and of markets there, and in the ſeven hundreds, 42 H. 3.

I have already obſerved, in the account of the manor, &c. that a writ of Quo warranto was brought againſt the abbat, for the hundreds, 15 E. 1. So there was another large and ſtrict inquiſition iſſued againſt him 1 H. 4. for uſurping divers privileges in the towns of Cirenceſter and Minety, and in the ſeven hundreds. But I apprehend theſe were moſtly vexatious proceedings, to extort money from the ſubject for new grants; which were thought neceſſary in thoſe times, when by caſualties in the civil wars, or otherwiſe, any of the poſſeſſor's deeds and evidences happened to be loſt or deſtroyed.

The extent of the abbat's juriſdiction in the manor court of Hatherop, was particularly ſpecified, and mutually ſettled and agreed, by a compoſition between Hugh the abbat, and convent of Cirenceſter, and Wymark the prioreſs and the convent of Laycock, to whom that manor belonged; which compoſition is preſerved in the Appendix to Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon, N°. 445.

There was a deed made in the year 1305, between the abbat of Cirenceſter and John de Latton, an anceſtor of a family of that name at Kingſton Bagpaze, in Berkſhire. This deed is taken notice of by ſir Robert Atkyns, as remarkable for the abbat's conceſſions to the other party; and as there is a tranſlation of it in ſir Robert's book, I have alſo inſerted a copy of that tranſlation in the Appendix, N°. 29.

The following is a Liſt of the Abbats, from Mr. Willis's Hiſtory of the Mitred Parliamentary Abbies.

1. Serlo, the fourth dean of Saliſbury, was made the firſt abbat after the foundation, anno 1117. He died anno 1147, and was ſucceeded by
2. Andrew, who died anno 1176, and had for his ſucceſſor,
3. Adam, prior of Bardney. He died anno 1183, and
4. Robert, canon of Cirenceſter, ſucceeded; who dying the ſame year, the convent elected another
5. Robert for their abbat; upon whoſe death, which happened anno 1187,
6. Richard, prior of St. Gregory's, Canterbury, ſucceeded. He died anno 1213; in which year,
7. Alexander Nequam, alias Neccham, was made abbat. He was a very learned man, and greatly renowned for his ſkill in poetry, and all ſorts of literature. See an account of him in Leland, and Bale de Scriptoribus. Weever ſays he was buried in St. Alban's abbey, tho', with better authority, other hiſtorians mention his interment in the cloyſters of the cathedral church at Worceſter, with this epitaph:

Ecclypſim patitur ſapientia, ſol ſepelitur,
Qui dum vivebat ſtudii genus omne vigebat.
Solvitur in cineres Neccham. Cui ſi foret hæres
In terris unus, minus eſſet flebile funus.

The year after his death, which happened anno 1227, or, as in Willis, 1217,
8. Walter, or, as ſome records have it, Richard, was elected abbat. He died 1230, whereupon
9. Hugh de Bampton, alias Bathon, who is elſewhere called Henry, ſucceeded. He died anno 1238, and was ſucceeded by
10. Roger de Rodmarton. He died anno 1266, and was ſucceeded by
11. Henry de Munden, to whoſe election the king conſented Oct. 10, 1266. I don't find when he died, but anno 1281,
12. Henry de Hamptonel was made abbat. He died Nov. 2, 1307, eleven days after which,
13. Adam Brokenbury was elected abbat; but his election was vacated 'till the 3d of December, at which time he obtained a confirmation of it. He died anno 1319, and was ſucceeded by
14. Richard de Charleton, on whoſe reſignation, anno 1334, 15. William Hereward was admitted abbat. He died Apr. 25, 1352, and was ſucceeded by
16. Ralph de Eſtcote, who dying anno 1357, was ſucceeded by
17. William de Marteley, or Martelege. He died anno 1361, and was ſucceeded by
18. William de Dinton, who dying anno 1363, was ſucceeded by
19. Nicholas de Ameney, who dying anno 1394, was ſucceeded by 20. John Lekhampton. His ſucceſſor was
21. William Beſt, anno 1416. He procured to himſelf and ſucceſſors, the uſe of the mitre and pontificals, and dying 1429,
22. William Wotton obtained the benediction, Mar. 5, 1429. On his death, 1440,
23. John Taunton was conſecrated abbat the ſame year, and dying anno 1445, had for his ſucceſſor,
24. William George, who received the benediction April 19, 1445, at Perſhore. He died anno 1461, whereupon
25. John Solbury, or Sadbury, received the benediction at Alnchurch, Oct. 13, 1461. I find not when he died, but anno 1478,
26. Thomas Compton occurs abbat. He died Oct. 11, 1481, and was ſucceeded by 27. Richard Clyve, elected Oct. 25, and confirmed Nov. 5, 1481. He was ſucceeded 1488, by

28. Thomas

28. Thomas Aſton, confirmed abbat, in the biſhop of Worceſter's chapel in the Strand, London, October 22, 1488. He reſigned anno 1504, and was ſucceeded by

29. John Hakeborne, or Haukebourne, who was confirmed abbat December 7, 1504; of whom Anthony a Wood tells us, that in the year 1500, being then prior of St. Mary's college in Oxford, he commenced Batchelor of Divinity, and afterwards Doctor, and dying about the year 1522, was ſucceeded by

30. John Blake, the laſt abbat. In the year 1534, he ſubſcribed to the king's ſupremacy, with Richard Ciceter, prior, Will. Cerney, and other monks of his houſe, in number ſixteen.

This abbey was ſurrendered to the commiſſioners on the 29th of December, 1539, 31 H. 8. according to Mr. Willis's emendations, inſerted after the index, in his Hiſtory of Parliamentary Mitred Abbies; where I find the following account of the penſions aſſigned to the abbat and the religious of this monaſtery. 'John Blake, late 'abbat, 250*l.* Richard Woodwall, late prior, '13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* William Warbot, late cellerer, 8*l.* 'William Philips, vicar of the pariſh church of 'Circeſter, nihil; declaratur in pede. Thomas 'Fiſher, Thomas Hedde, John Ruſſel, John 'Walle, William More, Richard Bolle, John 'Straunge, Thomas Logger, Anthony Chilcoke, 'Henry Hawks, James Plebeien, William Smyth, '6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* each. This was a mitred abbey. The abbat was ſummoned to parliament 43 H. 3. but had not a ſtated ſeat there 'till William Beſt obtained the mitre, and a ſeat among the barons, for himſelf and ſucceſſors, in the year 1416. The abbey was valued, at the time of its diſſolution, at 1051*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.ob.* as I find it in Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon.

The abbat had the privilege of coinage. I have ſeen a braſs piece, ſomething ſmaller than a copper halfpenny, which was found in the year 1772, in Mr. Maſter's garden. On one ſide was a coronet, charged with three rams heads, (part of the arms of the abbey) and round it this inſcription, AVE MARIA · GRACIA · PLEN · On the reverſe, a croſs flory between four fleurs de lis; and round the quarters the letters ·G· ·A· ·G· ·A· for George, Abbas. From which it appears, that it was coined between the years 1445 and 1461, during which time William George was abbat.

Leland, who had ſeen the abbey church, ſays, The Eſt part of the Chirch ſhewith to be of a very old building. The Weſt part, from the Tranſeptum, [the great croſs aile] is but new Work to ſpeke of. The whole fabric was probably demoliſhed ſoon after the ſurrender, and the materials were ſo totally removed, that the preciſe place where it ſtood was ſoon forgotten; but there are two gates, the Spital-gate and the Almery-gate, belonging to the abbey buildings, and the abbey barn, ſtill remaining. Mr. Willis conjectures that the abbey ſtood on the north ſide of the pariſh church, which was, no doubt, ſays he, ſet within part of the abbey cemitery. He has given the following dimenſions of the abbey church, from William of Worceſter's MS. in Bennet-college, Cambridge. viz.

The length of the great church contains 140 ſteppys, the breadth of the nave of the church 41 ſteppys, with two ailes; or 24 yards. The chapel of the bleſſed Mary on the ſouth part of the church contains 41 yards, with an aile adjoining. The breadth of the ſaid antient chapel contains 21 graſſus, with the antient aile. The length of the cloiſter 52 graſſus. The length of the chapter-houſe 14 yards and 10 yards in breadth.——The graſſus, or ſtep, is about two feet.

In the Body of the [abbey] Chirch, ſays Leland, in a Sepulchre Croſſe of white Marble is this [inſcription,] Hic jacet Rembaldus Preſbyter quondam hujus Eccleſiæ Decanus [& Tempore Edwardi Regis Angliæ Cancellarius[h].] Ther ly 2 Noblemen of S. Amandes buried withyn the Preſbyterie of Cirenceſtre Abbay Church. And there is buried the Hart of Sentia, Wife to Richard King of [the] Romains, and Erle of Cornwalle. Sir Robert Atkyns was greatly miſtaken in repreſenting theſe particulars as being in the preſent pariſh church, inſtead of the abbey church.

The arms of the abbey were, Gules, on a chevron argent three rams heads caboſhed ſable, attired Or.

The ſite of the abbey was granted, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6. to Thomas lord Seymour, with lands in fifteen ſhires, to be held in capite by the ſervice of one knight's-fee, paying 1*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*[i] But on his attainder it reverted to the crown, and was afterwards granted to Richard Maſter, 6 Eliz. and is now the property of Thomas Maſter, eſq;[k] who has an elegant houſe and gardens on the ſite of the abbey, and a large eſtate adjoining.

Sir

One hundred fifty two meſſuages lying in the town of Cirenceſter, and which formerly belonged to the abbey, were granted to John Polland and William Birt 36 H. 8. St. Mary's-Mill (at the firſt bridge, now taken down) and Barton-Mill, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to James Woodford and Thomas Woodford 2 Eliz. Bridgbury-farm in Cirenceſter, alſo belonging to the abbey, was granted to Percival Bowes and John Moſier 10 Eliz.

Thus far of the town and abbey. The regiſter and other books belonging to the abbey, which might have given further light into the antient affairs of this place, are ſuppoſed to be loſt. Doctor Tanner had not ſeen them, and the editor of this account, after diligent inquiry, has not been able to get the leaſt information concerning them.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirenceſter. The biſhop of the dioceſe is patron of the curacy, which, with various augmentations and perquiſites, is now of conſiderable value. The particulars of the ſeveral donations to it ſtand under the head Benefactions.

The rectory of Cirenceſter, and the advowſon of the vicarage, were granted to ſir Thomas Treſham and George Treſham 5 E. 6. But William Bourchier, of Barnſley, eſq; died ſeized of the rectory in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, and livery thereof was granted to his ſon Thomas Bourchier the ſame year. The impropriations of Cheſterton and Wiggold are already taken notice of under thoſe tithings.

A portion of tithes called Archebalds, formerly belonging to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 6 Jac.

There have been three pariſh churches in this town, one dedicated to St. Cecilia, which was intirely down in Leland's time; the church of St. Lawrence is ſtill ſtanding, but now converted into ſmall tenements. The third is the preſent pariſh church, dedicated to St. John the evangeliſt. It is a large and beautiful building, conſiſting of the nave, two large ailes, and five chapels. The roof is ſupported by two rows of ſtone pillars, very handſomely fluted. There are five pillars and two pillaſters in each row. The length of the nave is 77 feet, and the breadth of the church, including the two ailes, 74 feet. Over the pillars are the buſts of ſeveral benefactors to the church, with proper ſcutcheons, arms, and devices. The firſt two (one in each row) next the chancel, are for Thomas Ruthal, biſhop of Durham, with the arms of his ſee impaling his own paternal coat. He was a native of Cirenceſter, and was conſecrated biſhop of Durham 1 H. 8.——The next figure in each row, repreſents John Hakebourne, twenty-ninth abbat of Cirenceſter; one ſcutcheon bears the arms of his abbey; on the other is a mitre pierced with a croſier, to ſhew that his abbey was a mitred one; and upon both are I. H. the initial letters of his name.——The arms over the third pillar, in one row, Quarterly 1ſt. and 4th. two lioncels paſſant; 2d. and 3d. a chevron. On the other, a wyvern in combat with a lion, a creſcent for diſtinction.——Over the fourth pillar on one ſide, R. R; on the other row, a croſs moline between the letters I. P.——Over a fifth pillar are the letters H. G. and the ſcutcheon oppoſite to it has three greyhounds palewiſe courant.——The arms of the town ſtand near the top of the fourth pillar; and other devices, among which are the crown of thorns and inſtruments of crucifixion, are arranged over the arches.

Theſe circumſtances ſhew that the nave of the church, and probably all weſtward, including the tower, was rebuilt when John Hakebourne was abbat, viz. between the years 1504 and 1522. But the original church was built long before, for there are monumental inſcriptions ſtill remaining, of dates almoſt a hundred years prior to abbat Hakebourne's government. The arms of biſhop Ruthal, placed among thoſe of the benefactors to this church, is ſo ſtrong a circumſtance of his having contributed to the rebuilding of it, that I cannot aſſent to Leland, who ſays, he promiſid much, but preventid with Deth gave nothing.

The windows were very curiouſly painted, but they have ſuffered from bigots and bungling workmen. Thoſe on the ſouth ſide are beſt preſerved, and of thoſe the great one on the right of the entrance is moſt intire. This conſiſts of three ranges of figures, of four compartments each. The principal figures in the uppermoſt, are three of the antient fathers of the church, and the Pope. They ſtand in the following order, 1ſt. St. Auguſtine, 2d. St. Jerom, 3d. the Pope, 4th. St. Ambroſe. The names of the fathers are written beneath; but the Pope is diſtinguiſhed only by his tiara, or tripple crown. Under St. Auguſtine, in the ſame compartment, is a figure kneeling, with a ſcroll round his head, whereon is written Sc's Auguſtinus[1] ora pro nobis. His name, Willi

Sir William Maſter, ſon of George, married Alice, daughter of Edward Eſtcourt, of Saliſbury, eſq. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 3 Car. 1, 1627, and was a perſon of great worth and loyalty. He ſerved in parliament for the borough of Cirenceſter, and lies buried in the church of that place.

Thomas Maſter, eſq; ſon of ſir William, married Elizabeth, ſiſter of ſir Thomas Dyke, of Suſſex. He died 1680, and lies buried near his father in Cirenceſter church. He alſo ſerved in parliament for that borough.

Thomas Maſter, ſon of Thomas, married Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of John Driver, of Aſton, and has likewiſe ſerved in parliament for the ſaid borough.

Thomas Maſter, ſon of the laſt Thomas, married Joan, daughter and heireſs of Jaſper Chapman, of Stratton, eſq; who before his death gave this eſtate to his ſon, Thomas Maſter, eſq; who married Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of ſir Thomas Cann, bar[t]. and dying the latter end of May, 1749, left iſſue by the ſaid Elizabeth, two ſons, Thomas and Richard, and one daughter Elizabeth.

Thomas Maſter, ſon of the laſt Thomas and Elizabeth, the preſent proprietor of the abbey eſtate, married Mary, daughter of James-Lenox Dutton, of Sherbourn in this county, eſq. His arms are, Gules, a lion rampant gardent, his tail double Or, holding in his paws a roſe Argent.

[1] Not Sc'e Auguſtine, which I obſerve, leſt the reader ſhould think the above an error of the preſs.

Hampton,

Hampton, ſtands at foot, to ſhew that he was the donor of this light, or compartment of the window. There are alſo figures at the feet of the other fathers, with their names thus written, Iohes Hampton & ux ei'; Willm' Okyn & Iohana ux. eiuſd; Will. Colſburn Bower & Alicia Iohana. Theſe gave the reſpective compartments in which they are placed.——The principal figures in the ſecond range are, 1ſt. St. Catherine, 2d. St. Margaret, 3d. St. Dorothy, 4th. defaced. They have all ſcrolls round them, upon which portions of ſcripture, in Latin, are written in old character; and the donor of each compartment is placed, with his name, under the principal figure.—— The figures in the four lights of the lower range are, Sc's ..... de Beu'laco; Johes de Bev'laco; Will Eberaco; ....s Oſmund de Sarr' with ſcrolls and paſſages of ſcripture round them. In the ſmall lights, at the top of the window, are various figures and repreſentations, as of the trinity in a triangular form, as commonly expreſs'd; of the virgin mother, &c. &c.

In the window on the other ſide of the ſouth door, are written on the glaſs the names of the benefactors to the lights wherein they ſtand, viz. Iob'es Rowthale M'garet & Alic' ux. in one compartment, Iohanes Langele[1] in another, and Iohana Whyt in a third; and round the head of the latter, in a ſcroll, Sc'a Batildis ora pro nobis; which ſaint is the principal figure above in this compartment. There is a large figure in each of the other lights, over the perſons above-mentioned, but their names do not appear. In the other windows, on the ſame ſide of the church, are figures of canonized ſaints, with portions of ſcripture, in Latin, upon ſcrolls round them; but a deſcription of every particular would be too minute and tedious.

There is a gallery or ſcreen-work at the entrance of the choir, upon which a handſome organ was erected in the year 1683, and has been ſeveral times ſince repaired and enlarged at a great expence.

The chapels were built at different times, and are the following:

1. Jeſus-chapel, built of Iriſh oak, at the eaſt end of the ſouth aile. It is 12 feet long, and 9 broad. Round the top of it are ſeveral coats of arms belonging to the families of benefactors to the church and poor; as, 1. Bathurſt, 2. Maſter, 3. Monox, 4. Atkyns, 5. Cox, 6. Coxwell, 7. Smyth impaling Maſter, 8. Or, a feſs between three wolves heads eraſed ſable, for How of Guiting.

2. St. John's, on the ſouth ſide of the choir, is 34 feet long, and 24 broad.

3. St. Catherine's, on the north ſide of the choir, is 34 feet long, and 13 broad. The roof is curiouſly arched with ſtone, and ornamented with arms, knots, and devices; among others, 1. Quarterly, France and England. 2. Three oſtrich's feathers iſſuing out of a ducal coronet. 3. A roſe ensigned with a coronet. 4. The letters I. H. ſeveral times repeated, for John Hakebourne, as already mentioned. This chapel was roofed in abbat Hakebourne's time, principally at the expence of himſelf and biſhop Ruthall. The effigy in ſtone of Richard Oſmund, with a purſe at his girdle, lay under an arch in the wall of this chapel, with his head upon a pillow, but now is injudiciouſly placed upright againſt the wall. He is ſuppoſed to have been the founder of it. The figure of St. Catherine, as large as life, with her wheel and ſeveral votaries at her feet, is rudely painted on the ſouth wall, and 'till lately has been covered with white waſh.

4. St. Mary's, formerly endowed with great revenues. It ſtands on the north ſide of St. Catherine's, and is 74 feet long, and 21 broad.

5. Trinity-chapel, on the north ſide of the north aile. The glaſs windows of this chapel were very beautiful. In the eaſt window were the figures of Peter king of Caſtile, Richard duke of York, Thomas duke of Surry, Richard earl of Saliſbury, and of ſir John Jeneville, who was buried here; but thoſe figures are now defaced. In the wall at the eaſt end are the arms of benefactors. 1. Gules, a chevron between three mullets Or. 2. Argent, on a bend gules three martlets Or. 3. Gules, two bars Or, in chief two ſtags heads caboſhed of the ſecond. 4. Argent, on a bend gules three cinquefoils Or. 5. Gules, a chevron between ten croſſes pattee argent. 6. Obliterated. 7. Argent, a feſs between three croſſes pattee ſable. 8. Sable, a croſs argent. 9. Gules, three couples-cloſes argent. 10. Checky Or and gules, a feſs ermine, for Roe. 11. Argent, a chevron between three creſcents Or. 12. Nebule Or and gules. 13. Argent, a chief indented ſable. 14. Sable, ſix doves argent. 15. Argent, a bend Or, in chief a label. 16. Ermine, on a croſs gules five martlets Or. 17. Checky Or and ſable, a chief argent gutty gules. 18. Argent, fretty gules. 19. Gules, fretty argent, a canton of the ſecond in the dexter chief. — In a niche, at the eaſt end of this chapel without, are the effigies in ſtone of the virgin Mary, and the infant Jeſus in her arms.

The tower ſtands at the weſt end of the church. It is 134 feet high, well proportioned and beautiful, with pinnacles and battlements. On the dexter ſide of the weſt door are the arms of Cirenceſter abbey; on the other ſide, Quarterly, France and England. There is a peal of twelve bells in this tower, which no place in the kingdom can boaſt of, except London. In the ſouth-weſt angle of the tower, in a niche, is the figure of St. John, as large as life, to whom the church is dedicated; and in the north-weſt angle ſtands another figure.

There is a very curious repreſentation in the north wall, at the top of the church, of a Whitſon-Ale, with the lord and lady, in high relief, and the ſteward, purſe-bearer, and all the mock-officers which attend that kind of merry-making, almoſt peculiar to this country. See pp. 23, 24.

The ſouth porch is a fine Gothic ſtructure facing the market-place, thirty-eight feet in front, front, and fifty high. It is ornamented with curious pinnacles and battlements of hollow work, and with a great variety of carved repreſentations of dragons, beaſts, and other figures, very neatly finiſhed. In twelve niches in the front, formerly ſtood the twelve apoſtles; but the rigorous principles of the times, about the latter end of the reign of king Charles the Firſt, would not permit them to remain. Over this porch is the town-hall, now uſed on pariſh meetings, and other large aſſemblies of the inhabitants; but formerly the general Seſſions of the county hath been kept in it; on which account, I apprehend, the figure of Juſtice, ſtanding over the door of the ſtairs leading to the hall, was firſt placed there. Alice Avening, aunt to biſhop Ruthall by the mother's ſide, gave 100 marks towards the building of the porch, and his mother, and other pariſhioners, contributed to the finiſhing of it.

There were ſeveral chantries and religious offices eſtabliſhed in this church, viz.

1. The chantry of St. Mary.
2. The chantry of Jeſus.
3. The chantry of St. Chriſtopher, whereof Thomas Edmonds was the laſt chaplain, and had a penſion, after the diſſolution, of 4*l. Willis.* The lands belonging to theſe three chantries, were granted to ſir Oliver Cromwell 5 Jac.
4. The chantry of the Holy Trinity, whereof William Painter was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 4*l. Willis.* The lands belonging to it were granted to —— Skevington, in the reign of Edward the Sixth.
5. The ſervice of the Holy Trinity, of which Thomas Marſhall was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 5*l. Willis.*
6. The chantry of St. Catherine.
7. The office of St. Thomas the Martyr, founded by ſir William Nottingham, whereof Thomas Neal was the laſt chaplain.
8. The chantry of St. Anthony.
9. The chantry founded by John Jones.
10. The ſervice of St. John.
11. Robert Richard's chantry, whereof William Wilſon was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 4*l. Willis.*
12. Alice Avening's chantry, whereof Henry Jones was the laſt chaplain, and had a penſion of 5*l. Willis.* Her name is now in the window of St. Catherine's chapel.
13. The Fraternity of St. Catherine, and
14. The Fraternity of St. John Baptiſt.

Ut ſias Deo et hominibus charus.
Obijt A. D. 1680, Æt. 56.

At the entrance of St. Mary's chapel, againſt e wall, on a braſs plate, is the effigy of an old n in a gown, with a taylor's ſhears over his d, and a dog at his feet. At bottom,

In Lent by will a ſermon hee deuiſed
And yerely precher with a noble priſed
Seuen nobles hee did geue y° poore for to defend
And 80*l.* to xvi men did lend
In Ciceſter Burford Abington & Tetburie
Euer to be to them a ſtocke Yerrly.
Phillip Marner who died in the yeare 1587.

In Trinity chapel are ſeveral very antient flat ſtones of grey marble, with inſcriptions on braſs. Upon one of them is the figure of a gentleman, with a lady on each ſide of him, and this memorial:

Hic ſepeliuntur Willms Prelatte Armiger ſpecialiſſim' benefactor huj' Capelle Agnes nup' uxor Iohannis Martyn et Iohana filia et heres Ricardi de Cobyndon Relicta Iohannis Twynyho de Cayforde in Comitatu Soms. Armigeri uxores ip'ius Willi qui quidē Willms Prelatte obiit in vigilia Aſcencionis d'nice xxvi° die maij Anno d'ni M° CCCC° lxij°. quor' p'piciet de' ā.

On another ſtone, inlaid with braſs (whereon are the effigies of a man and woman, and fourteen children) was this inſcription, part of which is torn off:

Hic jacet Robertus Pagge cum Margareta ſibi ſponſa prole ſecunda
Vicinis gratus fuerat mercator amatus
Pacificus plenis manibus ſubventor egenis
Eccleſiiſq; viis ornator et hiis reparator

Octava luce mortem pertranſiit ipſe
Celi ſolamen De' illi conferat Amen.
On a label, iſſuing out of the woman's mouth, is That to the Trinite for us pray ſynge or rede.

Another ſtone. On braſs are engraven the figures of a man, his two wives, and eight children, with this inſcription:

Orate pro aīabus Iohannis Benett ..... et Agnetis uxor' ſuarum qui quidem Iohannes obiit decimo nono die menſis Iulii Anno Domini Millimo CCCC° nonageſimo ſeptimo quor' animabus .....

Over his firſt wife's head is written,
Spiritus ſci de' miſerere nobis.
Over his head,
Sācta T'rinitas unus Deus miſerere nobis.
Over his other wife's head (now torn off) was written,
Fili redemptor mundi miſerere nobis.

On the braſs plate of another ſtone are repreſentations of a man and his four wives, two on each ſide, and on the braſs, round the edge of the ſtone, in old characters,

Hic jacent Reginaldus Spycer quondam m'cator iſti' ville qui obiit ix° die Iulij Anno dni Mill'mo CCCC° xlij° et Margareta Iuliana Margareta ac Iohna uxores ej' quor' aiab' p'picietur d's Amen.

On another braſs plate is the effigy of a man in armour, with ſpurs on, and a ſword girt to his ſide, in the pomel of which are theſe arms, A pile, over all a chevron. Round the ſtone, on braſs, it was written, but now imperfect, Hic jacet Richardus Dixton Armiger qui obiit die ſancti Laurencii martyris Anno dni M CCCC xxxviii° cujus anime propicietur de' Amen.

On a plain marble table againſt the north wall,

In remembrance

and kept through life the ſerious thought of death.

In the ſouth porch, againſt the wall, is the following modeſt memorial:

Benefactions.

Doctor William Clarke, late dean of Wincheſter, having deviſed certain lands and tithes in the pariſh of Tillingham, in the county of Eſſex, in truſt among other things, to augment ten ſmall eccleſiaſtical benefices with 30*l.* per ann. each for ever; and Dr. Henry Compton, biſhop of London, and the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, having the nomination of ſix of thoſe benefices, declared they would aſſign this charity to ſuch market-towns as would ſettle an equal revenue on their miniſter. And the inhabitants of the town of Cirenceſter, with the aſſiſtance of others, having raiſed the ſum of 619*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* by free contribution, and with 600*l.* of the ſaid money purchaſed an annuity for their miniſter of 30*l.* a year, charged on the tithing of Oakley, in this pariſh; the ſaid truſtees then appointed Cirenceſter to be one of thoſe benefices ſo to be augmented, by an inſtrument dated Jan. 17, 1698. But by a deficiency in the profits of the truſt eſtate, from inundations and other accidents, the annual payments to the reſpective miniſters, from the firſt commencement in 1699, have often fallen under, tho' ſometimes exceeded 15*l.* a year. The ſurplus of the money (19*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*) was given to the miniſter towards defraying his expences in ſettling the augmentation. The principal contributors to this laudable benefaction were, ſir Robert Atkyns jun. knight, who gave 100*l.* Thomas Maſter, eſq; 100*l.* Mrs. Bridget Smith, a daughter of ſir William Maſter, knight, 100*l.* Mrs. Winifred Maſter, 50*l.* Mrs. Anne Williams, 43*l.* Sir Benjamin Bathurſt, knight, 20*l.* Sir Jonathan Raymond, knight, 20*l.* Sir Richard Onſlow, baronet, 10*l.* Sir Richard Howe, baronet, 10*l.* John Willet, clothier, 20*l.* Bernard Ballinger, 20*l.* John Coxe, clerk, rector of North Cerney, 10*l.* Ralph Willet, clerk, rector of Stratton, 10*l.* Robert Brereton, gent. 10*l.* Other contributions were from 5*l.* to 10*s.* each.

'Till about this time there was no vicarage-houſe. The inhabitants firſt purchaſed a leaſe of the preſent houſe; afterwards William George, eſq; gave the quit-rent of it, and in the year 1708, Mrs. Rebecca George, his widow, gave the fee of it for ever.

For Sermons, Prayers, and Catechizing.

1587, Philip Marner gave 6*s.* 8*d.* for ever, for a ſermon on the firſt Friday in clear Lent.

1607, Sir Giles Fettiplace gave an annuity of 20*s.* out of lands in Eaſtington; half for a ſermon on the 5th of November, and half for ringing on the ſame day, and for mending the ropes.

John Coxwell, eſq; gave 20*s.* a year for two ſermons in Chriſtmas tide and Lent.

1618, Jeffry Bath, bailiff of the town, gave 6*s.* 8*d.* for a ſermon on Aſcention-day.

1637, Sir Thomas Roe, of Cranford in Middleſex, gave 2*l.* for a ſermon or prayers on the 13th of September, for ever.

1639, George Monox, eſq; gave 8*l.* per ann. for a ſermon on the firſt Wedneſday in every month.

1681, Mrs. Mapſon, a native of the town, gave 10*s.* for a ſermon on St. Andrew's day.

1695, John Maſter, M. D. gave 200*l.* one half of the income of which to the miniſter for ever, for reading morning prayers; the other half to poor houſe-keepers not receiving alms.

Mrs. Rebecca Powell gave 10*l.* a year to the miniſter, for catechizing the children, and for expounding the catechiſm; and 2*l.* a year to provide candles neceſſary for that ſervice.

Mrs. Hannah Aſhwell gave 10*l.* the intereſt whereof for a ſermon on the 30th of January for ever; but the principal money is now loſt. She alſo gave 10*l.* more, the intereſt of which to be divided between the miniſter and pariſh clerk, for a pſalm, with Gloria Patri, to be ſung every Monday at morning prayers.

Nicholas Edwards gave to the miniſter the intereſt of 5*l.* for ever.

To the Church, &c. and for Educating and Apprenticing poor Children.

The large, handſome gallery, on the north ſide of the church, was built at the expence of the Right Honourable the Earl of Bathurſt. That at the entrance of St. Catherine's chapel was erected by ſir Anthony Hungerford.

The organ was purchaſed with the contributions of the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood.

The two large ſilver flaggons, uſed at the communion, were given by Edward Dixon, eſq; in the year 1434; William George, eſq; and his wife, gave the two plates for collecting the offerings; Mr. John Adye gave the gilt ſtrainer for the chalice; and Mrs. Bridget Smith, and others (whoſe names are either forgotten, or who choſe to conceal them) furniſhed the remainder of the noble ſervice of plate with which this church is accommodated.

The beſt bible and common prayer book were given by Thomas Powell, eſq; and his wife; and the marble font was preſented by the female inhabitants of the town.

For the ornamenting and repairing of the church, there is a revenue of 67*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* a year, ariſing chiefly from houſes lying within the town, and a cloſe in the tithing of Cheſterton, given by John Jones, and other benefactors, whoſe names have not been tranſmitted down to us; about 22*l.* of which is laid out in repairs, and the remainder expended in ſalaries, except 4*l.* paid to the miniſter, and 8*l.* to the maſter of the free Grammar School, as directed by a decree in chancery 1 Jac. 1.

The Grammar School was built and founded by biſhop Ruthall. The maſter has a good houſe kept in repair for him, and beſides the 8*l.* a year before-mentioned, queen Mary endowed the ſchool with 20*l.* a year out of the exchequer, which bounty was afterwards confirmed by queen Elizabeth.

The Blue School, for cloathing and educating twenty boys and twenty girls, with proviſion for teaching younger children in quarterly ſchools, out of it, was ſet up in 1714, by the general beneficence of the inhabitants and their friends. But Thomas Powell, eſq; and Rebecca his wife, were the principal benefactors. In the year 1718 he endowed it with 15*l.* a year, part of an annuity for 99 years, paid out of the exchequer; and a moiety of the profits of Maſkelyne's Ham in Cricklade. And the court of chancery, in the year 1737, appropriated 20*l.* a year, out of the eſtates bequeathed to Mrs. Powell for erecting and endowing a charity ſchool or ſchools in this pariſh, for the ſupport of this ſchool; and in 1744, appointed the produce of 562*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to be paid yearly for the benefit of this ſchool, as a proviſional ſupply, after the expiration of the annuity out of the exchequer.

The Yellow School was erected and endowed by virtue of the will of Mrs. Rebecca Powell, who died in the year 1722, and left an eſtate for that purpoſe. A ſchool-houſe was purchaſed and fitted up at the expence of near 1200*l.* but ſome difficulties ariſing about carrying the will into execution, the court of chancery, upon application to it, decreed that 212*l.* 8*s.* per annum be apply'd to the cloathing, maintaining, teaching to write and caſt accounts, and bringing up twenty boys in the art of ſtocking-frame knitting. Twenty girls are alſo cloathed every year, and are taught to read, and to ſpin worſted.

Sir Thomas Roe gave a rent-charge of 25*l.* a year out of lands at Mouſwell in this county, 40*s.* of which for a ſermon, as already mentioned, the reſt to put out poor children of this pariſh apprentices, on the 13th of September annually; and once in three or four years, a boy out of the pariſh of Rendcombe, is preſented.

Mr. Thomas Perry gave 100*l.* and his ſon Mr. Timothy Perry gave 12*l.* which ſums were laid out in the purchaſe of a freehold eſtate in the pariſh of Upton St. Leonard in this county.

Richard George, eſq; gave a rent-charge of 3*l.* a year, out of a houſe in Glouceſter-ſtreet; William Forder, late of Ampney Crucis, gave 20*l.* Thomas Powell, eſq; gave 40*l.* James Clothier-buck, late citizen of Exeter, gave 100*l.* James Shewell, ſilkman, gave 10*l.* and Mrs. Elizabeth Edwards, in 1726, gave 100*l.* the annual produce of all which to be apply'd to the putting out poor children apprentices.

Hoſpitals and Almſhouſes.

King Henry the Firſt founded St. John's Hoſpital, for three poor men and three poor women, who receive 1*s.* 8*d.* each weekly.

St. Lawrence's Hoſpital was founded by Edith, lady of Wiggold, in this pariſh, for a maſter, with a ſalary of about 40*s.* a year, and two poor women, who have 12*d.* a piece weekly.

St. Thomas's Hoſpital was erected by ſir William Nottingham, who lived in the reign of king Henry the Fourth, and endowed it with a rent-charge of 6*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* per annum, out of an eſtate in the pariſh of Thornbury, which is divided between four poor weavers.

In the year 1620, Mrs. Elizabeth Bridges gave an Almſhouſe in Dollar-ſtreet for ſix poor widows, and 1*s.* a piece weekly for ever.

William George, eſq; and Rebecca his wife, in the year 1702, gave ſix tenements and gardens in Leauſe-lane, for ſix poor widows; and aſſigned two other tenements in Cricklade-ſtreet, one charged with 6*l.* a year to buy garments for the widows, and what remains of the produce of them to keep the houſes in repair.

Thomas Powell, eſq; gave a moiety of the rent of Maſkelyne's Ham to the ſame widows; and Rebecca his widow gave them 10*s.* a year each, to buy them firing.

John Morſe gave two dwellings in Glouceſter-ſtreet for two poor widows.

To be given or lent in Money to the Poor.

The ſame Philip Marner gave a rent-charge of 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* on a houſe in Abbat-ſtreet; Alice Avening, in 1498, gave a houſe in Dollar-ſtreet, of 40*s.* a year; John Weobley, the ſame year, gave a houſe, ſince exchanged for an annuity of 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* charged on the Greyhound inn; William Hooper, in 1605, gave a houſe in Little Silver-ſtreet, of 2*l.* 4*s.* rent; Jeffry Bathe, in 1618, gave, out of a houſe in Cricklade-ſtreet, 1*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* John Chandler, in 1632, gave a houſe in Cicely-ſtreet of 2*l.* a year; Mr. Humphry Bridges gave a houſe in Cricklade-ſtreet, of 2*l.* a year; George Monox, eſq; in 1639, gave five houſes in this town, now let at 23*l.* 10*s.* the produce of which (except 1*l.* a year for a monthly ſermon, and 6*s.* 8*d.* to be ſpent) to be given in money to the poor. John Pathe, butcher, in 1641, gave a rent-charge of 4*l.* on a houſe in Dollar-ſtreet, half to decayed butchers and half to the other poor. Rowland Freeman, in 1658, gave a rent-charge of 40*s.* on a houſe and land now incorporated with the earl of Bathurſt's park. Theſe rents were all given to the uſe of the poor.

The following ſums were alſo given that the annual intereſt of them may be apply'd to the ſame uſe.

But theſe ſums, with 100*l.* before mentioned to have been given by her for apprenticing children, were laid out in the purchaſe of the church-yard.

I come now to give the ſtate of population. According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were near 800 houſes, and about 4000 inhabitants, whereof above 100 were freeholders; yearly births 103, burials 87. But theſe numbers are too high; for having examined the regiſter, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, which includes the time mentioned in his account, there were 933 baptiſms, and 821 burials. During this period the diſſenters (except the quakers, of whom there were but few) buried in the church-yard, and were duly regiſtered; and allowing 3 births and 2 burials to the quakers, the annual number, upon an average, will be 96.3 baptiſms, and 84.1 burials. In a like ſeries of ten years, beginning with 1760, there are regiſtered 774 baptiſms, and 775 burials; but during this time the diſſenters in general are not regiſtered; and allowing for them 14 baptiſms and 10 burials annually, the preſent ſtate of the account will be 88.4 baptiſms, and 87.5 burials.

After the ſmall-pox had left the town in the year 1741, the inhabitants were found to be 3797; and after a viſitation of the ſame kind in 1758, the people were numbered at 3458; but in 1775, an exact account having been taken, the whole number of houſholders was 838, and of inhabitants 3878, ſomething more than four perſons and a half to a houſe. The increaſe of inhabitants when the burials ſo nearly equal the births, muſt be attributed to the afflux of people from other places: wherefore the burials, as they now ſtand, are improper for making an eſtimate of the healthineſs of the place. For, had the people riſen to the preſent number, without ſuch adventitious aſſiſtance, it is eaſy to prove, that the burials would have been fewer in proportion. Suppoſe ten in a year ought to be deducted on that account, the number of inhabitants to the average of annual burials will be as 50 to 1. This is a proof of what was advanced of the healthineſs of the place, conſidered as a town, where intemperance and diſorder are more prevalent than in country villages.

CLAPTON

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, five miles ſouth-weſtward from Stow, five north-eaſtward from Northleach, and twenty-three eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is ſituated upon an eminence to the weſt, above Bourton-on-the-Water. The etymology of the name is uncertain: and the pariſh affords nothing worthy the attention of the naturaliſt or antiquary.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the liſt of the manors belonging to William Goizenboded, in Ceolflede hundred, it is thus recorded:

'The ſame William holds Cloptune. A houſ-'hold ſervant (huſcarle) held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are ten hides. In demean are 'three plow-tillages, and twelve villeins, and four 'bordars, and one radcheniſter, with nine plow-'tillages. In Wicelcombe one burgage. It was 'worth 8*l.* and is now worth 100*s.* *D. The abbey of Eveſham purchaſed a charter of free warren in Clopton and divers other manors 35 H. 3. But Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchеſter, was ſeized of Clopton 55 H. 3. and a charter of free warren in Clapton was granted to Richard Clapton 56 H. 3. I have retained the extracts from the records of the two laſt dates, becauſe I found them in ſir Robert Atkyns's account; but they may poſſibly relate to ſome other place of the ſame name.

Alan la Zouch, baron of Aſhley, died ſeized of Clapton 7 E. 2. leaving three daughters coheireſſes, from whom the manor went to the family of the Bruggs.

Richard de Brugg was ſeized of Clapton, and having been in rebellion againſt king Edward the Second, his whole eſtate was forfeited, and ſeized into the king's hands, but it was reſtored to him again 1 E. 3. Edward Brugg was ſeized thereof 15 H. 6. as was ſir John Brugg 11 E. 4.

Mr. Woodman is the preſent lord of this manor. It was formerly part of the manor of Bourton-on-the-Water.

Lands in Clapton, called Clerk's and Smith's Mill, and divers other lands and meſſuages, formerly belonging to the abbey of Eveſham, were granted to Michael Aſhfield 32 H. 8.

John Dolphin, eſq; has lately purchaſed a good eſtate in this pariſh, but he reſides at Eyeford in this county, late the eſtate of William Wanley, eſq.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow. It is a chapel of eaſe to Bourton-on-the-Water. The church is dedicated to St. James. It was built, together with the chancel, about 1670.

Part of them bury and are regiſtered at the mother church, and part here, ſo that no uſeful information can be derived from the regiſter.

CLEEVE

CLEEVE, or BISHOP's-CLEEVE,

LIES in the hundred of its own name, about four miles north from Cheltenham, five ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and eleven north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the north by Woolſton, from which it is ſeparated by a brook, called the Tirle in the chronicles of Worceſter, that runs into the Carrant; on the ſouth by Preſbury; on the eaſt by Poſtlip-warren, in the pariſh of Winchcombe; and on the weſt by Tredington.

It is a very large pariſh, conſiſting of ſeveral tithings and hamlets, more than five miles in length, and nearly of the ſame breadth; part of it lying in the vale, and part extending over the great ridge of hills which divides the vale from the Coteſwold country. This ſituation on the ſide of the hill very probably gave occaſion to the name; for Llif, in the Anglo Saxon language, ſignifies a high rock, or ſteep aſcent. It is ſometimes called Biſhop's-Cleeve, (having been antiently the property of the biſhop of Worceſter) to diſtinguiſh it from Prior's-Cleeve, and from Cleeve in the pariſh of Weſtbury, in this county.

The lands, in the vale part, conſiſt chiefly of rich arable, with a mixture of good meadow and paſture.

I have had frequent occaſions to mention the many camps, intrenchments, and fortifications found in various parts of the Coteſwold country, but more eſpecially on the verge of thoſe hills next the vale; ſituations which ſeem to have been chooſen on two accounts, as being leſs liable to ſurpriſe or attack, and commanding a large extent of country below, where the oppoſite party could do nothing without being obſerved. On the edge of Cleeve-hill, commonly called Cleeve-cloud, is a large double intrenchment called the Camps, extending 350 yards along the ſummit of the rock, in the form of a creſcent, and inacceſſible on every ſide but the front. The name of Cleeve-cloud ſeems to have been given to the edge of this hill on account of its bold and lofty appearance, when viewed from the vale below; for from the foot of it to the top of the rock where the camp ſtands, (tho' little more than half a meaſured mile) there is an aſcent of 630 feet perpendicular. Upon Nottingham-hill, (a part of the ſame range, ſo called) in the hamlet of Gotherington, are other very conſiderable lines of fortifications and intrenchments; and in the middle between theſe two incampments, which are about a mile diſtant from each other, are four large tumuli, or barrows, one of which was lately opened, and found to contain a great quantity of human bones, broken and crumbled into very ſmall pieces, and ſurrounded with a particularly ſoft and fine kind of mould. Hence it may be concluded, that ſome bloody engagement formerly happened here. It will not be expected of me to point out the exact time when, nor the people by whom theſe works were raiſed, ſince our once miſerable country has been a ſcene of bloodſhed and deſolation for many hundreds of years together, and but few of the military tranſactions of early ages are recorded in hiſtory. If they were raiſed by the Romans, ſome of the coins of that people would probably have been found thereabout; but I hear of no ſuch thing. They are therefore ſuppoſed to be Saxon, raiſed ſome time about the ſeventh century, when the Weſt-Saxons were continually at war with the Mercians.

About the mid-way between Cleeve and Gotherington, is a ſpring of ſaline purging water, not unlike that in the neighbouring pariſh of Preſbury. And the inhabitants of this part of the country have been agreeably amuſed with the expectation of coal being to be found in Long-Wood in this pariſh. The proprietor is now ſearching for that uſeful foſſil, in which I wiſh him ſucceſs for his own ſake, and for the general good of the neighbourhood. I come now to treat

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars, under the title Terra Eccl'e de Wireceſtre:

'The ſame church held Clive in Tedboldeſtan 'hundred. There are thirty hides. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and ſixteen villeins, and 'nineteen bordars, with ſixteen plow-tillages. 'There are eight ſervi, and one Moor. [Afrus.] 'There is a prieſt who hath one hide and two 'plow-tillages, and a radcheniſter having one hide 'and two plow-tillages. There is a little wood. 'Durandus the ſheriff holds of the church ſix 'hides of land of this manor in Surham, Ra- 'dulphus four hides in Sapletone, Turſtinus the 'ſon of Rolf ſix hides in Godrinton. In theſe 'lands are eight plow-tillages in demean, and 'twenty-two villeins, and ſeven bordars, with 'thirteen plow-tillages. There are twenty ſervi, 'and three Moors, [Afri,] and a mill of 12 den. '[rent,] and a little meadow. Bernardus and 'Raynaldus hold ſeven hides of the ſame land in 'Stoches, and they would do no ſervice for St. 'Mary. [i. e. the church of Worceſter.] The 'whole manor, in the time of king Edward, was 'worth 36*l.* and it is now worth 26*l.* in the 'whole. Ulſtanus the biſhop holds this manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

Thus it appears that part of Salperton formerly belonged to the manor of Cleeve. Surham, (now Southam,) Godrinton, and Stoke are tithings in this pariſh, of which hereafter.

The manor of Cleeve was ſettled in jointure on queen Elianor 27 H. 3. Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, was ſeized of Cleeve and Clifborn 3 E. 1. but he held it, moſt likely, under the biſhop of Worceſter; for in the 15th year of the ſame reign the biſhop was ſeized of this manor, and divers privileges were allowed him in a writ of Quo Warranto.

In a taxation of the temporalties of the ſee of Worceſter in the laſt mentioned reign, as I find it in a manuſcript in the Cotton library, it is thus expreſt: Item, At Clyvam the rents of aſſize 8 l. ——carucates of land, and each carucate is worth 20 s. and a dove-houſe worth 6 s. and a water-mill worth 30 s. and the pleas and perquiſites of the court 30 s. In the whole 13 l. 6 s. In the ſurvey taken of this manor 26 H. 8. it was valued at 55 l. 10 s. 9 d.

This manor was reſumed by the crown 1 Eliz.[m] together with the manors of Bredon, Biſhop's-Wyke, Henbury, and Knight-Wyke, in the counties of Glouceſter and Worceſter, part of the poſſeſſions of the ſee of Worceſter; in lieu of which the queen, in the 4th year of her reign, granted to Dr. Edwin Sandys, then biſhop of Worceſter, the impropriations of Biſhampton, Church-Lench, and Elmely, and the tenths of the biſhoprick and of the archdeaconry of Worceſter.

The manor of Cleeve, formerly belonging to the biſhoprick of Worceſter, was granted to Peter Vanlore, merchant, 2 Jac. who was lord of it in the year 1608. John Bridges was lord of this manor at the beginning of the preſent century. It paſſed afterwards to Thomas Hayward, eſq; and from him to William Strachan, LL. D. whoſe ſon ſir William Strachan, baronet, ſold it lately to Mr. Thorneloe and Mr. Lilly, of Worceſter, the preſent proprietors.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that lands in Cleeve, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were in the tenure of Roger Fowler, were granted to Richard Gunter 36 H. 8. Thomas Bullen and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Cleeve, Gotherinton, and Woodmancot to the uſe of Richard Southwell, 1 E. 6.

Lands called Buſhcomb-wood, in Cleeve, formerly belonging to the biſhop of Worceſter, were granted to Chriſtopher Hatton 18 Eliz. which eſtate is now the property of Mr. Branch of Glouceſter.

A meſſuage in Cleeve, formerly belonging to the chantry of St. Mary in Weſtbury-upon-Trim, was granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Southam, ſo called becauſe it lies ſouthward of the church. This is a large tithing, wherein Thomas-Baghot De-la-Bere, eſq; has a ſeat, and a very fine eſtate. The houſe is one of the greateſt curioſities in the county. It is a low building, in the ſtile of the age of Henry the Fourth, or thereabout. The hall is floored with painted bricks, brought from Hayles-abbey ſoon after the diſſolution of that houſe. There are many curious devices upon them of different kinds, containing the names, and rebuſſes of the names, of the abbats Ford and Melton. There are alſo great numbers of ſcutcheons, with arms, among which are the following: 1. France and England quarterly. 2. Or, an eagle diſplay'd ſable, for Richard duke of Cornwall, as king of the Romans, the founder of Hayles-abbey. 3. Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Azure, a bend argent, cotoiſed Or, between ſix martlets of the laſt, for De-la-Bere; 2d and 3d, Gules, a fret argent, for Huddleſton. &c. &c. The bricks are in exceeding good preſervation, and are valuable remains of the abbey to which they belonged. There are alſo in this houſe many very antient paintings of eminent perſons, particularly a whole length figure of king Edward the Sixth, done upon oak, which is very much admired; but ſome of the pieces are injured by time.

There are two manors in this tithing, both deſcribed in the records by one common name, which I ſhall endavour to diſtinguiſh in their deſcent.

Six hides in Surham, part of the manor of Clive, were held of the church of Worceſter by Durand the ſheriff, at the time of the general ſurvey. Southam was confirmed to the abbey of Tewkeſbury 1 H. 3. Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, held this manor of the biſhop of Worceſter 3, 27, & 30 E. 1. in which laſt year it was ſeized by the crown. Elias de Iccumb held the manor of Southam 5 E. 3. and Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, and William de Bohun, earl of Nottingham held Southam 37 & 47 E. 3. reſpectively The manor of Southam was granted to Ralph Butler, for life, 16 H. 6. and a fine was levied thereof, and of other lands belonging to the dutchy of Lancaſter, to the uſe of Elizabeth, queen to king Edward the Fourth, and to the uſe of the archbiſhop of Canterbury and other great men, 15 E. 4. This manor and many others were granted to Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham, as heir of blood to Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford, 1 R. 3. who was beheaded the ſame year. A wood called Queen's-wood in Southam, and the manor of Southam belonging to the dutchy of Lancaſter, were granted to Robert earl of Saliſbury 5 Jac. And he ſold all his manor, lands, and intereſt in Southam, (except ſome lands before granted by copy of court roll) to Richard De-la-Bere, of Lincoln's-Inn, eſq; the following year.

Thomas Baghot De-la-Bere[o], eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, whoſe arms are blazoned in the former part of this account.

He married Joan, daughter and heireſs of Stephen de Heven, lord of Heven. Sir Stephen Dalabar, ſon of ſir John, married Mabel, one of the daughters of Brian, lord of Brompton in Shropſhire. Sir Simon Dalabar, ſon of ſir Stephen, married Sibil, daughter of ſir Henry Pembridge. Richard Dalabar, eſq; ſon of ſir Simon, married Sibil, daughter of ſir Robert Harley. He aſſigned a rent-charge to Sibil his wife 3 E. 2.

Sir Richard Dalabar, ſon of Richard, married Margaret daughter of ſir William Gammage, lord of Rogiad in Monmouthſhire. He lived 20 E. 2. and ſucceeded to the eſtate of Alan la Pluganet, as next heir of the whole blood. He was preſent at the glorious battle of Creſſy, 20 E. 3. where he acquired great honour by reſcuing Edward the Black Prince, then in imminent danger, and was by him, for this great ſervice, preſented with the preſent creſt to the family arms, which is Five oſtrich feathers iſſuing out of a ducal coronet. Tho' Creſts are now conſidered as mere ornaments, they were formerly greater marks of honour than Cockbury is a farm in this tithing, belonging to Edward Rogers, eſq; held of Mr. De-la-Bere's manor.

Peter Fitz-Herbert[p] obtained a charter of free warren throughout all his lands in the hundred of Cleeve 12 H. 3. and Reginald the ſon of Peter was ſeized of the manor of Southam 14 E. 1. John Fitz-Herbert, and Reginald Fitz-Herbert, were ſucceſſively ſeized of Southam 22 & 26 E. 3. Thomas Dinley, in right of Philippa his wife, died ſeized of the manor of Southam 9 H. 8. and left an only daughter Elizabeth, married to George Barret, to whom livery of this manor was granted the ſame year. William Emundeſham was lord of the manor of Southam, and left Elizabeth his daughter and heireſs, married to Roger Bodenham, of Dewchurch in Herefordſhire. Roger died ſeized of Southam 2 E. 6. Richard Baker had livery of the manor of Southam 1 Eliz. And the reverend Mr. Richard Rogers has the manor in Southam and Brockhampton, late Baker's. His arms are, Argent, a mullet ſable, on a chief gules a fleur de lis Or.

The records alſo ſhew, that William Stokes was ſeized of Fletchard's-croft in Southam 5 H. 6.

Brockhampton, or Brockington, is a hamlet in this tithing.

Haymes is a manor within the tithing of Southam, which continued in the name and family of Lorange for about four hundred years, from the reign of king Edward the Second. It was purchaſed by ſerjeant Goodinge, who was Cuſtos Brevium of the court of Queen's-bench, in the reign of queen Anne. It came afterwards to ſir William Strachan, a baronet of Nova-Scotia, who a few years ſince built a very handſome ſeat here, upon an eminence, commanding a delightful proſpect over the vale of Eveſham, terminated by Malvern and Abberley hills, in the county of Worceſter. This ſeat was lately ſold to ſome perſons of Worceſter. Sir William married one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Edward Popham, eſq; of the Lodge, near Tewkeſbury in this county, by whom he has no iſſue.

2. Gotherington, which lies north-eaſtward of the church. Almerick de St. Amand was ſeized of the manor of Gotherington 4 E. 2. Hugh le Deſpencer and Elizabeth his wife, the relict of Giles Badleſmere, were ſeized of Gotherington and Stoke-Archer 23 E. 3. The manor of Gotherington and other lands belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtine in Briſtol, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8. Another manor in Gotherington, formerly belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, was granted to Anne Forteſcue, widow of ſir Adrian Forteſcue, and to the heirs male of ſir Adrian, 5 Mar. Lord Craven is the preſent lord of this manor.

3. Stoke-Archer, now commonly, but improperly, written Stoke-Orchard. This tithing lies ſouth-weſtward of the church, in two different hundreds; the greater part in the hundred of Cleeve, the other in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury. It took the name of Archer from a family ſurnamed le Archer, who held a manor in this tithing by the ſervice of providing a man, with bow and arrows, at their own charge, to attend the king's army forty days when it marched againſt the Welch. It had not obtained that name at the time of the general ſurvey, as may be ſeen by the following abſtract.

'In Stoches Hermer' and Aluuinus held three 'hides, leſs one yard-land. Now Bernard holds 'them of the king, and has there one plow-tillage 'in demean, and four acres of meadow. It was 'worth 60*s.* and is now worth 40*s.* Thoſe who 'held theſe lands in the time of king Edward, 'were both themſelves and the lands under the 'government of Brictric.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The above is the part in the hundred of Tewkeſbury.

The abſtract from Domeſday-book which ſir Robert Atkyns, by miſtake, placed under this head, belongs to Lark-Stoke. He was alſo miſtaken in ſaying, as from the record, that it was held by the church of Winchelcumbe, whereas the eſtate therein deſcribed was held by the church of Eveſham.

The following abſtract relates to that part of this hamlet which lies in the hundred of Cleeve.

'Bernard and Raynald held ſeven hides in 'Stoches, and they would do no ſervice for St. 'Mary.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

I ſhall endeavour to trace the deſcent of theſe eſtates diſtinctly.

Thomas Berkeley of Coberley was ſeized of that part of Archer-Stoke which lies in the hundred of Cleeve, 25 E. 3. Henry de Berkeley held the John De-la-Bere, ſon of the laſt Kynard, married Anne, daughter of John Stephens, of Lypiat. He was high ſheriff 3 W. 3. 1690. Kynard De-la-Bere, ſon of John, married Heſter, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of John Neal, of Dean, in the county of Bedford, eſq; and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his nephew William Baghot De-la-Bere, of Preſbury, eſq; who was ſon of Anne, eldeſt ſiſter and heireſs of Kynard De-la-bere. He married Heſter, daughter of Thomas Stephens, of Lypiat, eſq; and his eldeſt ſon and heir, Thomas Baghot De-la-Bere, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, as already mentioned.

Thomas Berkeley of Coberley was ſeized of the manor of Stoke-Archer 6 H. 4. and left an only daughter Alice, who carried this eſtate into the family of the Brugges, by her marriage with ſir Thomas Brugge, whom ſhe ſurvived, and was afterwards married to John Browning[q]; and ſurviving him alſo, ſhe died ſeized in dower of this manor 2 H. 5. He died ſeized thereof 15 Eliz. and livery was granted to his ſon Giles lord Chandois the ſame year.

Of that part of Stoke-Archer which lies in the hundred of Tewkeſbury, the following account is drawn from the records.

John, ſon of Robert de Stokes, was ſeized of Stoke and Gotherington 38 H. 3. Nicholas le Archer held two plow-tillages in Stoke 15 E. 1. by the ſervice of providing a man, with bow and arrows, to attend the king's army forty days when it marched againſt the Welch. Edmond Archer held Stoke-Archer 7 E. 2. It was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 8 E. 2. Elianor the widow of Henry le Diſpencer was ſeized of the hamlet of Archer-Stoke 11 E. 3. Jeffry le Archer held the manor of Archer-Stoke 24 E. 3. and Cicely his widow was ſeized of it the ſame year.

John Arundel of Arundel held Archerds 9 H. 5. John Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel, died ſeized of Archerds 13 H. 6. Elianor the widow of ſir Walter Hungerford, late wife of ſir Richard Poynings, and formerly wife of ſir John Arundel, died ſeized of the manor of Archerds 33 H. 6. Nicholas Madeſden, eſq; was ſeized of Archer-Stoke 14 H. 6. and Robert Madeſden held the ſame 36 H. 6. George duke of Clarence, in right of Iſabel his wife, was ſeized of Archer-Stoke 13 E. 4. Anne, ſiſter and heir of Henry duke of Warwick, made an aſſignment of the manor of Stoke-Archer to the king and his heirs male 3 H. 7. Thomas earl of Arundel died ſeized of the manor of Archerds 16 H. 8. and livery was granted to his ſon William earl of Arundel the ſame year, who died ſeized thereof 35 H. 8. and livery was alſo granted to his ſon Henry earl of Arundel 36 H. 8. The manor of Stoke-Archer, lately Warwick's and Spencer's lands, was granted to John Hall and Henry Sheldon 37 H. 8. John Hall died ſeized thereof 2 E. 6. and livery was granted to his ſon Francis 3 Mariæ.

The manor of Stoke-Archer is now the property of Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late Richard Rogers, of Dowdeſwell, eſq.

There is a chapel of eaſe in this hamlet.

4. Woodmancot lies ſouth-eaſtward of the church, where Mr. James Cocks has a good houſe and eſtate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is a rectory worth 500*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Reid is patron and incumbent. It is a peculiar, exempt from the archdeacon's viſitation, but ſubject to the biſhop's triennially. The rector exerciſes archidiaconal juriſdiction, proves wills, and grants adminiſtration. It was a prebend to the college of Weſtbury, who placed a vicar here.

Godfrey Giffard, biſhop of Worceſter, in the 13th century, obtained this rectory for his life by a bull from the pope. The biſhops of Worceſter were patrons, 'till the biſhop conveyed away the advowſon to Thomas Seymour lord Sudely, by whoſe attainder it came to the crown, and was afterwards granted, with the advowſon of the chapel of Stoke-Archer, to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton 21 Eliz.

John Parkhurſt was rector of this church, and was made biſhop of Norwich in 1560.

John Cleymand was preſident of Magdalen-college in Oxford; and upon his removal to be the firſt preſident of Corpus Chriſti-college, becauſe the latter was of leſs value, he was preſented to this rectory; wherefore he gave a ſcholar's place in Brazen-noſe-college for a native of this pariſh, 1548.

Dr. Nicholſon, biſhop of Glouceſter, had alſo been rector of this church.

The church is very large, dedicated to St. Michael the archangel. It hath an aile on the north ſide, two on the ſouth, a handſome tower, with pinnacles, in the middle, and a croſs aile on each ſide. In the year 1696, the ſpire fell down, and the preſent tower was rebuilt, without a ſteeple, in the year 1700, at the expence of 770*l.*

There were four chantries in this church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, to St. Catherine, to All Saints, and to St. Mary.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Under a handſome arch, in the wall of a chapel on the ſouth ſide of the church, lies the effigy in ſtone of a man in antient armour, girt with his ſword, and a large ſhield on his left arm. His legs are croſſed, like a knight templer, with ſpurs on, and his feet reſt on a dog. Tradition will have it to be for Gilbert the Bold.

There is alſo the figure of a military perſon upon a braſs plate fixt on a ſtone in the chancel, with his arms, three piles, and this inſcription in old character:

..... armiger qui obiit undecimo die menſis [illegible] M°. CCC°. LXX°. quinto Cujus aiæ p'picietur deus amen.

In the ſouth aile of the church, againſt the wall, is an elegant monument of black and white marble, erected to the memory of Richard De-la-Bere, eſq; by his widow, daughter and heir to — Newman

[q] Collins's Peerage, V. 2. p. 244, 245.

It conſiſts of two compartments. The lower contains a table deſigned for an inſcription, which has not yet been put upon it. Over the table are two ſcutcheons. On the dexter ſide are the arms of De-la-Bere; on the ſiniſter, Azure, a feſs undy between ſix dolphins nayant, 3 & 3, argent, for Newman. All round are the arms of ſeveral families with whom the De-la-Beres have intermarried. In the middle of the upper compartment is a large ſcutcheon with eight quarterings. 1. De-la-Bere. 2. Gules, a chief counter compony Or and azure, over all a bend argent. 3. Azure, a lion rampant between eight croſſes croſlets argent. 4. Gules, on a chief argent three martlets ſable. 5. Paly of ſix argent and ſable, four bars gules, for De Barry. 6. Barry of ſix Or and azure, over all a bend gules, for Pembridge. 7. Newman, as before. 8. Argent, a bend voided gules, in chief a roſe. This monument is inriched with marble pillars of the Corinthian order, and with pyramids whoſe baſes are ornamented with emblematical figures. Before it, upon a large raiſed tomb, are the effigies in white marble, of a man and woman, lying along in full proportion, both in rich dreſſes, deſigned for Richard De-la-Bere, eſq; and his wife. He died in 1635. Near this, on another raiſed tomb, is the figure of a lady lying along, with an ermine mantle covering her head, and hanging down to her elbows; but it has no inſcription. The whole is incloſed with iron paliſadoes, and in good preſervation.

Againſt the ſouth wall in the chancel is this inſcription.

A charter was obtained 25 H. 6. to exempt this town from taxes and fifteenths for two years, on account of the great loſs which the inhabitants ſuſtained by fire.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 175 houſes and about 875 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 27, burials 25. But having examined the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in ten years beginning with 1700, there were 314 baptiſms, and 206 burials. The average annually being very different from ſir Robert's numbers. And in ten years beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 306, and the burials 242. The preſent number of houſes is 295, of inhabitants 1252; ſo that the proportion between the average number of annual burials, and the whole number of inhabitants is nearly as 1 to 52. Here is a burying ground belonging to the Quakers.

CLIFFORD CHAMBERS.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the vale, on the ſouth ſide of the river Stower, on the borders of the north-eaſt part of the county. It lies in the upper diviſion of Tewkeſbury hundred, ten miles diſtant north from Campden, one ſouth-weſt-ward from Stratford upon Avon, in Warwickſhire, and thirty north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name is compounded of the Saxon word Clyf, a ſteep and rocky place; and ford a paſſage over a river; exactly deſcriptive of the ſituation. And as Aſton Somerville, Coln Rogers, and ſeveral other places in this county, took the cognomen from their reſpective proprietors; ſo, by analogy, I ſuppoſe that Chambers was the name of ſome owner of this manor, tho' not mentioned in the ſubſequent records, and that it was added to diſtinguiſh this pariſh from Rhyan Clifford, in the county of Warwick, which lies at a ſmall diſtance from it, on the oppoſite ſide of the Stower.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſture lands, with ſome arable; but produces no rare plants, foſſils, nor mineral waters; nor are there any remains of antiquity within it; wherefore I proceed to give the deſcent

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Under the particulars of the manor of Tewkeſbury, in Domeſday-book, it is thus expreſſed:

'Seven hides in Clifort belong to the ſame 'manor. There are three plow-tillages in demean, 'and fourteen villeins with five plow-tillages, and 'a mill of 12*s*. [rent] and two acres of meadow. 'There are thirteen ſervi and ancillæ, and there is 'a church, and a prieſt with one plow-tillage. 'It was worth 8*l*. now 6*l*. The queen gave this 'land to Roger de Buſli, and it was taxed for four 'hides in [the manor of] Tedecheſberie.' Dom. Book, p. 68.

In the year 1099, the above Roger de Buſli, then called Roger de Bulley, gave the manor and advowſon of Clifford to the church of St. Peter of Glouceſter, whoſe grant king William the Second confirmed when Serlo was abbat.

The abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter was ſeized of Clifford 17 E. 3. and continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution of that houſe.

What is mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns, of Gilbert de Clare being ſeized of this manor, 15 E. 1. muſt relate only to Ailſton, a hamlet in this pariſh, of which he died ſeized 7 E. 2. as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition of the following year.

The manor of Clifford Chambers, formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted to Charles Rainsford 4 Eliz. Hercules Rainsford, his ſon and heir, died ſeized of it in 1583, and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Henry Rainsford, who died ſeized thereof in 1622. Henry Rainsford, eſq; was ſon and heir of ſir Henry. His eſtate was ſequeſtered in the great civil wars, for the part he took with the king, and he compounded for 900*l*.

The laſt Henry Rainsford ſold the manor &c. to Job Dighton, eſq; in the year 1649. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry Dighton, eſq; who died in 1686, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Richard Dighton. Francis-Keyt Dighton was ſon and heir of Richard. His ſon Liſter Dighton, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a large eſtate here, with a good houſe and pleaſant gardens, ſituate on the river Stower. His arms are, Quarterly, 1 & 4, Argent, a lion paſſant between three croſſes formy fitchy gules. 2 & 3, Gules, a chevron between three kites heads erazed Or, for Keyt.

The poor of the city of Coventry have a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh, lying between Clifford-bridge and Stratford.

HAMLETS. There are two hamlets in this pariſh.

1. Ailſton, or Aleſton. Part of this hamlet lies in the pariſh of Atherſton, in Warwickſhire. At preſent there is no houſe in that part which lies in Clifford. This eſtate was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, at the time of his death, 7 E. 2. as appears by the eſcheator's inquſition of the following year.

2. Wincot, ſo called from Wenric, lord of it in the time of Edward the confeſſor. Only part of this hamlet lies in the pariſh of Clifford, and that part was antiently appurtenant to the large manor of Tewkeſbury, as appears by Domeſday-book, where, among the particulars belonging to that manor, it is thus expreſſed.

'A thane held three hides in Wenecote. The 'queen gave this land to Rainald the chaplain. 'There are three villeins with half a plow-tillage. 'It was worth 40*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The other part of the hamlet is in the pariſh of Queinton, and lay in the old hundred of Witeſtr, (now comprized in that of Kiftſgate) as we learn from the record: See Queinton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Campden, worth about 100*l*. a year. Liſter Dighton, eſq; is patron; Mr. John Martyn the preſent incumbent. The abbey of Glouceſter were formerly patrons of this church.

The rector has the tithe of two yard-lands in that part of the hamlet of Ailſton which lies in the pariſh of Atherſtone, in Warwickſhire, and intirely out of the dioceſe of Glouceſter.

The church is dedicated to St. Helen. It has a handſome tower, with pinnacles and battlements at the weſt end.

Benefactions.

Hugh Caſnel, clerk, gave four tenements in Watford in Warwickſhire, for the benefit of the poor. Thomas Jackſon of this place, gave 100*l.* to endow a free-ſchool, and 50*l.* to the poor; and his executors gave 50*l.* more, which money was laid out on a rent-charge of 10*l.* a year, on lands in Tiddington and Alveſton in Warwickſhire, 7*l.* 10*s.* of which is appropriated to the ſchool, the remainder diſtributed in bread to the poor. The church-houſe, worth 6*l.* a year, was built by the inhabitants for the uſe of the poor.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 76 houſes and about 320 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof four were freeholders; yearly births 11, burials 9. But he was far from being accurate in the two laſt particulars; for it appears by the regiſter, that in ten years, from 1700 to 1709 both incluſive, there were only 79 baptiſms and 62 burials. In the ſame number of years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, the baptiſms were 70, and the burials 39. Several cottages have been taken down during the laſt century, ſo that there remain only 51 tenements; and the number of inhabitants is about 249; the proportion between the average of annual burials and the number of inhabitants being nearly as 1 to 60, which ſhews the place to be very healthy.

CLIFTON,

ONE of the moſt agreeable villages in the kingdom, lies in the hundred of King's-Barton. It is ſituated on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt of a cliff, or hill, (whence its name) about thirty-ſix miles ſouthward from Glouceſter, and one mile weſtward from the city of Briſtol, over which it commands a very pleaſing proſpect.

Some of the houſes grace the ſummit of the hill, but moſt of them lie at a ſmall diſtance lower down, upon a ſlope, near the banks of the river Avon, which divides this pariſh from Somerſetſhire[r]. The well-cultivated lands in that county, riſing gradually for four or five miles from the verge of the river, to the top of Dundery-hill, preſent themſelves towards the village in a very beautiful landſkape. And what very much enriches it, is the view of the ſhips and boats continually paſſing before the eye, up and down, upon every returning tide.

A little weſtward of the houſes, nature diſplays herſelf in a bolder manner. Rocks riſe from the very edge of the water on both ſides of the river, almoſt perpendicularly, near two hundred feet high. They are, in ſome places, bare and craggy; in others, beautifully covered with ſhrubs and hanging coppice wood.

Theſe rocks extend over a large ſpace of country on each ſide of the river; and the ſtrata of which they are compoſed all lie in the ſame direction,

[r] The following are the metes and bounds of the pariſh, deſcribed in an old book in the church. From the paſſage of Swinham, by the river Avon, to the chapel of St. Vincent, and from thence, by the river aforeſaid, to Wallcam-ſlade, and from thence to a place called the Hawthorn, and from thence to a certain ſtone called the Mere-ſtone, lying between the chapel of St. Lambert and the royal way; and from thence, by the aforeſaid way, to Smock-acre, from thence to the White-ſtile, and then to Dedyſtone-ſtile, and thence to the Lime-kilns, and then by the river Avon to the paſſage aforeſaid.

dipping towards the ſouth, making an angle of about fifteen or twenty degrees with the horizon. Thoſe on one ſide of the river ſo perfectly correſpond in every reſpect with the oppoſite, that people, in all ages, ſeem to have concurred in this general opinion, that they have ſome time or other united in the ſame body; but various are the notions concerning the cauſe of their ſeparation.

In early times, when the nature of things was leſs attended to and leſs underſtood, it was uſual to attribute ſuch events as could not otherwiſe be accounted for, to an extraordinary interpoſition of divine power, which we call miracle. This gave riſe to the following ſtory. There was a chapel on the top of theſe rocks, long ſince demoliſhed, dedicated to St. Vincent, who was a native of Spain, and ſuffered martyrdom about the year 305. And once upon a time, I know not when, but before the port of Briſtol was ſettled in the river Frome, a diſpute is ſaid to have ariſen, whether a place called Say-Mills was not a more convenient port than another which was propoſed, ſeveral large ſhips having been built in that place. One Goram, a hermit, becauſe his hermitage lay on the ſide of the brook Trim, which ran down to Say-Mills, contended for that port; but the diſpute was determined in favour of the river Frome, by St. Vincent's cleaving thoſe rocks aſunder, thereby giving paſſage to the river, in honour of the chapel that was ſo built and dedicated to him.

Some ſuppoſe the rock to have been ſplit by an earthquake; but it is oppoſed to this opinion, that then the ſtrata would have been diſordered by the riſing and convulſions of the earth, and not have lain, as we now ſee them, exactly in the ſame direction on both ſides of the river.

The moſt rational opinion concerning this event ſeems to be, that the deep and narrow channel, in which the Avon runs, was made at the Deluge. The impetuous torrent of waters not finding vent faſt enough, at going off, through the vale a little to the ſouth, burſt a paſſage this way, and waſhed the channel of the river when the earth was in a ſoft and yielding ſtate. And that the ſoft, ſtony matter, through which the waters then made their way, have ſince petrified into thoſe vaſt rocks, the dividing of which is otherwiſe ſo difficult to account for.

Giant's-Hole is a vaſt cavern, half way down St. Vincent's rocks, deſcribed in William of Worceſter's manuſcript, in Bennet-college library, Cambridge. It is ſuppoſed to have been an old hermitage, and originally to have communicated with the ſurface near the chapel. There is alſo a place called Jack's-Hole, in the ſame rocks.

The river Avon empties itſelf into the eſtuary of the Severn at Kingroad, ſeven or eight miles below Clifton. The tide riſes in it to the height of thirty feet and upwards, upon which the merchant-ſhips ride into the port of Briſtol.

There are antient fortifications and intrenchments upon Clifton-hill, where a wind-mill now ſtands; and coins of the later Roman emperors have been frequently found about the camp. Other intrenchments ſtand oppoſite to them, on the Somerſetſhire ſide of the Avon. They are all ſuppoſed to be the works of the Roman ſoldiers under Oſtorius, who cauſed fortifications to be raiſed in many places along that river, above and below Briſtol; for which reaſon, probably, the Britons gave the name of Caer Oder, i. e. Caſtrum Oſtorij, to that city.

This camp on Clifton-hill is neceſſarily of a circular form, taking the ſhape of the hill, with a double ditch, and aggera. The ſpot was choſen with the greateſt military judgment, being the higheſt ground about this part of the country. It ſtands on the banks of the Avon, with a vadum acroſs at low water, to paſs to the camp on the Somerſetſhire ſide. It ſeems to be the firſt of a chain of forts* conſtructed by that warlike people, to command the Severn, and the country bordering upon it; and to ſecure the paſſage over that river at Oldbury, which was undoubtedly the Trajectus of Antoninus.

That paſſage was of the higheſt importance to the Romans, as it preſerved a communication between their ſtations at Iſca, Venta Silurum, and Abone, on the north ſide of that river, and Aqua Solis and other ſtations, on the ſouth ſide of it.

Tho' it was a long march from Aqua Solis, or Bath, to that paſſage, the camps on Sodbury-hill and Horton-hill, about the mid-way, were thought ſufficient to protect that road; but ſo great was their attention to ſecure the Trajectus, that, in a ſhorter diſtance of ground, they conſtructed no leſs than ſeven camps of obſervation in the line from Clifton to Oldbury. Two of them are about four miles diſtant each from Clifton, one a little to the right, on Bury-hill, in the pariſh of Winterbourn; the other to the left, on Blaiſe-hill, in the pariſh of Henbury; and a little further, on Comb-hill and King's-Weſton-hill, are two others, which ſurvey the Severn. From Blaiſe-hill to the camp at Almondſbury is about five miles, and from thence to another called Old-Abbey, at Alveſton, four miles; which latter is about the ſame diſtance from the Trajectus at Oldbury.

Their great care to ſecure the paſſage at the Trajectus, from the country of the Silures, on the other ſide of the Severn, is no leſs apparent. For from the Abone, which I would fix at Aylberton in the pariſh of Lidney, is a deep intrenchment and agger, all the way down to the river, almost oppoſite to the Trajectus.

All theſe camps are ſituated upon high ground, that one might look upon the others, and be ſeen by them; and that the ſoldiers might the better deſcry the enemy, and being within ſight, might alarm their diſtant friends of approaching danger.

* Mr. Barrett of Briſtol, a perſon of great learning and judgment, who is writing the Hiſtory and Antiquities of that city, favoured me with an account of theſe camps, having particularly traced and examined them himſelf.

And ſo extenſive and beautiful is the proſpect from the camp at Clifton particularly, that it is the reſort of the gentry at the Hot Wells and Clifton every fine day.

Before I quit this ſubject, I muſt obſerve, that beſide the camps on Sodbury and Horton hills, ſuppoſed for the purpoſe of protecting the road from Aqua Solis to the Trajectus, there were two poſts occupied by the Romans on the ſides of that road; one at Wick, about eight miles from Bath, the other at Cromhall, about ſeven miles from Oldbury. That they were Roman works, will appear from the circumſtances related under the reſpective places.

The excellent proſpects from various parts of Clifton, and the fine air, have induced many gentlemen to build and reſide there.

Matthew Brickdale, ſometime a repreſentative in parliament for the city of Briſtol, Samuel Worrall, Iſaac Elton, John Freeman, Henry Hobhouſe, — Hibbs, and John Vaughan, eſq^rs. have very handſome modern houſes, with freeſtone fronts and proper offices, upon Clifton-hill. Mr. Goldney has a handſome houſe here, with fine gardens, a grotto of ſhell-work, and a canal with fountains, ſupply'd with water by a fire-engine.

Sir William Draper has alſo a very handſome ſeat upon the hill. As you face the front, there ſtands at a diſtance before it, on the right hand, a free-ſtone obeliſk, with this inſcription on the baſe:

GVLIELMO PITT, COMITI DE CHATHAM,
Hoc Amicitiæ privatæ Teſtimonium,
Simul et Honoris publici Monumentum,
Poſuit Gulielmus Draper.

On the left, to anſwer the obeliſk, is a Cenotaph, conſiſting of a raiſed tomb, ſupporting a large vaſe, with an urn at top, well executed in freeſtone. Engraven on the ſide of the vaſe, are the following elegant verſes:

Every attempt to perpetuate the memory of heroes who have nobly fallen in the ſervice of their country, muſt be highly grateful to the lovers of it. It is the only tribute we can pay to their merit. It is a grateful acknowledgment to thoſe who were engaged in the ſame glorious, but hazardous enterprizes, and more fortunately ſurvived them. I have, therefore, furthered the deſign ſo worthily conceived by ſir William Draper; and am perſuaded, that this page of my book will be read with pleaſure, when other parts of it lie neglected.

From the bottom of theſe famous rocks of St. Vincent, iſſues the Briſtol Hot-well water, deſervedly eſteemed for its efficacy in a variety of diſorders. The ſpring is very plentiful. It is the property of the ſociety of merchants of Briſtol. It riſes near the bed of the Avon, the ſalt water of which uſually breaks in upon it at very high ſpring-tides; and therefore, they are then obliged to leave off pumping, a few hours in the day.

Various experiments have been made upon this water, to diſcover its diſtinguiſhing properties. The heat of a cold ſpring in that neighbourhood is fifty degrees in Fahrenheit's thermometer; that of the new warm well of the merchants near Briſtol, ſixty-eight degrees; Mallow-water in Ireland, ſixty-eight degrees; the water of this well at Clifton, ſeventy-ſix; warm milk from the cow, eighty-nine; the Hot-bath at Bath, 114; the Croſs-bath there, 107 degrees. By the niceſt experiments, the heat of the Clifton Hot-well water is ſcarcely ever found to vary. the taſte of it, at the ſpring, is particularly ſoft and milky, and very grateful to the ſtomach; yet it leaves a ſort of ſtypticity, or dryneſs, upon the palate. It curdles with ſoap; with oil of tartar, it gives a bluiſh white cloud, and white ſediment; ſpirit of ſal-ammoniac whitens it; galls do not turn it purple, but it turns green with ſyrup of violets; and makes a conſiderable ebullition with acids.

The fire ſeparates from it a white matter on the ſides of the veſſels, and a chalky ſcum. Dr. Shebeare got fifty-ſix grains from a gallon, by a gentle ſand-heat. The taſte of the ſediment is brackiſh, bitter in the throat, and makes an ebullition with acids. The ſalt ſeparated from the terreſtrial matter is white, conſiſting, according to the doctor, of octagonal cryſtals, interſperſed with cubical ones; but the nitrous ſeem to preponderate. Diluted with oil of vitriol, it gives a genuine ſpirit of ſalt; and all appearances ſhew, that it is of the neutral kind, conſiſting of marine ſalt and calcarious nitre. The earth ſeparated from the ſalt, and dried, ferments with acids, and by calcination becomes lime. The proportion of earth to the ſalt, in one experiment, was as 15 to 11; in another, as 13 to 11; thus the calcarious matter exceeding the ſaline, the water is rather ſweetening and aſtringent, than purgative; as, on the contrary, where the ſalts predominate, as in Cheltenham and other waters, theſe prove purgative. It has this peculiar property, that it keeps good for many years, having been carried ſeveral voyages to Guinea, and has yet been ſweet and good.

It differs greatly from the Bath water, being lighter, has no ferruginous parts, leſs marine ſalt, and the heat of it is not ſo great. The Bath water is powerfully attenuant and laxative, corroborating and heating; whereas this is incraſſating, aſtringent, cooling, and ſucceſsfully preſcribed in inflammations, hectics, coughs, hemorrhages, hemoptoe, dyſentery, immoderate fluxes, and the ſcurvy with heat. It was firſt uſed for external ulcers, and many of the ſcrophulous and cancerous kinds have been very unexpectedly cured by daily waſhing and fomenting the part with it, and at the ſame time drinking the water.

Internally, it ſtrengthens the ſtomach, promotes appetite, aſſiſts digeſtion, corrects acrimony, and immoderate ſecretions and diſcharges. Randolph attributes its virtues to a mineral air impregnating the water, and obſerves, that it cures a diabetes ſometimes in three weeks, ſometimes not in as many months; and yet, by care and perſeverance, makes a perfect cure at laſt. It cures a hectic fever, ſtops the ſpitting of blood, and is of great ſervice in obſtinate coughs and obſtructions in the lungs; ſo that a great part of thoſe whom conſumptions have carried off, might probably have been ſaved by it, had they applied in time.

Some perſons are of opinion, that the true ſource of the virtues of this water is the great rocks of lime-ſtone through which it runs; and endeavour to ſhew, that lime-water gives the virtues to common water which this water poſſeſſes. Without diſputing the fact, it muſt be acknowledged, that this is not a very philoſophic way of reaſoning; however, the doctors Keir and Rutty are of that opinion; to whom, and to the other writers on this ſubject, I refer the reader for further ſatisfaction.

The houſe at the wells was built by ſubſcription. The ſeaſon is from May to September. There is muſic in the rooms, and public breakfaſting, aſſemblies, and other amuſements uſual at ſuch places.

The beauties of nature on the banks of the Avon invite to the healthy exerciſe of walking; and the numbers of ſhips and veſſels continually paſſing in view, to and from the port of Briſtol, with every tide, awaken the fancy to a train of agreeable ideas, various as the objects from which they ariſe.

For thoſe who cannot walk, or who prefer riding, there is the fineſt opportunity in the world. The downs are near and ſpacious, with delightful proſpects; and the air is ſo excellent, that Clifton is eſteemed the Montpelier of England.

The ſituation of Clifton is peculiarly advantageous for excurſions of another nature. Parties are frequently going in pleaſure-boats, attended with muſic, down the river to Kingroad. For the firſt two miles the Avon runs in a very deep channel, between rough and craggy rocks, romantic beyond deſcription. The cliffs project in a manner aſtoniſhing, and many of them, covered with ſhrubs, tufts of graſs, tall plants, and little trees, have the appearance of hanging woods, ſcarcely any where to be equalled; and the winding of the river between them beautifuly diverſifies the ſcene.

Clifton, however, with all its advantages, cannot boaſt of fertility of ſoil. The herbage is ſhort and poor, and the rocks on Durdham-down, near it, in many places appear above the ſurface of the ground. The ſtone of theſe rocks is very hard and compact, harder than moſt marbles, of which it is a ſpecies, and bears a good poliſh. It is full of ſhining particles, when broken; and not only the rock, but the earth itſelf about Clifton and Durdham-downs, is much intermixt with mundic and metallic ſubſtances.

The ſtone, in this part of the country, is rich in iron ore, which when broken from it, is of various colours, rediſh, crimſon, brown, and yellow; ſome like ſpar, only heavier and tranſparent; others like emery, and there is a ſort in pieces beautifully ſtreaked, and riſing in the appearance of little bubbles, which the druggiſts call the blood-ſtone.

In the fields near Clifton is a kind of hollow ſtone, the cavities of which contain ſpar and cryſtal, in cluſters of various forms. The common people confound theſe ſubſtances by the general name of cryſtal; but they are nevertheleſs of diſtinct kinds, and different in themſelves. The latter is clear and bright, cuts glaſs, and ſuffers no change in the fire, except it be very violent; whereas ſpar breaks breaks, when tryed on glaſs, and put into the fire, preſently calcines to lime; aqua fortis alſo corrodes it, but takes no effect on cryſtal. The ſhoots of ſpar are triangular, or pentangular; but thoſe of cryſtal are hexagonal, and terminate in a point.

This cryſtal is the true Briſtol-ſtone, held by lapidaries in good eſtimation, before the invention of paſte, and is found in great plenty in this neighbourhood. The cryſtals about Clifton reſemble table-diamonds, and ſome of them roſe-diamonds; and the largeſt, when ſeparated, are about the ſize of a hazle-nut. Moſt commonly, the ſhoots of the pureſt ſort grow upon a thin coat of rediſh ferruginous matter, which ſpreads itſelf over a kind of cruſt or bed of fouler cryſtal, about half an inch thick, of the appearance of allum. They are of every tincture between a vivid red and a ſtate perfectly colourleſs. There are alſo various ſhades of yellow, and of brown, down to almoſt black, which are very brilliant, and of a hardneſs exceeding all the reſt.

In the ſame rocks are veins of lead-ore, intermixed with a brown ſtone, of the nature of calamine, which is not uncommon in theſe parts. And there are ſeveral ſorts of ochre of different ſhades, from a deep red to a light lemon-colour, but they are never found except about the lumps of iron-ore, from which they originate.

Cryſtals, like other ſtones, are undoubtedly generated by the agency of water; and in this part of the country, it muſt of neceſſity be from rain; as there is no ſpring near the places where they are found. In many parts, the ſurface of the ground is ſo firm and compact, that water does not eaſily penetrate. Now if cryſtals were found in quantities under ſuch places, it would deſtroy this hypotheſis; but the caſe is otherwiſe, for very few if any are found in ſuch places. In other parts, the earth and materials under the ſurface of it are looſe and ſpungy, and on breaking them away, a great number of exceeding ſmall tracks and channels may be perceived, through which the water takes its way from the ſurface. In following theſe, there are always found vaſt quantities of cryſtals, in the cracks and cavities of the iron-ore which lies underneath. And as this is the caſe without exception, can there be any doubt of the cryſtals originating from water? The different colours of them are owing to the materials through which the water paſſes before petrification; for infallibly, where it is ſtrained through the red ochre found among the iron-ore, they are ſtrongly tinged with that colour; if through yellow ochre, they are yellow; but if it paſſes through earth, ſand, or other matter that gives no colour to water, then the cryſtal is colourleſs.

Mr. Owen has publiſhed obſervations reſpecting the natural hiſtory of the country about Briſtol, in which he attempts to ſhew that it is particularly diſpoſed to petrifaction; and that even the ſtone-duſt on Clifton-hill, moiſtened by rain, cements into a body of ſtone again. But he was deceived in fancying that the incruſtations which he had obſerved on ſome ſtones lying on the ſides of the road, were formed as above; when it is certain, that thoſe ſtones were taken out of the pit with the incruſtations upon them.

Mr. Henry Jones, author of Kew-Gardens, &c. about the year 1767, celebrated this village in a poem of two cantos, intitled CLIFTON [t]. In the ſecond canto, he pays his devoirs to King's-Weſton, Stoke-Giffard, and other neighbouring villas.

[t] This poem has a conſiderable degree of merit, tho' in ſome parts a little obſcure. Such of my readers who have not ſeen it, may be pleaſed with the following extract from it.

CLIFTON, rich ſource of Heliconian ſtream!
Thou teeming topic! and thou lofty theme!
Where art, where nature leads the ſoul along,
And taſte and commerce crown the copious ſong;
Where vaſt variety the heart expands,
And giving grandeur opens wide her hands;
With nature's nobleſt gifts regales the ſoul,
Each part a paradiſe—a heaven the whole!
Where health, where vigour quaffs the winnow'd air,
And drives far off the ugly fiend, Deſpair.
My muſe, O CLIFTON! would thy ſummits climb,
And hand thy beauties down to lateſt time;
To ages yet unborn thy charms diſplay,
In numbers laſting as the lamp of day;
Would Inſpiration prompt my proud deſire,
The ſong and ſubject ſhould at once expire.
How epic wonders here the ſoul delight!
There, diſtant beauties ſtrain th' impaſſion'd ſight;
See rocks coeval with the world ariſe,
Whoſe cloud-ſwept groves ſeem waving in the ſkies;
By ages furrow'd deep, with time plow'd mein,
With adverſe frowns, with fractur'd foreheads ſeen,
Whilſt Neptune rolls his rapid tides between.
See Wealth quick flying in the freighted gale,
See Eaſt, ſee Weſt expand th' impatient ſail;
Here earth, here ocean, mountains, rocks unite
And in harmonious diſcord give delight;
There, princely piles in claſſic taſte expreſs'd
In Grecian garb, in Roman grandeur dreſs'd,
A line of palaces o'erlook the town,
That with a jealous pride the proſpect crown:
On different heights they ſtand in ſtately ſtrife,
Like rank and dignity in moral life:
In various climax court th' attracted eyes,
The objects changing as the ſtructures riſe:
From pile to pile a proſpect new appears,
And now the hills, and now the river cheers.
See num'rous ſhips with ſudden glance ſhoot by,
The ſails and ſtreamers only ſtrike the eye:
Between th' embracing banks, for ever green,
They ſeem to move on land, their bulk unſeen;
By glad propitious gales impatient blown,
With rapid ſpeed and motion not their own.
See next a * ſteeple on yon hill appear,
Yon diſtant hill, the Proteus of the year;
From whoſe oft-changing look, the watchful ſwain,
Foretells the weather, and avoids the rain.
The blue ætherial hills ſee laſt upriſe,
In azure robe to meet the bending ſkies.
Here pendent gardens with rich fruits appear,
The rip'ning bounty of the laviſh year.
The temple rais'd above the group ſee ſway,
And all th' extended various views ſurvey.
Divine ambition in the choice is found,
Nay taſte itſelf mark'd out the ſacred ground;
With holy pride the lofty ſeat to ſhew,
And reign exulting o'er the world below;
Where ſome on others look with ſcornful phlegm,
Whilſt others look with equal ſcorn on them;
With mole-hill malice daſh the cup of life,
An inch in difference makes the mountain ſtrife:

* The ſteeple on Dundery-hill.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

It appears by Domeſday-book, that Clifton was part of the antient demeans of the crown, and a member of the manor of Weſtberie, (as it was then written) in which the king had thirty hides of land; and that it continued a member of that manor during the firſt four years of the Conqueror's reign. But afterwards, according to the record, ſix hides in Chire, ten in Cliftone, eight in Noent and Chingeſtune, and one in Ladenent, were taken from the manor of Weſtberie, and held by three proprietors; namely, the abbey of

From proud compariſon we quaff our all,
That ſource of human ſweets, or human gall:
At which the reſtleſs ſoul impatient pants,
Begets her anguiſh, and creates her wants.
Oh frantic fallacy! oh brain-ſick need!
Shall thy ſleek beaver make my boſom bleed?
Thy better buckled belt make me repine,
Or if thy nails be cloſer cut than mine?
Shall I my lips with inward anguiſh bite,
If thy black kitten's tail be tipt with white?
Or if thy leeks than mine ſhould greener grow,
And make thy fancied bliſs, my REAL woe?
Envy in courts and cottages will dwell,
Nay climb to heaven itſelf, tho' born in hell:
In every living boſom lurks this peſt,
But reigns unrival'd in the human breaſt;
In reaſon's throne uſurps a thorny part,
And plants a thouſand daggers in the heart.

THE moral here and natural world we ſee,
In wiſe gradation, and in juſt degree:
Where all conſtructed for one ſyſtem's ſake,
In happy, heterogeneous proſpect make:
Where reaſon's ſcale from claſs to claſs can fall,
And meaſure equal bounty dealt to all;
Each lot can juſtly prize, in fortune's wheel,
But not from what we have, but what we feel.

FROM moral ſtrains, let my glad numbers ſoar,
And yon coincidence with ſpeed explore:
Where ſtrong extremes produce a ſtriking taſte,
A Gothic building by a Greek embrac'd:
A contraſt kind, the feaſted eye to fill,
And mark the ſummit of the ſocial hill:
Where Goldney acts the meek, the moral part,
And daily works new miracles of art.
Where he like Moſes makes the water flow,
Bids gold the rock obeys, but not his blow:
Bids gold, that conquers nature's hardeſt laws,
And fountains from the rocky centre draws:
Bids well-ſpent gold a two-fold tranſport gives,
The garden gladdens, and the labourer lives.
Such toils refreſh at once the heart and head,
Give taſte a banquet, and the ruſtic bread:
Make nature wonder at her thin-wove maſk,
And truth ſurvey her own tranſparent taſk.
The maſter's pleaſure with th' improvement grows,
All the rapture, that a parent knows:
When wiſe diſcretion weighs th' unerring coin,
And makes his pleaſure with his prudence join.
When ſweet ambition bids the heart begin,
For genius feels a paradiſe within:
And tho' at firſt her taſk may ſeem too hard,
Th' accompliſh'd wonder is its own reward.
When fancy triumphs, when by judgment led,
And wears the well-earn'd wreath around her head:
Without a bluſh her own bright work ſurveys,
Approves the rapture, and enjoys the praiſe:
A new creation lifts th' admiring lid,
Here nature looks abroad, here art lies hid:
Over the grand form her mantle meek ſhe flings,
But ornaments are arbitrary things:
Yet even there ſhould fancy never ſtray
From nature's path, or ſeek a wiſer way;
It is but nature in her beſt array.
With ſimple elegance ſhe ſmiling ſtands,
In blameleſs garb, put on by Goldney's hands.
From genius taught the taſteful eye to cheer,
With ſober judgment whiſpering in his ear:
A wiſe diſcretion rules the realms of wit,
The happy medium here, he happy hit;
Where each bright incident performs its part,
With inward rapture melts the maſter's heart;
And each congenial gueſt with joy invades
The fountains, grottos, and the clear caſcades;
The tall parterres that lift the comely face,
And yield at once ſuch majeſty and grace,
With ev'ry growing beauty in its place.
A minor Stow on Clifton's crown we find,
Epic meekneſs, like its maſter's mind.

HERE buildings boaſt a robe, tho' rich yet chaſte,
The robe of judgment, and of ripen'd taſte:
Convenience here is mix'd with manly grace,
Yet ornament but holds the ſecond place.
To human frames theſe ſtructures ſeem akin,
With aſpect fair, while reaſon rules within.
Theſe domes diſcretion decks, and fancy cheers,
Palladio's ſtile in Patty's plans appears:
Himſelf a maſter with the firſt to ſtand,
For Clifton owes her beauties to his hand.

HENCE to the vale, by mountain rocks ſecur'd,
By nature's own immortal hand immur'd,
The vale, where ſkreen'd Avona ſinks and ſwells,
That warping leads me to the hallow'd Wells,
I wander joyful, with unbounded glee,
From all I raptur'd hear, and raptur'd ſee:
To where ſweet health her far-ſought balm beſtows,
And beauty with re-kindled fervor glows.
Above this fountain of ſupreme delight,
Two ponderous rocks ſurpriſe and pleaſe the ſight:
With bending brows of nearer terms they treat,
Thro' countleſs ages eſſay'd oft to meet;
With grey addreſs the tedious courtſhip con,
And wiſh the aerial arch would make them one:
The nuptial bridge* ſublime their brows would join,
Whilſt Europe wonder'd at the work divine.
Blenheim ſhould bluſh, tho' high her concave ſwells,
Nay Venice veil her bonnet to the Wells:
Her proud Rialto ſhould no more appear,
But France and Italy come crowding here;
Can then ambition ſleep when GLORY calls,
The MUSE herſelf ſhall help to raiſe the walls;
With Orphean ſounds the work divine advance,
And make the willing ſtones in order dance;
Expand the joy-touch'd heart, enlarge the mind,
And Lacy leave one wonder more behind:
The groves on high their frequent nod beſtow,
And earth and water give conſent below;
Whilſt ART ſtands ready with impatient hands,
But gold, demurring gold forbids the bans:
That ſcrupulous wight, whom lock'd-up ſouls adore,
He liſtens not alas! to am'rous lore,
Who many a noble match hath marr'd before.

THE walks ſee full, ſee health diſcloſe her hive,
Whilſt all the neighbouring objects ſeem alive;
See bounty there her healing ſtore unlocks,
Breathes all her vital veins, her genial rocks,
Diſtill'd by nature in her richeſt cell,
Where health ſits brooding, and her offſpring dwell;
With heaven in council deep, for mortal weal,
Where angels blend the balm, and bid it heal;
There love and beauty revel in the tide,
There grace and vigour wanton at their ſide;
That with more luſtre make glad beauty glow,
Than all the diamonds orient realms beſtow;
The cheek to vermil, and relume the eye,
And make diſeaſe, that pallid fantom, fly
From all its windings in the nerves and limbs,
When thro' the laxed tubes he lazy ſwims,
The ſizy, creeping, tardy, torpid flood,
That long in heſitating lakes hath ſtood,
With loaded bane to blaſt the balmy blood,
With pining atrophy, and ſpitting gore,
And all the waſtings of the vital ſtore;
With diabetes and its irkſome train,
And life-conſuming dews, and mental pain.
Here health expels diſeaſe, that deep-hid mole,
Winds up the body, and lets looſe the ſoul,
Calls virtue home, with health, in exile ſtill, Revives th' affections, and awakes the will,
Bids love and friendſhip in the boſom play,
And drives each dark diſſocial cloud away. &c. &c.

* James Lacy, eſq; the deſigner of Ranelagh-houſe, was conſulted on the project of building a bridge of one arch from rock to rock, over the river Avon. A gentleman, whoſe name I have forgot, bequeathed 1000*l.* towards this work; which, had it been perfected, would have been the nobleſt bridge of one arch in the world.

Cormeile, Oſborne, and William the ſon of Richard. This is not a literal tranſlation of the paſſage in Domeſday-book, but will be found to agree with it in ſubſtance. See p. 67.

Theſe three were originally joint proprietors of thoſe eſtates, which were ſome time afterwards divided. The abbey of Cormeile was an alien priory; and as ſuch, all the lands belonging to it, in England, were veſted in the crown by act of parliament 2 H. 5.

The ſhares of the other proprietors ſeem to have deſcended diſtinctly by the general name of Clifton, according to the records of the following dates; which records ſhew, that Lettice the daughter of Nicholas purchaſed Clifton of Joan her ſiſter, who was married to Nicholas de la Hay, 8 Joh.

Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, was ſeized of Clifton 47 H. 3. John de St. Lando held Clifton, with free warren, 20 E. 3. Sir Edward le Diſpencer and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurſt, were ſeized of the manor of Clifton 49 E. 3. in which year he died.

Sir John Chidiock held this manor 14 R. 2. John Rache and Joan his wife levied a fine of the third part of the manor and advowſon of Clifton to ſir John Moigne 15 R. 2. Sir John Botreaux and Elizabeth his wife were ſeized of the manor of Clifton, held of the honour of Glouceſter, 18 R. 2. Richard Seimour held this manor 2 H. 4. John Rache was ſeized of the ſame 11 H. 4. probably the ſame third part of which John Rache and Joan his wife levied a fine to ſir John Moigne, as above.

Richard de Beauchamp and Iſabel his wife held the manor of Clifton 2 H. 5. Sir John Chidiock was ſeized thereof 3 H. 5. Nicholas Seimour held this manor 2 H. 6. Elianor the widow of ſir John Chidiock, or Chadock, was ſeized of the manor of Clifton 12 H. 6. John lord Zouch was alſo ſeized of this manor, and being attainted 1 H. 7. his eſtate was forfeited, and this manor was granted the ſame year to ſir William Willoughby and his heirs male.

All the property which the crown had in the manor of Clifton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Cormeile, was granted to ſir Rafe Sadleir 35 H. 8. And, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, Ralph Sadler, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608.

It is morally impoſſible that the whole manor ſhould change maſters ſo often as mentioned by the records of the foregoing dates; or that there ſhould be ſo many diſtinct manors in this pariſh, as there are different owners in and about the ſame age; wherefore, to obviate every difficulty, and to account for the confuſion in the deſcent of the manor, I ſuppoſe it to have been divided and ſubdivided, perhaps by the marriage of coheireſſes; and the parts to have been often ſold, or demiſed for terms of ſhort duration; and that each paſſed by the general name of the manor of Clifton; of which ſimilar inſtances are not wanting in other places.

The merchants adventurers of the city of Briſtol are owners of one part of this manor; the other, which antiently belonged to ſir Rafe Sadleir, is the property of Mr. Ruſs, and Mrs. Adams's family of Briſtol.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Briſtol. It has been augmented with queen Anne's bounty, ſo that the preſent real value is about 100*l.* a year. Mr. John Taylor is patron and incumbent. The miniſter has no tithes. His income ariſes chiefly from the voluntary contribution of the pariſhioners. There is a chapel alſo in the pariſh, but no proviſion for repairing the building; nor endowment for the miniſter, beſide the voluntary contributions of the company reſorting to the Hot-wells, amounting uſually to about ſixty guineas.

The impropriation of Clifton was given, by John Carpenter, biſhop of Worceſter, to the college of Weſtbury upon Trim. It was lately veſted in Mr. Hodges, and is now the property of his daughter, Mrs. Hamly.

The church has a new building added to it, and is handſomely pewed.

In the church, is a monument thus inſcribed:

In this Church are depoſited the Remains of ROBERT DINWIDDIE, Eſq; formerly Governor of Virginia, who deceaſed July 27, 1770, in the 78th Year of his Age. The Annals of that Country will teſtify with what Judgment, Activity, and Zeal, He exerted himſelf in the Publick Cauſe, when the whole North American Continent was involved in a French and Indian War. His Rectitude of Conduct in his Government, and Integrity in other publick Employments, add a Luſtre to his Character, which was revered while he lived, and will be held in Eſtimation whilſt his Name ſurvives. His more private Virtues, and the amiable ſocial Qualities he poſſeſſed, were the Happineſs of his numerous Friends and Relations, many of whom ſhared his Bounty, all lament his Loſs. As his happy Diſpoſitions for domeſtic Life were beſt known to his affectionate Wife and Daughters, They have erected this Monument to the Memory of his Conjugal and Paternal Love, which they will ever cheriſh and revere with that Piety and Tenderneſs he ſo greatly merited.

Farewell bleſt Shade! no more with Grief oppreſt,
Propitious Angels guide thee to thy Reſt.

On another marble monument, this inſcription:

To the Memory of Mrs. ELIZABETH BLENMAN (Wife of WILLIAM BLENMAN, Eſq; of the Iſland of Barbadoes, and one of the Daughters of JOSEPH DOTIN Eſq Eſq; of the ſaid Iſland) who died in this Village on the 10th Auguſt 1763, in the 36th Year of her Age & the 15th of her Marriage, leaving Four Sons & Two Daughters. A WOMAN uniformly and without Oſtentation actuated by the great Principles of VIRTUE and RELIGION; moderate in her Deſires & Enjoyments; by Prudence and a well diſpoſed Mind ſecured from Temptation or Surprize. Tenderneſs and Benevolence were ſeen in her pleaſing Countenance; an amiable Simplicity of Manners in her Deportment; and both ſhewed the conſtant influence of TRUTH and INNOCENCE. Quick to diſcover & acknowledge Merit, yet Indulgent to the Failings of Humanity, She contemplated with Delight the Excellencies of her Friends, and ſaw with Candour their Defects. Inſenſible of her own Worth, She viewed with partial Eyes Her HUSBAND; and gave him the warm and active Affection of a Heart which knew no Joy or Intereſt unconnected with His. Let this Monument record Her Virtues, His Gratitude and Love. —— Arms, Gules, two lions paſſant in pale Or.

On another marble monument is the following inſcription:

Near to this Monument lies interr'd the Body of Lieut. Col. ALEXANDER TENNENT of Handarwood in Edinburgh-Shire. In whom Courage, Honour, Probity, joined with the mildeſt temper and gentleſt Manners, were equally conſpicuous. His ſtrength being waſted by Wounds received in the Service of his Country, at Minden, Warburg, & Campen, he died at the Hot Wells Sept. the 17th 1763, Aged 40. —— Arms, Argent, within a bordure two creſcents in feſs azure, in chief a boar's head couped Or.

There are likewiſe inſcriptions for Margaret Winſhul, who died in 1732; for Mary Davis, who died in 1758; for Miſs Mariamne Eyre; and for Margaret Stirling, who died in 1761.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compoſed his account of this pariſh, there were 90 houſes, and about 450 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 12. The reſort to the Hot-wells, ſince that time, has greatly increaſed population, and conſequently the number of baptiſms and burials; for in ten years, beginning with 1760, the average of annual baptiſms is 36.2, of burials, 49.3; and the inhabitants, excluſive of lodgers, are about 1367. It is obſervable that the burials greatly exceed the baptiſms, occaſioned by the interment at Clifton of ſuch perſons as, coming to the wells for the recovery of their health, have died there. Of which there have been, for ſome time paſt, about ten in a year, upon an average. This reduces the annual burials of the ſettled inhabitants to 30.3; nearly in the proportion of 1 to 45 of the whole number of the living.

COLESBOURN,

IS in the hundred of Rapſgate, ſix miles diſtant ſouth-eaſtward from Cheltenham, nine north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, and eleven eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is a little retired village, about a mile eaſtward of the road from Cirenceſter to Cheltenham. It lies in a narrow valley, through which the river Churn paſſes to Cirenceſter, and takes its name from that river; for Coleſbourn, with a ſmall allowance for corruption in long and vulgar uſe, is the ſame with Corinſbourn; i. e. the river Corin, or Churn, upon which the village ſtands.

Here the Lyde, or Wyde, a ſmall brook riſing in Withington, falls into the Churn, and helps to ſtore it with plenty of ſmall trout and cray-fiſh.

Rapſgate, or Reſpigete, is a hamlet in this pariſh, which gives name to the hundred: And Coleſbourn-pen, ſo called, from pen the head or top of any thing, is a ſpot of high ground, ſeen at a very conſiderable diſtance in this part of the county.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of arable land, with ſome wood, and a little paſture-ground; but affords nothing worthy the traveller's notice, except that in the north field there are the remains of an antient encampment.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the regiſter of lands held by the church of Worceſter, Domeſday-book gives the following account:

'The ſame church [i.e. St. Mary of Worceſter] 'held Coleſborne, in Reſpigete hundred, and 'Suein held it of her, and he could not depart '[from this eſtate.] There are eight hides taxed. 'Walter the brother of Roger holds it of the 'church. In demean is one plow-tillage, and 'eighteen villeins, and two bordars with five 'plow-tillages. There are two ſervi, and three 'acres of meadow, and two mills of 7*s.* 6*d.* [rent.] 'It was then worth 8*l.* now 4*l.*' Dom. B. p. 70.

But the ſame record gives account of other eſtates in Coleſbourn, which belonged to the manors of Withington and Elkſtone, under which pariſhes the particulars may be ſeen.

This manor was alienated from the church of Worceſter, and became veſted in the priory of Lanthony, which purchaſed a charter of free warren therein 21 E. 1. and continued in poſſeſſion thereof till that houſe was diſſolved.

The manor of Coleſbourn, which had belonged to the priory of Lanthony, was granted to Thomas Reeve and others 6 Eliz. William Higgs, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, in whoſe family it continued for ſeveral generations. It was afterwards purchaſed by Mr. Sheppard of Hampton, whoſe ſon Philip Sheppard, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; and John Sheppard, eſq; a deſcendant from him, lately ſold it to Francis Eyre, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor. The arms of Eyre, as I find them on a monument in Clifton-church, Argent, on a chevron ſable three quatrefoils Or.

There is an antient farm-houſe, with a chapel adjoining to it, called the Priory.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Eyre is patron, Mr. Millechamp the preſent incumbent. The priory of Lanthony formerly preſented to it.

Milo, conſtable of Glouceſter, gave two parts of the tithes of Coleſbourn Sampſon, and two parts of the tithes of Elias Leholt of Coleſbourn, to the priory of Lanthony, in the year 1137; ſo that the rector hath only one third part of the tithes.

The advowſon of the rectory, of which the earl of Arundel was poſſeſſed, was granted to George and John Huntley 6 Eliz. A portion of tithes, and divers ſheep-paſtures, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to John Arundel 38 H. 8.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It is ſmall, in form of a croſs, with a low embattled tower at the weſt end. The north aile belongs to the lord of the manor, the other to the pariſh.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houſes and about 120 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. But by the regiſter, from May 6, 1759, to May 8, 1769, there were 76 baptiſms; and from Jan. 2, 1759, to Feb. 19, 1769, 44 burials. The families are 48, and the inhabitants being numbered, are exactly 254; ſo that the average of annual burials, to the whole number of people, is as 1 to 57,7; which ſhews the place to be very healthy.

COLFORD.

See NEWLAND.

COLN St. ALWIN'S.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Brit[well]-barrow, nine miles diſtant north-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, five north-weſtward from Le[chlade], and twenty-three eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The river Coln, increaſed by the Bibury wate[r], runs reluctantly through this pariſh, with a ſlow ſtream; and the trout grows in it to a good ſi[ze], whereas at Bibury 'tis always light and ſlende[r]. The pariſh takes its name from the river, and from St. Alwin, to whom, it is ſuppoſed, the church was originally dedicated. He was tutor to Charles the Great, and famous for his great ſkill in diſputation.

This is a pretty little village. The lands ri[se] in a bold manner on each ſide the Coln, and the church and houſes are ſeen pleaſantly ſituated on the north-eaſt ſide, overlooking the river, the ſtone-bridge upon which is part repaired by this pariſh, and part by Quenington.

The Ikenild-way, a Roman road, leading from Oxfordſhire through this pariſh to Cirenceſter, is ſtill viſible in a high ridge in many parts of it. It paſſes through a corner of Poulton in Wiltſhire, at an eminence about ſix miles from Cirenceſter, and croſſes another road where a tall aſh tree grew, which tree was particularly convenient as a land-mark and token to travellers; and hence the place obtained the name of Ready-token.

The pariſh hath lately been incloſed by act of parliament.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Athelred, governor of Glouceſterſhire, gave [ſix] meſſuages of his land, lying in Culne St. Elwin, to the monks of St. Peter of Glouceſter. See p[age]. And the manor was held by the ſame church [be]fore after the Conqueſt, as appears by Domeſday-book.

From their time I find no account of the proietors, 'till Henry Powle, eſq; became poſſeſſed it. He was ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, aſter of the rolls, and one of the privy council to ng Charles the Second, and king William the hird. From this family the manor of Williamip went, by the marriage of his only daughter d heireſs, to Henry Ireton, eſq. It afterwards aſſed to Brooke Forreſter, and then to Humry-Mackworth Praed, who ſold it to Samuel ackwell, eſq; one of the repreſentatives in parliaent for the borough of Cirenceſter, who is the reſent lord of the manor. He has a very handme ſeat and large eſtate here, and in other parts the county. For his arms, &c. ſee p. 229.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of irford, now worth about 60*l.* a year. It has en augmented by queen Anne's bounty. Syl-ſter biſhop of Worceſter, in the year 1217, ve the impropriation of this church to the abbey Glouceſter, for the increaſe of hoſpitality, when enry Blond was abbat. And the impropriation d the advowſon of the vicarage were granted to e dean and chapter of Glouceſter, by their char- of foundation. At this time there is no inmbent, by reaſon of the deceaſe of the late Mr. field, 1775. The vicar has 20*l.* a year out of impropriation, and at the late incloſing of the riſh, lands were allotted to him in lieu of tithe. Catland-houſe was given by the abbey of Glouſter for the purpoſe of a church-houſe.

The church conſiſts of the nave only. It is dicated to St. John Baptiſt. The tower ſtands the ſouth ſide, and there is a large gallery at the ſt end, built by the donations of Henry Powle d his brother William, in 1646. The tower was lt by abbat Gamages, as appears by the initial ers of his name, I. G. over the door on the ſide, and his arms, a croſs, which ſtand a little ove. On the ſouth ſide, on the battlements, the arms of the Clares earls of Glouceſter, az, three chevronels ruby. And on the weſt ſide the arms of St. Peter's abbey, Glouceſter, and he prince of Wales.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 53 houſes and about 300 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. COLN St. DENNIS

IS a ſmall village in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Deerhurſt, in the Coteſwold country, ſituate on the eaſt ſide of the Foſs-road leading from Cirenceſter to Stow, a little mile below Foſs-bridge; bounded on the weſt by Chedworth, on the ſouth by Coln Rogers; having Hamnet on the north, and Northleach on the eaſt of it. It is ſeven miles north of Cirenceſter, three ſouth of Northleach, and twenty eaſt of Glouceſter.

It takes its name from the river Coln, which runs through it, and is diſtinguiſhed from Coln Rogers by the additional name, derived from the abbey of St. Dennis in Normandy, to which it antiently belonged.

The houſes ſtand in a little comb, or bottom. The pariſh conſiſts principally of arable land, with ſome meadow and paſture on the ſides of the river; but it has nothing remarkable to engage the attention of the naturaliſt.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following is all that is mentioned of this manor in Domeſday-book. 'In Derheſt hundred 'the church of St. Dennis holds five hides in Colne 'and Caldecote.' D. B. p. 72.

This manor was appropriated to the uſe of the priory of Deerhurſt, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis in France; and the monks, by their intereſt, procured it to be annexed to the hundred of Deerhurſt, tho' it lies many miles diſtant from any other part of it.

The alien priories, of which Deerhurſt was one, being diſſolved, this manor was granted to the abbey of Tewkeſbury 7 E. 4. and afterwards, at the general diſſolution of religious foundations, the manor of Coln Deans, and lands in Caldecot, were granted to William Sharrington 34 H. 8.

Livery of the manors of Coln Deans and Calcot, alias Caldecot, with the advowſon of the church, was granted to Robert Weſtwood 1 Eliz.

The manor came afterwards to Thomas Maſter, eſq; of Cirenceſter, who ſold it, and Mr. Dorrel, of Oxfordſhire, is the preſent proprietor of it.

HAMLET. Caldecot, now Calcot, is a hamlet in this pariſh. Humphry Bohun was ſeized of the manor of Caldecot 3 E. 1. and Gilbert Gamage and Lettice his wife were ſeized of it 6 R. 2. from whom it deſcended to Roger their ſon and heir.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 140*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. John Hughes is patron and incumbent.

Two parts of the tithes of Caldecot were granted to the priory of Lanthony, by Milo conſtable of Glouceſter, in the year 1137.

The church is ſmall, without battlements, and has a low tower in the middle, in which are five bells.

The church-houſe and a barn, four acres and three-quarters in each common field, ten ſheep-paſtures, and a dwelling-houſe called the Maple, have been given at ſeveral times for the repair of the church.

There are memorials for John Hughes, who died in 1726; for Charles Hughes, M. A. who died 1742; and for Andrew Hughes, M. A. who died in 1756, all rectors of this church; but there are no family arms.

COLN ROGERS

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, three miles ſouth from Northleach, ſeven north-eaſt from Cirenceſter, and twenty-one miles eaſt from Glouceſter. It was ſo called from its ſituation on the river Coln, and from Roger of Glouceſter, its antient poſſeſſor. But in the grant of king Stephen to the abbey of Glouceſter, it is called Coln St. Andrew, becauſe the church is dedicated to that ſaint.

The village ſtands in a little dale. The lands are chiefly arable, with a little paſture near the river.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Roger of Glouceſter, knight, being dangerouſly wounded at Walliſon, gave the manor of Coln Rogers, alias Coln on the Hills, to the monks of Glouceſter, in the year 1105, to pray for his ſoul; and the grant was confirmed by king Henry, when the abbey was vacant by the death of Serlo.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Coln Rogers 17 E. 3. and continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution; when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. who are the preſent lords of it.

Alexander Colſton, eſq; is leſſee under the dean and chapter.

Pindrop, or Pendrop, from pen, the top, and ðopp, a dwelling, ſo called from its ſituation above the village, is a conſiderable farm in this pariſh, the property of Thomas Cotton, eſq; a banker in London, who has a good houſe here.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 100*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons. The living is now vacant.

Twenty-four acres in each common field belong to the glebe.

The demeans of the lord of the manor pay only the twentieth part in lieu of tithes.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to St. Andrew, and contains nothing worth notice. It has a tower at the weſt end, with three bells in it. Two acres in each common field, called the Church-land, are given to find bell-ropes.

the number of families is 26, of inhabitants exactly 125. So that the annual burials are to the whole number of inhabitants, nearly as 1 to 42.

COMPTON ABDALE

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, in the Coteſwold country, eleven miles north from Cirenceſter, four north-weſtward from Northleach, and ſixteen eaſt from Glouceſter.

The village takes its name from the ſituation of the church and houſes in a little comb or valley, for combe in the Anglo Saxon, ſignifies a narrow valley; but the greater part of the pariſh lies upon the hills. It conſiſts principally of arable land, with a conſiderable ſhare of wood, and a little paſture on the banks of the Coln, a branch of which runs through it. But what moſt diſtinguiſhes it, is the bold appearance of lord Chedworth's plantations, which ſtand on a high part of the Coteſwold.

Domeſday-book gives the following account of this manor:

'Stigand archbiſhop [of York] held Cuntune 'in Bradelege hundred. There were nine hides. 'There are two plow-tillages, and five acres of 'meadow, and twenty-two villeins, and five bor-'dars, with eleven plow-tillages. There are five 'ſervi, and a mill of 5*s*. In the time of king 'Edward it was worth 9*l*. now 7*l*. Thomas 'archbiſhop [of York] holds it. A free man of 'Roger de Lurei holds one manor of three hides 'belonging to this manor. The archbiſhop 'claims it.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The temporalties of the archbiſhop of York were extended 14 E. 3. of which this manor was a part.

Thomas Lane held the capital meſſuage of Compton Abdale, under the archbiſhop of York, and died ſeized thereof 37 H. 8. leaving Thomas his ſon eighteen years old. This manor was taken from the archbiſhop of York, and granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6.

It was afterwards purchaſed by ſir Richard Grubham, of Wiſhford, in Wiltſhire, who was lord of it in 1608; and dying without iſſue in 1629, left this and many other great eſtates to his nephew John How, eſq; from whom it deſcended, like Chedworth and Stowell, down to lord Chedworth, who is the preſent lord of the manor; an account of whoſe family and arms is inſerted under Stowell, where his lordſhip reſides.

William Docket and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Compton-Abdale, to the uſe of Edmund Tame 19 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Cirenceſter. The rectory of Compton-Abdale, and the advowſon of the vicarage, belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter; and after the diſſolution of that houſe, were granted to the church of Briſtol 34 H. 8. The dean and chapter of Briſtol are the appropriators and patrons, and pay the incumbent 10*l*. a year. The curacy has been twice augmented; firſt by a donation from the late Mr. Aylworth, and by queen Anne's bounty, in the year 1737; and again in 1760, by donations from Alexander Colſton, eſq; (as executor of the late Edward Colſton, eſq;) and Charles Page, M. A. the preſent incumbent, and by the queen's bounty.

The church is very ſmall, dedicated to St. Oſwald, and has nothing in it worth notice.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houſes and about 130 inhabitans in this pariſh, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. In ten years, beginning with 1760, there were regiſtered 34 baptiſms, and 28 burials, and the inhabitants are at preſent 130 in number.

COMPTON GREENFIELD.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Henbury, ſix miles north-weſt from Briſtol, nine ſouth-weſtward from Thornbury, and thirty-three ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on every ſide by the pariſhes of Almondſbury and Henbury, except a ſmall portion on the weſt, where the river Severn is its boundary. The former part of the name is explained under the preceding head; the latter was given it with great propriety, becauſe the pariſh conſiſts almoſt wholly of meadow and paſture land, and to diſtinguiſh it from Eaſter Compton in Almondſbury.

The turnpike-road from Briſtol to Auſt-paſſage leads along the north-eaſt ſide of it, near the church.

Tho' this little village affords but few materials to enrich a hiſtory, and is diſtinguiſhed by neither foſſils, camps, nor antient coins, yet it may be deſervedly ranked among the happieſt claſs for its vegetable productions, I mean its excellent paſturage.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It appears by Domeſday-book, that at the time of the general ſurvey this was a member of the large manor of Hueſberie, [now Weſtbury] in Berminſtreu hundred; and that Giſlebert the ſon of Turold then held three hides and a half in Contone, as it is written in that record.

This manor was granted to Ralph, ſon of Ralph Bloet, 18 Joh. but it was in the Berkeley family as as early as 28 E. 3. and in the 30th year of that reign, Maurice Berkeley and Joan his wife levied a fine of it to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to Thomas the brother of Maurice, and Catherine his wife, which latter died ſeized of Compton Greenvill, and of two parts of the advowſon of the chapel, 9 R. 2. It was afterwards held by Thomas de Beauchamp 2 H. 4. by ſir Thomas Brooke 5 H. 5. by ſir John Berkeley, with the advowſon of the chapel, 6 H. 6. by Thomas Chedre 26 H. 6. and by ſir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone 38 & 39 H. 6. and 14 E. 4.

Sir William Berkeley of Stoke Giffard was ſeized of this manor in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the Third, but taking up arms in favour of that king, he was attainted after the battle of Boſworth-field, his eſtates ſeized, and the manor of Compton was granted to Thomas Brugge 1 H. 7. But the Berkeleys were ſoon reſtored to their eſtate. Sir William Berkeley of Beverſtone died ſeized of Compton Greenfield 5 E. 6. whoſe grandſon, John Berkeley, ſold it to Thomas Mallet, eſq; who died 22 Eliz. and left a ſon John twelve years old.

Patrick Young was lord of this manor in 1608. Sir Thomas Cann, knighted by king James the Second in the laſt year of his reign, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. He had two ſons, Robert and William. Robert ſucceeded to the title of baronet, on the death of his couſin ſir William Cann, but dying unmarried, was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his brother ſir William Cann, who had iſſue one ſon Robert. He had alſo a daughter Elizabeth, married to —— Jefferies of Briſtol, to whoſe iſſue, the male line failing at the death of the late ſir Robert Cann, in 1765, this eſtate is devolved. Henry Lyppingcott, eſq; married Miſs Jefferies, and, in her right, is the preſent lord of this manor. See Weſtbury.

John Newton and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Compton Greenfield, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, 8 H. 5. and their ſon and heir John Newton ſold them to William More, and levied a fine of them 28 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Briſtol, worth 100*l.* a year, of which the glebe is worth upwards of 40*l.* Henry Lyppingcott, eſq; is patron, Mr. New the preſent incumbent.

The church, tho' ſmall, is very antient, as appears by the ſtile of the arch of the door at the ſouth entrance. In the 13th century it was ſtiled capella de Contone, at which time Weſtbury was probably the mother church. There is a low tower at the weſt end, but neither monument, inſcription, nor coat of arms in the church.

At the beginning of this century there were 5 houſes and about 20 inhabitants, whereof 2 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Here are now 6 houſes and 37 inhabitants. The diſproportion of the baptiſms and burials to the number of inhabitants, is occaſioned by the people of Almondſbury and Henbury ſometimes baptiſing and burying here, for convenience.

COMPTON, (LITTLE.)

THIS pariſh is ſituate in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Deerhurſt, five miles diſtant north-eaſt from Stow, eight ſouth-eaſt from Campden, and thirty-one north-eaſt from Glouceſter. The former part of the name has been already explained; the addition of Little ſerves to diſtinguiſh it from the adjoining pariſh of Long-Compton, in Warwickſhire.

The village lies under the weſt ſide of a hill, which ſecures it from the cold eaſterly winds. It is bounded on the north by Warwickſhire, on the eaſt, weſt, and ſouth, by Oxfordſhire; and has the convenience of the turnpike-road from Worceſter to London running through it. A conſiderable part of the pariſh is unincloſed. There is a common about two miles in length, and in ſome places above half a mile broad, of very good land, and exceedingly improvable.

There is a point of land in this pariſh which extends to a place where a pedeſtal is erected, with a ſun-dial on the top, and inſcriptions on the four ſides, to denote the joining of four counties where it ſtands; i.e. thoſe of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Warwick, and Oxford. This is occaſioned by the pariſh of Evenlode, which is a disjoined member of Worceſterſhire, running up to the ſouth ſide of the pedeſtal or pillar, (of which there is a more particular account under Morton-hen-marſh.) But the ſpot where the pillar is erected, is near twenty miles diſtant from the continent of Worceſterſhire.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book ſays only thus much of the manor: 'The church of St. Dennis holds twelve hides 'in Contone in Derheſt hundred.' D. B. p. 72.

This manor was appropriated to the uſe of the priory of Deerhurſt, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis in Normandy. But after the ſuppreſſion of alien priories, this and other eſtates, formerly belonging to the ſame priory, were granted by king Edward the Fourth to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, in whoſe poſſeſſion they continued 'till the diſſolution of that houſe. The manor of Little Compton was granted to ſir Thomas Pope 38 H. 8.

John Todmere died ſeized thereof 20 Eliz. and left Elizabeth his only daughter and heireſs married to ſir Robert Cotton, who in her right had livery granted him in the year 1608.

It

It afterwards paſſed by purchaſe to Dr. William Juxton. He had been dean of Worceſter, biſhop of the ſees of Hereford and London, and at length obtained the metropolitical ſee of Canterbury. In 1635 he was made lord treaſurer, by the intereſt of Dr. Laud, which giving diſguſt to many of the nobility, he was obliged to reſign that office in 1641. In the year 1649, he attended king Charles the Firſt on the ſcaffold, at the time of his execution, and afterwards retired to his manor of Little Compton. But at the Reſtoration he was promoted to the metropolitical chair of Canterbury, in which dignity he died in the year 1663, aged 81, and was buried in St. John's College Oxford, to which he had been a generous benefactor.

William Juxton ſucceeded his uncle Dr. Juxton in this eſtate, and was created a baronet Dec. 22, 12 C. 2. He was high ſheriff of the county in 1676; and was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his ſon ſir William Juxton, who died in 1739, without iſſue, whereby the title was extinct. His lady ſurviving him, was afterwards married to lord Fane, and is the preſent proprietor of Little Compton, where ſhe has a good houſe, and reſides there ſome part of the year.

John Muſgroſe was ſeized of lands in Little Contone 3 E. 1. Robert Ferrers of Chartley was ſeized of lands in Compton 1 H. 5. Sir Edward Ferrers de Chartley held four marks rent in Little Compton 14 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow. The appropriation and advowſon of the vicarage belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8. They pay 22*l.* and Dr. South has given 10*l.* a year to the curate. Mr. Baker is the preſent incumbent. About the year 1771, the college gave 200*l.* ariſing from an eſtate given them by Dr. Stratford, to augment the living; but the money is not yet laid out on land. The appropriation is in leaſe to Mr. John Davis, and Mr. Richard Jordan.

The church is dedicated to St. Dennis, and hath a tower on the ſouth ſide.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On a flat ſtone in the chancel:

Under this Stone lieth interred the Body of Sir William Juxton, late of this Pariſh, Knight and Baronet, who died the 3d Day of Feb. 1739, in the 79th Year of his Age. At the beginning of this century there were 35 houſes in this pariſh, and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there are entered 40 baptiſms and 36 burials; and in a like ſeries from 1760, there are entered 80 baptiſms, and 53 burials. The preſent number of inhabitants is exactly 242, nearly in proportion to the annual burials as 47 to 1; which ſhews the place to be healthy.

CONDICOT.

THIS pariſh lies partly in the hundred of Kiftſgate, and partly in that of Slaughter. It is three miles diſtant north-weſtward from Stow, ſeven eaſtward from Winchcombe, and twenty-five north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is a ſmall pariſh, conſiſting chiefly of arable land. I conjecture that formerly it was overgrown with wood, from the termination of the name, which comes from coed, a wood, in the Britiſh language.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This little pariſh was divided among ſeveral proprietors at the time of the general ſurvey. That part of it which lay in the old hundred of Salemaneſberie (now Slaughter) was a hamlet belonging to Oddington, and was then held by Thomas archbiſhop of York. His predeceſſor, Aldred, had taken a mortgage of this and other eſtates, of the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter, to ſecure the payment of ſome money he had expended on that abbey, of which more may be ſeen p. 133, 141. See alſo the Domeſday account of Oddington. In the ſame record are the following particulars:

'The church of Wireceſtre holds two hides in 'Condicote [in Tedboldeſtan hundred] and Oſbern 'holds them of the biſhop. It was and is worth 40*s.*

'Oſbern holds one hide and a half in Condicot 'in Witelai hundred, of Durand [de Gloueceſtre] 'It is and was worth 20*s.*

'William Froiſſelew holds half a hide in Con-'nicote in Witelai hundred, which paid tax. 'There was one plow-tillage and four ſervi. 'It was worth 20*s.* now 3*s.* Brittric held it in 'the time of king Edward'. D. B. p. 70, 77, 74.

The principal manor and eſtate in this place, were held by the archbiſhop of York 6 E. 6. in which which year they were granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain. But the records mention other eſtates by the general name of Condicote. Thus Hugh de Condicote gave half a hide of land in Condicote, to the knights-templars, who were ſeized of court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in their lands there, by the grant of king Henry the Third; and their claim to thoſe privileges was allow'd 15 E. 1. and they were poſſeſſed of this eſtate 2 E. 3.

The manor of Condicote, or rather a manor in Condicote, was held by William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3. by Edward de Stonore, 5 R. 2. and by Gilbert ſon of Robert de Stonore, 3 H. 5.

Mr. Machin was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Mr. Cox was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, but Mr. Haſlam is the preſent owner.

A meſſuage in Condicote called Nun-heys, becauſe it formerly belonged to the nunnery of Cokehill in Worceſterſhire, and from hai, a hedge, park, or incloſure, was granted, after the diſſolution of religious foundations, to Nicholas Forteſcue and Catherine Forteſcue 34 H. 8. Thomas lord Wentworth married Margaret daughter and heir of Anne Forteſcue, and with her had this meſſuage, which on his death, 5 E. 6. deſcended to Thomas lord Wentworth his ſon.

Hinſwick is a conſiderable eſtate, part lying in this pariſh, and part in that of Breedon in Worceſterſhire. Lands in this place belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, as appears by the charter of king John, confirming the donations to that abbey, De fœodo Willielmi filii Bernardi unam hidam in Hunchewic. Chart. ann. regni 6°.

Leland ſpeaks of a water, 'riſing at Kenſdale 'in Coteſwald, and [running] thens to Hinch-'wike, wherabout yt rennith undre the grounde; 'thens to Swelle village by Stow; from Swelle to 'Slaughter and ſo into Bourton Water.' Itin. v. 5. p. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Stow, worth 70*l.* a year. It was formerly within the peculiar of Blockley. Mr. Haſlam is patron; Mr. Baker the preſent incumbent.

Ninety-eight acres of arable land, and five acres of paſture, belong to the glebe. The tithes belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. No lands in the pariſh are tithe free.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to St. Nicholas.

At the beginning of this century there were 18 houſes, and about 80 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 7 were freeholders. There are now 105 inhabitants.

CORSE.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Weſtminſter, on the north-weſt ſide of the river Severn. It is ſix miles diſtant eaſt from Newent, nine ſouth-weſt from Tewkeſbury, and five and a half north-weſt from Glouceſter. It is three miles and a half long and two broad, bounded on the eaſt by the river Laden or Leaden; and the waters of Howbrook, which run through this pariſh, after joining another little rivulet called Collier's-brook, empty themſelves into that river.

There is a large tract of paſture-ground called the Lawn, of which the greater part, about 1200 acres, is in this pariſh, the remainder in that of Eldersfield in Worceſterſhire. Two turnpike-roads, one from Glouceſter to Worceſter, the other to Ledbury, are carried over it. The fine verdure with which it is cloathed, makes this part of the journey particularly agreeable in the ſpring and ſummer ſeaſons. It is a fine plain, about three miles long, with a beautiful ſlope, like a lofty terrace, running on the eaſt ſide for a good part of the way. This piece of ground is common to the pariſhioners, who depend much on depaſturing large flocks of ſheep upon it; but it often proves fatal to them, for in a wet ſeaſon it is ſo rotting, that ſcarce a ſheep ſurvives. This fine tract of ground might be greatly improved, and rendered more healthy; but there is an inſuperable obſtacle,—it belongs to the church of Weſtminſter.

There is a ſmall and very fragrant ſort of wild thyme growing about the ant-hills on the Lawn.

Mr. Pennant, among his many beautiful deſcriptions of places in Scotland, mentions the Carſe, or rich plains of Gowrie; and it remains a doubt with me, whether the pariſh of Corſe was denominated from the Lawn I have been ſpeaking of, or whether it was ſo called from the Britiſh word Cors, a marſh or bog; as formerly it was much covered with wood, and conſequently more rotten and boggy then at preſent; for the records mention Corſe-foreſt, Corſe-chaſe, Corſe-wood; but now there is no ſuch thing in the pariſh.

The huſbandry of this country, for many miles round, is in an unimproved ſtate. The farmers leave much to nature, and tho' there is plenty of marle in the pariſh, particularly at Horridge, I cannot find that they ever uſed it as a manure.

The

The ſoil is ſtrong, and the Herefordſhire method of planting fruit-trees in the incloſures of tillage land prevails in this place, where they make ſome pretty good cyder. The elm is the chief timber-tree, but the oak grows very well; and I obſerved that in the pariſhes of Hasfield, Tirley, and all the way to Tewkeſbury, the tenants have topped almoſt every oak-tree, that they may be afterwards, of right, intitled to the lop. This is an injury of a public as well as of a private nature, and I ſpeak of it as the more unpardonable in this part of the country, where coal comes at an eaſy rate down the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Corſe is not mentioned in Domeſday-book, but it appears by later records that there was a foreſt or chaſe there; and that Richard de Clare earl of Glouceſter and Hertford held Cors-foreſt and Cors-court 47 H. 3. and Joan his widow held Cors-chaſe 35 E. 1. and that Gilbert de Clare died ſeized of the ſame chaſe and court 7 E. 2. leaving three ſiſters coheireſſes.

Elianor the eldeſt ſiſter was married to Hugh le Deſpencer the younger, who in her right was ſeized of the manor and chaſe of Cors. He was beheaded, and Roger Mortimer procured a grant thereof to himſelf and his heirs 1 E. 3. But Roger being attainted and executed, this manor and chaſe were ſoon after reſtored to Hugh, the ſon of the laſt Hugh le Deſpencer, who died ſeized of them 23 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by Edward le Deſpencer his nephew. He died ſeized of the manor and chaſe of Cors 49 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by Thomas his ſon and heir, who was attainted and beheaded 1 H. 4.

This manor and chaſe were held by Richard Deſpencer his ſon and heir, who dying without iſſue, left two ſiſters his coheireſſes, of whom Elizabeth died young. Iſabel ſucceeding to this eſtate, carried it in marriage to Richard Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny. He died 17 H. 6. leaving John Throgmorton one of his executors, who died ſeized of this manor and chaſe 13 E. 4.

Cors-court was held by Philip Throgmorton 3 H. 8. and by his ſon William 28 H. 8. whoſe ſon Thomas ſucceeded him; and another Thomas Throgmorton, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. It paſſed afterwards into the family and name of Dowdeſwell, for Richard Dowdeſwell, eſq; was lord thereof at the beginning of this century, and the right honourable William Dowdeſwell, eſq; who had been chancellor of the exchequer, and one of his majeſty's moſt honourable privy council, (which important ſtations he had filled with great abilities and integrity) died ſeized thereof in the year 1775. His arms are, Or, a feſs undy between ſix billets ſable.

The manor of Corſe-Lawn antiently belonged to the abbey of Weſtminſter. It was granted to the chapter of Weſtminſter 34 H. 8. and being confirmed 2 Eliz. now continues in that church.

HAMLET. Horridge is a hamlet in this pariſh. Lands called Horredge, in Corſe, formerly belonged to the Benedictine priory of the leſſer Malvern, in Worceſterſhire; and after the diſſolution of religious foundations, were granted to Henry Leigh 37 H. 8.

Stainbridge is another place in this pariſh.

Robert Widecomb and Emma his wife levied a fine of lands in Corſe to the uſe of the heirs of Emma 16 H. 6. Chriſtopher Raſtal died ſeized of lands in Corſe 6 Eliz. and Thomas Raſtal his ſon had livery the ſame year.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is within the peculiar of Deerhurſt. It is a vicarage endowed with the tithes, worth about 70*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, the reverend Mr. Robert Gegg, the preſent incumbent. The patronage was formerly in the priory of Deerhurſt, and afterwards transferred to the abbey of Tewkeſbury. About fifteen acres belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. It is ſmall, with a ſpire ſteeple at the weſt end.

And in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, there were 97 baptiſms, and 53 burials, in which number the quakers are not included; and the inhabitants in 1771, were exactly 253. So that population is nearly in the ſame ſtate as it was ſeventy years ago.

COTES, or COATS.

THIS pariſh lies in the Coteſwold country, in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, three miles weſt from Cirenceſter, ſeven north-eaſtward from Tetbury, ſeven eaſt from Minchinhampton, and eighteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. This

This name was unknown at the time of the general ſurvey, temp. W. 1. In Domeſday-book the pariſh is deſcribed by the names of Hunlafeſed, Turſberie, and Torentune; but in the ſheriff's return of all the vills in the hundred of Cirenceſter, 9 E. 1. theſe were omitted, and the general name of Cotes occurs in their ſtead.

Sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion, that it received its name from being ſeated among the Cotts in Coteſwold; but it was more probably from the Britiſh word coed, a wood, becauſe here was one of thoſe great woods which are ſuppoſed to have extended over almoſt all the country from this place to Stow, and to have given the name of Coteſwold to a large extent of ground upon the hills of Glouceſterſhire. Wold, from the Saxon pealo, ſignifies the ſame as coed; ſo that there is a redundancy in the name of Coteſwold, of which there are inſtances in the appellations of other places. The preſent ſtate of the country about Cotes ſerves to confirm the etymology; for there are ſtill two large woods, at Hailey, and Oakley, adjoining to this pariſh, the latter of which was granted by the crown to the abbat of Cirenceſter, on condition that it ſhould not be aſſarted; a reſtriction which has preſerved it to our time, otherwiſe it might have fared as moſt of the antient wood-lands have done.

There is a ſtrong camp, with a double ditch, in the hamlet of Trewſbury, called Trewſbury caſtle. It was probably a Roman camp of obſervation, lying a little to the north of the Acman-ſtreet-way, which led from Corinium to Aqua Solis, (now Cirenceſter and Bath) two eminent Roman ſtations. The Romans had another poſt about a mile and a half farther weſtward, on the ſame ſide of that road, where a great many coins and other veſtiges of that people have been found, as related under Rodmarton.

The head of the Thames or Iſis, poetically deſcribed by the learned Camden, is commonly reputed to be in this pariſh; but the well ſo called, does not overflow in the ſummer, unleſs in very wet ſeaſons, and there is no conſtant ſtream in the place. Indeed if this were perennial, it would not be the higheſt ſource of that river, as I have ſhewn more largely at p. 48.

This village lies high and open, and is remarkably healthy, as appears by the ſtate of population at the end of this account. The women and children are employ'd in ſpinning woollen-yarn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Gilbert de Clare was ſeized of the manors of Cotes and Trewſbury, with court-leet, 15 E. 1. They came afterwards into a family of the name of Vernon. Richard Vernon ſold them to ſir William Nottingham, who died ſeized of them 2 R. 3. without iſſue, leaving them to his widow for her life, the remainder to truſtees. Richard Poole married Elizabeth, widow of ſir William Nottingham, and purchaſed the reverſion of the inheritance of the truſtees, 7 H. 7. Sir Leonard Poole was ſon and heir of Richard, and dying 30 H. 8. was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Giles, who died in 1588. Sir Henry Poole, ſon of ſir Giles, died in the year 1616, leaving ſir Henry Poole his ſon and heir; whoſe ſon ſir William was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Henry, the laſt male heir of his family. He ſold the manor, &c. to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, about the year 1660, who dying in 1709, was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Robert Atkyns, who alſo died in 1711. Mr. Atkyns is the preſent lord of the manor.

This pariſh is reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter. It conſiſts almoſt intirely of arable land.

HAMLETS. 1. Hunlafeſed, i. e. Hunlafe's ſed, or ſeat, ſo called from the name of the Saxon proprietor. It is now called Hullaſed. The particulars whereof are thus ſet down in Domeſday-book:

'Elmar poſſeſſed Hunlafeſed in Cireceſtre hundred, in which were three hides and a half. The biſhop of Baieux held it. It is now in the king's hands. In demean is one plow-tillage, and four villeins, and four bordars, with three plow-tillages. It was worth 4*l.* now 50*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The abbeſs of Romſey had the advowſon of a chapel, and was poſſeſſed of lands in this place, 36 H. 6. The chapel is now ſtanding, and retains the name, but it is converted to a barn.

2. Trewſbury, but antiently Turſberie, was probably ſo called from traws, ſloping, and berg, a camp, or fortification. Domeſday-book gives the following account of this eſtate:

'The ſame Giſlebert [the ſon of Turold] holds half a hide in Turſberie, in Cireceſtre hundred, and Oſuuard holds it of him. Aluuard held it. In demean is one plow-tillage. It was worth 10*s.* now 15*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

3. Torleton is a hamlet, part of which lies in Rodmarton, and part in this pariſh. Torleton in Cotes lies a mile weſtward from the church, and contains ſixteen families. In Domeſday-book it is thus deſcribed:

'Radulfus Pagenel holds Torentune in Cireceſtre hundred, and Radulfus holds it of him. There are four hides and a half taxed. Merleſuen held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ten villeins, and one bordar with three plow-tillages. There are ten ſervi. It was worth 10*l.* now 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Cotes, to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to William Panton and Joan his wife, daughter of William Golding, 23 H. 6. William Lewelline and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Cotes to William Nottingham, 7 E. 4. The royalty of the hamlets is veſted in the lord of the manor of Cotes.

O

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 200*l.* a year. Mr. Atkyns is patron, Mr. Chaunler the preſent incumbent.

Three acres of paſture land, adjoining to the parſonage houſe, eighty-two acres in the common fields, 170 ſheep-paſtures in Cotes, and 200 in Torleton, belong to the rector. Pariſh Regiſter.

The tithes of the demeans belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and were ſo adjudged in the year 1463; and afterwards, Richard Peachy, rector of this church, by indenture dated in 1486, quitted claim to the tithes of the demeans to Richard Clyve, abbat of Cirenceſter, Richard Vernon being then lord of the manor.

The church is large, dedicated to St. Matthew. It has a handſome well-built tower at the weſt end, with two bells in it. On the north ſide of the church is a ſmall chapel, which, by tradition, was built by the Nottinghams for a burying-place.

Under a void niche, on the weſt ſide of the tower, is an inſcription engraven in antient characters, in the ſtone, miſtaken by ſir Robert Atkyns; and which cannot be better explained than by the following abſtract from the curious regiſter of the pariſh of Rodmarton, in the year 1636, where it is thus written: 'In the windowe of the ſouth 'iſle, adjoining to the chancel, was a little picture 'in the glaſſe, of one praying in the habit of a 'miniſter, cum baculo paſtorali; and under-written 'Richardus Exall, which was broken by children. 'Perhaps he was at the charge of that window. 'There is alſo upon the weſt ſide of Cotes tower, 'in ſtones, Orate p' animab' Richardi Wiat, et 'Richardi de Rodm'ton; It may bee it was this 'Richard which did joyne with the perſon of 'Cotes to build that tower.'

Mr. Tyndale, late rector, cauſed this device to be placed over the door of the parſonage-houſe. A large roſe, handſomely carved in freeſtone, and Under the Roſe, (alluding to that ſaying) in Roman capitals, NE GRY QUIDEM FORAS; by which he meant to caution his friends againſt tale-bearing. I found ſomething like this in the parlour of the parſonage-houſe at Buckland. To intimate that converſation in chearful ſocieties ſhould not be betray'd, there is a large gilt roſe in the middle of the ceiling, over the place for the dining-table, and round it, in gold letters, Qui Dicta vel Facta Foras eliminat, eliminetur. i.e. Let him that divulges what is ſaid or done here, be kick'd out of doors. It was the antient cuſtom at ſympoſiac meetings, or merry-makings, to wear chaplets of roſes about the head, which gave riſe to the phraſe of ſpeaking under the roſe.

Thomas Maſter, of the family of that name now reſiding at the abbey in Cirenceſter, was rector of Cotes, and a great ſcholar. He publiſhed ſeveral learned pieces, and aſſiſted the lord Herbert of Cherbury in compoſing his Hiſtory of king Henry the Eighth. He died in 1643, and lies buried in the chapel of New College Oxford.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On a flat ſtone in the chancel, is an acroſtic for Ales Marſhefield, the letters of whoſe name appear on the margin of the ſtone, but the verſes are very imperfect.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 26 houſes in this pariſh, and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. On an average of ten years, beginning with 1760, the annual baptiſms are 4.4, burials 2. The preſent number of families is 40, of inhabitants exactly 200; by which it appears that only 1 in 100 dies every year, a proof of the aſtoniſhing healthineſs of the place.

COW HONIBORN.

THIS diſtrict, or hamlet, lies in the upper diviſion of Kiftſgate hundred; four miles diſtant eaſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, five north from Campden, and thirty north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

The corrupt manner of writing the modern names of places often miſleads in judging of their derivation. If Honiborn has any determinate ſignification, it is a very different one from that of Heniberge, the old name of this place, as I find it written in Domeſday-book. The antient name ſeems to be compoſed of Þæn, Saxon, ſtone, and beorȝ, a camp or fortification; or of hen, Britiſh, old, and beorȝ, as before. Sir Robert Atkyns omits the Domeſday account of this place, and overlooking the antient name, ſays nothing of its derivation; but he obſerves of the prenomen Cow, that it was ſo called from the number of cows kept there, and to diſtinguiſh it from Church-Honiborn in the neighbourhood.

This little place conſiſts principally of paſture land, with ſome good arable. Two ſmall brooks, from Weſton-Subedge, and Aſton-Subedge, run through it into the Avon.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars:

'The ſame church [St. Mary of Wincelcumbe] 'holds Heniberge in Celflede hundred. There 'are ten hides, of which two are in demean and 'eight in ſervice. In demean are five plow-tillages, 'and fifteen villeins, with five plow-tillages. 'There are nine ſervi, and three ancillæ. It was 'worth 6*l.* now 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The right of free warren in this place was allowed to the abbey of Winchcombe in a Quo Warranto 15 E. 1. and that houſe continued poſſeſſed of the manor 'till it was diſſolved; after which the manor was granted to lord Burley and John Forteſcue, eſq; 33 Eliz. and was purchaſed by ſir Edward Grevil, of Milcot in Warwickſhire, in the 36th year of that reign, who was lord of it in 1608. The manor ſeems now to be in the crown, from whom the inhabitants have taken long leaſes.

What ſir Robert Atkyns mentions of William Strupes being ſeized of Honiborn 10 E. 1. cannot relate to this place, unleſs it means that he held it under the church of Winchcombe.

Of the Church, &c.

The church of this place ſtands in Church-Honiborn in Worceſterſhire. Here was a chapel formerly belonging to the deanery of Campden; but it has been long ſince converted into a poor-houſe.

Tithes of hay in Cow Honiborn, formerly belonging to the abbey of Eveſham, were granted to John Green and Ralph Hall, 7 E. 6. Other tithes in Honiborn, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

Mr. Williams has the impropriation and the advowſon of the vicarage.

There were 39 houſes and about 156 inhabitants in this place, whereof 15 were freeholders, when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory; yearly births 6, burials 5. And there are now 40 families, and about the ſame number of inhabitants.

COWLEY

IS a pariſh in the hundred of Rapſgate, in the Coteſwold country, five miles ſouth from Cheltenham, nine north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, and nine eaſt from Glouceſter.

The village lies moſtly in a narrow glyn, through which the river Churn runs, with hanging woods to the ſouth of it, and the riſing lands of Coberley to the north.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſuppoſes the name to ſignify a paſture-ground where cows are kept. This opinion is ſupported by the teſtimony of the inhabitants, who ſay, that within the memory of man the lands were moſtly employed in breeding large herds of cattle. But they are at preſent chiefly in tillage, with a due proportion of paſture, and about 100 acres of wood.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars, omitted by ſir Robert Atkyns:

'The church of St. Mary of Perſore holds 'Kvlege in Reſpigete hundred. There are five 'hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and fourteen villeins, and one bordar, with ſeven 'plow-tillages. There are five ſervi, and a mill 'of 50*d.* and ſix acres of meadow, and a wood 'three-quarters of a mile long, and one broad. 'It is worth 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The manor continued in the abbey of Perſhore 'till the diſſolution, when it was granted to the church of Weſtminſter, 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz. Henry Bret, eſq; was leſſee of the manor at the beginning of the preſent century. He was paſſionately fond of ringing, and continually travelling about the country with a company of ringers, at a vaſt expence, diſſipated a plentiful fortune. George Hawker, eſq; is the preſent leſſee of the manor.

Richard de Brudelep gave two acres of land in Cowley to the brethren of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, Glouceſter.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth 180*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, the reverend Dr. John Brickinden the preſent incumbent.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a neat embattled tower at the weſt end, in which are ſix muſical bells, the gift of Henry Bret, eſq.

Under a niche, in the north wall of the chancel, is the figure of a man lying along, with a lion couchant at his feet. No other monument worth notice.

COWLEY, or COALEY,

IS a pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, ſix miles north-eaſtward from Berkeley, three north from Durſley, and twelve ſouth from Glouceſter. It lies under the north ſides of Uley and Nimpsfield hills, and conſiſts chiefly of good paſture land.

Cowley's-Pick is a ſugar-loaf hill in this pariſh, whence there is an extenſive proſpect over the vale. A ſmall brook runs from hence into the Severn, near Slimbridge.

The public roads here are the worſt that can be conceived; and the poor labouring people are ſo abandoned to naſtineſs, that they throw every thing within a yard or two of their doors, where the filth makes a putrid ſtench, to the injury of their own health, and the annoyance of travellers, if any come among them. The better houſes are gone to ruin, and there is not a gentleman reſident in the pariſh; but this is not peculiar to Cowley.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It appears by Domeſday-book, that four hides in Couelege belonged to the honour of Berchelai. And the manor of Cowley has been held by the Berkeley family, and the owners of Berkeley-caſtle, down to the preſent earl of Berkeley, who is lord of this manor.

Richard de Coueley held divers lands in this pariſh in the reign of king Henry the Second. John de Coueley, a deſcendant from him, held one meſſuage, eighty acres of arable, eight acres of meadow, nine acres of paſture, and ten acres of wood, of the king, as of the manor of Berkeley, Ratione rebellionis manerij de Berkeley, by the fourth part of a knight's fee. Eſcheator's Inquiſition 18 E. 2. And this eſtate continued in the ſame name and family down to 7 H. 5. when it deſcended to daughters.

John Clifford de Daneway was ſeized of 15*s.* rent iſſuing out of a tenement in Cowley 21 R. 2.

Thomas lord Berkeley died ſeized of a tenement called Canon's-court, in Cowley, 5. H 5. and Richard de Beauchamp earl of Warwick died ſeized of it 17 H. 6.

William Warner levied a fine of lands in this pariſh to the uſe of William Harding 18 H. 7. and another fine of other lands to the uſe of John Jones 22 H. 7.

James de Covel gave to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, in Glouceſter, the meadow of Willewood, with its appurtenances, 44 H. 3.—Robert de Benecumb gave to the ſame hoſpital his land in Boſeley, and one acre and a half in Cliffield, in this pariſh. Gwydewell-brook and Illebrook occur in the laſt mentioned record; and Hathmer's-mill, and Athemere's-field, temp. H. 3.

Roger de Berkeley gave to the church of Stanley a mill in Cowley, and a meſſuage, and lands belonging to the mill. And Thomas lord Berkeley gave lands in Cowley to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, Glouceſter, that the obit of Maurice his father, and Iſabel his mother, ſhould be kept in full choir. Magn. cartul. apud Berkeley, fol. 293.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Durſley, worth 60*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, Mr Hornage the preſent incumbent.

The impropriation was given by Roger de Berkeley to the abbey of Glouceſter, and continued in that houſe 'till the diſſolution of religious foundations, when it paſſed through a variety of hands till it came to the Brownings, who were leſſees of it, and purchaſed the inheritance 14 J. 1.

The impropriation was lately purchaſed of the Brownings by Mr. John Minett, the preſent owner.

Forty-five acres of arable, and thirteen acres of paſture, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and conſiſts of the nave, and an aile on the north ſide. It has a handſome tower, with pinnacles, at the weſt end, and five bells in it.

CRANHAM.

CRANHAM.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, eight miles ſouthward from Cheltenham, twelve miles north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, and ſix ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Suppoſing the name to be derived from Croen, Britiſh, rugged, and ham a village, it is particularly well adapted to this place, which is remarkably uneven, with many ſteep and rugged hills covered with beech wood. But towards Painſwick, there is a fine ſpacious opening, which communicates with the vale.

The large beech wood is uſually converted into gun-ſtocks for Birmingham, and the waſte and ſmaller wood into charcoal.

Tho' the peculiar ſituation and other diſtinguiſhing marks of each pariſh are generally noticed under its reſpective head; yet as the pariſhes lie diſperſed thro' this work according to alphabetical arrangement, it may be ſometimes neceſſary, in order to convey to the reader a more competent idea of the face of a country, to take a ſhort view of a larger diſtrict. If it were poſſible that the eye could be raiſed above the horizon, ſo as at once to comprehend this, and the adjoining pariſhes of Brimpsfield, Side, Miſerden, Edgworth, and Biſley, it would be highly delighted with the multiform appearance of hills and dales, woods and paſtures, little fields and turgid riſing grounds, watered by ſo many rills and limpid ſtreams, meandring in a thouſand different forms. The little glyns and dales are ſo deep and narrow, that the ſun's enlivening rays never fall on them for months together; yet every ſpot is cultivated with unremitting labour, and rewards the induſtrious hand with plentiful crops of corn and paſture. There are landſcapes which have more of the Great and Wonderful; but few more truly pictureſque, or of greater variety than this would be. The vaſtly different ſoils and aſpects, if diligently examined, would probably furniſh a conſiderable liſt of curious natural productions, of which ſome are mentioned under Miſerden, tho' it is apprehended many have eſcaped notice.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There is no place taken notice of in Domeſday-book of the name of Cranham, nor any thing like it, in Glouceſterſhire. And as Brimpsfield, by the account given of it in that record, ſeems to have been of much greater extent and conſequence than at preſent, being taxed at nine hides, Cranham, adjoining to it, was probably included in that account. Accordingly we find that the Giffards, who were lords of Brimpsfield, were alſo owners of Cranham when it was firſt mentioned in the records by that name. Helias, or Elias Giffard, gave Croneham to the abbey of Glouceſter, of which he was a monk, when Hameline was abbat. Elias Giffard, ſon of that Elias, in the year 1167, gave eight librats of land in Willingwike in Herefordſhire to the monks of Glouceſter, in exchange for this manor. But the manor of Cranham ſoon reverted to the abbey, which continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution, when a conſiderable part was granted, by the name of a manor, to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, 33 H. 8.

The other part of the manor, with two mills, lately belonging to Catherine queen of England, was granted to John Bridges, afterwards lord Chandos, 1 E. 6. Edward lord Chandos died ſeized of this manor 15 Eliz. and Giles lord Chandos his ſon had livery of it the ſame year.

It was ſoon after purchaſed by ſir William Sandys, who died 17 C. 1. leaving William his grandſon and heir, whoſe grandſon, William Sandys, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It went afterwards, by purchaſe, to lord Edgcumbe, who is the preſent lord of it. For his lordſhip's arms, ſee Brimpsfield.

Climperwell is a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh, the property of Samuel Hayward, of Wallſworth-Hall, eſq.

Lands in Cranham, which belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 50*l.* a year. Lord Edgcumbe is patron, Mr. Wallbank the preſent incumbent. The rector receives 1*l.* 18*s.* a year out of Tibboth-farm.

The church ſtands on the ſide of a very ſteep aſcent, and is dedicated to St. James. It hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a tower at the weſt end.

The name is of doubtful original. It is probable that the old road from Aqua Solis, or Bath, to the Trajectus at Oldbury, and ſo on to the Roman ſtations in Monmouthſhire, led through this pariſh, or perhaps a little to the ſouthward of it; for there are the remains of a ſtrong encampment in Cromhall-park, where it may be ſuppoſed the ſoldiers were poſted to protect that road. That this was a Roman work is pretty certain, from ſome coins which have been found, and from a teſſellated pavement ſometime ſince diſcovered there, about eighteen feet long, and fifteen broad, compoſed of ſmall cubical bricks, or ſtones, of various colours, and ſet together with a ſtrong cement, in a very curious order and regularity. The above camp lies at a convenient diſtance from two others for obſervation, on Sodbury and Horton hills, a little eaſtward of the ſame line of road, which probably led through Pucklechurch and Weſterleigh, and was guarded between Bath and thoſe places, by a lodgment of ſoldiers at Wick, of which veſtiges have alſo been lately diſcovered.

St. Auguſtine, by the aſſiſtance of Ethelbert king of Kent, called a council of Saxon and Britiſh biſhops to confer on matters of religion. At that time Bangor in Wales was a famous ſeminary of learning, ſome of the monks of which place came hither to conſult an holy anchorite, who had a cell upon a hill in this pariſh, whence it is called Anchorite-hill, where the ruins of his cell are ſtill to be ſeen.

Cromhall-heath is a large common of pretty good land, permitted to remain in the unimproved ſtate of nature, like many other fine tracks of ground in this part of the county, to the great injury of the community.

The foſſil productions of this village are pit-coal, and white-lay ſtone. Of the former there is great plenty; but the works have relaxed for ſome time. The latter is common to many other neighbouring pariſhes. It burns to an excellent kind of white, ſtrong lime, in making of which ſome of the labouring inhabitants are employed, whilſt the women and children ſpin wollen-yarn for the clothiers about Wotton-under-edge.

There was formerly a fair for cattle, and a variety of goods, held here on St. Andrew's day; but it has long ſince fallen into neglect and diſuſe.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Before and after the conqueſt, Cromhall was a member of the great manor of Berkeley, for in Domeſday-book it is thus expreſſed:

'Two brothers held five hides in Cromhal in that manor [i. e. Berchelai] in the time of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and ſix villeins, and five bordars having ſix plow-tillages. Thoſe two brothers might do what they pleaſed with themſelves and their land. It was then worth 4*l.* now 3*l.* Earl William committed them to the care of the ſteward of Berchelai, that he might have their ſervice, as Roger ſays.'

And in another place in the ſame record, it is ſaid, 'Two hides in Cromale belong to Berchelai.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

Robert lord Berkeley, in the year 1148, gave one of thoſe manors to the monaſtery of St. Auguſtine in Briſtol, wherefore it was called Cromhall-Abbats. The abbey had free-warren and court-leet therein 13 & 15 E. 1. and continued in poſſeſſion of this manor 'till the diſſolution. It was afterwards granted to Paul, biſhop of Briſtol, and his ſucceſſors, on the eſtabliſhment of the ſee of Briſtol, 34 H. 8. and now is in that church; but it was ſold to Richard Kirrington and Roger Cook, for 568*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* in the year 1649.

There is another manor in this pariſh, called Cromhall-Ligon, becauſe it formerly belonged to the Ligons.

William de Wantone levied a fine of the fourth part of the manor of Cromhall, and of the advowſon, 18 E. 2. and a perſon of the ſame name levied another fine thereof 11 E. 3.

Sir John Berkeley of Beverſtone died ſeized of the manor of Cromhall 6 H. 6. out of which family it went by purchaſe to the Ligons; and livery of the manor of Cromhall and Redgrove was granted to Richard Ligon, 9 Eliz. but ſir William Throgmorton was lord of the manor in 1608.

It was ſoon afterwards purchaſed by ſir Robert Ducie, from whom it deſcended to lord Ducie, the preſent owner of this manor; whoſe deſcent and arms are given under Woodcheſter, his lordſhip's reſidence.

Sir William Ducie obtained a licence for incloſing Cromhall-park in the year 1661.

John Newton of Briſtol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cromhall 8 H. 8.

Woodend is a place in this pariſh, where the late Mr. Matthews, who had been ſteward to the earl of Berkeley, built a large handſome houſe, which coſt him many thouſand pounds.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year; of which Oriel college has the advowſon; and the reverend doctor Penny is the preſent incumbent.

About fifty acres of land belong to the glebe; and a ground called Didnam's-Place, containing ſix acres, part in Wickwar, and part in this pariſh, is given to repair the church.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. It conſiſts of the nave and a ſouth aile, in which was an antient ſtone monument, conſiſting of the figure of a man lying croſs-legged, intended, as ſuppoſed, for one of the Ligons. But it was lately built in the ſouth wall, to ſave the pariſh three-pence in materials for the repair.

There is a Latin memorial for Nicholas Hickes, B.D. who had been rector of Charfield, and a prebendary in the church of Chicheſter, who died in 1710. His arms are, Gules, a feſs undy between three fleurs-de-lis Or. And another for Robert Webb of Abbat's-ſide, in this pariſh, who died in 1731; and for Lucia his wife, daughter of Robert Allen of Woodend; and for Robert their eldeſt ſon, who died in 1762. There were 73 houſes in this pariſh, and about 360 inhabitants, at the beginning of this century, whereof 34 were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. Atkyns. There are now about 316 inhabitants.

CUBBERLY, or COBERLEY.

THE greater part of this pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, but ſome part of it is in Bradley hundred. It is four miles ſouth from Cheltenham, ten north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, and nine eaſt from Glouceſter; and is bounded on the ſouth by Cowley.

Theſe two pariſhes have ſomething of the appearance of a baſon, with a piece broken off one ſide to the bottom; for to the north, weſt, and ſouth, the lands extend up the ſides of the hills which divide the Coteſwold from the Vale, and ſo form the top of a little valley, with an opening to the eaſt.

From Crickley-hill, which lies partly in this pariſh, there is a moſt aſtoniſhing proſpect of the country towards Glouceſter; and there is another very extenſive view from the top of Pinſwell, (a hamlet in Coberley) as far as the city of Worceſter on one hand, and almoſt to Marlborough in Wiltſhire on the other, which places are above ſixty miles aſunder.

The river Churn riſes here, at a place called the Seven Wells, within a ſmall diſtance of the road from Glouceſter to Oxford. This is deſervedly conſidered as the head of the Thames, being the higheſt ſource of that river. The united waters of theſe ſprings are ſo copious as to drive a corn-mill a little below. The Churn runs through Coleſbourn, Rendcombe, North Cerney, and ſo on to Cirenceſter.

Coberley, from the Britiſh word Cop, ſignifies the top of the paſture, and I am told that within the memory of ſome of the inhabitants, the whole pariſh was in lays or paſture; but now the greater part is converted to tillage. This etymology is from conjecture; but Leland was certainly miſtaken, who calls in Cowberley, as he ſays, ſhortly for Cow Berkeley; for Coberleie was the name of it in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor, before the Berkeleys had any property here, as appears by the following record.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Berchelai holds Coberleie in Reſpigete 'hundred. There are ten hides. Dena, a thane 'of king Edward, held it. In demean are two 'plow-tillages, and nineteen villeins, and four 'bordars with five plow-tillages. There are four 'ſervi, and five acres of meadow; a wood three-'quarters of a mile long, and half a mile broad. 'It was worth 7*l.* now 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

The manor, ſays ſir Robert Atkyns, did afterwards paſs to Robert Waleran, but he was moſt probably miſtaken; for there were two manors or eſtates in this pariſh, at the time of the general ſurvey. And it is obſervable, that in thoſe times the records often deſcribe ſeveral manors in the ſame pariſh by one general name. Theſe eſtates lay in different hundreds, and continued in different proprietors for a long time. Sir Robert's inattention to thoſe diſtinctions occaſioned the miſtake. There is therefore the ſtrongeſt reaſon to believe, that the principal manor continued in the uninterrupted poſſeſſion of the Berkeley family 'till it was carried out of it by the marriage of an heireſs.

The records ſhew that ſir Thomas de Berkeley held the manor of Cubberly 8 E. 3. and that Thomas Berkeley his ſon held it 25 E. 3. and died ſeized thereof 6 H. 4. leaving Alice, his only daughter and heireſs, married to ſir John Brugg, who had iſſue by her two ſons, Giles and Edward. Alice ſurviving her huſband, was married to Thomas Browning, whom ſhe alſo ſurvived, and held this manor in jointure at the time of her death 2 H. 5. Sir Giles Brugg, or Bruges, was her ſon and heir; who married Catherine, daughter of James Clifford, of Frampton, eſq; and relict of Anſelm Gyſe, of Elmore in this county, eſq; and died ſeized of the manor of Coberley 6 E. 4. Thomas Brydges was his ſon and heir; who married Florence, daughter of William Darrel, and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Giles Brydges, who married Iſabel, daughter of Thomas Baynham, and died ſeized of the manor of Coberley 3 H. 8. leaving John his ſon nine years old. He had livery of this manor granted to him 16 H. 8. and married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward lord Grey of Wilton. He was created lord Chandos of Sudley 1 Mar. and died in the 4th year of the ſame reign, leaving Edmund lord Chandos his ſon and heir, who had livery of the manor of Coberley the ſame year. He married Dorothy, daughter and coheir of Edmond lord Bray, and died 15 Eliz. Giles lord Chandos, his ſon, had livery of the manor the ſame year. He married Frances, daughter of Edward earl of Lincoln, and died 36 Eliz. leaving two daughters coheireſſes. Frances his widow held Coberley in jointure, and was ſeized thereof in 1608.

This

This manor was ſoon after purchaſed by the Duttons of Sherbourn. John Dutton gave it in marriage with his daughter Lucy, to ſir Thomas Pope, earl of Down. It was again purchaſed, about the middle of the laſt century, by the Caſtleman family. Jonathan Caſtleman, eſq; in the year 1720, ſold the manor of Coberley for 40000*l.* to John How, eſq; father of John firſt lord Chedworth; and Henry-Frederick lord Chedworth is the preſent lord of this manor.

HAMLETS. 1. Lower Coberley, as before.

2. Pinſwell, ſometimes called Upper Coberley, conſiſting of only two houſes. It lies in the hundred of Bradley, and was a member of the manor of Northleach, as appears by Domeſday-book. It has contributed to the relief of the poor of that pariſh, and ſtill pays land-tax in aid of Eaſtington there. The name of Pinſwell, from pen the top, and well, a ſpring of water, is exactly deſcriptive of its ſituation on the top of a high hill above the reſt of the village; a perennial ſpring riſing on the brow of the hill, runs down a ſteep deſcent, and joins the Churn water at the manor-houſe of Coberley. This eſtate is deſcribed in Domeſday-book, under the head Terra Thome Archiep'i, viz.

'In Culberlege in Bradelege hundred is one hide belonging to this manor [i.e. Lecce, which we now call Northleach.] The hide at Culberlege is worth 20*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The manor of Coberley, then called Turpindeswelle, corruptly for Tre-pindeſwelle, [i.e. Pinſwell-place] was given to the nunnery of Glouceſter when Eva or Edytha was abbeſs, who died in 768. In 1058 it was taken from the abbey of Glouceſter by Aldred archbiſhop of York, as being a member of the manor of Lecce, to reimburſe him his expences in rebuilding the abbey; but it was reſtored to that houſe by Thomas archbiſhop of York, in 1094, ſoon after the general ſurvey.

Robert Waleran died ſeized of the manor of Coberley 1 E. 1. He left no iſſue, and was ſucceeded by his nephew Robert. John Waleran, and Robert Waleran with Iſabel his wife, were ſeized of 4*l.* rent in Coberley 2 E. 2. but John Gimel held the manor the ſame year.

Though the above perſons are ſaid to be ſeized of the manor of Coberley, yet it muſt be underſtood only of Pinſwell, or Upper Coberley, which they held under the abbey of Glouceſter.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of lands, and of a portion of tithes, in Coberley, 17 E. 3.

It does not appear to whom Pinſwell was granted at the diſſolution of Glouceſter abbey. But it is probable that it paſſed into lay hands, together with the manor of Northleach, of which it was a member. One of the Duttons of Sherbourn purchaſed the manor of lower Coberley, and John Dutton gave it in marriage with his daughter Lucy, to Thomas earl of Down. It is likely that this eſtate went with the other manor, for ſince that time they have had the ſame proprietors.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth 200*l.* a year. Lord Chedworth is patron, the reverend Mr. John Arnold the preſent incumbent.

The rector preſented to a chantry in the church of Beauvale in Nottinghamſhire in the year 1401.

The patronage of this church belonged to the priory of Little Malvern in Worceſterſhire.

There was a chantry in the church dedicated to the virgin Mary, founded by Thomas Berkeley in the year 1340, of which William Williams was the laſt incumbent. This chantry was granted to ſir John Brydges 1 E. 6.

The church is an antient building, dedicated to St. Giles, with a ſmall aile on the ſouth ſide, and a ſtrong tower at the weſt end, with three bells in it.

There is a tradition that there was a chapel at Pinſwell, and foundations of buildings have lately been dug up there, on the ſpot where the chapel is ſaid to have ſtood.

At the beginning of this century, there were 14 houſes and about 80 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. Atkyns. But in ten years, from 1764, the average of annual baptiſms was 2.8, of burials 1.8; and the preſent number of families is 27, of inhabitants exactly 178. DAGLINGWORTH

LIES in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, in the Coteſwold country, three miles north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, ſix eaſt from Biſley, and fifteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name ſeems to be derived from the Saxon ðiȝel, hidden, and þeopꝺ, a village; the greater part of the houſes ſtanding in a narrow dale, not eaſily eaſily ſeen from the great road, which lies a little to the eaſt of it.

A ſmall ſtream, riſing in Dunteſbourn, runs through the village to Stratton, and falls into the Churn at Cirenceſter. And the Irminſtreet, a great Roman road, leading from Cirenceſter to Glouceſter, paſſes thro' the pariſh. It is thrown up very broad and high, and notwithſtanding it is much injured by the injudicious management of ſurveyors, yet it ſtill remains very viſible for many miles together. I have given the derivation of the name of this road, agreeably to Camden, under Cirenceſter: But it has ſince occurred to me, that the name is of Saxon original; for Þeþe in that language ſignifies an army, and Þeþeman a ſoldier. So that Irminſtreet is nothing more than the expreſſion via militaris tranſlated into the Saxon language; and ſignifies the ſoldier's road, as having been made by the Roman ſoldiers, who were occaſionally employed that way.

The Romans had an advanced poſt in this village, as appears by the ruins of ſome foundations, and a teſſellated pavement, diſcovered in a ground called Cave-Cloſe, about a century ago.

On the eaſt ſide of this Roman way, on a large down, is found a kind of ſtone peculiar to this place, and the neighbouring pariſhes of Stratton and Bagendon. It is called the Dagham-down-ſtone. It lies juſt under the ſod, on a bed of black mould, unmixed with any other kind of ſtone. It is of a cloſe whitiſh grit, very hard, and endures all weathers. The ſtones riſe ſingly, of infinite ſhapes and uncommon figures, occaſioned by a number of circular perforations, from one inch to three or four inches diameter; which ſeem to have been made by a kind of fermentation in the ſtony matter, whilſt in a ſoft ſtate; for the ſurface of the hollow part is as ſmooth as if cut with a ſharp inſtrument. They are ſhaped like various kinds of animals, human ſculls, bones, and other irregular figures, much eaſier conceived than deſcribed; and are carried to great diſtances to ornament grottos, bridges, and ruſtic buildings, in which they have an effect vaſtly ſuperior to any work of art.

And on the ſame down, there is another curious kind of ſtone lying near the ſurface. It riſes ſometimes three or four feet ſquare, is of a whitiſh grit, hard as marble, full of petrified ſhells, and bears a good poliſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book this place is not mentioned, being probably conſidered at the time of the ſurvey, as a part of the manor of Stratton; but in the ſheriff's return of all the vills in the hundred of Cirenceſter 9 E. 1. Daglingworth is expreſſly mentioned, and Stratton omitted, whence it ſeems probable, that 'till that time at leaſt they were one pariſh.

This manor was held by Ralph Bloet in the reign of king Henry the Second, and by another Ralph Bloet, who had a grant of free-warren in Daglingworth 9 E. 3. Sir John Bloet, ſon of Ralph, died ſeized of this manor, leaving Elizabeth his only daughter and heireſs, who by her marriage with ſir James de Berkeley, carried this manor into that name and family, in which it continued down to 44 Eliz. when Henry lord Berkeley ſold it to ſir Henry Poole for 1320*l.* From the Pooles it paſſed to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century, out of whoſe family it went by purchaſe to the earl of Bathurſt, whoſe ſon the preſent earl of Bathurſt is lord of the manor.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that William Boiſe and others held lands in Daglingworth 32 H. 3. William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Daglingworth to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille 20 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 80*l.* a year, the lord chancellor is patron, Mr. Chapman the preſent incumbent.

The abbeſs of Godſtow in Oxfordſhire preſented to this church in the year 1499.

Seventy-three acres of arable land in the common fields belong to the glebe.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to the Holy Croſs, and has a ſtrong tower at the weſt end.

DEAN, or MITCHEL DEAN,

LIES in the hundred of St. Briavel, (but antiently in Weſtbury hundred) in the foreſt-diviſion of the county, ſeven miles diſtant ſouth from Newent, five north from Newnham, and twelve weſt from Glouceſter.

Agreeably to the name, this place is ſituated in a little low valley, between two hills, with the foreſt of Dean on the weſt and ſouth-weſt of it. It is a little market-town, conſiſting of one very narrow, crooked ſtreet, of ordinary low buildings. The market is held on Monday, and pretty well fre-frequented; for the convenience of which a new market-houſe hath been lately built by the lord of the manor. Here is a fair on Eaſter-monday, and another on the 10th of October.

The town had formerly ſome ſhare in the cloathing-trade, which gave way to that of pin-making, and this hath long ſince left it, (for want of proper ſpirit in the manufacturers) to be foſtered under abler managers at Glouceſter: ſo that at preſent, having no ſupport from manufactures, and but little from travelling, tho' the turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Monmouth leads through it, the town is evidently in decline.

In this place, and in many others about the foreſt, large quantities of rich cinders have been found, from which our anceſtors, for want of more powerful engines, could not extract the iron.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'William the ſon of Norman holds two hides, 'two yard-lands and a half in Dene. Three 'thanes, Godric, Elric, and Ernui held theſe lands 'in the time of king Edward. There are three 'plow-tillages in demean, and thirty-eight bordars 'have ſeven plow-tillages and a half, three of 'which pay 8*s*. It was worth 33*s*. now 44*s*. 'King Edward exempted theſe lands from tax, 'for the preſervation of the foreſt.' D. B. p. 74.

The regular canons of Southwick in Hampſhire were ſeized of lands in Dean, and had a charter of liberties therein 1 Joh. and a grant of another part of Dean in the 5th year of that reign, the reſt remaining in the king's hands.

This manor, and a bailiwick in the foreſt, were held by William de Dean 47 H. 3. and by Henry de Dean 20 E. 1. John Abbenhall was ſeized of the manor of Michel-Dean, and of one meſſuage, and 140 acres of land, 10 E. 2. and William de Dean held Great Dean, St. Briavel's-caſtle, and four acres of aſſart-land in Bradell, 12 E. 2. and Reginald de Abbenhall had a grant of markets and fairs in Great Dean 2 E. 3.

John Tiptot, earl of Worceſter, had this manor in marriage with Elizabeth Grender, and held it till his death; but leaving no iſſue by her, it reverted to the Grenders, and went out of that name to the Walwyns, by the marriage of an heireſs. It was afterwards carried out of the name of Walwyn, by an heireſs to the Baynhams; and deſcended like Abbenhall, down to Chriſtopher Baynham, who had livery of this manor 3 E. 6. He dying 5 Mar. livery was granted the ſame year to his brother Richard; as it was to Robert Baynham 9 Eliz. and to Joſeph Baynham 14 Eliz. And Thomas Baynham had livery of the fourth part of the manor of Mitchel-Dean, and of the third part of the advowſon of the rectory, 20 Eliz.

It afterwards became the property of ſir Robert Woodruffe; but Maynard Colcheſter, of Weſtbury, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

Walter de Laci gave his lands in Dene to the abbey of Glouceſter, which gift the king confirmed 4 W. 1. Roger de Staunton gave the water-courſe of Dene and of Clinch to the ſaid abbey, 7 R. 1. And the abbey held lands in Dean of Edward earl of March 3 H. 6.

The inhabitants of Dean had right of eſtovers and paſturage in the foreſt of Dean 7 H. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of the foreſt, worth 50*l*. a year. Mr. Colcheſter is patron, Mr. John Harris the preſent incumbent. There is no land tithe-free.

The church hath two ailes, and a handſome ſpire at the weſt-end, with eight bells. It is dedicated to St. Michael, whence the town is called Mitchel-Dean. There was a ſmall chantry, dedicated to the holy Trinity, whereof Henry Hooper was the laſt incumbent.

Five ſmall parcels of land, and ſome cottages, are given for the repair of the church, and for the uſe of the poor.

DEAN (LITTLE.)

THIS is a pariſh in the hundred of St. Briavel, in the foreſt of Dean, three miles ſouth from Mitchel-Dean, two north from Newnham, and twelve weſtward from Glouceſter.

It abounds with excellent coal and iron ore, and great quantities of very rich iron cinders have been dug here. The labouring inhabitants are employ'd in mining, and in a ſmall nail manufacture. Here is a market-houſe without a market. On Whit-monday, and on the 26th of November, are two fairs for pedlery.

This village affords very little matter for the entertainment of the curious. If it were not an offence to quote a writer profeſſedly in the parliament's intereſt in the reign of king Charles the Firſt, I would mention from Corbet a melancholy tranſaction which happened here. Governor Maſſy (of whom the reader may ſee more under Glouceſter) ſent a party of horſe to alarm a little garriſon at this place, whilſt he fell upon Weſtbury himſelf. This party ſurpriſed and took about twenty of the king's men; and alſo ſurrounded colonel Congreve, governor of Newnham, and one captain Wigmore, with a few private ſoldiers, who were in ſome houſes. They had accepted quarter, and were ready to ſurrender, when one of the company from the houſes killed a trooper, which ſo enraged the reſt, that they broke in upon them, and put them all to the ſword. Congreve died with theſe words, Lord, receive my ſoul: but Wigmore uttered nothing but the bittereſt execrations: upon which Corbet makes a remark of the extreme contrariety in the ſpirits of men, even under the ſtroke of death.

Mr. Pyrke has a good houſe and eſtate here. Thomas Pyrke, eſq; the late owner of them, married Dorothy, daughter of Richard Yate, of Arlingham, eſq; by whom he had two ſons and a daughter; and ſurviving them, he bequeathed this eſtate to —— Watkyns, deſcended, by the mother's ſide, from a brother of the ſaid Thomas Pyrke, who aſſumes the name of Pyrke and reſides at this place. See inſcriptions at Abbenhall, for the family arms.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There is no diſtinct account of this manor in Domeſday-book, becauſe it was taken out of Great Dean, or Mitchel-Dean, ſince the compilation of that record. William de Dean (of whom already under Mitchel-Dean) died 12 E. 2. ſeized of Dean, which he held in capite, paying 10*s.* a year to the conſtable of St. Briavel's caſtle, and ſerving the king in his army in the counties of Glouceſter, Hereford, and Worceſter, three days at his own expence. Eſch. The manor afterwards came to the Grenders, and deſcended preciſely like the manor of Mitchel-Dean to Maynard Colcheſter, eſq; who is the preſent lord of this manor.

Sir Anthony Kingſton had a grant of an eſtate by the name of a manor in Little Dean 36 H. 8. valued at that time at 14*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* Richard Brain, eſq; died ſeized of lands in Little Dean 15 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation in the foreſt deanery, belonging to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, Glouceſter. The corporation of that city are patrons, Mr. Webb is the preſent incumbent. It is uſually joined in the ſame preſentation with Newnham. The incumbent has a leaſe of the impropriation, out of which he pays 8*l.* a year for the uſe of the hoſpital, the reſt being allowed to him as curate.

The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert. It has a double roof, ſupported by pillars in the middle. There was a chantry erected 13 H. 4. dedicated to the holy Trinity. George Pomefrey, the laſt incumbent, retired with a penſion of 4*l.* And the lands of this chantry were granted to William Herick and Arthur Ingram 5 Jac.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 70 houſes, and about 320 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 9. But I find that in ten years, beginning with 1714, there were 146 baptiſms, and 115 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1761, the baptiſms were 144, the burials 106. And the inhabitants are now about 423.

DEERHURST, or DERHURST.

PART of this pariſh (the tithing of Derhurſt) lies in the hundred of its own name, three miles diſtant ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and eight north from Glouceſter.

The pariſh is bounded by the Severn for two miles on the weſt, and lying moſtly flat and low, is extremely ſubject to floods from that river. In 1770, the flood roſe to the top of the firſt floor of moſt of the houſes in the village, and ſo continued many days together; but it was much higher in ſome parts of the pariſh. The roads are almoſt impaſſable in the winter.

It appears from Domeſday-book, that there was a large wood in Derhurſt, that in part gave denomination to the place; for the name is compoſed of Dwr, Britiſh, water, and Deorc, Saxon, a wood, and ſignifies the wood by the water. This explanation agrees preciſely with the ſituation, and is much preferable to that which accounts for the former part of the name, by ſuppoſing that deer formerly harboured there, which notion probably took riſe from the more modern manner of writing it.

Common occurrences are improper for hiſtory, becauſe unintereſting; and the marvellous and wonderful are to be admitted with caution. Finding the following ſtory in ſir Robert Atkyns, is my only reaſon for giving it a place in this account. The ſtory is, that a ſerpent of a prodigious bigneſs was a great grievance to all the country about Derhurſt, by poiſoning the inhabitants and killing their cattle. The inhabitants petitioned the king, and a proclamation was iſſued out, that whoſoever ſhould kill the ſerpent ſhould enjoy an eſtate on Walton-hill in this pariſh, which then belonged to the crown. One John Smith, a labourer, engaged in the enterprize, and ſucceeded: For having put a quantity of milk in a place to which the ſerpent reſorted, he gorged the the whole, agreeable to expectation, and lay down to ſleep in the ſun, with his ſcales ruffled up. Seeing him in that ſituation, Smith advanced, and ſtriking between the ſcales with his axe, took off his head. The family of the Smiths enjoyed the eſtate, when ſir Robert compiled this account, and Mr. Lane, who married a widow of that family, had then the axe in his poſſeſſion.

There is a ſmall iſland here, called the Eight, made by the dividing of the waters of the Severn, which ſome writers have taken for the Olanize, or Alney, where Edmund Ironſide and Canute the Dane fought in ſingle combat for the kingdom; but the iſle of Alney, near Glouceſter, was moſt probably the ſcene of that famous engagement.

Derhurſt common is remarkable for its great extent, and for being frequently overflowed with water. It begins at the church-yard, and goes round a good part of the pariſh, about four miles in length, joining the Leigh common. A few years ago the inhabitants of the Leigh dug a deep ditch acroſs, to divide the pariſhes, whereupon an action was brought againſt them; and on trial, the right of common being a manerial right, under the manor of Plaiſtow, which includes both pariſhes, a verdict with damages paſſed againſt them. If I am not miſtaken, a commiſſion of ſewers, for the improvement of eſtates liable to be overflowed by the Severn from Glouceſter upwards, was iſſued in the laſt king's reign; which, if carried into execution, might make this a moſt valuable piece of ground, and greatly improve many other eſtates in this part of the country.

Here is an antient bridge, which obtained the name of Gildable-bridge, from certain tolls and cuſtoms having been formerly paid at it. 'Tis part repaired by Norton, and part by Derhurſt. And here was a fair held on Holy-rood day, now totally diſuſed.

But more obſervable for antiquity is the priory which ſtood in this place, which Bede mentions to be a famous monaſtery in his time. It is ſaid to have been built about the year 715, of which Leland gives the following account from a manuſcript he had ſeen in Tewkeſbury abbey. Almarick, brother to Odo and Dodo, great noblemen of Mercia, was buried in a ſmall chapel at Deorhurſte, which had been a royal palace; where, in the wall over the door, it was written, Hanc aulam Dodo dux conſecrari fecit in eccleſiam, ad honorem beatæ Mariæ Virginis, ob amorem fratris ſui Almarici: i.e. Duke Dodo, for the affection he bore to his brother Almarick, cauſed this palace to be conſecrated into a church, to the honour of the bleſſed Virgin Mary. Itin. v. 6. And in the year 1675, there was an old ſtone dug up here in Mr. Powell's orchard, with this inſcription: Odda dux juſſit hanc aulam regiam conſtrui, atq; dedicari in honorem Sanctæ Trinitatis pro anima Germani ſui Elfrici, quæ de hoc loco aſſumpta erat. Ealdredus vero epiſcopus qui eandem dedicavit ii idibus April. xiv° autem anno S.[u] regni Eadwardi regis Anglorum. That is, Duke Odda commanded this royal palace to be built, and to be dedicated to the Holy Trinity, for the ſoul of his couſin (or brother) Elfrick, which was parted from his body in this place. But Ealdred was the biſhop who conſecrated it, on the ſecond of the ides of April, in the 14th year of the reign of the holy king Edward.

To reconcile theſe accounts, we muſt ſuppoſe that Almarick and Elfrick are only accidental variations in the name of the ſame perſon. The dedication to the virgin Mary mentioned in the firſt account, refers to the original conſecration. But the Danes ravaging and deſtroying the monaſtery, it continued in a low condition for many years; 'till Edward the Confeſſor cauſed it to be rebuilt and conſecrated in the year 1056; and the latter account muſt relate to the ſecond conſecration. He alſo endowed the priory with the advowſons of Derhurſt, Woolſtone, Preſtone, and Compton, and made it an alien priory, ſubject to the abbey of St. Dennis at Paris; all which William the Conqueror confirmed[w] in the year 1069. But William of Malmeſbury tells us, that in his time this houſe was only an empty monument of antiquity. Leland ſays, The olde Priory ſtode eſt from Severn a bow ſhotte, and north of the town. There remayne yet dyverſe names of ſtreates, as Fiſſchar-ſtreate, and others. But the buildings of them are gone; to which I muſt add, that many ruins of old foundations have been found, which ſhew the place was formerly much larger than at preſent.

St. Alphege, archbiſhop of Canterbury, about the year 960, was a private monk in this monaſtery.

King Richard the Second found ſome pretence for ſeizing into his hands all the manors and lands belonging to this priory, and John de Beauchamp of Holt obtained a grant of them 11 R. 2.

By the ſtatute of 2 H. 5. all the poſſeſſions of alien priories were veſted in the crown, except of ſuch as were conventual. This houſe therefore was not within that ſtatute. But king Henry the Sixth having wars with France, it was not thought fit to permit the abbey of St. Dennis to have the patronage of this cell, and the right of preſenting the prior; he therefore by his[x] charter makes it a priory denizen 1 H. 6. and grants them power to elect their own prior; but gave the patronage of the monaſtery to the abbey of Tewkeſbury. Hugh Magaſon was the laſt prior alien.

King Henry the Sixth, in the nineteenth year of his reign, founded Eaton-college, and diſſolving the monaſtery of Derhurſt, gave moſt of their lands to that college, the reſt to Tewkeſbury abbey, which occaſioned great law-ſuits between the college and the abbey, that were not finally determined till Henry the Seventh's reign; when it was ſettled, that Goldcliff-priory and lands ſhould go to the college, and Derhurſt to the abbey of Tewkeſbury. John Bromſgrove was the laſt prior, and had a penſion of 13*l.* 6*s* 8*d.*

King Edward the Fourth being willing to abrogate the acts of king Henry the Sixth, who was of the Lancaſtrian line, takes away thoſe lands from Eaton-college, 17° regni, and beſtows them on the college of Fotheringhay in Northampton-ſhire, which was founded by Edward duke of York, of his own family, in the year 1415; which lands were afterwards regranted to the college of Eaton by king Henry the Eighth.

Lands in Derhurſt, and the ſcite of the priory, which lately belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Giles Throgmorton, in conſideration of the manor of White Waltone, and other lands in Berkſhire, 34 H. 8. and Thomas Throgmorton had livery of them 12 Eliz. The ſcite of this antient priory is exempt from tithes, and is now the property of the earl of Coventry, who is alſo viſcount Deerhurſt. His lordſhip's arms are Sable, a feſs ermine between three creſcents Or. SUPPORTERS, Two eagles, wings expanded, argent, member'd and beaked Or. MOTTO, CANDIDE ET CONSTANTER.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Peter at Weſtminſter holds 'Derheſt in Derheſt hundred. There are fifty-'nine hides. There were five hides in the chief 'manor in the time of king Edward. There are 'three plow-tillages and twenty villeins, and eight 'bordars with ten plow-tillages. There are ſix 'ſervi, and ſixty acres of meadow; a wood two 'miles long, and half a mile broad. It is worth 'and was worth 10*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

But it is ſuppoſed that the above fifty-nine hides include other manors which were held of this, and are expreſſly mentioned in the record to be ad hoc manerium Berewicci, members belonging to this manor; and are as follow: Herdduuic, Bortune, Teodecham, Sudtune, in which were twenty-five hides. And there were beſides ſmaller eſtates held by Radecheniſters, or free men, who notwithſtanding they were free, did, in the time of king Edward, plow, harrow, reap and mow at all the lord's work[y]; which eſtates lay in Almundeſtan, Telinge, Wicfeld, Toteham, Botingtune, Bortune, Chinemertune, Giningtune, Tereige, Trinleie, Hasfelde, Lemingtune, and Montune.

'The whole manor in the time of king Edward 'paid a farm of 41*l.* and eight ſextaries of honey 'of the king's meaſure. It is now worth 40*l.* of 'which 26*l.* belong to the manor, and 14*l.* to the '[free] men.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

This lordſhip was taken by the Conqueror[z] from the abbey of Perſhore, and given to the church of Weſtminſter; and Robert Fitz-Haman (ſometimes erroneouſly ſtiled earl of Glouceſter) took it again from the abbey of Weſtminſter, with all their poſſeſſions in Glouceſterſhire; which abbat Lawrence recovered by a law-ſuit in the reign of king Henry the Second. The abbat of Weſtminſter was ſeized of the hundred of Derhurſt 15 E. 1. and held the manor of Derhurſt, with the hamlets of Hardwick, Walton, Corſe, Trinelly, and Haurick, [Tyrley and Haw] 27 E. 1. At the diſſolution of religious foundations, this manor was veſted in the crown, and granted to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter 34 H. 8. but was reſumed, and granted to the convent of Weſtminſter 4 Mar. and again regranted, and confirmed to the church of Weſtminſter 2 Eliz. who are the preſent proprietors.

HAMLETS. 1. Apperley, where Mr. Capel Payne has a good eſtate, lately belonging to the Lanes. The manor of Apperley antiently belonged to the abbey of Weſtminſter, upon the diſſolution of which, it was granted to the dean and chapter of that church, 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz.—There is ſaid to be another manor in Apperley, of which Edward Brugg was ſeized 10 H. 4. Edward Brugg, eſq; held 30 meſſuages in Trinly, and one capital meſſuage called Apperly-place, 200 acres of land, 30 acres of meadow, and 100 acres of paſture in Derhurſt, 15 H. 6. The manor of Apperley was held by John Throgmorton 13 E. 4. by Philip Throgmorton 5 H. 8. by William Throgmorton 28 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted to Thomas Throgmorton 12 Eliz.—Lands in Apperley, late Warwick's and Spencer's lands, were granted to James Gunter and William Lewis 37 H. 8.

2. Wightfield. Eduui, a free man, held one hide in Wicfeld of the manor of Derheſt in the time of king Edward, which Walterius Pontherius held at the time of the general ſurvey. D. B. Gilbert le Diſpencer was ſeized of two meſſuages, 400 acres of land, &c. in Wightfield and Apperley, 5 R. 2. John Caſſey, lord chief baron of the exchequer, died ſeized of this manor 1 H. 4. as did Robert Caſſey, eſq; 1 E. 6. and Henry Caſſey his ſon, 38 Eliz. Powell Snell, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and owner of the eſtate in Wightfield, but holds no court.

3. Walton. This manor antiently belonged to the abbey of Weſtminſter, and, with others, was granted to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz. William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Walton by Derhurſt 20 H. 6. Lands in Derhurſt-Walton, which lately belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to James Gunter and William Lewis 37 H. 8. Sir Henry Caple and Anne his wife levied a fine of lands in Walton 3 Mar.

The manor of Hardwick by Derhurſt was alſo antiently in the abbey of Weſtminſter, and after the diſſolution was granted to that church.

Theſe three hamlets lie in the lower part of Weſtminſter hundred.

The repreſentative of the late William Dowdeſwell, eſq; of Pull-court, as leſſee under the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter, is lord of the manor of Plaiſtow; and at that court, all the places in the lower diviſion of Weſtminſter hundred owe ſuit and ſervice.

Of the Church, &c.

Derhurſt is a peculiar, and the mother of the following churches; Corſe, Forthampton, Hasfield, the Leigh, Staverton, Bodington, and Tirley, which had no right of ſepulture 'till they obtained it of the priors of Derhurſt. Theſe, with their mother church, claim to be viſited at Derhurſt, as probably they were heretofore ſerved by monks of the priory, whom the archdeacon viſited there. It is a curacy, formerly in the gift of the impropriator; but the biſhop hath appointed the curate for many years paſt. Here is no houſe nor glebe for the incumbent, who receives 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* from the impropriator, which a few years ſince was all the income; but it hath lately been twice augmented by the queen's bounty, and the pariſhioners have undertaken to make the whole 20*l.* a year. It was a laudable act in the people, ſo far as it extends, but ineffectual to any good purpoſe; for the clergy, like other men, have need of meat, drink, and cloathing, which this pitiful income cannot ſupply. Hence the church of Derhurſt has ſervice performed in it once in four, five, or ſix weeks, at uncertain times; and hence alſo the greater part of the inhabitants of this large pariſh, either frequent alehouſes on the Sunday, idle about, or lie, like ſwine, in the lanes and public highways, for want of a miniſter to teach them their duty; to the great injury of the cauſe of religion, and to the general depravity of morals. I diſlike the invidious reflections thrown out by Spelman, Stevens, and others, againſt the Reformation; but in all caſes ſimilar to the above, I ſincerely wiſh to ſee the Reformation reformed, and am ſure the clergy will heartily join me.

—The prior of Derhuſt was ſeized of the advowſon of this church 5 H. 3.

Livery of the rectory of Derhurſt was granted to Thomas Throgmorton 12 Eliz.

The impropriation, worth 150*l.* a year, belongs to Powell Snell, eſq; whoſe father purchaſed it of the family of Fermor.

The church conſiſts of a lofty nave, with two ſide ailes. The chancel is higher than the church, with a large aile on each ſide, all covered with lead. There was a handſome ſpire at the weſt end, which was blown down in 1666, inſtead of which, there is now a ſmall tower with pinnacles, and five muſical bells in it. There is a ſmall place at the upper end of the ſouth aile, called Petty France, with a door, through which the prior uſed to come out of his houſe into the church. There are ſome remains of painted glaſs in the windows, with the figures of St. Agatha, St. Catherine, &c. Upon the whole the church is a good figure, but kept in a miſerable filthy condition. The church-yard contains about an acre of ground.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north aile is the following inſcription upon braſs, round a grey marble ſtone:

Hic jacet Iohēs Caſſy miles quondam capitalis Baro Sc'c'ij dnī Regis qui obijt xxiij° die Mar. Anno dnī M° CCCC° Et Alicia uxor ejus quor' animab' p'picietur Deus.——The figures of a man and woman are engraven in braſs on the ſtone, and very perfect. Over the man's head, Argent, a chevron between three eagles heads eraſed gules, for Caſſey. At his feet, three lioncels paſſant in pale. The arms over the woman's head are torn off.

In the north aile, is a memorial for William Lane, eſq; of Apperley, who died in 1755, and theſe arms, Party per pale argent and gules, three ſaltires counterchanged; a mullet for difference.

On a flat ſtone in the chancel, is a memorial for Peter Fermor, ſecond ſon of Henry Fermor, of Tufmore in Oxfordſhire, eſq; who died in 1691, with his arms, A feſs between three wiverns heads eraſed; a creſcent for difference.

There are ſeveral memorials for the Powells, the Mortimers, &c. but nothing worthy notice.

Benefactions.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 100 houſes, and about 620 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. Having examined the pariſh regiſter, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 172, burials 121; and in a like ſeries, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 166, burials 153. But the regiſter appears to be very ill kept, and no certain deduction can be made from it. The inhabitants are now about 530.

DEINTON, or DOINTON,

IS a ſmall pariſh, at preſent in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, but it lay antiently in that of Pucklechurch. It is bounded on the eaſt by Dyrham, on the weſt by Bitton, on the north by Abſton, and on the ſouth by Langridge and Lanſdown in Somerſetſhire; eight miles diſtant eaſt from Briſtol, about ſeven north-eaſt from Bath, four weſt from Marſhfield, and thirty-three ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It was antiently called Didington; a little brook runs thro' it into the Boyd, and ſo into the Avon.

The Boyd runs between this pariſh and Abſton, in a very deep channel, between rocks of a prodigious height, riſing almoſt perpendicularly from the bottom; and on each ſide are fortifications and intrenchments, raiſed, it is ſuppoſed, with a view to preſerve a communication between Aqua Solis and Trajectus, two antient Roman ſtations, already mentioned more largely under Cromhall, Clifton, and other places.

This little pariſh is within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter. It is pleaſantly ſituated under Lanſdown. It produces no rare plants, but there are ſome veins of lead ore, which are not rich enough to defray the expence of working. The ſtone of the rocks abovementioned makes an excellent, white, ſtrong lime.

The women and children are employed in ſpinning woollen yarn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The ſame biſhop [i.e. the biſhop of Conſtance] 'held Didintone in Polcrecerce hundred, and 'Robert held it of him. Aluuard a thane of 'king Edward held it. There are five hides taxed. 'In demean are three plow-tillages and fourteen 'villeins, and eight bordars with eight plow-'tillages. There are ten ſervi, and two mills of '10*s.* and 10*d.* and two men of 5*s.* and twelve 'acres of meadow, a wood half a mile long, and 'half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth '8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The family of the Deintons took their name from this place, and held the manor for ſeveral generations, of the Clares, earls of Glouceſter. Thomas de Deinton ſold the manor and advowſon of the church to John de Tracy, and levied a fine thereof 6 E. 1. and John de Tracy, ſon of the former, proved his right to courts leet and waifs in this manor, in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The manor continued in the name of Tracy 300 years, and was ſold out of that family to Mr. Arthur Player and others, in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

Robert Langton, eſq; was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century, and Joſeph Langton, eſq; is the preſent lord of it.

But there was an antient manor called the Bury, which belonged alſo to the Tracies, afterwards to the Stills, and is now, by purchaſe, the property of Mr. Hillman.

The lodge-houſe in Tracy-park, which for many generations belonged to the Ridleys, is the property of Mr. Frankham.

John Stanſhaw and Humphry Stanſhaw his brother, levied a fine of lands in Deinton to William Fream, 12 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 130*l.* a year, of which the lord chancellor is patron; the reverend Mr. Thomas Coker the preſent incumbent.

Eighty acres belong to the glebe. Tracy-park pays a mark yearly in lieu of tithes; all other places pay full tithes.

There was antiently a free chapel belonging to the manor-houſe, dedicated to the virgin Mary; and Mr. Hillman pays an audit to the crown of 5*s.* 4*d.* for the ſite of it.

The church is ſmall, with an aile on the north ſide, a handſome gallery at the weſt end, and an embattled tower with five bells in it. It is dedicated to the holy Trinity. The preſent rector rebuilt the chancel about the year 1768.

There is a handſome monument in the church, of white marble, with the following inſcription:

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 48 houſes and about 200 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 6. But in ten years, beginning with 1700, I counted from the pariſh regiſter 83 baptiſms, and 41 burials; and in a like ſeries, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 110, and the burials 79. And there are now about 340 inhabitants, nearly in the proportion of 44 to 1 of the average of annual burials.

DIDBROOK

IS a ſmall pariſh in the lower diviſion of Kiftſgate hundred, three miles diſtant northward from Winchcombe, nine ſouth-weſt from Campden, and eighteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

This little village is pleaſantly ſituated under the ſouth-weſt ſide of the ridge of hills which divide ivide the vale from the Coteſwold country. It onſiſts of excellent arable and paſture-land, but here is nothing more to recommend it to our otcie. A little rivulet runs from hence into the Avon near Eveſham; and as Diddan in the Britiſh anguage ſignifies pleaſant, it is probable that the lace took its name from its ſituation upon this leaſant brook or ſtream of water.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, which continued in poſſeſſion of it 'till the iſſolution of religious foundations, when it paſſed by grant into the name and family of Tracy, in which it has remained ever ſince; lord viſcount Tracy of Todington, being the preſent proprietor of it.

TITHING. Coſcomb is a tithing in this pariſh, ſituate in a little dale on the brow of the hill, facing the vale towards Tewkeſbury. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, at the diſſolution of which houſe, the capital meſſuage of Coſtombe, alias Coſtom, in Didbrook, among other particulars, was aſſigned to Stephen Segar, the laſt abbat of Hayles, 'till he ſhould be otherwiſe provided for. But the ſame meſſuage, by the name of the Abbat's-Lodging, was granted to Robert Acton 32 H. 8. Anthony Daſton died ſeized thereof 20 Eliz. as did another Anthony Daſton 12 C. 1. leaving Richard his ſon 12 years old.

This eſtate belonged to the late Mr. Juſtice Tracy, who built a handſome ſeat here, commanding an extenſive proſpect over the vale of Eveſham. His grandſon Robert Tracy, eſq; dying without iſſue, it came to the preſent owner, Robert Pratt, eſq; repreſentative in parliament of the borough of Horſham in Suſſex. Here are two houſes in this tithing; and there was formerly a ſmall chapel, now converted to prophane uſes.

Wormington-grange is a place in this pariſh. William Fravelleſworth held Little Wormington 3 E. 3. Wormington-farm, which belonged to the abbey of Hayles, was granted to Robert Acton 2 H. 8. Lands in Wormington, formerly belonging to the ſame abbey, were granted to ſir Richard Greſham, in exchange for lands in Yorkſhire, 38 H. 8. Lands called Hayles-cloſe in Wormington, were granted to Henry Ruſſel and Charles Brockton 2 Mariæ.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Hampden, of which lord viſcount Tracy is patron; the Honourable John Tracy, D.D. the preſent incumbent. It was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Hayles. The advowſon of the rectory and vicarage of Didbrook was granted to ſir Edward Seimour 1 E. 6. and afterwards to John Bradley and John Aſcough 18 Eliz. The impropriation belongs to lord viſcount Tracy, and pays four marks yearly to the vicar.

In the year 1738, this vicarage, the rectory of Pinnock, and the chapel of Hayles were conſolidated into one preſentation, by the concurrence of the biſhop, the patron, and incumbent.

The church is ſuppoſed to be dedicated to St. George, from the picture of that ſaint in armour being in the window near the belfry. It has an embattled tower, and four bells, at the weſt end.

In the chancel window, painted on the glaſs, is the head of an old man, and this inſcription was under it: Orate p' aia Will'i Whytchyrche qui hoc templum fundavit cum cancello. And under, theſe arms, Argent, a lion rampant gules, in a bordure charged with four beſants. But the latter part of the writing is now deſtroyed. This William Whytchurch was abbat of Hayles in 1470, and lies buried here in a ſtone coffin. The church was polluted by bloodſhed in 1472.

At the beginning of this century there were 20 houſes in this pariſh, and about 100 inhabitants, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. Atkyns. There are now 17 houſes, and the inhabitants fall ſomething ſhort of the above mentioned number. DIDMARTON

LIES in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Grumbaldſaſh, ſix miles weſtward from Tetbury, twenty eaſtward from the city of Briſtol, and twenty-three ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the hill country, and bounded on the ſouth ſide by Wiltſhire. This ſeems to account account for merton, the latter part of its name, which ſignifies a boundary town, from mepc, Saxon, a boundary; but I am totally ignorant of the meaning of the former part of it.

The turnpike-road from Oxford, thro' Cirencester, to Bath and Briſtol, leads through this village, where are two or three little inns for the accommodation of travellers.

The antient family of the Codringtons had a large ſeat near the church, which, with the eſtate belonging to it, is now gone out of that family, and there is only one wing and part of the front left ſtanding.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of arable land, and has nothing in it to engage the attention of the naturaliſt or antiquary.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Dedmertone in 'Grimboldeſtou hundred, and Anſchitil holds it 'of him. There are three hides taxed. Leuuin 'held it of earl Herald. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and eight bordars with one plow-'tillage, and four ſervi, and ſix acres of meadow. 'It was worth 30*s*. now 40*s*.' D. B. p. 76.

Otnell de Siward was ſon of the above Anſchitil, who was called Anſchitil of the wood. This Otnell granted two hides in Dudmarton to his uncle Elias; and the manor continued ſeveral generations in the family of the Sywards. It paſſed afterwards to the Roſtons, for William Roſton held the manor of Didmarton of the honour of Hereford 10 H. 4. Their name was afterwards varied to Wroughton, and from them this manor paſſed to the Seacoles.

Richard Seacole, eſq; died ſeized of Didmarton, and left two daughters Griſle and Anne, coheireſſes, of whom the former had livery of the manor and advowſon 13 Eliz. Anne being married to Simon Codrington of Codrington, carried this manor into that name and family, from which it paſſed by purchaſe to the late duke of Beaufort, father of the preſent duke, who is the lord of this manor.

Of the other eſtates, the records and evidences ſhew that Oſwald, who founded the monaſtery of Perſhore in Worceſterſhire, in the year 604, gave ſeveral tenements in Dydimeretune to that monaſtery, which king Edgar confirmed to it; and thoſe lands, after the diſſolution of monaſteries, were granted to Chriſtopher Smith and Thomas Wharton 2 Mar.

John Joy died ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Dudmarton 19 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 50*l*. a year, of which the duke of Beaufort is patron. Henry Dennis had livery of the advowſon 4 Eliz. In the year 1735, this church was united in one preſentation with that of Oldbury upon the hill. The rectory pays 2*s*. a year to the lord of the manor of Hawkeſbury, which manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Perſhore.

Fifty-two acres of land belong to the glebe.

The church is built in the form of an L, becauſe the name of St. Lawrence, to whom it is dedicated, begins with that letter. It is ſmall, with a wooden turret, in which is a clock. There are no monuments nor inſcriptions worthy notice.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 11 houſes, and 56 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. There are at preſent 17 families, and 72 inhabitants; and in ſixteen years, beginning with 1760, the burials have been 20; ſo that the proportion of annual burials to the whole inhabitants, is as 1 to 58, which ſhews the place to be remarkably healthy.

DIMMOCK.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the foreſt diviſion, almoſt at the extremity of the county next Herefordſhire; eleven miles north from Mitchel-Dean, thirteen weſt from Tewkeſbury, and ſeventeen north-weſt from Glouceſter.

It is a large pariſh, ſituated in the vale, and but little frequented by travellers, wherefore the roads are exceedingly deep and founderous. Sir Robert Atkyns ſuppoſes that antiently it was covered with wood, and that the name may be reſolved into two Saxon words, Dim, obſcure, and Aac, oak; as if it was ſo called on account of the place being darkened with oaks. If the reader ſhould diſlike this etymology, he may take a conjecture of my own, or reject both at pleaſure. I ſuppoſe the name to be originally Britiſh, and to be corrupted from Ty-Môch, which ſignifies the ſwineherd's houſe, and being the firſt that was built in the place, gave name to it; as Newent took its name from a new inn which was the firſt houſe in that place, built there for the convenience of travellers.

As it lies in the neighbourhood of Herefordſhire, ſo the people here, like the inhabitants of that fine county, cultivate orcharding, and make rich kind of cyder and perry. And it is very remarkable, that it was from the Ryelands in this pariſh, that king Edward took the ſheep which he preſented to the Spaniſh monarch, from the breed of which we are now ſupplied with wool for our fineſt manufactures.

It is watered by the river Leden, which paſſes by and gives name to the town of Ledbury in Herefordſhire, about ſix miles north of this village, and empties itſelf into the Severn near Glouceſter. Dimmock has more paſture than arable land. The oak-tree delights in a deep ſoil, and grows with uncommon vigour here. There are two large woods of oak, and great numbers of fine trees lie diſperſed in the meadows and paſture grounds. The arable-lands are planted with fruit-trees, with large intervals between the rows; and there are ſeveral thouſand hogſheads of cyder and perry made in this pariſh in a good year.

Cyder being a principal object, they give great attention to the culture of fruit-trees, ſtirring the earth about the roots of them when the fields lie fallow; but the foul appearance of their corn fields manifeſts a want of ſkill, or of induſtry, in that department. They know nothing of watering their meadows, as practiſed about Cirenceſter, and are negligent in draining the wet lands, both which would make prodigious improvements. However the ſoil is ſo exceedingly rich, that this, and two or three of the adjoining pariſhes, may vye with any diſtrict of the ſame extent in the county.

When the fruit-trees are in full bloſſom, the appearance of this plantation from ſome elevated ſpot is inconceivably fine. It has been compared to a garden overſpread with flowers; but the utmoſt ſtretch of verbal deſcription would produce an idea very inadequate to the beauty of this flowry landſcape.

Dimmock was formerly privileged with markets and fairs, which were let to farm to the inhabitants 30 H. 3. according to the records. And to add to its conſequence, it is ſaid that one of the Bohuns, earls of Hereford, built a caſtle here; but there are no veſtiges remaining, except the caſtle-rock and the caſtle-tump. The tump is a round mount on the borders of the pariſh next Newent, thrown up by hands, with an area at top, by much too ſmall for a building of any great ſtrength. The market failing from difficulty of acceſs, or other diſadvantages in ſituation, many houſes were deſerted and fell to ruin, of which the antient foundations have been found in the fields above a quarter of a mile from the church, with old paved cauſeys, &c. There is a place near the church called the Back of St. Clement's; and the Butcher's-row, or Butcher's-lane, occurs in the court-rolls of the manor; whence it appears that the town was formerly much larger than the village is at preſent.

Dimmock was ever remarkable for hoſpitality. The lords of the manors, and other proprietors of the beſt eſtates, (and there have been, and ſtill are, very conſiderable land-holders here) uſed to reſide in the pariſh, and their houſes were open to all comers; and tho' ſome have now left it, yet the ſame convivial old Engliſh ſpirit remains with this generous, hoſpitable people.

Roger Dimmock, a Dominican frier, and D.D. at Oxford, was a native of this place, and a perſon of ſuch ſingular learning, that the univerſity choſe him for their diſputant againſt Wickliff's doctrines. He flouriſhed in 1390. And Robert Burhill, a profound and judicious ſcholar, and editor of many learned works, was alſo a native of this pariſh. He aſſiſted ſir Walter Raleigh in writing the Hiſtory of the World, and died in 1641.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor is part of the antient demeſnes of the crown, the privileges * whereof are briefly mentioned pp. 66, 67. In Domeſday-book are the following particulars:

'King Edward held Dimoch in Botelau hundred. There were twenty hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and forty-two villeins, and ten bordars, and eleven free men [coliberti] having forty-one plow-tillages. There is a prieſt having twelve acres, and four radecheniſters with four plow-tillages. There is a wood three miles long and one broad.

'The ſheriff paid what he pleaſed for this manor in the time of king Edward.

'King William held it in his demeſnes four years. Earl William and his ſon Roger had it afterwards, the men of the county know not how. It now pays 21 l.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Roger and his two brothers dying without iſſue male, the manor of Dimmock came to Roger earl of Hereford, who gave the demeans thereof, and half the wood, to the abbey of Flaxley which he had founded. But he and his four brothers, Walter, Mahel, Henry, and William, dying without iſſue, their inheritance came to their three ſiſters, of whom Margery the eldeſt was married to Humphry de Bohun, who, in right of his wife, had the manor of Dimmock, of which Humphry their ſon died ſeized 33 H. 2. Henry de Bohun, ſon of Humphry, was created earl of Hereford 1 Joh. and had the Tertium Denarium Comitatûs granted to him, in conſideration that he had releaſed all his right in Dimmock to the king, the ſame year.

* In the reign of king H. 6. the ſheriff of the county would have charged the freeholders of Dimmock with contribution to pay the wages of the knights of the ſhire, which occaſioned the following writ:

'Henry, by the grace of God, king of England, and France, and lord of Ireland, to all and ſingular ſheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, conſtables, officers, and other our liege people, as well within liberties as without, to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting: Whereas by the antient and approved cuſtom of our realm of England, the inhabitants and tenants of the antient demeſnes of the crown of England were wont, throughout the ſaid kingdom, to be excuſed from tolls, and the expences of knights of the ſhires who come to our parliaments, and to the parliaments of our progenitors formerly kings of England. And whereas it appears by the certificate of our treaſurer and chancellor, tranſmitted into our chancery by our command, and which is ſtill remaining on the files of our chancery, that the inhabitants and tenants of the town of Dimmock in the county of Glouceſter are of the antient demeſnes of the crown: We therefore command, that in purſuance to the cuſtom aforeſaid, you acquit and diſcharge them from the payment of toll, and from contribution towards the expences of the knights of the ſhire which ſhall come to our parliaments, or to the parliaments of any of our heirs.

Witneſs ourſelf at Weſtminſter, 12 Jul. in the twelfth year of our reign.

The king granted Dimmock to Walter de Clifford the younger, brother to Fair Roſamond, who died ſeized thereof, with markets, fairs, a wood, and other appurtenances 6 H. 3. And it appears by the account of Walter de Burg that this manor paid yearly to the king 63*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* 23 H. 3.

Morgan de Kerlynn held this manor 30 H. 3. and the king granted it to Ela counteſs of Warwick, after the death of her huſband, for her better ſupport, 36 H. 3. But ſhe ſurrendered it afterwards, for William de Grandiſon proved his right to courts leet and free warren in Dimmock, in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. He had been a domeſtic ſervant to Edmond earl of Lancaſter, and was ſummoned as a peer to parliament. He married Sybil, younger daughter and coheireſs of John de Tregoz, with whom he had a large eſtate, particularly Lydiard in Wiltſhire, which from his wife's family was called Lydiard-Tregoz, the ſeat of the preſent lord viſcount Bolingbroke.

Peter Grandiſon, ſon of William, died ſeized of Dimmock 32 E. 3. as did John de Grandiſon, brother to Peter, 43 E. 3. to whom ſir Thomas Grandiſon his nephew ſucceeded, and died without iſſue 49 E. 3.

The manor now became divided among ſeveral owners. Sir Roger de Beauchamp was ſeized of a rent iſſuing out of it, and Catherine widow of Robert Todenham held the 4th part of it 7 R. 2. Margaret the widow of ſir Thomas Grandiſon died ſeized of the third part of it 18 R. 2.

Two parts of the manor of Dimmock were held by Richard Ryhale 9 H. 4. a part by John Phelepot, eſq; 13 H. 4. a fourth part by another Richard Ryhale 3 H. 5. a part by Elizabeth widow of William Ryhale 7 H. 6. a part by Richard de Montacute 8 H. 6. George Breinton, Thomas Leightfoot, Thomas Barton, and Thomas Smith were lords of Dimmock 8 H. 6. and Richard Ryhale held the manor of Dimmock 11 H. 6.

Beſide the principal manor, there were two others in Dimmock, and there is no diſtinction made between them in the records, which accounts for the unuſual fluctuation of property, as it may ſeem, in the principal manor.

Richard Pointz and John Langley transfer the poſſeſſion of the manor of Dimmock to ſir Walter Devereux 26 H. 6. Richard Oldcaſtle had a right in the manor 31 H. 6. Four parts of the manor of Dimmock were granted to ſir Walter Devereux and Elizabeth his wife 32 H. 6. The manor continued in the Devereuxes, lords Ferrers, during the reigns of E. 4. H. 7. and H. 8.

Letitia counteſs of Leiceſter was ſeized of this manor 23 Eliz. Giles Forſter, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Edward-Pye Chamberlain was proprietor of it in 1712, and another gentleman of the ſame name ſold it to Mrs. Anne Cam, who is the preſent lady of the manor, and has a handſome ſeat called the Bois, and above 1000*l.* a year in this pariſh, but ſhe reſides in London. Her arms are,

Mune was antiently a manor within the manor of Dimmock. It was granted to William de Gammage 1 Joh. whoſe ſon Jeffery de Gammage dying 37 H. 3. left Elizabeth his only daughter and heir, married firſt to John Penbrug, and afterwards to Walter Pedewardin, who proved their right to free warren and other privileges in the manor of Mune in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. John Penbrugg, ſon and heir to Elizabeth by her firſt huſband, held this manor 29 E. 1. as did Edward his brother 34 E. 1. and William de Penbrugg 11 E. 2. & 16 E. 3. Henry Penbrugg held Gammage-hall 36 E. 3. as did John Penbrugg 50 E. 3. and Sybil his widow, married afterwards to Ralph de Staunton, died ſeized of it in dower 9 R. 2. Walter Penbrugg died ſeized of the manor of Gammage-hall, and left Elizabeth his only daughter and heireſs, married to ſir Rowland Moreton, who died 1 Mar. and left Richard Moreton his ſon and heir.

Thomas Wenman died ſeized of the Old Grange of Dimmock, and of Dimmock Little, alias Gammage-hall, 1582, and left Richard his ſon nineteen years old. William Wintour died ſeized of the manor, rectory, and advowſon of Dimmock Little, 1627, of which his ſon Giles, who married Alice Caerwardine, widow, died ſeized in 1629, leaving a ſon William four years old. Wenman Winniat, eſq; was lord of the manor of Little Dimmock at the beginning of this century. The manor place of Gammage-Hall hath lately been purchaſed by Mr. Richard Hall, but the manerial rights are reſerved by the reverend Mr. Winniat, (a direct deſcendant of Wenman Winniat, eſq;) who has a very good eſtate here. His arms (as on a family monument in the church) are, Sable, on a feſs argent, between three anchors Or, a dragon gules. The old Grange and new Grange, having belonged to the abbey of Flaxley, are exempt from tithes.

It hath been already obſerved, that the abbey of Flaxley had a grant of the demeſnes of the manor of Dimmock, which in proceſs of time were reputed a manor; and after the diſſolution of religious foundations, were granted as ſuch to ſir Anthony Kingſton. Sir John Lutterel had livery of Dimmock demeſnes granted to him 1 Eliz.

Other records ſhew, that John Handborough and Maud his wife levied a fine of lands in Ketford in Dimmock 36 H. 6. and that John Garrin levied a fine of lands in Dimmock 2 E. 4.

The eſtate belonging to the White-houſe is the rectory, formerly the property of Mr. Wintour. It is worth about 500*l.* a year, and now belongs to Miſs Lambert, a minor.

Mr. Lambert has the Lintrige, which belonged to Mr. Wall, and a good eſtate in this pariſh.

John Cam, of Hereford, M. D. has a large eſtate here, of which the Pounds is the chief, and has long been in his family.

M

Mr. Richard Hill, of the Pithouſe, has a very good eſtate here. The caſtle-rock and the caſtle-tump-houſe are both Mr. Hill's. The houſe called the Callow is Mr. Yate's, and another called the Green-houſe belongs to Mr. Hankins. Mr. James Cooper has alſo a good eſtate here. There are many other freehold eſtates in the pariſh, not here particularly mentioned; beſides eſtates of inheritance to a great amount, held according to the cuſtom of the manor.

HAMLETS. There are three hamlets in this large pariſh, which all meet in the church-yard; and it is remarkable that the families are buried in that part of it belonging to the reſpective diviſions in which they lived.

1. Ledington, (lying on the river Leden) in which there is a tithingman. The account from Domeſday-book which ſir Robert Atkyns placed to this tithing, belongs to the pariſh of Upleaden.

2. Ryeland, (ſo called, becauſe being a ſandy ſoil, it was formerly thought unfit to be planted with any thing but rye) in which are two tithingmen, one belonging to the tithing of the ſame name, the other to Ockington, in this hamlet. The manor of Rye was held by Robert Attgreen and Maud his wife for their lives, of Henry duke of Lancaſter, 14 E. 3. This manor was granted to the archbiſhop of Canterbury and ſeveral other great perſons in truſt 3 H. 5. And the manor, late parcel of the dutchy of Lancaſter, was granted to Charles earl of Devonſhire 1 Jac.

3. Woodend, which has a diſtinct tithingman.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the foreſt deanery, worth 60*l.* a year, paid out of the impropriation. Miſs Lambert is patroneſs; Mr. Hayward the preſent incumbent. The church and advowſon were granted to the abbey of Cormeille in Normandy, by the king, 56 H. 3.

The impropriation, worth 500*l.* a year, belongs (as before obſerved) to Miſs Lambert, a minor. It pays 40*s.* a year to the crown.

The church is built in the form of a croſs. It is dedicated to the virgin Mary, and has a low tower at the weſt end, and a ſmall wooden ſpire.

There was a chantry in the church, dedicated to the virgin Mary, whereof John Wood was the laſt incumbent. A paſture ground, late belonging to it, at Scanborough-bridge, and lands called Portlands, were granted to ſir William Ryder 7 Jac.

A houſe and orchard in Dimmock, which belonged to the chantry of the Holy Trinity in Bow, were granted to ſir Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the church and chancel are monuments with the following inſcriptions, viz.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 250 houſes, and about 1000 inhabitants, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 28, burials 27. Having examined the pariſh regiſter, I find that, beginning with the year 1700, the average of baptiſms is 26, of burials 19; and that in ſeven years, beginning with 1768, the average of baptiſms is 34, of burials 26; and the number of inhabitants is now about 1116, which is nearly in the proportion of 43 to 1 of the annual burials.

DODINGTON

LIES in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Grumbaldſaſh, ten miles north of Bath, thirteen eaſt from Briſtol, and thirty ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It

It is ſituated on the verge of the vale, and ſecured from the bleak eaſterly winds by the high lands of Tormarton, with old Sodbury hill to the north of it.

Sir William Codrington has a ſeat here, ſeen through a viſta, at the diſtance of about five or ſix hundred yards to the right from the road which leads from Glouceſter to Bath. Tho' the houſe is not in the modern taſte, it is large and handſome. There are two very beautiful pieces of water, one above the other, in the front, with the fineſt lawn about it that can be conceived, interſperced with venerable oaks and other foreſt trees, riſing to the view from the houſe in a moſt exquiſite landſcape.

The ſpring which ſupplies thoſe pieces of water riſes juſt above, and is the head of the river Froome, which runs to Briſtol Back, ſo called from bec, Saxon, a river; where the key of that port was dug in the year 1247. Before that time, Briſtol key, or port, was near St. Mary-port-ſtreet, which was ſo called upon that account.

The Romans left veſtiges behind them of their preſence in this village; for Leland (Itin. v. 6.) relates, that ſeveral earthen pots (I ſuppoſe what we now call urns) very finely flouriſhed in the Roman times, were dug out of the ground in Dodington field, in one of which were Roman coins; and further, that there was a glaſs containing bones, found in a ſepulchre in the highway by the church; but omits to ſay when theſe things were diſcovered.

The Orchis Apifera, or Bee Orchis, with other ſpecies of that plant, is found growing in this pariſh. And the Circæa, or Inchanter's Night-ſhade, grows plentifully here.

This pariſh is within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Berchelai holds Dodintone in 'Hedredeſtan hundred. There are three hides, 'and two parts of half a hide. Aluuin held it in 'the time of king Edward. In demean is one 'plow-tillage, and ſeven villeins, and four bordars 'with four plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, 'and ten acres of meadow. It is worth and was 'worth 3*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

'The biſhop of St. Laud in Conſtance holds 'Dodintone in Edredeſtan hundred, and Roger 'holds it of him. Ulnod held it in the time of 'king Edward. There is one hide and a half, and 'the third part of half a hide. In demean is one 'plow-tillage, and four villeins, and one bordar 'with one plow-tillage. There are three ſervi. 'It is worth and was worth 30*s.*' D. B. p. 71.

Thus it appears that in the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, Dodington was held by two different proprietors, who were both diſpoſſeſſed of their eſtates ſoon after the conqueſt. Part of it was given to Roger de Berkeley, who was alſo tenant of the other part under the biſhop. But that family ſoon became poſſeſſed of the whole in their own right, which they held of the honour of Glouceſter, as appears by the records of 47 H. 3. 21 E. 3. and 4 H. 4. It was held by William de Berkeley 5 E. 3. by John Berkeley of Durſley 19 & 22 E. 3. by ſir Nicholas Berkeley, his ſon, together with one meſſuage and two yard-lands in the ſame place, 6 R. 2.

Maud, widow of Robert de Cantelupe, and daughter and ſurviving heir of ſir John de Berkeley, was ſeized of this manor 4 H. 4. as was Margaret the widow of ſir John Blacket 8 H. 5. Richard Chedder had married the daughter and heireſs of Robert de Cantelupe, by whom he had a daughter and heireſs married to Thomas Wekys, who in her right was ſeized of Dodington 13 E. 4. John Wekys, ſon of Thomas, married Maud, daughter of Walter Langley of Siddington Langley, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Edward, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Norton. Nicholas Wekys, ſon of Edward, married Elizabeth daughter of ſir Robert Pointz, and died ſeized of Dodington 5 Mar. John Wekys, ſon of Nicholas, married a daughter of ſir Thomas Danvers, of Dancy in Wiltſhire, and dying before his father, livery of the manor of Dodington was granted to Robert Wekys, ſon of John, 5 Mar. He built the large houſe at Dodington, and afterwards ſold the eſtate to Giles Codrington.

Giles Codrington was deſcended from Robert Codrington of Didmarton. Thomas Codrington, a younger ſon of Robert, married Elizabeth daughter of ſir Robert Pointz, by whom he had Ambroſe Codrington, who married Mary, daughter and heireſs of Lawrence Teſt, and died 6 H. 6. Francis Codrington, ſon and heir of Ambroſe, married Margaret, daughter and heir of —— Stripman. Giles Codrington, ſon of Francis, was the purchaſer of Dodington, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Arthur Porter. His ſon Richard Codrington married Joyce, daughter of John Burlace; and Samuel Codrington, ſon of Richard, married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Stephens of Sodbury. Thomas Codrington, ſon of Samuel, married Heſter, daughter of —— Plummer, and dying in 1675, was ſucceeded by Samuel Codrington his ſon and heir, who ſold the manor of Dodington to his kinſman Chriſtopher Codrington, ſon of Chriſtopher, who gained a large eſtate in the Weſt-Indies. He died governor of the Leeward Iſlands, and diſpoſed of large ſums of money in charity. By his will, dated Feb. 22, 1702, he gave 10,000*l.* to All-Souls College in Oxford, of which he was a fellow; 6000*l.* part thereof, was to build a library, the remainder for books, and he gave his own valuable library to furniſh it. He alſo ſettled a large revenue for propagating the Chriſtian knowledge in foreign parts.

A ſmall

A ſmall manor, with the rectory of Dodington, belonged to the abbey of Keynſham in Somerſetſhire, and after its diſſolution, was granted to ſir Richard Long 30 H. 8.

Other lands in Dodington belonged to the priory of Black Canons at Bradenſtoke in Wiltſhire, and were granted to John Wiley and John Scudamore 37 H. 8.

Amicia la Walſh was ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Dodington and Oldbury 18 E. 2. Anthony Walſh died ſeized of lands in Dodington 4 Eliz. leaving Nicholas Walſh of Olveſton his brother and heir.

John Stanſhaw, eſq; was ſeized of lands in Dodington 12 E. 4. and John and Humphry, his ſons, levied a fine of them 12 H. 7.

John Cotherington and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Dodington 49 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 100*l.* a year. Sir William Codrington is patron; Mr. Bliſs the preſent incumbent. The abbat of Glouceſter was patron in the year 1500.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to the virgin Mary, with a low tower at the weſt end; and here is a vault under the chancel, which is the burying-place of the Codrington family.

DORSINGTON

LIES in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſeven miles diſtant north-eaſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, four weſt from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickſhire, and thirty-one north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns derives the name from Dorſum, Latin for the back; this place being ſituated, ſays he, on the back or ridge of an hill. But ſir Robert's etymology is not founded on fact, for Dorſington lies in a flat vale country, at a conſiderable diſtance from any hill.

Great part of the pariſh is common field. The roads are very bad, and as ſtone is ſcarce, the few houſes in this village are either brick or wattled.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Belmont holds Dorſintune in Ceolfled 'hundred, and Robert holds it of him. There 'are ten hides. Saxi held it. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and eight villeins with five plow-'tillages, and ſix ſervi. It was worth 8*l.* It is 'now worth 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

From Roger de Belmont this eſtate deſcended through the ſeveral generations of the earls of Warwick, preciſely as it is related of the manor of Chedworth, 'till it came to Thomas de Beauchamp, who died ſeized of Dorſington 2 H. 4.

But the Draytons held this manor of the earls of Warwick; for Baldwin de Drayton and Alice his wife levied a fine of Dorſington, and ſettled it on their ſon John de Drayton, 18 R 2. And William Drayton, eſq; died ſeized of the manor of Great Dorſington 5 E. 4. as did Richard Drayton 19 E. 4.

William Watſon had livery of this manor 15 Eliz. from whom it paſſed afterwards to George Shirley, eſq; who was lord of it in the year 1608.

Thomas Rawlins, ſerjeant at law, was afterwards lord of this manor, who was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas; and Thomas Rawlins, eſq; a deſcendant from them, is the preſent lord of the manor of Dorſington, which comprehends the whole pariſh, except Braggington-farm.

Alice the widow of Thomas Paynel died ſeized of nine meſſuages, and two plow-tillages in Little Dorſington 16 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 105*l.* a year. Thomas Rawlins, eſq; is patron; Mr. Martyn the preſent incumbent.

Three yard-lands belong to the glebe, with nine cow-paſtures, 60 ſheep-paſtures, ſix horſe-paſtures, and paſture for a colt in the commons.

The church was rebuilt with brick in the year 1758, having been burnt down with ſome part of the village.

The moſt antient is the effigy of a man engraven on braſs, which has been miſtaken for an abbat of Hayles. The figure is not repreſented in the dreſs of an eccleſiaſtick, but in a long robe ſemée with mullets and fleurs-de-lis, which denote him to be of the family of Rogers.

DOWN-AMNEY

LIES in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, two miles north from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, ſix ſouth-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, and twenty-two ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſo called, becauſe it lies down the river which runs from the other Amneys, and empties itſelf into the Thames at Eiſey. It is a flat country, and very ſubject to floods from thoſe rivers. The ſoil is very rich, with leſs paſture than arable land.

It

It is obſervable, that part of the large manor houſe lies in Wiltſhire, part in Glouceſterſhire, and that a line drawn acroſs the kitchen divides the counties. The church exhibits what is further remarkable in this little pariſh, wherefore I paſs to the particulars

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Ednod held Omenel in Gerſdon hundred in 'the time of king Edward. There were fifteen 'hides taxed, of which king Edward remitted the 'tax of five hides, as the county ſays, and after-'wards Ednod paid for ten hides. There are in 'this manor four plow-tillages in demean, and a 'prieſt, and nineteen villeins, and three bordars, 'with ten plow-tillages. There are twelve ſervi. 'This manor belonged to the biſhop of Baieux, 'and was worth 20*l*. It now pays a farm rent 'of 26*l*. to the king.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

This record ſtands under the title Terra Regis.

'Radulf [de Todeni] holds Omenie and Cernei 'in Gerſdones hundred, and Roger holds them of 'him. There are four hides. Four thanes held 'them for four manors, and they could go where 'they pleaſed. In demean are ten plow-tillages, 'and one villein, and one bordar. There are 'twenty-one ſervi, and a mill of 5*s*. rent, and 'thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 10*l*. 'now 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

As there are four pariſhes in the ſame hundred of the name of Amney, it is very difficult to apply the accounts from Domeſday-book to the reſpective pariſhes, becauſe the manors are in nowiſe diſtinguiſhed in that record. And, ſeeing no reaſon to the contrary, I have followed ſir Robert Atkyns in placing the above abſtracts to the pariſh of Down-Amney. If the eſtate in Amney, mentioned in the ſecond abſtract, belong to this pariſh, it is probably that which the ſubſequent records mention by the name of Wike, and belonged afterwards to the abbey of Cirenceſter. The firſt eſtate was ſeized by the Conqueror, and was granted by king Henry the Second, to Alice, daughter of William de Caſſey; but Edmond Crouchback, earl of Lancaſter, was afterwards ſeized of it, and 55 H. 3. granted the manor of Down-Amney to Nicholas de Valers, (afterwards written Vilers, or Villers) probably the ſame perſon with ſir Nicholas de Villers, who in 1268 was in the holy war, and relinquiſhing his paternal coat of arms, viz. Sable, three cinquefoils argent; aſſumed The croſs of St. George, charged with five eſcallop ſhells, being the antient badge of the croiſes. The ſaid Nicholas proved his right to view of frankpledge within the manor of Down-Amney 15 E. 1.

William Cuſons held one meſſuage and one plow-tillage called Wike in Down-Amney 7 E. 3. Sir William de Cuſons died ſeized of the manor of Down-Amney, and of the lands in Wike 19 E. 3. John de Handelo died ſeized of the manor of Wike 20 E. 3. as did Edward de Handelo 32 E. 3. Peter de Cuſons and Margaret his wife levied a fine of the manor of Down-Amney 35 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Hungerford (who was the firſt ſtanding ſpeaker of the houſe of commons, 51 E. 3.) purchaſed a charter of free warren in Down-Amney 8 R. 2. He married Joan, daughter and coheir of ſir Edmond Huſſey, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir ſir Walter Hungerford, lord high treaſurer of England, and baron Hungerford. He married Catherine, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas Peverel, and died 27 H. 6. leaving two ſons, Robert and Edmond, of whom the latter married Margaret, daughter and heir of Edward Burnel, and died ſeized of this manor, and of Wike near Hampton-Meyſey, 2 R. 3. Sir John Hungerford his ſon and heir died ſeized of Down-Amney 16 H. 8. as did ſir Anthony Hungerford, ſon of ſir John, 1 Eliz. He was ſucceeded in this manor by John Hungerford, his ſon, whoſe ſon ſir John Hungerford married Mary, the daughter of ſir Richard Berkeley, and died 10 Car. Sir Anthony Hungerford, his ſon and heir, left Bridget his only ſurviving daughter and heireſs, who being married to Edmond Dunch, eſq; carried this manor into that name and family.

Hungerford Dunch ſucceeded his father Edmond, and was ſucceeded in this manor by his ſon Edmond Dunch, who married the daughter of colonel Godfrey, and was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It paſſed afterwards by purchaſe to James Craggs, eſq; ſecretary of ſtate, whoſe two ſurviving daughters and coheireſſes were married, the one to lord Clare, the other to Mr. Elliot, who are the preſent lords of this manor.

William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Down-Amney 23 H. 6. as did William Lewellyn and Joan his wife 7 E. 4. A ground called Le Wike, and two other meſſuages, belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and were granted to ſir Anthony Hungerford 32 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, and ſince the augmentation, by the gifts of Dr. Godolphin and Mr. Wells, which procured the queen's bounty, it is worth about 60*l*. a year.

King Edward the Firſt gave the church of Down-Amney to the knights templers. The patronage and impropriation belonged afterwards to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and were granted to Chriſt-church college, Oxford, 38 H. 8. where they remain. Mr. Smith is the preſent incumbent. The manor pays 25*l*. to the vicar, and every yard-land 5*s*.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is built in the form of a croſs, with a handſome ſpire, and five bells, at the weſt end.

Monuments

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On the north ſide of the chancel, under an arch in the wall, is a fine marble tomb in the form of a coffin, with a croſs engraven on it, the top of which is incircled with a wreath of olive. It has no inſcription, but it is ſuppoſed to be for one of the antient patrons of the church.

In the ſouth croſs aile, are two very antient monuments under an arch in the wall. One is the figure of a woman in freeſtone, lying along, with her hands in a ſupplicating poſture. This is very much defaced and broken. The other is that of a man in black marble, well executed, and in good preſervation, lying along in compleat armour; his legs are croſſed, with his right hand on the hilt of his ſword, as if about to draw it, and on the left arm a large ſhield, bearing Five eſcallops on a croſs of St. George. Theſe are the arms of Villers, and without doubt, the figure was intended to repreſent Nicholas de Villers, who had been in the holy war, and was lord of this manor in the reign of king Edward the Firſt, as before mentioned.

There is a noble monument of marble againſt the wall of the north croſs aile, with a pediment ſupported by two Ionic pillars. Under the pediment are the figures of two knights in armour, kneeling and facing each other, with books upon a deſk before them. Under the figures are two tables of black marble, on which are the following inſcriptions: On the dexter table,

At the beginning of this century there were 36 houſes in this pariſh, and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; but the inhabitants are now increaſed to about 248.

DOWN-HATHERLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-Barton, ſix miles diſtant ſouth from Tewkeſbury, ſix weſtward from Cheltenham, and four north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is a ſmall pariſh in the vale, conſiſting chiefly of rich paſture ground. A ſmall brook from Badgworth runs through it, and falls into the Severn near Sandhurſt. The roads are ſo exceedingly deep and miry in the winter, as to deter the curious traveller from viſiting it, and indeed there is nothing worthy his notice.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the general ſurvey, it was found that Edmar, a thane, had held three manors in Dudeſtan hundred, of which Athelai was one, and that he could give or ſell his land to whomſoever he pleaſed. But Domeſday-book mentions that earl Harold took away thoſe lands, with ſome others, after the death of king Edward; and accordingly they ſtand in record under the title Terra Regis, with other lands which the Conqueror ſeized for his own property, as formerly belonging to Harold. See Domeſday-book, p. 67.

It is uncertain how long this manor continued in the crown; but Robert Muſgroſs died ſeized of Down-Hatherley 38 H. 3. as did his ſon John 3 E. 1. and Roger, ſon of Roger de Burghull, held it 31 E. 1.

It afterwards paſſed to the Willingtons, for John de Willington died ſeized of this manor 4 E. 2. and Ralph his ſon, and others, held it by one knight's fee, of the manor of Brimpsfield 1 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of it 12 R. 2. and ſir Thomas Brook, their ſon, died ſeized thereof 5 H. 5. as did the widow of the laſt ſir Thomas 15 H. 6.

Fulk Grevil, ſecond ſon of ſir Edward Grevil, married Elizabeth, the ſurviving grandaughter and heir of Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, whereby the manor of Down-Hatherley came to the Grevils. This Elizabeth had two ſiſters, coheireſſes. Anne died unmarried; Blanch was married to ſir Francis Daintry, who, in her right, was ſeized of a third part of this manor; and by the death of Anne, had alſo livery of the moiety of her third part; but Blanch alſo dying without iſſue, the intire manor came to Elizabeth the wife of Fulk Grevil, who ſurviving his wife, died ſeized thereof 1 Eliz. and Fulk his ſon had livery 4 Eliz.

From the Grevils it paſſed to the Norwoods. Livery of the manor was granted to Nicholas Norwood, 14 Eliz. and Richard Norwood was lord of it in 1608. Mr. Gwinnet was proprietor of it about the beginning of this century; but Mrs. Cheſter is the preſent lady of the manor.

The records of the following dates ſhew, that Robert de Sauvage held lands in Down-Hatherley, 44 H. 3. as did John Attyate 41 E. 3. Fifty-five acres in Down-Hatherley were held by ſir John Berkeley 6 H. 6. and by ſir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone 38 & 39 H. 6. and 19 E. 4.

Mr. Gibbs has a handſome houſe, and a good eſtate in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is a vicarage endowed, worth about 100 l. a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Barry is the preſent incumbent. It belonged to St. Oſwald's in Glouceſter 33 E. 1. and the priory of Uſk hath preſented to it; and ſo did the abbey of Glouceſter in the year 1500.

The church is ſmall, with a ſtrong embattled tower at the weſt end. It is dedicated to Corpus Chriſti. The inſcription upon a tomb in the church-yard for Henry Aiſgill, vicar of this church, chancellor of St. David's, and a prebendary of Glouceſter, is inſerted p. 169.

DRIFFIELD

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, four miles ſouth-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, three north-weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and twenty-one ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The pariſh is bounded by Latton in Wiltſhire, and by the turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Cricklade on the ſouth and weſt. It is a ſtrong ſoil, and requires judicious management; for in the winter, an infinite number of ſmall ſprings break out, and ſpreading over the ſurface of the ground, infallibly deſtroy the crops of corn, if not carried off by proper drains.

The name was probably taken from two Saxon words, ðpoꝛ, dirty, and ꝑelð, an open country; for a great part of this pariſh lies low and ſpringy. The river from the upper Amneys runs thro' it to Down-Amney, by means of which the farmers water their meadow grounds. Something of this practice has been mentioned under South Cerney, but without ſufficiently deſcribing it. I will therefore take this opportunity of making a few ſhort obſervations on that head.

A level is firſt taken from the higheſt part of the river, to ſee if the water may be carried over the higheſt ground in the meadow, allowing a fall of three or four inches for current in about 300 yards. A ſhallow trench, about four or five feet wide, (according to the ſize of the meadow, and quantity of water required) is then cut from the upper part of the river through the higheſt ground, taking care to preſerve a current, and firſt paring off the turf to lay uppermoſt on each ſide of the trench. This is called the grand carry. From the ſides of which, ſmaller cuts muſt be made, if required, with breaches in their banks, to let the water into little trenches (which muſt be carried up to thoſe breaches) made by turning up the turf on one ſide, like the furrow of a plow; and in the ſides of each of theſe ſmall cuts, there muſt be a ſufficient number of broken places to let out the water, ſo that by this management it may may be evenly diſtributed, and continually running over every part of the meadow. Laſtly, from the loweſt part there muſt be a cut or drain, to convey the water into the loweſt courſe of the river, ſo that the meadow may be perfectly drained at pleaſure, and no water left to ſtagnate. A bay muſt be erected acroſs the river, to turn a ſufficient quantity of water into the grand carry, and ſometimes there may be occaſion for bays in the large carries, to diſtribute the water properly into the ſmaller ones. In this buſineſs there are three principal objects, 1. That the water be carried over every part of the meadow if poſſible. 2. That it be kept every where briſkly running, but ſo as not to cover the tops of the graſs, if it can be avoided; becauſe ſtraining thro' the graſs, it depoſits the matter which makes the manure. 3. That the drains be ſo contrived as to clear the loweſt places from water.

This operation is generally performed at the beginning of the winter, and the water kept running over the meadows 'till about the beginning of March, when it is drawn off, and the ſmaller carries are levelled by turning the ſod into the places whence it was originally taken. The running water, during the winter, keeps the froſt from nipping the blade, and vegetation is ſo much the ſtronger and earlier in the ſpring, that it is uſual to feed off the firſt crop, and afterwards give the ground a watering for two or three days, about the beginning of May, and then hayne it for cutting.

If this ſhort account of the method of drowning meadows be not ſufficiently explicit to be underſtood by ſuch as are not acquainted with it, for whoſe uſe it is intended, it will be worth their time and expence to make a journey of five hundred miles to get further information.

The abbat of Cirenceſter had a country-houſe in this pariſh, on the ſcite of which ſtands the preſent manor houſe, near the church, the ſeat of lord Coleraine.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Reinbald the prieſt holds Drifelle. Elaf held it of earl Tofti[b]. There are ſeven hides. There are fifteen ſervi, and a mill of 5*s.* rent, and twenty acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

Reinbald, or Rumbald, granted this manor, and the advowſon of the church, to the college of Cirenceſter, of which he was dean; and they continued in the abbey of that place from its firſt foundation 'till its diſſolution. The manor was then granted to Humphry Brown and George Brown, in exchange for lands in Waltham in Eſſex, 37 H. 8. Sir Humphry Brown died ſeized thereof 4 Eliz. and left four coheireſſes. Roger Townſend, who married the eldeſt, had livery of the fourth part of the manor, in right of his wife, 5 Eliz. One of the coheireſſes dying ſoon after, livery of the third part of the manor was granted to Mary Brown, coheireſs of ſir Humphry, 9 Eliz. and livery of another third part was granted to Chriſtiana Brown, coheireſs of ſir Humphry, 14 Eliz.

Thomas Wilford, eſq; was lord of the manor in 1608. It was afterwards purchaſed by John Hanger, a Turkey merchant. George Hanger, eſq; deſcended from the ſaid John, had two ſons, George and John. George, the eldeſt ſon, was knighted by king William for his ſteady attachment to the religion and laws of his country. He married Anne, daughter and coheir of ſir John Beale, of Farmingham in the county of Kent, baronet; by whom he had four ſons, George, John, Gabriel, and William; and four daughters, Anne, Delicia, Jane, and Mary. Gabriel ſurviving his elder brothers, ſucceeded to the paternal eſtate, and was created baron Coleraine, of Coleraine in the county of Londonderry, in the year 1761. His lordſhip married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Bond, of Cowbury in the county of Hereford, eſq; by whom he had iſſue three ſons, John, William, and George; and one daughter, Anne. His lordſhip died in the year 1773, and is ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his eldeſt ſon John lord Coleraine, the preſent lord of this manor, and proprietor of all the lands in the pariſh. His lordſhip's arms are, Ermine, a griffin rampant ſegreant, parted per feſs topaz and ſapphire. SUPPORTERS. Two griffins ſegreant. MOTTO. ARTES HONORABIT.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, endowed with all the tithes, and worth about 90*l.* a year. Lord Coleraine and Thomas Smith, eſq; are patrons, and preſent alternately; Thomas Bray, D.D. is the preſent incumbent.

Twelve acres incloſed, and twenty-four acres in the common-fields belong to the glebe.

The late lord Coleraine took down the old church, and rebuilt it. The preſent church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very neat building, well pewed, with a handſome altar-piece, and a ſmall tower at the weſt end, in which are three bells.

[b] This Tofti, or Toſti, was earl of Northumberland, and brother to king Harold. He is repreſented by the archdeacon of Huntingdon as one of the moſt inhuman wretches that ever exiſted.' Taking a jealous antipathy to his brother Harold for being ſo well in king Edward's favour, he haſted to Hereford, where his brother had made vaſt preparations to entertain the king, and murdering many of the ſervants, put a leg, an arm, or head, into each of the veſſels of liquor deſigned for the entertainment, ſending the king word, That he had made ample proviſion of pickled meats, but his majeſty might bring other ſorts with him. For this horrid villainy he was baniſhed. But his implacable ſpirit ſought every method of revenge againſt his brother: At length, when Harold came to the crown, by the death of king Edward, Tofti engaged the king of Norway to invade England in conjunction with him. And having united their fleets, they ſailed up the Humber, and ſhortly after ranſacked York. But Harold meeting them with an army at Stanford-bridge, gave them battle (wherefore it was afterwards called Battle-bridge) and obtained the victory; in which fight Tofti and the Norwegian were both killed.

At the beginning of this century there were 25 houſes in this pariſh, and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Atkyns. Here are now only 21 houſes, but the inhabitants are increaſed to 137.

DUMBLETON.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſix miles diſtant ſouthward from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, four north from Winchcombe, and eighteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The brook Iſbourn runs through it from Winchcombe, in its courſe to the Avon.

It is ſituated in the vale, on the north-eaſt ſide of a fertile little hill, to which this pariſh gives name, though the greater part of the hill lies in the pariſhes of Beckford and Waſhbourn. On the ſide of it riſes a little ſpring of medicinal water, whoſe properties have been found to be very much like the waters of Aſtrop-wells.

No gentleman's family is reſident at Dumbleton, and part of the manſion houſe, the ſeat of the late ſir Robert Cocks, has lately been taken down, to reduce it to a farm houſe.

Many gentlemen's ſeats in this county are totally deſerted, and falling to ruin; and too many others, in compliance with the taſte of the preſent age, are left by the owners for the greater part of the year, to partake more largely of the pleaſures of the metropolis, and other places of public entertainment. This cuſtom is fraught with many great evils; firſt to the poor inhabitants, whoſe pinching neceſſities were formerly relieved by a prudent hoſpitality, and whoſe morals might improve from the good example of their betters reſiding among them. But gentlemen themſelves pay dearly for their diverſions. How many ſquander what better œconomy would lay up for their children! How many ſpend their fortunes before they come to the poſſeſſion of them! To this cuſtom we owe that luxury and extravagance which pervade all ranks and degrees of people; that cacoethes ludendi which has ſpread itſelf over the land; that general depravity of morals which bids defiance to our laws, and endangers the ſtate. This obſervation aroſe from reading an inſcription in the pariſh church here, where hoſpitality and reſidence in the country are mentioned with commendation. And tho' the remark is not in the leaſt applicable to Dumbleton, the manor-houſe becoming void by the death of the whole family; yet it ſtands under this head with ſome propriety, that is, to avoid particular application.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

King Athelſtan, in the year 931, gave Swinford, and Sanford, and Dumelton, in the county of Glouceſter, to the abbey of Abingdon, when Cinath was abbat. Stevens's Supp. to the Monaſt. v. 1. p. 507. But it appears that there was a diſpute ſoon afterwards, about the right to this manor; for Wulfric Spot, an earl of Mercia, gave it to Elfric, archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the year 1004, from which ſee it had been withheld, as alledged, by the church of Abingdon; but that church held it at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears by the record.

'The church of St. Mary of Abendune holds 'Dubentone in Greteſtan hundred. There are 'ſeven hides and a half. In demean are four 'plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and eight 'bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There are ſix 'ſervi, and a mill of 6s. rent. In the time of 'king Edward it was worth 12*l.* now 9*l.* This 'manor paid tax in the time of king Edward.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

But there was then another eſtate in this pariſh of ſmaller value, of which the following are particulars:

'William Goizenboded holds one hide in Dun-'bentune in Greteſtan hundred. Sauuin held it 'in the time of king Edward, and could go 'where he would. It was worth 20s. now 12s.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

The abbey of Abingdon held this manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved; and the abbat proved his right to free warren and other privileges 15 E. 1.

The manor and advowſon of Dumbleton, after the diſſolution of abbeys, were granted to Thomas lord Audley, and to ſir Thomas Pope, in exchange for the manor of Layer-Marney in Eſſex, 34 H. 8. and the manor was confirmed to ſir Thomas Pope 36 H. 8.

Edmond Hutchins, eſq; was afterwards lord of this manor. He married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Cocks of Cleeve, who was a younger branch of a family of that name of Cocks-Hall in Kent, and lived in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. This Edmond Hutchins, by his will, gave his eſtate to Dorothy his wife, whereby it came into her family. She was afterwards married to ſir Charles Percye; but leaving no iſſue by him, Charles Cocks, her brother, ſucceeded to this eſtate, and ſir Richard Cocks, baronet, ſecond ſon of Richard Cocks, of Caſtle-ditch in Herefordſhire, eſq; and grandſon of Thomas Cocks of of Cleeve, ſucceeded his relation, Charles Cocks, in the manor of Dumbleton. He married Suſanna, daughter of Ambroſe Elton, of the Haſle in Herefordſhire, eſq; and was created a baronet in 1666. Richard Cocks, eſq; eldeſt ſon of ſir Richard, married Mary, daughter of ſir Robert Cook of Highnam, and died before his father.

Sir Richard Cocks, ſon and heir of Richard, married Frances, daughter of Richard Nevell, of Bickingbeer in Berkſhire, eſq; and was elected knight of the ſhire in three ſucceſſive parliaments in the reign of king William the Third. He married ſecondly Mary, daughter of William Bethell, of Swindon in Yorkſhire, eſq; but died without iſſue by either wife. He was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his brother Robert Cocks, D.D. who married Mrs. Anne Fulks, of Oxford, by whom he had ſeveral ſons and daughters; and dying in the year 1735-6, was ſucceeded by his fourth ſon Robert. Sir Robert Cocks married Elizabeth, daughter of James Cholmeley, of Eaſton in the county of Lincoln, eſq; by whom he had iſſue ſeveral ſons and daughters. He died by a fall from his horſe, in the year 1765, and leaving no male iſſue, the title is extinct, and the eſtate devolved to Charles Cocks, eſq; of Caſtle-ditch in Herefordſhire, the preſent proprietor.

John Daſton was ſeized of lands in Dumbleton 6 E. 4. probably the ſame which William Goizenboded held at the general ſurvey, and which afterwards, in reſpect to the large eſtate held by the abbey, was called Littleton. Anthony Daſton levied a fine of lands in Dumbleton 1 E. 6. Another Anthony Daſton died ſeized of lands in Dumbleton, called Littleton's-fields, 12 C. 1. and left Richard his ſon twelve years old.

A meadow in Dumbleton, called Dockham, belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and was granted to Clement Throckmorton, and Alexander Avening, 37 H. 8. And a portion of tithes in Dumbleton belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, and was granted to ſir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 200*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron; the reverend John-Baghot De-la-Bere is the preſent incumbent.

Part of the pariſh is an impropriation, belonging to Trinity college in Oxford, worth 10*l.* a year, for which the rector pays 10*s.* a year. The pariſh has a claim to a fellowſhip in that college.

Three little cloſes, and about ſeventy acres of arable, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It has a aile on the ſouth ſide, and a croſs aile on the north ſide, which formerly belonged to the Daſtons, where ſeveral of them lie buried. It has a tower at the weſt end, with ſix bells.

The lord of the manor repairs the church. Jeſus College, Oxford, repairs the north aile.

In Memory of S^r. She was the 5th Daughter of Ambroſe Elton, of the Haſle in the County of Hereford, Eſq; and of Ann his Wife, Daughter of S^r. Edward Aſton, of Tixall in the County of Stafford. He, in his younger Days, accompanied his Unkle Chriſtopher Cocks, (Who was honoured by King Iames the Firſt with a public Character) into Muſcovy, and after his return, he retired into the Country, and was concerned with no Publick matters more then the offices of Juſtice of the Peace and Highſheriffe. She was a Lady diſtinguiſhed by very great ornaments of Mind and Body, the viſible remains of which continued with her to her laſt hour. They kept good Hoſpitality, loved their Tenants and Neighbours, and on all occaſions did them all the ſervice they could. He liv'd peaceably with them, and kept them in peace one with another. She healed their diſeaſes, and cured their ſores. He was a great ſufferer for his love to the Royal Family, and for his zeale for the Laws, and for the eſtabliſhed Religion of his Country. They were indulgent Parents, good to their Servants, and charitable to the Poor. They gave their Children good fortunes and liberal education. They had three Sons, Richard, Charles, and Iohn: and two Daughters, Iudith and Elizabeth. But Iohn the younger, and Elizabeth the relict of S^r. Iohn Fuſt, of Hill in this County, Bar: only ſurvived them. She, out of a juſt remembrance and gratitude to ſo good Parents, and believeing the memory of them would be grateful to their Neighbours, ordered her brother Iohn Cocks to erect this Monument for them. He died September 16, A.D. 1684, aged 82. She died March 10^th A. D. 1689, aged 84. ——Arms, Baron and femme, 1. On a plain marble table,

To the happy Memory of M^rs. Dorothy Cocks. She died the 29th Day of October, 1714, in the 58th Year of her Age, & lies inter'd inter'd in y^e Chancel, near the Communion Table. She was Eldeſt Child of Richard Cocks, Eſq^r. & of Mary his Wife, the youngeſt daughter of S^r. Robert Cooke, of Hynam, by his firſt Wife; her Father and her Mother both died when ſhe was about 14 years old. She was of a middle ſtature, endowed with great ornaments of Body, & with far greater of the mind. She was a woman of a very good and compaſſionate nature, of a great underſtanding, & made a very good uſe of it. She choſe rather to be a Mother to her younger Siſters, then to be engaged in another family; & by her care and good inſtructions ſhe helped to breed them up in piety & religion, and other neceſſary knowledge. Envy itſelf can't charge her with an unbecoming action or expreſſion in her whole life. She was a woman of great piety, patience, and humanity: She ſpent great part of her life in her devotions & prayers for herſelf, her friends, and country. She bore a tedious ſickneſs, and other misfortunes that attended her infirm body, with all chearfulnes & reſignation: ſhe made uſe of her time & fortune, not only to ſerve her friends and relations, but even ſtrangers, that were diſtreſſed: therefore S^r. Richard Cocks, her Eldeſt brother, out of a gratefull remembrance of theſe virtues, has choſe rather to ſet up this true and juſt Epitaph then a magnificent Monument, with an intention to make her family bluſh when they deviate from ſuch a preſident; and that they & others may imitate her Example in this world, & be happy w^th her in y^e next.

In the ſouth aile, on the table of a very neat monument of white marble:

Elizabeth, Wife of S^r. Robert Cocks, Bar^t. and Daughter of Iames Cholmeley, Eſq; of Eaſton in the County of Lincoln, with three of her Children, Charles, Ann, & Catherine, were carried ſucceſſively by the ſame fatal Sickneſs, a Fever and Sore throat, to the Grave, in a few Days. A moſt excellent and amiable Mother. The two youngeſt in the brighteſt dawn of Hope, the Eldeſt in the ſweeteſt bloom of Virtue, growing up like the faireſt Flowers, like the faireſt Flowers were cut down. This Place where they ſleep is marked out by the unfeigned grief of a Huſband, mixt with the Tears and unflattering Praiſe of Surviving Friends: Unhappy in being Survivors, unleſs they tread in the ſame blameleſs Steps: Happy, could they, by keeping her in Remembrance, reach the ſame ſhining Heights of Lovelineſs, Virtue, and Religion.

Benefactions.

Mrs. Dorothy Cocks, by her will, gave 40*s.* a year for teaching children to read. And Mr. Richard Cocks, by his will, in 1728, gave an eſtate in Tainton, worth 21 l. a year, part for putting a poor boy out apprentice, the remainder to be given to the poor of this pariſh not receiving alms.

DUNTESBOURN ABBATS

LIES five miles north-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, ten ſouthward from Cheltenham, and twelve ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. Part of it is in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, and the other part in that of Rapſgate.

This is ſometimes called Upper Dunteſbourn. It conſiſts moſtly of arable land, and lies on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the Irminſtreet, a Roman road, already deſcribed under Daglingworth, and other places.

A ſmall bourn, or brook, riſes in this pariſh, and joins the Churn at Cirenceſter. It is moſt likely that the manor was very antiently the property of one Dun, or Dunt, whoſe name, with the genitive or poſſeſſive ending, Dunte's, is very diſcernible in that of the pariſh. Abbats, the cognomen, was afterwards given it for a like reaſon, becauſe it was the property of the abbat of Glouceſter, and ſerved to diſtinguiſh it from the other Dunteſbourns.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The wife of Walter de Laci, by the licence 'of king William, gave the manor of Dunteſborne 'in Cireceſtre hundred, conſiſting of five hides, 'to ſaint Peter [the abbey of Glouceſter] for the '[good of the] ſoul of her huſband. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, with 'five plow-tillages. There are ſixteen ſervi, and 'a mill of 2*s.* rent. It is worth 4*l.*' D. B. p. 71.

'Anſfrid de Cormeille holds one hide in Tantel-'borne in Cireceſtre hundred. Elmer held it for 'a manor, and could go where he would. In 'demean is one plow-tillage, and one villein, and 'two bordars, and five ancillæ. It was worth '40*s.* and is now worth 20*s.*' D. B. p. 78.

In the year 1100, Gilbert de Eſkecot gave lands in Dunteſbourn to Glouceſter monaſtery, to pray for the ſoul of Walter de Laci.

Odo de Mara granted to Jordan, the ſon of Iſaac of Cirenceſter, lands in Dunteſbourn, 1 Joh.

Over Dunteſbourn was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

This manor was held by the abbey of Glouceſter till that houſe was diſſolved, and was granted afterwards to William Morgan and James Dolle 5 Mar. James Dolle died ſeized of it 42 Eliz. and left Anthony Dolle his ſon and heir 40 years old. Mr. Edward Dolle was lord of the manor in the year 1608. The earl of Radnor is the preſent lord of the manor. For his arms, ſee Pucklechurch.

Richard Murdac gave one hide in Dunteſbourn to the priory of Lanthony, which was confirmed 1 Joh. Lands in Bockham in Dunteſbourn were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35 H. 8. which formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter; and two meſſuages and lands in Dunteſburn, formerly belonging to the ſame priory, were granted to Richard Andrews and George Hiſley 36 H. 8.

HAM-

HAMLET. Dunteſbourn-Lyre is a hamlet in this pariſh, ſo called, becauſe it was the property of the abbey of Lyre, or de Lira, in Normandy. This hamlet lies in the hundred of Rapſgate.

'The church of St. Mary of Lire holds 'Tanteſborne in Reſpiget hundred. There is 'one hide and one yard-land. In demean is one 'plow-tillage, and two bordars. It is worth and 'was worth 20*s.* Roger de Laci gave this land 'to that church. Edmer held it in the time of 'king Edward.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

'Roger de Laci holds Tanteſborne in Reſ-'pigete hundred, and Giſlebert holds it of him. 'Keneuuard, a thane of king Edward, held it, and 'could go where he would. There are two hides. 'In demean is one plow-tillage, and two villeins, 'and two bordars with one plow-tillage and a 'half. There are two ſervi. It is and was worth '40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

'Ansfrid de Cormeille holds two yard-lands 'and a half in Danteſborne in Reſpigete hundred, 'and Bernard holds them of him. Elmer held 'them for a manor, and could go where he would. 'There is one bordar. It is worth and was 'worth 40*s.* Ansfrid had the above of Walter 'de Laci when he took his niece. D. B. p. 78.

'Chetel holds three yard-lands and a half in 'Danteſborne in Reſpiget hundred, and he held 'them in the time of king Edward. There is one 'plow-tillage, and two bordars, and two ſervi. 'It was worth 10*s.* and is now worth 15*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Nutebean-farm, in Dunteſbourn-Lyre, belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and was granted to William Sherington 34 H. 8. Thomas Pleydall was ſeized of the ſcite of the manor of Dunteſ-bourn-Lyre, and of a capital meſſuage called Nutbeame-farm, alias Nutbeane in Dunteſbourn-Lyre, of which he levied a fine 32 Eliz. to the uſe of John Pleydall and his heirs in fee taille.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth 90*l.* a year. The advowſon of the rectory of Over Dunteſbourn was granted to Eſme Stewart, lord Aubeny 8 Jac.

The advowſon of the rectory is in truſt for the uſe of the reverend Mr. Joſeph Chapman's children. Mr. Chapman himſelf is the preſent incumbent.

No lands in the pariſh are tithe free. By an agreement made between the biſhop of the dioceſe and the rector, in the year 1681, the latter is to pay 20*s.* a year to the poor on Palm-ſunday, in lieu of a calf, and other entertainment, formerly given to the pariſhioners on that day. And the poor of this pariſh are intitled to a fourth ſhare of the rent of Bull-bank cloſe, given by the will of Mr. Thomas Muggleton, to be diſtributed to them on Good-friday.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to St. Peter.

There were 42 houſes and about 180 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 12 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Atkyns. But it appears by the regiſter, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 55 baptiſms, and 30 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 43, burials 26; and the inhabitants are 176; almoſt 68 to 1 of the annual burials.

DUNTESBOURN ROUS.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, one mile lower on the Bourn, and nearer to Cirenceſter, than Dunteſbourn Abbats, wherefore it is ſometimes called Lower Dunteſbourn. And becauſe the knightly family of the Rouſes were antiently proprietors of it, their name was added for the cognomen, and ſometimes their title, as Dunteſbourn Militis, in contradiſtinction to Dunteſbourn Abbatis, the preceding pariſh, where the reſt is ſufficiently explained.

A ſmall brook parts this pariſh from Edgworth, and runs into the Froom river, which goes to Stroud. The lands are chiefly arable.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

'William de Ow holds Dunteſborne in Cire-'ceſtre hundred. Aleſtan held it in the time of 'king Edward. There are five hides and a half 'taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and ſix 'villeins, and four bordars with five plow-tillages 'and a half. There are ſeven ſervi, and a mill of '8*s.* Radulf holds this manor of William, and 'pays tax; but he witholds the tax of three hides. 'A foreigner [francigena] holds half a hide of 'this land, and has one plow-tillage there with 'his men. The whole in the time of king 'Edward was worth 10*l.* and is now worth 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

'Durand the ſheriff holds two hides in Dunteſ-'borne in Cireceſtre hundred, and Radulf holds 'them of him. Wluuard held them for a manor 'of king Edward. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and three villeins, and one bordar with 'one plow-tillage. There are four ſervi, and 'two acres of meadow. It is worth and was 'worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

Soon after the Norman conqueſt, this manor became the property of John Rufus. This is the ſame ſame name with le Rous and le Rus. They were ſo called from having red hair, as the Blonds or Blounts obtained their name from having white hair, and a fair complexion. Roger le Rous held one yard-land in Dunteſburn 22 E. 1. as did John le Rous in the reign of king Edward the Second, when he was attainted for rebellion; but his lands were reſtored 1 E. 3.

This manor afterwards paſſed into the family of Mull. Thomas Mull and William Mull were attainted 2 E. 4. and the manor granted by the crown to Thomas Herbert and to his heirs male 2 & 5 E. 4. which Thomas dying without male heirs, the manor was granted to ſir Richard Beauchamp 14 E. 4. It was afterwards purchaſed by Dr. Fox, biſhop of Wincheſter, in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and by him ſettled on Corpus Chriſti College in Oxford, which was founded by him; and it now belongs to that college.

HAMLET. Pinbury is a hamlet, lying part in this pariſh, and part in that of Edgworth. It is an antient manor, and has a park ſituated on high ground, with a camp in the midſt, whence it obtained the above name, which is compoſed of pen, the top, and beorg, a camp or fortification. There was a large manor-houſe in the park, where a branch of the Atkyns family reſided; but the park is converted to a coney-warren, the houſe gone to decay, and ſome of it taken down. There was alſo an antient chapel in this hamlet, with ſeveral houſes, of which the old foundations are ſtill to be ſeen. In Domeſday-book we read thus of the manor:

'The church of the nuns of the holy Trinity 'of Cadom holds Penneberie in Cireceſtre hundred 'of the king. There are three hides. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and 'one artificier [faber] with three plow-tillages. 'There are nine ſervi, and a mill of 40*d.* rent. 'It was worth and is now worth 4*l.*' D. B. p. 72.

The abbeſs of Caen proved her right to court leet and free warren in Pendebury, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

After the ſuppreſſion of foreign monaſteries, the manor was granted to the nuns of Sion in Middleſex; and after the general diſſolution of religious foundations, it was again granted, with Avening, Hampton, &c. to Andrew lord Windſor, in exchange for Stanway, &c. in Middleſex, 34 H. 8. who dying, his ſon had livery thereof 35 H. 8. Sir Henry Pool purchaſed it of lord Windſor. Sir Henry Pool, grandſon of that ſir Henry, ſold it to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton; and the children of Edward Atkyns, eſq; who are minors, are the preſent owners of Pinbury. The greater part of the park lies in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 100*l.* a year. Dr. Robert Morwent bought the advowſon, and gave it to Corpus Chriſti college in Oxford, in the year 1557, who are patrons; and Mr. Finden is the preſent incumbent. The rector pays 13*s.* 4*d.* yearly to the crown, which was a rent formerly paid to the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem.

The church is ſmall. There is a vault under the chancel belonging to the rector, with ſtairs into the church, ſuppoſed to have been uſed in confeſſion.

Two acres of land in each field are given towards the repair of the church.

DURSLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Berkeley, five miles eaſt from the town of that name, four north from Wotton-under-edge, and fifteen ſouthward from Glouceſter. The pariſh is not large, but the market-town within it merits particular conſideration.

The town of Durſley is ſituated under the north ſide of a ſteep hill, covered with a fine hanging beech wood. It is one of the five antient boroughs in Glouceſterſhire, and was returned ſo to be by the ſheriff of the county, in the ninth year of the reign of king Edward the Firſt; and in that reign the criminals of this place were tried and executed at Berkeley.

Under the antient conſtitution of the borough, there was a chief officer (the Præpoſitus) appointed over it, and there is now a bailiff elected annually at the manor court, out of the better rank of people in the borough, who is honoured by the attendance of the principal inhabitants, with accuſtomed ceremonies. This officer formerly collected the king's rents, and perhaps executed ſome proceſſes within the borough. He now examines into the ſufficiency of weights and meaſures, but his authority ſeems to extend no further; though we are told by topographers, that the borough is governed by a bailiff and four conſtables.

Here was an antient caſtle, and the ruins of its foundations are ſtill viſible in a garden not a quarter of a mile north-weſtward of the town. The fields adjoining are ſtill called the Caſtle-fields. The caſtle belonged to the antient family of the Berkeleys, and falling to decay, was taken down, and part of

of the materials uſed in building the manor-houſe at Dodington, by Robert Wekys, who was lord of both the manors of Durſley and Dodington 5 Mariæ. Our hiſtorians ſay very little about it, but Leland obſerves, that it had a good moat, or in his own words, a metely good dyche, round it; and that it was chiefly built of a towfe ſtone, full of pores and holes lyke a pumice.

There are no papers, that I can find, which give any further light into the antient ſtate of this place, wherefore I proceed to a ſhort account of its preſent condition. It is a little town, not much frequented by travellers, conſiſting of two narrow ſtreets, forming ſomething like the figure of the letter T. But beſide theſe two ſtreets, there is a large hamlet without the borough, containing more houſes than either of them. Leland calls the town a praty clothinge towne, ſo that if we reckon from his time, it has enjoyed the clothing trade between two and three hundred years, which hath inriched ſome individuals, and is the preſent ſupport of the place. The buſineſs of making cards for the clothiers has been long ſettled here, and employs a pretty many hands.

There is a handſome market-houſe, of free-ſtone, in the middle of the town, built about the year 1738, with the ſtatue of queen Anne in a niche at the eaſt end, and the arms of the lord of the manor in the front. But what confers great honour on the town, is the earls of Berkeley taking their title of viſcount from it; and the eldeſt ſon is ſtiled lord Durſley.

The weekly market is on Thurſday, and pretty well frequented; but this part of the country is chiefly ſupply'd with grain and flour from Cirenceſter, Glouceſter, and Tetbury; for the neighbourhood of Durſley, next the Severn, runs greatly on dairy, and produces the beſt ſort of Glouceſterſhire cheeſe. The fairs are on the 6th of May, and the 4th of December.

On the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the church-yard are many ſprings, which riſe perpendicularly out of the ground like boiling water, in ſo copious a manner, that they drive a fulling-mill at about a hundred yards diſtance below. At their riſe, they cover a fine, level, gravelly bottom, for the ſpace of about fifteen feet ſquare, with near two feet depth of water, wherefore the inhabitants call the place the Broad Well; but in old writings concerning property thereabout, the name is Ewelm. This is a Saxon word, [epylm] uſually tranſlated by Origo Fontis, the head of the ſpring. It is conjectured, that this remarkable water gave name to the town, for in the Britiſh language Dwr ſignifies water, and ley, lege, lega, are common terminations, denoting paſture ground. The ſ in the name was added to make the ſound more agreeable.

There is a curious foſſil ſubſtance found in great plenty in this pariſh, which Leland calls Towfe ſtone. It lies in one intire bed or ſtratum, and is ſo ſoft as to be cut out in pieces or blocks of any ſize or ſhape; but when it has been dried in the ſun and air, is extremely hard and durable. The walls of Berkeley-caſtle, and thoſe of the church of Durſley, are built in part with this ſtone, and tho' the caſtle walls have ſtood above ſix hundred years, the ſtone remains as ſound as ever.

One thing more, perhaps, recommends itſelf to our notice, on account of its antiquity. It is a place called the Hermitage, at the top of the hill near Nibley park, where an anchoret is ſaid to have ſpent his days. I fancy very few in this age will chuſe his ſituation, or practice the auſterities of thoſe rigorous devotees, who thought an extreme mortification of the body quicked the exerciſe of religion, and added fervor to devotion.

Mr. Phelps, Mr. Wallington, and Mr. Stiff have good houſes in the town. Mr. John Purnell has a good houſe and eſtate at King's-hill, on the weſt ſide of it; and another Mr. John Purnell has a beautiful houſe, on an elevated ſituation, at a place called the New Mills, on the eaſt ſide, where Mr. Tippets has alſo a good houſe.

Edward Fox, biſhop of Hereford in 1535, was a native of this place, and very active in promoting the divorce of king Henry the Eighth from queen Catherine.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, in the reign of William the Firſt, Derſilege (i.e. three hides in Derſilege) being a member of the honour of Berkeley, was given by the Conqueror to Roger de Berkeley, as appears more fully under Berkeley. Roger de Berkeley, founder of the monaſtery of Kingſwood, was certified, upon an aid for marrying the king's daughter, to hold one hide in Durſley, of the old feoffment, 12 H. 2. And upon levying ſcutage to carry on war againſt Scotland, it was certified that ſix knights fees and a half were held of the honour of Durſley 13 Joh. Henry de Berkeley proved his right to certain privileges in his manor of Durſley in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

John de Berkeley of Durſley and his wife levied a fine of the manor of Durſley 5 E. 3. and were in poſſeſſion thereof 22 E. 3. and John Atyate, of the Berkeley family, died ſeized of it 41 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley and Cecily his wife were ſeized thereof 2 R. 2. About this time the manor went out of the name of Berkeley, by the marriage of Maud, daughter and ſurviving heir of John de Berkeley, to Robert de Cantelupe, who ſurvived her huſband, and held the manor of Durſley 4 H. 4. Richard Chedder married the daughter and heireſs of Robert de Cantelupe, by whom he had a daughter and heireſs, married to Thomas Wekys, who, in right of his wife, died ſeized of the manor of Durſley 13 E. 4.

This manor continued ſeveral generations in the name and family of Wekys, for Nicholas Wekys died ſeized of it 5 Mar. and left Robert Wekys his grandſon and heir, (by his ſon Nicholas) who had livery thereof the ſame year, and ſold it to the Eſtcourt family 9 Eliz.

Sir Thomas Eſtcourt was lord of it in 1608, from whom it deſcended in a direct line to Walter Eſtcourt of Laſborough, eſq; who was ſucceeded by Thomas Eſtcourt of Shipton-Moigne, eſq. He dying unmarried, was alſo ſucceeded by his brother Edmond, of Burton-Hill, near Malmeſbury, in the county of Wilts, eſq; who dying without iſſue male, bequeathed his large eſtate to Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq; (ſon of the late Mr. Eſtcourt of Cam) the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Ermine, on a chief indented gules three eſtoiles Or.

But the deſcent of the manor ſeems to have been interrupted in the turbulent reigns of Henry the Sixth and Edward the Fourth; for the records ſhew that Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who had married Elizabeth, heireſs of the Berkeley family, held the manor 17 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone, died ſeized of Durſley and Woodmancot 38 H. 6. And Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury, daughter of the above Richard de Beauchamp, died ſeized of this manor 7 E. 4.

Richard Forſter, and John Moor and his wife, levied a fine of lands in Durſley to the uſe of John Walch 1 & 6 H. 7. George Dennis, late of Tetbury, and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of lands in Durſley and Woodmancot to William Auſtin jun. and others 17 H. 7.

TITHING. Woodmancot is a hamlet and tithing in this pariſh, eaſtward of, and adjoining to, the borough. The village lies under the ſide of a hill covered with wood, which gave name to the tithing. A tithing in the pariſh of North Nibley lies within the manor of Woodmancot.

Robert de Swineborn held the manor of Woodmancot near Durſley 19 E. 2. Sir John Berkeley was ſeized of the manor of Woodmancot, with the hamlets of Nibley, 6 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone died ſeized of it 38 H. 6. as did Maurice his ſon 14 E. 4. William Berkeley, ſon of the laſt Maurice, taking up arms againſt Richard the Third, was attainted, and his lands ſeized, and the manor of Woodmancot was granted to ſir Thomas Brugge, and his heirs male 1 R. 3. But king Henry the Seventh reſtored him to his eſtate. Sir Edward Berkeley, ſon of William, married Alice, daughter and heir of Robert Poyntz, who ſurviving him, held Woodmancot in jointure, and died ſeized thereof 1 H. 8. She was ſucceeded by her grandſon John Berkeley, whoſe father Thomas died before the ſaid Alice. Sir William Berkeley ſucceeded to John, and died ſeized of Woodmancot 5 E. 6. and his ſon John had livery thereof the following year. The manor came afterwards to Mr. John Arundel, but Mr. Phelps of Durſley is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Argent, a lion rampant ſable between ſix croſſes croſſlets fitchy gules.

Tilſdown is a place in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth 80*l.* a year. John Carpenter, biſhop of Worceſter, appropriated the rectory of Durſley to the archdeaconry of Glouceſter, in the year 1475; which rectory belonged to St. Peter's abbey, and was given in exchange for the archdeacon's houſe in Glouceſter, and has continued annexed to the archdeaconry ever ſince.

The church, which is dedicated to the holy Trinity, is large, with an aile on each ſide of the nave, and a handſome tower at the weſt end, with ſix bells and a ſet of chimes. The altar-piece is neatly wainſcotted, and railed in.

There was a chantry in the north aile, dedicated to the virgin Mary, whereof Richard Breic was the laſt incumbent, and retired with a penſion of 5*l.* a year. There was another chantry in the ſouth aile, dedicated to St. James, founded by one Tanner. And againſt the ſouth wall, under a canopy ſupported by pillars, is the effigy in ſtone of a naked perſon, lying along, ſuppoſed to be deſigned for Mr. Tanner, who probably built that aile.

The church-houſe, and a piece of land called the Torch-acre, and two tenements at the Broadwell, (the latter given by Mr. Hugh Smith) are for repairing the church. Mr. Spilman gave a rent charge of 4*l.* a year for ever, on an eſtate at Standiſh, for the poor. And ſir Thomas Eſtcourt, in in 1642, gave the profits of a moiety of tenements at Tetbury, now ſettled at 10*l.* a year, to the poor. Mr. Henry Stubs gave 10*s.* a year in books. Mr. Throgmorton Trotman, by his will in 1663, gave 15*l.* a year to be paid by the company of Haberdaſhers in London, for a weekly lecture on Thurſdays.—In 1703, John Arundel of Durſley gave the rent of an acre of land in Cam, for buying books, and teaching poor children to read. At the beginning of this century, there were 600 houſes and about 2500 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 42, burials 38. Atkyns. But ſir Robert's eſtimate was too high, for notwithſtanding there is reaſon to believe the inhabitants are not decreaſed ſince that time; they are now only about 2000.

DURHAM or DYRHAM.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, four miles weſt from Marſhfield, five ſouth from Chipping-Sodbury, eight northward from Bath, and thirty-one ſouthward from Glouceſter.

The village is ſecured from the cold eaſterly winds by an hill, and the high lands about Littleton and Cold Aſton, which bound the pariſh on that ſide. It is plentifully ſupply'd with water from ſprings which riſe at the foot of the hill, and forming a brook, empty themſelves into the Boyd. It is conjectured that from theſe ſprings the pariſh obtained the name of Durham, i. e. Dwr, Britiſh, water, and ham, a village; yet I am not ignorant that in ſome of the chronicles it occurs by the name of Deorham.

It is remarkable in antiquity for a bloody battle which was fought here between the Britons and Saxons, about the year 577. The latter, under Cuthwin and Ceaulin, vanquiſhed the Britons, and ſlew three of their princes, Commeaile, Condidan, and Fariemeiol; in conſequence whereof, the cities of Cirenceſter, Glouceſter, and Bath, with the country round them, ſurrendered to the conquerors. And upon Henton-hill is a large camp of a ſingle intrenchment, but imperfect on the ſouth-weſt ſide, incloſing near twenty acres of ground, which the Saxons are ſuppoſed to have occupied.

This village is diſtinguiſhed by the fine ſeat of William Blathwayt, eſq; built by his grandfather after a deſign of the ingenious Mr. Talmen, in 1698. There is a plan of this houſe, and an elevation, in Campbell's Vitruvius Britannicus. The principal ſtory is large and convenient, with a variety of very good apartments. The garden front extends one hundred and thirty feet. The firſt ſtory is intirely ruſticated, and the coins to the cornice. In the ſecond ſtory, the windows are dreſt with alternate pediments, over which are attic windows; and the front finiſhes with a handſome cornice and baluſtrade, adorned with trophies and vaſes of an excellent choice.

There is a park adjoining to the gardens; but the curious water-works, which were made at a great expence, are much neglected and going to decay. From this ſeat there are very agreeable proſpects weſtward, over the foreſt of Kingſwood, and the city of Briſtol.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'William the ſon of Widon holds Dirham in 'Grimboldeſtou hundred of the king. Aluric 'held it in the time of king Edward. There are 'ſeven hides taxed. In demean is one plow-'tillage, and thirteen villeins, and thirteen bordars 'with two plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi 'and ancillæ, and three mills of 15*s.* rent, and ſix 'acres of meadow. It was worth 12*l.* now '[only] 8*l.*

'The ſame William held three hides of this manor, 'with which Durand the ſheriff had endowed 'St. Mary of Perſhore, by the king's order; which '[hides] earl William had given to Turſtin the ſon 'of Rolf with this manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

This manor was ſoon after transferred to the barons of Newmarch, who were deſcended from Bernerd de Newmarch, (de Novo Mercatu,) who came in with the Conqueror. Henry de Newmarch, ſon of William, was ſeized hereof and left it to James his brother, who died 17 Joh. leaving Iſabel and Hawiſe his coheireſſes.

John Ruſſel of Berkſhire purchaſed the wardſhip of thoſe daughters, and married Iſabel the eldeſt eldeſt of them to his ſon Ralph Ruſſel, who, in right of his wife, was ſeized of Durham. Ralph Ruſſel, by deed, gave this manor in marriage with his daughter Maud, to Robert Walerand, who was governor of St. Briavel's-caſtle, and warden of the foreſt of Dean, and four times high ſheriff of this county in the reign of H. 3. He died 1 E. 1. and ſhe ſoon after, both without iſſue; whereby this manor went to William Ruſſel, her elder brother, who by his wife Jane, daughter of Robert Peverell, had iſſue Theobald Ruſſel, anceſtor by his ſecond wife to the preſent duke of Bedford. By his firſt wife, daughter and coheir of Ralph de Gorges, a baron in parliament temp. E. 3. he had three ſons, of whom Theobald the youngeſt aſſumed the name and arms of Gorges, viz. Lozengy Or and Gules, and is anceſtor of the Gorges of Wraxall. The above William Ruſſel was ſucceeded by his ſon William, who died ſeized of Dyrham 4 E. 2. Ralph Ruſſel was ſeized of this manor 30 E. 3. and ſir Maurice Ruſſel died ſeized of it 2 H. 4. Sir Maurice left two daughters Margaret and Iſabel, the firſt married to ſir Gilbert Dennys, knight; who, with ſir John Drayton and Iſabel his wife, the other daughter of ſir Maurice, (married before to ſir John St. Loe) were jointly ſeized of the manor of Dyrham 3 H 5. But ſir Maurice by a ſecond wife, had a ſon Thomas, whoſe only child was named Margery, and died without iſſue; this Thomas and Margery were ſeized of one yard-land called Barn-place, and of one meſſuage and one yard-land called Saleſbury's, in Dyrham, 10 H. 6. But the manor and other lands never came into the poſſeſſion of Thomas, having been ſettled in truſt by ſir Maurice, to pay the portions of his daughters.

Sir John Drayton ſold his moiety to ſir Gilbert Dennys, who died ſeized of the intire manor 10 H. 5. Maurice Dennys was ſon of ſir Gilbert; ſir Walter Dennys ſon of Maurice, and ſir William Dennys[c] ſon of ſir Walter. Sir Walter Dennys, ſon and heir of ſir William, was the next and laſt poſſeſſor of Dyrham of that family; for he, joining with his eldeſt ſon Richard, ſold the manor in the thirteenth year of queen Elizabeth, to George Wynter, eſq; brother to ſir William Wynter, of Lydney in the foreſt of Dean.

John

John Wynter, ſon of George, had livery of the manor 23 Eliz. He accompanied ſir Francis Drake in his famous voyage round the world, as his vice-admiral, and married the daughter of ſir William Bruen of Dorſetſhire. Sir George Wynter, ſon and heir of John, married Mary, daughter of Edward Rogers, of Cannington in Somerſetſhire, eſq; and dying in 1638, left John Wynter his ſon and heir then ſixteen years old. He married Frances, daughter and coheireſs of Thomas Gerard of Trent, in the county of Somerſet, eſq; deſcended from the Gerards of Lancaſhire. He died ſeized of Dyrham in 1668, leaving an only ſurviving daughter Mary, married to William Blathwayte, eſq; whoſe family came out of Cumberland. This gentleman's knowledge in modern languages, and his early and ſteady application to buſineſs, advanced him to ſeveral public and profitable employments. He was ſecretary at war, and ſecretary of ſtate to king William during his abode in Holland and Flanders; and was one of the commiſſioners for trade and plantations, and clerk of the privy council in the reigns of king Charles, king James, king William, and queen Anne. He was lord of the manor of Dyrham at the beginning of this century, and his grandſon William Blathwayte, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Or, two bends ingrailed ſable.

Walter Gaſelin held three plow-tillages in Dyrham 7 E. 3.

HAMLET. Hinton is a hamlet in this pariſh, about a mile from the church. The name ſignifies the old town, from Hen, Britiſh, old. The manor antiently belonged to the family of De la Rivere, ſometimes written de Ripariis. Sir John Tracy and others were ſeized of it in truſt for Richard de la Rivere 37 E. 3. and Thomas de la Rivere, ſon of Richard, was ſeized of it 48 E 3. The heir of De la Rivere ſold the manor to the Ruſſels, lords of Dyrham; and the ſeveral proprietors of the manor of Dyrham, have been alſo lords of the manor of Hinton ever ſince.

Sir Gilbert Dennys and ſir John Drayton, who had married the two coheireſſes of ſir Maurice Ruſſel, joined in the ſale of part of the lands of Hinton, to Nicholas Stanſhaw, who was ſeized thereof 3 H. 5. Margaret the widow of Nicholas died ſeized of thoſe lands 14 H. 6. The heir of Stanſhaw ſold them to Mr. Thomas White, who granted them to the mayor and corporation of Briſtol, for public uſes, 32 H. 8. and they are ſtill veſted in the corporation of that city, and the profits thereof are faithfully diſpoſed of to the intended uſes.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 150*l.* a year. Mr. Blathwayte is patron; Mr. Peter Grand the preſent incumbent. Eighty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is not large, but very neat. It is dedicated to St. Peter.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a flat ſtone, with a large repreſentation of a man and woman, for Maurice Ruſſel, who died in 1401, and Iſabel his wife, and under it the following monkiſh verſes:

Miles privatus vita jacet hic tumulatus
Sub petra ſtratus Maurice Ruſſel vocitatus
Iſabel ſponſa fuit hujus militis iſta
Quæ jacet abſconſa ſub marmoreo modo alto
Cœli ſolamen, Trinitas, his conferat Amen.
Qui fuit eſt et erit. Concita morte perît.

At the upper end of the ſouth aile, is a very handſome freeſtone monument. The figures of a man in armour, and a woman on his right hand, large as life, lie under a canopy, ſupported by five fluted pillars, with Corinthian capitals; and four ſons and ſeven daughters are repreſented kneeling, with their hands in a ſupplicating poſture. On a table is this inſcription:

Georgio Wynter armigero (qui animam efflavit xxix° die Novembris Ano Dni 1581) Anna Wynter uxor pia, charo conjugi hoc monumentum poſuit: ſtatuens cum et ipſa, dei juſſu, vitæ hujus ſtationem peregerit, hic ivxta mariti funus ſuum quoque reponi: ut quibus vivis unus erat animus, eiſdem et mortuis unus eſſet corporum quieſcendi locus, ſub ſpe futuræ reſurrectionis.

Round the baſe of the monument, theſe verſes:

Mole ſub hac placidam capiunt en Membra Georgii
Wynteri requiem, dures perſæpe labores
Qui ſolida in Terra, qui fluctı vagantibus undis,
Et pace innocua, ſimul et pugnacibus armis,
Suſtinuit Patriæ, dum publica Munia geſſit.

Undenas Thalami ſoboles tulit iſta, viriles

Mr. William Langton, formerly rector of this pariſh, left by his will, 600*l.* to be laid out in lands, the income of which to be employed in teaching children to read, and putting them out apprentices. Dyrham to have two thirds of this charity, and Deinton the other. And Mr. Peter Grand, the preſent rector, deſirous of promoting this laudable deſign, built a ſchool-houſe in Dyrham, at his own expence, about the year 1770.

At the beginning of this century, there were 60 houſes in this pariſh, and about 270 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. But in ten years, beginning with 1700, there are regiſtered 88 baptiſms, and 52 burials; and in a like ſeries, beginning with 1759, there are regiſtered 109 baptiſms, and 74 burials, and the preſent number of houſes is 70, of inhabitants 350; by which it appears that 1 in 47.3 dies every year.

EASINGTON or EASTINGTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the vale, in the hundred of Whitſton, ſix miles weſtward from Stroud, ſix north from Durſley, and ten ſouth from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts moſtly of paſture, as the ſoil is rich, but in ſome parts it is much inclined to clay. The river Froom runs through it, and divides the tithing of Eaſtington from that of Alkerton.

In the latter tithing, there is a ſpring of water of a cathartic property, which, upon examination, is found to contain a large portion of ſalts, like thoſe extracted from the Epſom water, ſome calcareous earth, and a little ſea ſalt.

The name of Eaſtington, or any thing like it, is not to be found in Domeſday-book. It is probable, therefore, that Eaſtington was a member of Frampton, when the ſurvey for that record was made; but in proceſs of time, acquiring parochial rights, it became a diſtinct and independent pariſh. Upon this ground the etymology is eaſy, for the village was very properly called Eaſtington, i.e. the eaſt town upon the water, becauſe it lay on the eaſt of the pariſh of Frampton, upon the river. And accordingly we find, that the names of Norton, Weſton, Siddington, Sutton, have been given to many places for ſimilar reaſons.

At Framiload, which is a hamlet lying part in this pariſh and part in Morton Valence, there is a paſſage over the Severn, leading from this country to the upper part of the foreſt of Dean, and ſo on to Herefordſhire. The paſſage-houſe lies on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the river, which at this place is near a mile over at high water. Here the navigable canal from Stroud is intended to fall into the Severn, if the bill for making it, now depending in parliament, ſhould paſs into a law.

The clothing buſineſs extends itſelf in the line from Stroud to this pariſh, which enjoys ſome ſhare of it, chiefly in the fine way; but the pariſh produces nothing curious or uncommon in the foſſil and vegetable kingdoms.

The handſome manor-houſe near the church is going to ruin, and has for many years been occupied only as a farm-houſe.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Winebald de Balun, ſon of Drogo de Balun, together with his brothers Hameline and Wyonoc, came into England with William the Firſt. Winebald had obtained the manor of Eaſington 2 W. 2. He gave a mill in Framelode to the abbey of Glouceſter, in the year 1126, and was at that time ſtiled one of the great barons of the realm. Roger ſucceeds his father Winebald, and was ſucceeded by Hameline de Balun, one of the ſame family; whoſe ſon John de Balun levied a fine of this manor 11 H. 3. Sir John de Balon, or Balun, ſon of John, was the next poſſeſſor. He joined with Simon Montfort and other barons againſt the king, and, in conjunction with ſir John Giffard of Brimpsfield, took Glouceſter-caſtle by ſtratagem in 1264, as already related, p. 107; but he afterwards obtained the king's pardon, and the manor deſcended next to Iſolda de Balun, married firſt to her kinſman Walter de Balun, by whom ſhe had no iſſue; ſecondly, to Hugh de Audley the elder, who purchaſed a charter of free warren in Eaſington 12 E. 2. She ſurvived her ſecond huſband, and died ſeized of this manor 11 E. 3. Hugh de Audley, their ſon, ſucceeded to this eſtate, and married Margaret, ſecond ſiſter and one of the coheireſſes of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, and widow of Piers de Gaveſton, the favourite of king Edward the Second. This Hugh de Audely died 21 E. 3. leaving Margaret his only daughter and heireſs, married to Ralph lord Stafford, who died 46 E. 3.

Hugh earl of Stafford, their ſon and heir, died at Rhodes, in his return from a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, ſeized of Eaſington 9 R. 2. as appears by an inquiſition taken the following year. He ſettled the manors of Eaſington, Haresfield, and a moiety of the manor of Alkerton, on Hugh Stafford his younger ſon, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Bartholomew lord Bourcher, and was ſummoned to parliament as lord Bourcher 12 H. 4. He died without iſſue 9 H. 5. whereby the manor of Eaſington came to his nephew Humphry earl of Stafford, who was ſon of Edmond, elder brother to the lord Bourcher. He was created duke of Buckingham in the ſucceeding reign, and died ſeized of this eſtate 38 H. 6. He was ſucceeded by his grandſon Henry duke of Buckingham, ſon of Humphry earl of Stafford, who had been ſlain at the battle of St. Albans, four years before his father's death. This Henry took up arms againſt king Richard the Third, and was beheaded at Saliſbury; but Edward his ſon and heir was reſtored to his father's honours and eſtates, by king Henry the Seventh. He began the magnificent caſtle at Thornbury, which he did not live to finiſh, being attainted and beheaded 13 H. 8. and the ſame year the manor of Eaſington was granted to Thomas Heneage and Catherine his wife for life. Henry, ſon and heir of Edward, had this manor reſtored to him 23 H. 8. and his ſon Edward lord Stafford ſold it to Edward Stephens 15 Eliz.

The family of Stephens are of antient ſtanding in this county. Ralph ſon of Stephen, and William William his brother, were joint high ſheriffs of Glouceſterſhire four years, beginning 18 H. 2. and William Stephens was high ſheriff 22 H. 2. and ſo continued thirteen years together.

Henry Stephens of Eaſington, married the daughter of —— Lug, of Herefordſhire; and Edward Stephens, his ſon, the purchaſer of this manor, married Joan, daughter of Edward Fowler of Stonehouſe. He died in 1587, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Richard Stephens, eſq; who married, firſt, Margaret, daughter of Edward St. Loe, of Kingſton in Wiltſhire, eſq; and ſurviving her, he married, ſecondly, Anne Kerry, widow, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of John Stone of London, and died 41 Eliz.

Thomas Stephens, third ſon of Edward, and brother of Richard, was attorney to prince Henry and prince Charles, and by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheireſs of John Stone of London, had three ſons; Edward, the eldeſt, anceſtor to the Stephens's at Sodbury; John, anceſtor to the family of that name at Lypiat; and Nathaniel, the third ſon, anceſtor to the Stephens's, formerly of Cherington. But to proceed with the deſcendants of Richard Stephens.

Nathaniel, ſon of the ſaid Richard Stephens of Eaſington, married Catherine, daughter of Robert Beall, of Prior's Marſton in Warwickſhire, eſq; and dying in 1660, was ſucceeded by his ſon Richard, who married Anne, eldeſt daughter of ſir Hugh Cholmeley, of Whitby in Yorkſhire, bart. and died in 1678. Nathaniel Stephens, ſon of the laſt Richard, married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Francis Pemberton, who had been lord chief juſtice of both benches. This Nathaniel ſerved the office of high ſheriff of this county in 1698, and was lord of the manor of Eaſington at the beginning of the preſent century. Richard Stephens, eſq; died ſeized thereof in the year 1775, and is ſucceeded by his brother Robert Stephens, who reſides at Chavenage, and is the preſent proprietor of this manor, and of the hundred of Whitſton, and holds courts for both. His arms are, Party per chevron, azure and argent, in chief two eagles with wings elevated Or.

Winebald de Balun gave a mill in Framelode to the abbey of Glouceſter in 1126. Walter the prior of Lanthony purchaſed a mill at Hamelaw, now Framelode, of Arnold the miller 8 Joh. Simon de Framilode was ſeized of lands in this place temp. H. 3. The abbey of Winchcombe granted a fiſhery in the Severn, near Framilode, to the abbey of Glouceſter, in exchange for 4*l.* yearly rent out of the manor of Northleach 14 E. 2. and the abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized thereof 17 E. 3. and of two water-mills in Framilode 6 H. 8.

A meſſuage and the ferry at Framilode's paſſage, late the duke of Buckingham's, were granted to Ambroſe Shelton 22 H. 8. A mill and lands in Eaſington, late the duke of Buckingham's, were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. upon whoſe attainder they were granted to John earl of Warwick, afterwards duke of Northumberland, 3 E. 6. He being likewiſe attainted and beheaded, the mill and lands, then in the tenure of Walter Clutterbuck, were granted to William Britton 2 Mariæ.

HAMLET. Alkerton is a hamlet and tithing in this pariſh, taken notice of in the beginning of this account for its medicinal water. The manor is thus deſcribed in Domeſday-book.

'Edric the ſon of Chetel holds Alcrintone in 'Blacheleu hundred. His father held it in the 'time of king Edward. There are four hides and 'a half taxed. In demean is one plow-tillage, 'and ſix villeins, and four bordars with eight 'plow-tillages. There are three ſervi, and a mill 'of 10*s.* and ten acres of meadow; a wood one 'mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth 'and was worth 3*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 80.

William Walton was ſeized of this manor, with aſſize of bread and ale, 31 E. 1. and 5 E. 2. The manor afterwards came to the Staffords, and deſcended like Eaſington down to Mr. Robert Stephens, the preſent lord thereof.

But there were two manors in this tithing, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition, 41 Eliz. where it is ſaid that Richard Stephens died ſeized of Eſtington and Alkerton, late the duke of Buckingham's, held in capite; and of the manor of Alkerton, alias Amycourt, part of the poſſeſſions of Robert Bradſtone, eſq; held by free ſoccage of the honour of Hereford, paying 6*s.* 8*d.* a year.

There are particular places in this pariſh of the names of Nupend, Weſtend, Millend, Churchend, and Naſſend.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth 140*l.* a year. Mr. Stephens is patron and incumbent.

Winebald de Balun, in 1088, gave the tithes of Eaſington to the monks of Bermondſey in Surry. The advowſon of the rectory of Eaſington was granted to the Benedictine nunnery of Clerkenwell in London, and after the diſſolution, was granted to ſir William Herbert 4 E. 6. The rector pays 20*s.* a year to the vicar of Froceſter, in lieu of a portion of tithes in Alkerton.

Sixteen acres of arable, forty of paſture, and ſome meadow, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and conſiſts of two ailes, with a low tower at the weſt end. There was a chantry called the chantry of Alkerton, in this church, dedicated to Thomas Becket and St. Catherine, to which the prior of Stanley St. Leonard preſented. And there was an inhibition in 1339, that the pariſhioners at Alkerton ſhould not hear divine ſervice in any other church than that of Eaſtington.

Doctor Richard Capel, once rector of this church, was ſon of Chriſtopher Capel, alderman of Glouceſter, who was born at Hoo Capel in Herefordſhire. The doctor was eminent for his learning, learning, and refuſing to read the book of ſports, on the Lord's-day, in 1633, was obliged to reſign his parſonage, and practiced phyſic at Pitchcombe, near Stroud. He was choſen one of the aſſembly of divines, but never ſat among them. He publiſhed ſeveral religious books, and died in the year 1656.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, at the beginning of this century there were 100 houſes in this pariſh, and about 450 inhabitants, whereof 11 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 14. But population has increaſed ſince that time, ſo that the number of ſouls is now about 767.

EASTLEACH-MARTIN

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Britwell's-Barrow, eight miles ſouth-eaſt from Northleach, three north from Leachlade, and twenty-ſeven eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The air is healthy, and the ſoil well adapted to tillage; but there is good paſture-land on the ſide of the river Lech, upon which this village is ſituated, and from which it takes its name.

In Domeſday-book there are four villages all bearing the name of Lecce, and denominated from the river upon which they lie. But they were afterwards diſtinguiſhed in the following manner. The river runs ſouth-eaſtward, and the firſt, becauſe the moſt northerly of thoſe villages, was called Northleach, now a market town. For a ſimilar reaſon, the moſt ſoutherly of them, dropping the name of the river, was called Southrop; and the two others, becauſe ſituated more eaſtward than Northleach, obtained the name of Eaſtleach. But further to diſtinguiſh the two latter, the one was called Eaſtleach-Martin, from the name of the ſaint to whom its church was dedicated; the other received the additional name of Turville, for the reaſon aſſigned in its proper place. But this pariſh is ſometimes called Buthrop.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Drogo the ſon of Ponz holds Lece in Bricſtu-'oldes hundred. There are ten hides taxed. 'Cola held it. In demean are four plow-tillages, 'and fifteen villeins, and four bordars, with nine 'plow-tillages. There are nine ſervi, and a mill 'of 10*s.* and ten acres of meadow. It was worth '8*l.* now 10*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

This manor, ſoon after the conqueſt, belonged to the priory of Great Malvern in Worceſterſhire. But it did not long continue in that houſe, for Walter de Clifford became poſſeſſed of it, and gave it to the abbey of Glouceſter, in exchange for the manor of Glaſebury; and the grant was confirmed by king Stephen in 1144. The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Eaſtleach St. Martin 17 E. 3. and continued in poſſeſſion of it 'till the diſſolution, when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, who are the preſent lords of the manor.

Mr. Slade Naſh is leſſee under the dean and chapter, by purchaſe from the truſtees of the late Viner Small, eſq; deceaſed, and pays 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

HAMLETS. 1. Fifield. 2. Coat, which from its name ſeems to have been woodland.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 160*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron; Mr. James Parſons is the preſent incumbent.

The church is ſmall, dedicated to St. Martin, and has a ſmall aile on the north ſide, and a tower at the weſt end, in which are three bells.

The parſonage-houſe was built by Dr. Smith, canon of Chriſt-church, and rector of this church.

Rowland Searchfield S. T. B. fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge, was rector of this church, and afterwards biſhop of Briſtol. He died in 1622, and lies buried in Briſtol cathedral.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 30 houſes, and 120 inhabitants, whereof five were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. But ſince that time, the inhabitants are increaſed to the number of 313.

EASTLEACH-TURVILLE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwell's-Barrow, in the Coteſwold country, ſeven miles ſouth-eaſtward from Northleach, four north from Leachlade, and twenty-eight eaſt from Glouceſter.

It

It is ſituated upon the river Lech, which divides it from Eaſtleach-Martin. This part of the country lying high and open, enjoys a healthy air. The ſoil is rather ſtony, but ſweet, and well adapted to tillage; and a great part of the pariſh, conſiſting formerly of ſheep-lays and common fields, has been lately incloſed by act of parliament.

There is a well of water in Church-lane of a cathartic property; and the common well water will turn meat, when waſhed in it, as red as if it had been cured with ſalt-petre.

The Roman road called the Ikenild-way enters this pariſh from Oxfordſhire. It is hereabout pretty perfect, and paſſing weſtward through Coln St. Alwin's and Amney, joins the Foſs at Cirenceſter.

The etymology of Eaſtleach is given under Eaſtleach-Martin. Sir Robert Atkyns ſpeaking of this pariſh, ſays, The name is taken from its ſtanding on the eaſt ſide of the river Lech, and from the tower of the church. But he was totally miſtaken as to the firſt particular; for the pariſh lies on the weſt, not on the eaſt ſide of that river. The addition of Turville was probably taken from a family of the name of Turberville, or Turville, who reſided and had poſſeſſions in this county about the time of king Henry the Third, and king Edward the Firſt[d]. It was intended to diſtinguiſh this place from the other Eaſtleach, as Acton-Turville was ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from two other neighbouring places of the name of Acton. But it muſt be acknowledged that I ſpeak from conjecture, as by the defect in the records concerning this manor, about the time above mentioned, we are deprived of poſitive evidence.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The ſame Roger [de Laci] holds Lecce in Brictwoldeſberg hundred, and William holds it of him. There are five hides. Alduin held it in the time of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and twelve villeins, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages. There are five ſervi, and eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

A Quo warranto was brought againſt Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter, to ſet forth by what right he held courts leet in this pariſh, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. The manor was held of one knight's fee of Gilbert de Clare, the laſt earl of Glouceſter of that name, who was ſlain at the battle of Bannockſbourne in Scotland, in 1314. It was likewiſe held of Hugh de Audley and Margaret his wife, ſiſter and one of the coheireſſes of the laſt Gilbert de Clare, 21 E. 3. and of the earls of Stafford, deſcended from Hugh de Audley, of one knight's fee, 10, 16, & 22 R. 2. and 4 H. 4. Sir Edmond Tame died ſeized of this manor 6 H. 8. as did Edmond Tame his ſon, without heir, 36 H. 8. He left three ſiſters his coheireſſes; Margaret, married to Humphry Stafford; Alice, married to ſir Thomas Verney; and Iſabel, the wife of Lewis Watkin, who all had livery 37 H. 8. Sir Thomas Verney was ſucceeded by Richard Verney his ſon, whoſe ſon George Verney died ſeized of Eaſtleach-Turville 16 Eliz.

The meſne lords of this manor were as follow. Theobald de Verdune died ſeized of Eaſtleach-Turville 10 E. 3. as did Richard de Wideſlade 29 E. 3. and Mary the widow of William Herney 7 H. 4. Edward Leverſegge died ſeized of this manor, and Elizabeth his widow died ſeized of 140 acres in Eaſtleach 1 H. 6. Robert Leverſegge died ſeized of the manor 4 E. 4. and was ſucceeded by his ſon William Leverſegge, whoſe ſon Robert Leverſegge died ſeized of the manor of Eaſtleach-Turville 6 E. 6. and livery was granted to his ſon William Leverſegge the following year.

William Blomer was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but ſir John Webb, baronet, is the preſent proprietor. For his arms, ſee Hatherop.

There were other lands, reputed to be a manor, which belonged to the Ciſtercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, founded by Nicholas Baſſet in 1147. Lands in Eaſtleach, late belonging to the abbey of Bruern, were granted to John Dodington and John Jackſon 2 Eliz. This eſtate was afterwards purchaſed by Richard Keeble, (deſcended from ſir Henry Keeble, lord mayor of London in 1510) in whoſe family it continued down to Richard Keeble, the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and the ſixth in lineal deſcent of the ſame chriſtian name. It is now annexed to the principal manor by purchaſe, and is the property of ſir John Webb.

Thomas Oddington levied a fine of lands in Eaſtleach-Turville 14 H. 7. and John Wright and his wife levied a like fine the ſame year. Sir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Eaſtleach 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy in the deanery of Fairford. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons and impropriators, Mr. Price is the preſent incumbent, who has been preſented to the living of Coln Rogers, ſince the account of that pariſh was printed off.

In the year 1500, the impropriation belonged to the priory of Derhurſt, and afterwards to the abbey of Glouceſter. It is now the property of the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, and pays 30*l.* a year to the curate, in conſequence of the biſhop's injunction.

Eighty-two acres belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is very ſmall, with an aile on the north ſide, and a low tower at the weſt end, in which are two bells. This church and that of Eaſtleach-Martin lie at but little more than a hundred yards diſtance from each other, the former on the weſt, the latter on the eaſt bank of the little river Lech, which ſeparates the pariſhes.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account, at the beginning of this century, there were, according to him, 60 houſes, and about 200 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Since which time the inhabitants are increaſed to near 400.

EBBERTON, or EBBRINGTON,

LIES in the hundred of Kifteſgate, two miles diſtant north-eaſt from Campden, eleven ſouth-weſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, and thirty-three north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It lies on an eaſy aſcent north-weſtward from Blockley. The manor houſe is agreeably ſituated on an eminence cloſe by the church. It is large, and, tho' not a modern building, may be ranked among the handſomeſt country ſeats of the laſt age. The ſoil is very fertile, and the air remarkably ſalubrious, as appears by the ſtate of population at the cloſe of this account.

The name is of uncertain original. Some have fancied it to be a contraction of Egbert's town, as if the village had been a part of the demean lands of that king. Others have ſuppoſed the denomination to be taken from the dedication of the church to St. Edburg. But the name of Ebberton, or Ebbrington, is not to be found in that part of Domeſday-book relating to Glouceſterſhire; and if the particulars of this manor are not omitted in that record, they muſt be given under ſome other name. Accordingly I find Briſtentune in the old hundred of Witelai, (now comprized in that of Kifteſgate) which I apprehend was then the name of this pariſh, eſpecially as Cheuringaurde, now Charingworth, was held, at the time of the conqueſt, by the ſame proprietor.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'William Goizenboded holds Briſtentune in 'Witelai hundred. Briſmar held it. There are 'ten hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and 'eighteen villeins, and four bordars, with four-'teen plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, and 'three ancillæ, and two mills of 15*s.* [rent.] It 'was worth 12*l.* and is now worth 7*l.*' D.B. p. 74.

This manor had obtained the name of Ebberton, and was held of Roger de Quincie, earl of Wincheſter, 55 H. 3. Ernald de Boſco, who founded the abbey of Bittleſden in Buckinghamſhire in the year 1147, was ſeized of it, and his family held it for ſeveral generations. Another Ernald de Boſco died poſſeſſed of this manor 4 E. 1. and John de Boyſe, his ſon, in a Quo warranto brought againſt him, proved his right to courts leet and waifs therein 15 E. 1. About this time the manor went out of that family, for Alan de Zouch, grandſon and heir of the earl of Wincheſter, died ſeized of Ebberton 7 E. 2. leaving three daughters coheireſſes.

It afterwards paſſed to the Corbets, for Roger Corbet had a grant of free warren in Ebberton and Coate 6 E. 3. Sir Robert Corbet died ſeized of Ebberton and Hidcote 2 H. 4. as did another ſir Robert Corbet 5 H. 5.

Sir John Forteſcue, lord chancellor of England in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, purchaſed the manor of Ebbrington, alias Ebberton; and upon his attainder, 7 E. 4. it was granted to ſir John Brug, who died ſeized of it 11 E. 4. But it was afterwards reſtored to the Forteſcue family, and Matthew lord Forteſcue, a direct deſcendant from lord chancellor* Forteſcue, is the preſent lord of this manor, and holds a court leet here.

Cateſlade, is a manor appurtenant to, and dependant on, the manor of Ebberton, notwithſtanding it lies within the pariſh of Guiting-Power, where ſome further account of it will be given.

One plow-tillage in Ebberton, with the advowſon of the church, was granted to the abbey of Bittleſden 1 R. 2.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Ebberton, of which already.

2. Charingworth, of which Domeſday-book gives the following account.

* Martin Forteſcue, eſq; ſon and heir of John Forteſcue, lord chancellor of England, (by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of ſir Miles Stapleton) married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Deynſell, of Filleigh in com. Devon, eſq; and had iſſue two ſons, John and William. John married Jaquetta, eldeſt daughter of Ralph St. Leger, eſq; by whom he had iſſue Bartholomew, whoſe ſon and heir, Hugh Forteſcue, married Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter of ſir John Chicheſter, of Raleigh in com. Devon, and had by her John Forteſcue, eſq; which John married a daughter of ſir John Specot, knight, by whom he had iſſue Hugh Forteſcue, his ſon and heir. This Hugh, by his wife, daughter of ſir Samuel Rolle, had iſſue colonel Robert Forteſcue, who died without iſſue; and Arthur Forteſcue, eſq; who married a daughter of —— Elford, eſq; and had iſſue by her four ſons, of whom Hugh Forteſcue, of Filleigh, eſq; the eldeſt, married Bridget, ſole daughter and heir of Hugh Boſcawen, of Tregothnan in Cornwall, by Margaret his wife, fifth daughter, and at length coheir of Theophilus Clinton, earl of Lincoln; by whom he had iſſue Hugh, Theophilus, Margaret, and Bridget. He married ſecondly, Lucy, daughter of Matthew lord Aylmer, by whom he had Matthew, Charles, who died at ſchool, and one daughter Lucy, married to George Lyttelton, afterwards lord Lyttelton.

The barony of Clinton being in abeyance, king George I. conferred it on the ſaid Hugh Forteſcue, eſq; ſon of Hugh and Bridget, in the year 1721; and in 1746, he was created lord Forteſcue, baron of Caſtle-hill in com. Devon, and earl of Clinton; with limitation of the barony to Matthew his ſon and brother. His lordſhip dying unmarried, the title of Clinton devolved on his ſiſter Margaret; and his ſaid brother Matthew ſucceeded to the barony, and is the preſent lord Forteſcue. His lordſhip married, in 1752, Anne, ſecond daughter of John Campbell, eſq; one of the lords commiſſioners of the treaſury, and by her ladyſhip hath iſſue ſeveral children. His lordſhip's arms are, Azure, a bend ingrailed argent, cotiſed Or. Creſt, a plain ſhield argent. Supporters, Two greyhounds argent, with a ducal collar and line gules. Motto, Forte Scutum Salvs Ducvm.

' Radulph

'Radulph de Todeni holds Cheuringaurde in 'Witelai hundred, and Roger holds it of him. 'There are ten hides. Briſmar held it. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and 'one radcheniſter with ſix plow-tillages, and nine 'ſervi and ancillæ. It was worth 8*l.* and is now 'worth 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Edward Burnel died ſeized of this manor 9 E. 2. Gilbert Chaſtelyne purchaſed a charter of free warren in Charingworth 29 E. 3. Richard Stafford died ſeized of the manor 4 R. 2. as did Maud his widow 1 H. 4. and Richard Turſtan 1 H. 5. The manor paſſed afterwards to the Grevils, who had conſiderable poſſeſſions in this part of the county. John Grevil died ſeized thereof 23 H. 6. as did another John Grevil 1 E. 6. and Edward Grevil, his ſon, had livery the following year. Lewis Grevil had alſo livery of this manor 1 Eliz.

The late Mr. John Barnſley had a houſe and good eſtate in this tithing.

3. Hidcoat Bois, alias Cote. 'The church of 'St. Mary of Eveſham holds Hedecote in Widelei 'hundred. There are three hides. In demean 'is one plow-tillage, and two ſervi, and the wives 'of four villeins lately deceaſed have one plow-'tillage. It is worth and was worth 20*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The family of Keyt has reſided in this pariſh about four hundred years. Sir John Keyt was created a baronet in 1660, in reward of his loyalty to king Charles the Firſt, for whom he raiſed a troop of horſe at his own charge. There are ſeveral monuments and inſcriptions in the church, ſhewing the alliances and other particulars of this family. Sir William Keyt married the daughter of ſir Francis Coventry, ſon of the lord Keeper Coventry, and died in 1702. Sir William Keyt, ſon of William Keyt, eſq; married in 1710, Anne, the daughter of William viſcount Tracy, by whom he had iſſue Thomas-Charles, who ſucceeded to the baronetage, and dying without iſſue, was ſucceeded by his brother Robert, the preſent baronet. The laſt mentioned ſir William Keyt, being in his houſe at Norton in this pariſh, when it was burnt down, voluntarily periſhed in the flames, in the year 1741. Soon after his death, the ſcite of the houſe, together with the eſtate, was ſold to the late ſir Dudley Ryder, lord chief juſtice of England, whoſe ſon, Nathaniel Ryder, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of Hidcoat Bois.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hampden, worth about 30*l.* a year. The crown is patron, Mr. Jacob Mould the preſent incumbent. The advowſon of the church was granted to the abbey of Bittleſden 1 R. 2. And after the diſſolution of that abbey, the rectory and church of Ebrington were granted to Anthony Bonner and George Bonner 4 Jac. Tithes in Charingworth, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. and the earl of Gainſborough pays 8*l.* a year for thoſe tithes.

There is no glebe-land. Sir William Keyt gave 10*l.* a year to augment the vicarage, which ſum is included in the above mentioned value.

The church is large and handſome. The eaſt window of the chancel is ornamented with painted glaſs, in pretty good preſervation, wherein are ſeveral coats of arms, as Sable, a feſs ermine between three creſcents Or, for Coventry. France and England, quarterly. The arms of Keyt, &c. Upon two wreaths is written, Beati qui lugent.—Beati Pauperes. And towards the bottom are two hiſtorical pieces, the one, Joſeph telling his dream to his father and brothers; the other repreſents him flying from the temptations of Potiphar's wife. In a tower at the weſt end, are ſix muſical bells.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Againſt the north wall of the chancel is a large monument for lord chancellor Forteſcue, with his effigy, in ſcarlet robes, lying on a raiſed tomb ornamented with ſcutcheons of coat armour. On a table is the following inſcription:

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, about the year 1710, there were, according to him, 74 houſes, and 341 inhabitants, of whom 10 were freeholders ; yearly births 15, burials 15. But from an accurate examination of the pariſh regiſter, it appears, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 139, burials 87 ; and in a like ſeries of years, beginning with 1761, the baptiſms were 164, the burials 76 ; and there are now 94 houſes, and 469 inhabitants. So that about one in every ſixty-one of the inhabitants dies every year.

EDGWORTH.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Biſley, in the Coteſwold country, ſix miles north-weſt from Cirenceſter, three north-eaſtward from Biſley, and twelve ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The ſituation of the village on the ſide of a hill, gave riſe to the name, which is compoſed of two Saxon words, Eᵹe, the ſharp ſide of a thing, and þeorþ, a village.

It hath been already obſerved, under Cranham, that the face of the country hereabout is exceedingly uneven, with much beech wood growing on the ſteep acclivities. The bottoms are generally paſture ; but the greater part of this pariſh is arable land. A ſmall brook runs through it into the river Froom.

Part of Pinbury-park lies in this pariſh, the reſt in Dunteſbourn Rous.

Audomar de Valencia, earl of Pembroke, ſon of William de Valencia, who was half brother, by the mother, to king H. 3. was ſeized of Edgworth. Mary his third wife had two parts of the village in dower, and died ſeized thereof 17 E. 2. Thomas de Eggeworth held the third part of the vill of Eggeworth of the ſaid earl, as of the manor of Paynſwyke, by half a knight's fee, 17 E. 2. Eſch.

Walter Helvin died ſeized of this manor 16 E. 3. as did Robert de Aſton the 23d, and John Coaffe 36 E. 3. when it was held of the manor of Painſwick. The manor ſoon after paſſed to the Raleighs. Thomas Raleigh died ſeized of the manor of Edgworth, which he held by half a knight's fee, of Richard lord Talbot and Anchoret his wife, 21 R. 2. Thomas Raleigh, his ſon and heir, died ſeized of this manor 6 H. 4. as did Walter Raleigh, ſon and heir of Thomas, 8 H. 5. William Rawleigh and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowſon of Edgworth 28 H. 6. of which William died ſeized in the reign of king Edward the Fourth. Sir Edward Rawleigh, ſon of William, died poſſeſſed of this manor 5 H. 8. and George Rawleigh died ſeized of it, and of the advowſon of Edgworth 37 H. 8. which were held by ſoccage of ſir Henry Jerningham, as of the manor of Painſwick. Sir George Rawleigh and Edward his ſon ſold the manor to ſir Henry Pool of Saperton, 44 Eliz. who was lord of it in the year 1608, and died in 1616. Out of this name and family it paſſed not long after. Nathaniel Ridler, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. From him it deſcended to Thomas Ridler, eſq; who left three daughters, coheireſſes, 1. Elizabeth, married to William Trinn, of Charlton-King's, eſq; 2. Anne, the preſent lady of the manor; 3. Barbara, married to the reverend Mr. Richard Brereton. The arms of Ridler are, Argent, a bull paſſant gules.

John Mandevil was ſeized of lands in Edgworth and Painſwick 34 E. 3. John Timbrel levied a fine of lands in this pariſh 24 H. 7. A tenement and water-mill here belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter 2 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dunehouſe, worth 100*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Richard Brereton, in right of his wife, is patron and incumbent.

Sixteen acres of paſture, twenty-one acres of arable in the north field, and eighteen acres in the ſouth field, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has a tower at the weſt end.

ELBERTON

LIES in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Berkeley, eleven miles north from Briſtol, ten north-weſt from Chipping-Sodbury, and twenty-eight ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is ſituated in the lower part of the vale, on the eaſt ſide of the Severn, where the river is two miles over. And tho' the greater part of the houſes ſtand upwards of a mile from it, the inhabitants are ſubject to agues, and diſorders particularly incident to countries ſituate upon large rivers; yet in a leſs degree than ſome of their neighbours in the marſhes.

There is a ſmall camp, with a ſingle ditch, on the hill eaſtward of the village, peculiarly well adapted to obſerve every thing paſſing on the river, with a full view of the country on the other ſide of it. It was probably thrown up by the Romans, to preſerve a communication between the Trajectus at Oldbury, and the country about the Briſtol Avon.

In Domeſday-book the name is written Eldbertone, which ſignifies the old barton, or farm.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It appears by the abſtract from the above mentioned record, given under Berkeley, that five hides in this place belonged to the manor of Berkeley; and went with that manor, by the gift of king Henry the Second, to Robert Fitz-Harding.

He ſettled this manor on his ſecond ſon Robert, in marriage with Alice de Gaunt. Robert and Alice had iſſue Maurice, and a daughter Eva[f], married to Thomas Harpetre, deſcended from Gouel de Percheval, ſometimes called Gouel de Yvery, ſirnamed Lupus, who attended the Conqueror in the invaſion of England, and was rewarded with ſeveral manors, among others, with that of Weſt Harpetre in the county of Somerſet. Maurice, by his deed, bearing date at Portſmouth, gave[g] to the king, then paſſing into Britany, his lordſhips of Weſton, Beverſtone, and Albricton, and died[f] without iſſue the ſame year. But it is probable that he did not diſpoſe of the inheritance; for the greateſt part thereof went to the iſſue of his ſiſter Eva, whoſe ſon Robert aſſumed the ſurname of Gournay, and 15 H. 3. had livery of all his[h] lands in Somerſetſhire and Glouceſterſhire, except Beverſtan, Weſton, Rudewic, Oure, and Albricton; which, however, he not long after obtained of the king.

John Tropyn[1] died ſeized of the manor of Aylbrigton juxta Olviſton, by the ſervice of the tenth part of a knight's fee, 11 E. 2. Sir John Walſh died ſeized of Elberton 38 H. 8. And Maurice Walſh, his ſon and heir, who married Bridged Vawſe, had livery thereof the ſame year.

George Smith, eſq; was lord of this manor in 1608. It paſſed afterwards to ſir Thomas Cann of Stoke-Biſhop, and from him to Cann Jefferis, eſq; who dying without iſſue, it went by the marriage of his ſiſter, to Henry Lyppingcott, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor. See Stoke-Biſhop.

Lands in Ailberton belonged to the monaſtery of St. Auguſtine at Briſtol, and at the diſſolution, were granted as[k] part of the endowment of the biſhoprick of Briſtol, 34 H. 8.

Lands called Prieſtcroft in Aleberton, alias Elberton, were granted to Edward Sallus 3 Jac.

Mr. Goldney has a good houſe and eſtate in this place, which formerly belonged to the Browns, and afterwards to lord Vaughan.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Briſtol, worth about 60*l.* a year. The rectory and advowſon of Allberton, formerly belonging to St. Auguſtine's monaſtery at Briſtol, were granted at the diſſolution, to Paul, biſhop of Briſtol[l], and his ſucceſſors for ever, 34 H. 8. The biſhop of Briſtol is patron; the rev. Mr. Camplin incumbent. In the year 1767, the church of Elberton was conſolidated with that of Olveſton.

The biſhop of Briſtol has given the impropriation to the curate of Horfield.

The church conſiſts of a nave, and an aile on each ſide, with a ſpire in the middle; and hath a very large church-yard. From both ailes, are ſquare holes cut through the pillars which ſupport the roof, in a direction to the altar, that the congregation might the more conveniently ſee the prieſt elevate the hoſt, in time of maſs.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a large ſtone coffin in the ſouth croſs aile, in which 'tis ſuppoſed one of the Walſhes lies buried.

There is a flat ſtone in the body of the church, with a plate of braſs, and this inſcription:

Here lyeth the Body of Joſeph Fricker jun^r^. Son of Joſeph Fricker of Tockington. Qui obijt Aug. 27 Anno 1707.—Then follow three verſes, viz. Job. xiv, 1. in Hebrew; Epheſ. v, 14. in Greek; Eccleſ. xii, 1. in Latin.

There were 26 houſes, and about 104 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1700, I counted upon the pariſh regiſter 36 baptiſms, and 33 burials; and in other ten years, beginning with 1760, 18 baptiſms, and 37 burials. From which I judge they have baptized chiefly at ſome other church. The inhabitants are now about 122.

ELKSTONE

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Rapſgate, in the Coteſwold country, eight miles northweſtward from Cirenceſter, ſeven ſouth from Cheltenham, and ten eaſt from Glouceſter.

The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Cheltenham leads through it. The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of a ſtone-braſh arable land, with a little paſture. The greater part of it lies bleak, and much expoſed to the wind from every quarter, which ſo impedes vegetation, that the harveſt is later here than in any other part of the county.

Here is a quarry of very excellent ſtone to endure the weather. It cuts eaſy at firſt, but hardens in the air, and is very durable. And I am inclined to think that the place took its name from the ſhallow ſtony ſoil; for the antient name is Elcheſtane, perhaps from El, a place, and ſtane, ſtone, i.e. the ſtony place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds Elcheſtane in 'Reſpigete hundred. Two Leuuini [perſons of 'the name of Leuuinus] held it for two manors. 'There are four hides and a half; and in Coleſborne 'one hide and a half. Eluuinus held it for a 'manor, and theſe three thanes could go where 'they pleaſed. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and five villeins, and two bordars, with three 'plow-tillages and a half. There are four ſervi, 'and ten acres of meadow; a wood half a mile 'long, and two quarters broad.'

'One knight holds a moiety of this manor 'of Ansfrid, and has two plow-tillages there, 'and five villeins, and two bordars, with three 'plow-tillages; and another knight holds Coleſ- 'burne of him, and has half a plow-tillage 'there, and two villeins, and two bordars, with 'one plow-tillage, and a mill of 50*d.* This '[manor] was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.* and 10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

The manor of Elkſtone was granted to John le Brun 50 H. 3. and John his ſon was ſeized thereof 31 E. 1. John de Acton was ſeized of this manor 8 E. 2. And George de Acton having forfeited his his lands by rebellion, Hugh Muſtel became poſſeſſed of Elkeſtone, of which he died ſeized 19 E. 2. Richard de Bellers held the manor 3 E. 3. but it could only be in truſt for ſir John de Acton, then under age, who had been reſtored to all his father's lands 1 E. 3. He died without iſſue 17 E. 3. leaving his couſin Maud his heir. She was married to Nicholas Poyntz, whoſe ſon and heir, ſir John Pointz, was ſeized of this manor 1 & 6 R. 2. and it continued many generations in his family.

James Huntly was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but lord Craven is the preſent proprietor. HAMLETS. 1. Cockleford, lying about a mile north-weſtward from the church. In this hamlet, in the road from Cirenceſter to Cheltenham, lies Cockleford-hill, well known to travellers for the difficulty of the aſcent, and badneſs of the road.

2. Combend, ſo called from its lying at the top of a comb, or little valley, about a mile eaſtward of the church. Thomas Eſtcourt died ſeized of the manor or farm of Coleſcombe, alias Combeſend, alias Combeſcottle 41 Eliz. which, with the manor of Winſton, he had ſettled on his ſon Thomas, who married Mary, the daughter of William Savage. Eſch. This eſtate paſſed afterwards to the Hortons. Thomas Horton, eſq; died ſeized of it at the beginning of this century; after whom, William Blanch, eſq; became poſſeſſed of it, who dying without iſſue, in the year 1766, bequeathed all his eſtates to his wife, during her life, and after her death, to Mr. James Rogers of Glouceſter, and his heirs. Mr. Samuel Walbank of London, wine-merchant, married Mrs. Blanch, and holds this eſtate in right of his wife.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stone-houſe, worth 100 l. a year; lord Craven is patron, the reverend Mr. Lloyd the preſent incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt, is ſmall and neat, with a handſome tower at the weſt end, and four bells.

Fifty-one acres of incloſed ground, and fifty acres in the common-fields belong to the glebe.

At the beginning of this century there were 35 houſes in this pariſh, and about 160 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1760, there are regiſtered 71 baptiſms, and 32 burials. ELMORE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Dudſton and King's Barton, eight miles north-weſt from Stroud, five north-eaſtward from Newnham, and four ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

Elmor, from the Britiſh Allmor, ſo likewiſe Armor, ſignifies a low ſituation near the ſea, or ſome great river; and the name was given with great propriety to this pariſh, which is almoſt peninſulated (if I may ſo expreſs myſelf) by the Severn, and often ſuffers conſiderable damage from the overflowing of that river. But the notion of its being ſo called from the great number of eels taken in the moors, is puerile and vulgar.

The channel of the river winding here, and being ſo much narrower than it is a few miles below, cauſes the ſpring-tides to come in with a very great head, ſometimes eight or ten feet high.

The boundaries of the pariſh are remarkably confuſed and irregular. It is natural to ſuppoſe that the Severn would have been the boundary between ſuch places as lie on the oppoſite ſides of it; but here is an exception; for there are ſome lands at a place called Elmore's Back, on this ſide the river, which belong to the pariſh of Minſterworth.

They have ſome tillage land in common-field, but the greater part is paſturage; for the ſoil being rich, and ſubject to floods, is improper for tillage. The air is not remarkably unwholeſome for the ſituation; but the inhabitants ſuffer the topical diſorders generally incident to places lying on large rivers and ſtagnated water.

A rock, called Stone-Bench, runs acroſs the Severn here, but the water is ſeldom low enough to make it fordable. Here is alſo a place of deep water, called Groundleſs-Pit, (made by the floods breaking the ſea-wall) commonly, tho' erroneouſly, ſaid to have no bottom.

Theſe are the chief particulars which diſtinguiſh this pariſh; but Leland ſpeaks of another, in the Third Vol. of his Itinerary, publiſhed by Hearne. Mr. Gyſe, ſaith he, hath at his manor of Elmore in Gloceſtreſhir, Okes, the rootes whereof be converted into hard ſtones within the ground. From this account the reader may ſuppoſe, that the trunks and branches above the ground remained in their natural ſtate, at leaſt, if they did not retain the power of vegetation. I have made ſome inquiry as to the fact, and find that there is no ſuch thing at preſent, nor any tradition of what he mentions. I never heard of an inſtance of the roots of a live tree, nor indeed of any tree, petrifying in the place where it grew; and it is extraordinary that the learned and judicious antiquary ſhould be ſo much impoſed impoſed on as to believe and report this incredible ſtory.

Sir William Guiſe has a large, handſome ſeat here, ſtanding on an eminence, with a chapel in it, and good offices and gardens; but he reſides at Rendcombe.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The pariſh or manor of Elmore is not mention'd in Domeſday-book, but at the time when that record was compiled, it muſt have paſſed by ſome other name, or was conſidered as a part only of another pariſh. However, it ſoon afterwards acquired the preſent name, for it is expreſſly mentioned in a regiſter book of the priory of Lanthony, near Glouceſter, that Hubert de Burgo[m], earl of Kent, and juſtice of England, by his deed, gave to the ſaid priory tithe of lampreys, and all fiſh, taken in his gurges of Elmore. Teſte Richard, biſhop of Chicheſter, the king's chancellor.

John de Burgh, ſon of Hubert, by his wife Margaret, daughter of William, king of Scotland, held the manor of Elmore, with free warren, 44 H. 3. the year in which his mother died.

Nicholas de Gyſe, ſon of Robert, of the family of Gyſe of Aſple-Gyſe, or Gowiz, in Bedfordſhire, married a near relation of John de Burgh, and had with her the manor of Elmore, by the gift of the ſaid John, and aſſumed the arms of De Burgh in honour of that family. Aunſelme de Gyſe, ſon of Nicholas, had a freſh grant of the manor of Elmore, with its appurtenances, from John de Burgo, 2 E. 1. at the yearly rent of a clove-gilliflower, and proved his right to free warren, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

John de Gyſe, knight, by his deed dated at Elmore, on the feaſt of St. Vincent, 31 E. 3. grants the manor of Elmore, and the pool there, to William Haybarare, chaplain, Robert le Little of Coveley, clerk, and Richard Stout of Heyhamſtude. And the king gave licence to thoſe three perſons to grant the ſame manor, with the appurtenances, valued at 12*l.* a year, to the priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter, for the uſes therein mentioned, which they did by their deed 32 E. 3.

A re-feoffement was made, by William, the prior, and the convent of Lanthony, to John de Gyſe, knight, of their manor of Elmore, for his life, dated Apr. 5, 32 E. 3. and they engage to pay him 20*l.* a year for his life; and that he ſhall have twelve yards of the ſuit of the principal clerks; alſo one robe for his eſquire, of the ſuit of the eſquires of the prior; and one robe of the ſuit of the free tenants, for his chamberlain. And they alſo engage to celebrate one canon perpetually for the ſouls of his father and mother, of himſelf, and of the lady Joan his wife; and that they ſhall have a ſolemn anniverſary, with maſs, and the office of the dead, for ever.

But it is probable that the inheritance of the manor did not paſs by the above grant to the priory, for Anſelm Gyſe died ſeized of Elmore 13 H. 4. as did his ſon Reginald 8 H. 5. And from them it deſcended to ſir William Guiſe, bar[t]. the preſent lord of the manor, whoſe arms are given under Rendcombe, the place of his reſidence.

This manor was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, as of the honour of Hereford, 32 & 46 E. 3. and of Henry lord Stafford, as of the ſame honour, 5 Mariæ.

By an inquiſition 23 E. 1. it was found, that the king was ſeized of four tenements in this pariſh, and the priory of Lanthony was ſeized of two; which latter, after the diſſolution of the priory, were granted to William Doddington, 7 Eliz.

The abbey of Glouceſter held lands in Elmore, which were granted, at the diſſolution, to Joan Cook, widow, 31 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Glouceſter. It is an impropriation belonging to ſir William Guiſe, who allows the curate the privy tithes and a houſe. The curacy was augmented by lot in 1746. Sir William Guiſe is patron, Mr. Cheſter the preſent incumbent.

In the year 1137, Milo conſtable of Glouceſter gave the tithes of Elmore to the priory of Lanthony, and two years afterwards, he gave a meadow in Elmore to the ſame houſe, all which the priory enjoyed 'till it was diſſolved.

The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a double building, ſupported by pillars in the middle, and has an embattled tower, with five bells, at the weſt end.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On the top of a raiſed tomb, in the ſouth chancel, is a rude engraving of the figure of a man, and round the edge, in old characters,

A ſmith being called to ſet a pair of gyves, or fetters, upon his legs, aſked who he was; and when he underſtood him to be Hubert de Burgh, What, ſaith he, Shall I fetter him that hath ſo often delivered this kingdom from enemies? Whatever may be the conſequence, I will never do it.

A Lady remarkable for her ſtrict Piety, diffuſive Charity, and engaging Courteouſneſs of Behaviour, flowing from the trueſt Sentiments of Religion, Goodneſs, and Humanity. She was the only Daughter of John Snell, eſq; Lord of the Manor of Uffeton in the County of Warwick; which Manor, with Lands to the Value of near a Thouſand Pounds a Year, he gave by Will to ſupport the Intereſt of Epiſcopacy in Scotland. Only eight partake at preſent of theſe Exhibitions, though the Eſtate may be deemed capable of ſupporting a greater Number.

She had Iſſue three Sons and one Daughter. John, the eldeſt, died aged 21 Years. He was a Gentleman of a very extraordinary Genius, and eminently ſtudious, having in that early Time of Life acquired a perfect Knowledge of all the polite Languages, antient and modern. Benefaction.

Three pounds a year, part of the large benefaction of the late Mr. Cox of Upton St. Leonard, to ſeveral places, is aſſigned to the poor of this pariſh.

Taxes.	The Royal Aid in 1692,	£. 81	5	4
	Poll-tax — — 1694,	— 18	3	0
	Land-tax —— 1694,	— 97	16	0
	The ſame, at 3s. 1770,	— 73	7	0

In the year 1562, there were only 36 houſholders in this pariſh; but according to ſir Robert Atkyns, about the beginning of this century, there were 70 houſes, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. And there is now about the ſame number of inhabitants.

ELMSTON

IS a ſmall pariſh in the vale, lying part in the lower diviſion of Weſtminſter hundred, and part in the lower diviſion of Derhurſt hundred, five miles ſouth-eaſt from Tewkeſbury, four north-weſt from Cheltenham, and eight northward from Glouceſter.

The pariſh conſiſts principally of good arable, with ſome paſture land. The little river Swilyate runs through it, down to Tewkeſbury, where it empties itſelf into the Severn.

In old records the name is written Almundeſtan, Aylmundeſtan, and Aylmundſton, but why it was ſo called is uncertain.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, Elmſton is ſet down as a member of the large manor of Derhurſt, then belonging to the abbey of Weſtminſter, where it is ſaid, 'Brictric held one hide at Almundeſtan. 'Reimbald holds it.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

Robert Fitz-Haman took the manor from the abbey of Weſtminſter in the reign of king William the Second; but Lawrence the 25th abbat recovered it by a ſuit at law, in the reign of king Henry the ſecond, and it continued in poſſeſſion of the abbey 'till its diſſolution; when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter, who are the preſent lords of the manor. The church ſtands in Elmſton, but there is no houſe in this part of the pariſh.

TITHING and HAMLETS.

1. Uckington is a tithing and manor in this pariſh, lying in the lower diviſion of Derhurſt hundred. It has its own proper conſtable, with a tithingman under him for the pariſh of Staverton, which is a member of this manor. The ſoil of part of this hamlet is a very looſe ſand, but it bears good crops of corn.

In Domeſday-book, under the title Terra Sci Dyoniſii Pariſii, it is ſaid, 'The church of St. 'Dennis holds five hides in Hochinton, in Derheſt 'hundred.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The priory of Derhurſt, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis, was ſeized of Hochington 56 H. 3. The earl of Oxford was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; from whoſe heirs it was purchaſed by Mr. Rogers of Dowdeſwell, about ſixty years ago; and Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late John Rogers, eſq; is the preſent proprietor, and holds a court leet for her manor at Uckington, where the inhabitants of Staverton attend. For her arms, ſee Dowdeſwell.

Mr. Thomas Buckle had a good eſtate in this tithing, at the beginning of the preſent century, which is now the property of his grandſon Mr. John Buckle. His arms are, A chevron between three annulets.

This tithing is joined with Staverton in the payment of taxes.

2. Hardwick is a hamlet and manor in this pariſh, and lies in the lower part of Weſtminſter hundred. It is generally called Elmſton-Hardwick, to diſtinguiſh it from the pariſh of Hardwick, near Glouceſter. It conſiſted of five hides, and was a member of Derhurſt, as appears by Domeſday-book, p. 72.

Henry Eden and Margaret his wife levied a fine of Elmſton-Hardwick, to John Seaborn and John Chilkel, Chilkel, 21 H. 7. Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeized of it 15 H. 8. as did Thomas lord Berkeley, his brother, in the 24th year of the ſame reign, whoſe ſon Thomas lord Berkeley had livery of it the ſame year. Livery of this manor was alſo granted to Richard Ligon 9 Eliz.

Richard Dowdeſwell, of Pool-court in Worceſterſhire, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; as was the late right honourable William Dowdeſwell, eſq; at the time of his death, in 1775. See Corſe.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth 40*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Freeman is the preſent incumbent.

The impropriation, worth 170*l.* a year, formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, but now it is veſted in Jeſus college, Oxford, and Mrs. Cheſter is leſſee under the college.

Tithes of corn and hay in Elmondeſton belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

The church is large, with an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a handſome embattled tower at the weſt end.

Lands worth 2*l.* 12*s.* a year are given to repair the church.

Taxes.	The Royal Aid in 1692,	£.	79	13	0
	Poll-tax ——	1694, —	5	8	0
	Land-tax ——	1694, —	72	9	4
	The ſame, at 3*s.*	1770, —	54	18	1½

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 35 houſes in this pariſh, and about 150 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. The preſent number of inhabitants is 144.

FAIRFORD.

THIS pariſh is of a middle ſize. It lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, four miles diſtant weſt from Leachlade, eight eaſt from Cirenceſter, and twenty-three ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is a flat part of the country, affording very little variety. A fine gravel lies near the ſurface, which makes it dry and healthy. The arable lands produce good corn, and the meadow and paſture ground, of which there is a due proportion, is rich and luxuriant. The river Coln runs thro' it.

I know it has been ſaid, that the place takes its name from the Fair Ford that was there before the bridge was built over the river. It is difficult to remove opinions that have been commonly received, and uncontroverted; and tho' I am well convinced of that not being the true etymology, it may not be eaſy to ſatisfy others; but I ſubmit my ſentiments to the candour of competent judges. The antient and proper name is Fareforde, where fare does not ſignify fair, or beautiful, but a paſſage, in which ſenſe we even now ſometimes uſe it; and is derived from the Saxon verb ꝑaꝑan, to go, to paſs. The name was ſuggeſted by, and is deſcriptive of, the ſituation of the place, and ſignifies the paſſage at the ford. The river produces excellent trout, and empties itſelf into the Thames a little below.

The pariſh includes a little town, conſiſting of two ſtreets, with a market, tho' not much frequented, on Thurſdays; and two fairs, held, ſince the ſtyle was altered, on May 14, and Nov. 12, for cattle and pedlery. Another fair, ſaid to have been formerly held on the 18th of July, is now diſcontinued. The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to London leading through it, there are two or three inns for the accommodation of travellers. But the town is moſt diſtinguiſhed by the handſome ſeat belonging to Mrs. Lamb, and by the fine painted glaſs windows of the pariſh church. The earl of Hilſborough was born in the manor houſe, on which account his lordſhip has done the place the honour of taking the title of viſcount from it.

Mrs. Lamb's ſeat ſtands about a quarter of a mile above the town. It is a good houſe, with a deer-park, and gardens well laid out, and kept in proper order. There is a viſta from the north front, terminated by an obeliſk about a mile from the houſe. A fine plantation ſtretches along the eaſt bank of the Coln, with pleaſant ſerpentine walks, and openings from ſeveral ſeats and buildings, to take in views of the Wiltſhire hills and other diſtant objects.

The houſe was built by Mr. Barker, grandfather to the preſent proprietor, but modernized and much improved by the late Mr. Lamb. Dr. Parſons relates, that at the building of it, many urns and medals were found, the former broken by the workmen in digging, without ſaying what the medals were. And as this happened in the Doctor's time, I rely upon his authority. Sir Robert Atkyns took his account from Dr. Parſons's Collections, and enlarged the ſenſe, in ſaying, that medals and urns were often dug up; and our topographical writers have followed him. But upon ſtrict inquiry, I am aſſured, that none have been found here, except the above. Theſe valuables were moſt probably concealed, previouſly to a ſkirmiſh which happened hereabout, not unlikely in the time of the civil wars between the Yorkiſts and Lancaſtrians, tho' our hiſtorians have not taken notice of it. Yet, that there was an engagement is certain, from two tumuli, little more than half a mile from the houſe, which having been opened about the end of the laſt century, were found to contain many human ſculls and bones of the ſlain. But there is no veſtige of an encampment in the pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

King William the Firſt having ſeized this manor into his own hands, it ſtands under the title

Terra

Terra Regis in Domeſday-book, which gives the following particulars:

'Brictric held Fareforde in Briſtoldeſberg hundred. There were twenty-one hides in the time of king Edward, and fifty-ſix villeins, and nine bordars, with thirty plow-tillages. There is a prieſt who held one virgate of land of the manor, and three mills of 32*s.* 6*d.* There are now only thirteen hides, and one yard-land. Queen Maud held this manor, and Hunphry paid her 38*l.* and 10*s.* by tale. The queen gave four hides of the land of this manor to John the chamberlain. There are two plow-tillages, and nine villeins, and four bordars, with four plow-tillages. There are fourteen ſervi, who pay 9*l.* for their farm. The queen alſo gave Baldwin three hides and three virgates of the ſame land, and he has there two plow-tillages, and five ſervi, and one free man, who has one plow-tillage, and two bordars. It is worth 4*l.* Thoſe who held theſe two eſtates in the time of king Edward, could not withdraw themſelves from the chief of the manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

It is uncertain who had the firſt grant of it from the crown; but Philip of Worceſter was ſeized of Fairford 5 Joh. as was George de Sunevil the following year.

The manor and town of Fairford belonged to Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 47 H. 3. and Gilbert de Clare proved his right in Quo warranto, to markets, fairs, and a court leet therein, 15 E. 1.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, died ſeized of this manor 7 E. 2. and left no ſurviving iſſue. Hugh le Diſpencer the younger married Elianor, eldeſt ſiſter and coheireſs to the laſt earl, and with her had the manor of Fairford. Hugh le Diſpencer, their ſon, ſucceeded, but died without iſſue; whereby Edward Diſpencer, ſon to Edward, who was brother of the laſt Hugh, became poſſeſſed of this manor, of which he died ſeized 49 E. 3. He left Thomas Diſpencer his ſon, who was attainted and executed for treaſon 1 H. 4. Richard was ſon of Thomas. He died before he was fourteen years old, and left two ſiſters; Elizabeth, who died in her infancy, and Iſabel, married firſt to Richard Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny, and ſecondly to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. And the manor continued in the Beauchamp family, 'till king Henry the Seventh prevailed upon Anne, the great heireſs thereof, and widow of Richard Nevil, the great earl of Warwick, to convey it to him and his heirs male, in the third year of his reign.

John Tame, a merchant of London, purchaſed the manor of the king, and levied a fine thereof 7 H. 7. He married Alice, daughter of Mr. Winiho, and died ſeized of Fairford 15 H. 7. Sir Edmond Tame, his ſon, ſucceeded him, and married Agnes, daughter of ſir Edward Grevil. He was three times high ſheriff of the county of Glouceſter, and died 26 H. 8. Edmond Tame, ſon and heir of ſir Edmond, married Catherine, daughter of ſir William Dennis. He was twice high ſheriff of this county, and died without iſſue 36 H. 8. His wife ſurviving him, held Fairford in jointure. She was afterwards married to ſir Walter Buckle, who procured an additional grant of the manor of Fairford, and of all the lands in this pariſh, then lately belonging to the earl of Warwick, and formerly to the Diſpencers, 38 H. 8. The laſt mentioned Edmond Tame left three ſiſters, coheireſſes; Margaret, married to ſir Humphry Stafford; Alice, married to ſir Thomas Verney; and Iſabel, the wife of Lewis Watkin. They and their deſcendants ſold the manor to ſir Henry Unton and John Croke, from whom it was purchaſed by the Tracys. Sir John Tracy was lord of the manor in the year 1608.

Andrew Barker, eſq; purchaſed the manor of the Tracys, and was ſucceeded therein by his ſon Samuel Barker, who was high ſheriff of this county in the year 1691. He married the daughter of Mr. Hubbard of London, and left two infant daughters, coheireſſes. One died unmarried; Eſther, the ſurviving daughter, was married to James Lamb, of Hackney, in the county of Middleſex, eſq. He died without iſſue in the year 1761, and his widow is the preſent lady of the manor. The arms of Barker, are, Argent, five eſcallops in croſs Or.

Sir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Fairford 15 H. 7.

Leland ſays, ſir Edmund Tame of Fairford came out of the houſe of Tame of Stowel. He takes frequent occaſion to ſpeak handſomely of the family; and ſays, Fairford never floriſhed afore the Cumming of the Tames onto it. Sir Edmond Tame had to his ſecond wife, Elizabeth, ſiſter to John Morgan, of Monmouthſhire, who was a colonel in the reign of king Henry the Seventh. This alliance induced the colonel to purchaſe an eſtate in Fairford, and to reſide there, and was the occaſion that Edmond has been a frequent Chriſtian name in the family.

Edmond Morgan was the ſon of John. He had likewiſe a ſon Edmond, who married Margaret, daughter of —— Sadler of Purton. Walter Morgan, ſon of the laſt Edmond, married Elizabeth, daughter of ——Betterton of Fairford; and had iſſue Edmond, who married Mary, daughter and heireſs of Robert Savory, of Hannington, a family which continued in that place from the time of king John, 'till towards the end of the laſt century; and then the eſtate was carried, by the above marriage, into the name and family of Morgan. The laſt Edmond Morgan had a ſon Edmond, who was an officer in the king's army at the time of the great rebellion. He married Mary, daughter of Edward Pleydell, of Cricklade, eſq; by whom he had a numerous iſſue, among whom were Robert and James, both proprietors of eſtates at Fairford. Edmond Morgan was ſon of Robert, and Charles the only ſon of Edmond. He died in the year 1754, leaving two ſons, 1. Robert, now now a captain of a ſhip in the ſervice of the East-India company, who married a daughter of captain White, of Devonſhire. 2. Charles-Tyrrel Morgan, an eminent barriſter, who married Britannia, daughter of John Raymond, of London, eſq. Mr. Charles Morgan had alſo four daughters. Their arms are, Sable, a chevron between three ſpears heads argent.

The houſe and eſtate in Fairford which belonged to this family, have lately been purchaſed by Mr. Raymond.

TITHINGS. 1. The Borough, which has its proper conſtable.

2. Eaſt End, which has a tithingman.

3. Milltown End, which has alſo a tithingman.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Fairford. It is a vicarage worth about 150*l.* a year. The preſentation is in the dean and chapter of Glouceſter. Mr. Evans is the preſent incumbent.

Part of the advowſon of the church of Fairford was granted to Matthew de Winterborn, 18 Joh. The parſonage belonged afterwards to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and upon the diſſolution of that houſe, was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8.

The impropriation, worth 300*l.* a year, is in leaſe to Mr. Oldiſworth. All the corn tithes belong to it; the vicar hath all other tithes. When the commonable places in the pariſh were incloſed, about five or ſix years ago, the vicar had allotted to him, in lieu of what he before enjoyed, about half an acre of orcharding near his houſe; 4*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.* in the Moor, and 4*a.* 2*r.* in Prieſt Hurſt, both pieces of meadow ground; and 19*a.* 39*p.* of arable land.

The church is a large and beautiful building, 125 feet long, and 55 broad. It conſiſts of a ſpacious body, and two proportionable ailes, very handſomely paved in chequers of blue and white ſtone, and neatly pewed. It has a handſome tower in the middle, ornamented with pinnacles, and ſeveral ſcutcheons of coat armour. On the ſouth ſide is Checky, bearing a chevron. On the eaſt ſide, three chevronels, for Clare, earl of Glouceſter. There are three chancels and a veſtry. That on the north belongs to the lord of the manor, the middle to the impropriator, and the ſouth chancel to the vicar. The middle chancel is fitted up with ſtalls like the choir of ſome cathedrals. In the ſouth porch of the church are the arms of Tame, Argent, a dragon combatant vert with a lion rampant Azure, crowned proper.

A View of Fairford Church from the E.S.E Entrance of the Church Yard.

John Tame having taken a ſhip bound for Rome, in which was a large quantity of very curious painted glaſs, built this church in the year 1493, for the ſake of placing the glaſs in it, and dedicated it to the virgin Mary. The figures were deſigned by that eminent maſter, Albert Durer, to whom the greateſt improvements in painting on glaſs are attributed. There are ſome curious pieces of perſpective. The colours are very lively, and ſome of the figures ſo well finiſhed, that ſir Anthony Vandyke affirmed, that the pencil could not exceed them.

There are twenty-eight windows, exhibiting the following ſubjects:

Firſt window. The ſerpent tempting Eve; God appearing to Moſes in the fiery buſh; the angel conducting Joſhua to war; Gideon's fleece; the queen of Sheba trying Solomon's wiſdom, and offering him preſents.

2d. The ſalutation of Zacharias and Elizabeth; the birth of John the Baptiſt; Mary viſiting Elizabeth; Joſeph and Mary contracted.

3d. The angel Gabriel's ſalutation of Mary, Ave Maria plena [gratiæ] dominus te[cum]; the birth of our Saviour; the Epiphany, or the wiſe men offering him preſents; the purification of the virgin mother; the circumciſion of our Saviour, and Simeon receiving him in the temple, with an infide view of the temple.

4th. Joſeph and Mary flying to Egypt; the aſſumption of the virgin Mary; Chriſt diſputing with the doctors in the temple.

5th. Advent, viz. Our Saviour riding to Jeruſalem; Zacheus; the multitude crying Hoſanna, and ſinging, Gloria, laus, et honor tibi ſit. Our Saviour praying in the garden; Judas going to betray him; Pilate and the high prieſt ſitting in judgment againſt him; their ſcourging him, and compelling him to bear his croſs; in the upper part of the window, he is crucified between two thieves.

6th. Joſeph of Arimathea and Nichodemus taking down the body, and placing it in the ſepulchre; a repreſentation of the wonderful darkneſs; St. Michael and his angels fighting the dragon and the fallen angels, with Belzebub looking through a fiery grate.

7th. The burial of our Saviour; the angel that rolled away the ſtone, &c. with perſpective views of buildings in the garden; the transfiguration; Moſes and Elias; St. Peter, James, and John, with their three tabernacles; Jeſus appearing to his mother, with this ſalutation, Salve ſancta parens.

8th. Chriſt appearing to two diſciples going to Emmaus, and afterwards to the twelve apoſtles.

9th. Jeſus appearing to his diſciples fiſhing in the ſea of Tiberias; the miraculous draught of fiſhes; his aſcenſion into heaven from the mount of Olives; the holy ghoſt deſcending on his diſciples in the likeneſs of a dove.

St. John, Paſſus ſub Pontio Pilato crucifixus mortuus et ſepultus.

11th. 1. St. Thomas, Deſcendit ad inferna tertio die reſurrexit a mortuis. 2. St. James, Aſcendit ad celos ſedit ad dexteram dei patris omnipotentis. 3. St. Philip, Inde venturus iudicare vivos et mortuos. 4. St. Bartholomew, Credo in ſpiritum ſanctum.

12th. 1. St. Matthias, Sanctam eccleſiam catholicam ſanct'um communionem. 2. St. Simon, Remiſſionem peccatorum. 3. St. Jude, Carnis reſurrectionem. 4. St. Matthew, Et vitam eternam. Amen.

13th. The primitive fathers, St. Jerom, St. Gregory, St. Ambroſe, and St. Auguſtin.

14th. King David ſitting in judgment againſt the Amalakite for ſlaying Saul.

15th. Is the great weſt window, repreſenting the day of judgment. In the upper part, Chriſt ſits on the rainbow, incompaſſed with cherubims. Below, St. Michael weighs a wicked perſon in the ſcale, againſt a good one in the other, and tho' the devil endeavours to turn the ſcale, the good outweighs the bad. The dead are riſing out of their graves. From the mouth of an angel, receiving a ſaint into heaven, proceeds a label, on which is written, Omnis ſpe-s lauda d'um. St. Peter, with the key, lets the bleſſed into heaven, who, having paſſed him, are cloathed in white, and have crowns of glory. In another part, is a repreſentation of hell, and the great devil, with red and white teeth, three eyes, ſcaly legs and face. There is Dives praying for a drop of water, to cool his tongue; and Lazarus is placed in contraſt among the bleſſed, in Abraham's boſom; with many other devices, agreeable to the groſs ideas of the deſigner. This window is of high eſtimation.

16th. A little broken. Solomon determining the live child to the harlot; Midas king of Phrygia, with aſs's ears; the ſtory of Sampſon, Delilah, and the Philiſtines; Jewiſh ſenators; and a piece of glaſs ſaid to repreſent rubies and diamonds.

17th. The four evangeliſts, with their ſymbols. In the three next windows are the twelve prophets, with ſcrolls round their heads, whereon are written the following ſelect parts of their propheſies.

18th. Hoſea, O tua mors ero tua [not exact] c. xiii. 14. Amos, Qui edificat in cælum aſcenſione. c. ix. 6. Malachi, - - - udam ad vos judicio, et ero teſtis velox. c. iii. 5. Joel, In valle Joſephat judicabit omnes gentes. c. iii. 2.

19th. Zephaniah, Invocabuntur omnes eum, & ſervient ei. c. iii. 9. Micah, Eum odium habueris dimitte. Ezekiel, O v'am vos de ſepulchris veſtris pop'le meus. c. xxxvii. 12. Obadiah, Et erit reg'um d'ni amen. v. 21.

20th. Jeremiah, Datorem invocabitis qui fecit & indidit ſelos. David, Deus dixit, en filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te. Pſ. ii. 7. Iſaiah, Ecce virgo concipiet & pariet filium. vii. 14. Zechariah, Suſcitabo filios tuos. ix. 13.

The remaining eight windows are in the body of the church. In the four on the north ſide, are the perſecutors of the church, with devils over their heads, viz.

21ſt. Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian.

22d. Antonine, Nero, and Marcus Aurelius.

23d. Herod, Severus, and Maximinus.

24th. Decius, Annanias, and Caleb.

25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th, (on the ſouth ſide) exhibit twelve antient worthies, preſervers of the church, viz. Philippus, Valerianus, &c. with angels over them.

In the hiſtorical pieces, are repreſented many other figures and circumſtances not mentioned in this ſhort account, but which are very proper appendages to the main ſubjects. The whole was very happily preſerved from the fury of men of an intemperate zeal in the great rebellion, by the care of Mr. Oldiſworth, the impropriator, and others; not by turning the figures upſide down, as ſome ſuppoſe, (for they never minded which end was upwards, if they were but images and paintings) but by ſecuring the glaſs in ſome private place, 'till the reſtoration, when it was put up again.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north aile is a raiſed monument, with the figures of a man and woman lying along on the top, for Roger Ligon, eſq; and his wife, who had two huſbands before ſhe was married to him; firſt, Edmond Tame, eſq; and ſecondly, ſir Walter Buckle, privy counſellor to queen Elizabeth, who all lie buried in the church.

On a large flat ſtone of grey marble, are the figures of ſir Edmond Tame, and his two wives, on braſs plates; and upon plates of braſs round the edge, it is thus written in antient black characters,

✣ Of youre charite pray for the ſoule of Edmond Tame knyght here under buried which deceſſid the firſt day of October in the yere of oure lord god a thouſand ccccxxxiiij and for the ſoule of Agnes his firſt Wiſe which deceſſid the xxvi day of Iuly an° . . . . . es & all xpēn ſoules Ihū have mercy Amen. ——On the dexter ſide, at top, are the arms of Tame, as before. On the ſiniſter ſide, the ſame coat, impaling, Sable, on a croſs within a bordure ingrailed Or, five pellets, for Grevil.

Under an arch, between the north and middle chancels, there is a very large, handſome tomb of grey marble, poliſh'd, and in excellent preſervation, for John Tame, eſq; who built the church. The effigies of him and his wife are engraved on braſs plates at top, and this writing ſtands at their feet:

For Ihūs loue pray for me: I may not pray nowe pray ye:
With a pater noſter & an ave: That my paynys releſſyd may be.

Round the verge of the top ſtone,

✣ Orate pro animabus Johīs Tame Armigeri et Alicie uxoris eius qui quidem Johēs obiit octauo die Menſis Maij anno dnī Mileſimo quingenteſimo et anno Regni Regis Henrici ſept'i ſextodecimo. For Ihūs loue pray for me I may not pray now pray ye With a pater noſter ande ave That my paynys releſſyd may be. —— The tomb is ornamented at top and round the ſides with ſeveral ſcutcheons of his arms, as before, and thoſe of his wife, viz. A chevron between three birds, the ſpecies not diſtinguiſhable.

In the middle chancel are ſeveral memorials for the antient family of Oldiſworth, among which are the two following:

On an oval marble table,

Near to this place lyeth the body of the Lady Bridget Tracy, Wife to the Right Hon^ble the Lord Tracy, ſhe was buried y^e fifth of November, 1632. Here alſo lyeth buryed her Eldeſt Daughter Marial, who was married to S^r. William Poole of Saperton. Her youngeſt Daughter was Marryed to William Somervile, Eſq; whoſe youngeſt ſon, M^r. Benjamin, was a very beautiful Perſon and an excellent Scholar, for which he was moſt entirely beloved of his Mother. She bred him vp at Eaton School, and from thence removed him to Oxford, where he dyed in the nineteenth year of his age, and was buryed here by his Grandmother Tracy, December 3, 1686.

This Monument was erected by the Hon^ble M^rs Somervile, to the worthy Memory of her moſt dear Mother, Siſter, and Son. ——At bottom, Tracy impaling Argent, a chevron between three eſcallops ſable.

At the beginning of the preſent century, there were 143 houſes, and about 660 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 18 were freeholders; yearly births 20, burials 14. Atkyns. The inhabitants are now increaſed to about 1200.

FARMINGTON

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Bradley, in the Coteſwold country, two miles northward from Northleach, eight weſtward from Burford in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-one eaſt from Glouceſter. About ſeven hundred years ago, the name of this place was Tormentone. It was afterwards variouſly written in the records, according to the different judgment of perſons in office; as, Thormenton, Thormarton; which come ſo near to Tormarton, the name of another pariſh in this county, that, if ſome miſtakes have happened in the application of particulars, it will be the more excuſable. The modern name of this pariſh is Farmington, but I am totally ignorant of its ſignification.

The face of this part of the country is turgid, uneven, and almoſt wholly deſtitute of plantations, in which laſt particular, there is certainly great room for improvement. The ſoil produces very good corn, to which the greater part is appropriated; and the farmers give much attention to the breed of their ſheep, for which they are deſervedly famous.

Norbury-camp, mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns, and others, as being in Farmington, lies in the hamlet of Eaſtington, in the pariſh of Northleach, where the particulars of it are given.

The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Oxford paſſes thro' this pariſh; and a ſtream from a ſpring, which riſes here, empties itſelf into the Windruſh, below Sherbourn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This is ſet down as part of the large manor of Lecce, [now Northleach] in Domeſday-book, where it is ſaid, 'There are two plow-tillages in demean 'at Tormentone, and twenty-five villeins, with 'twelve plow-tillages, and four ſervi.' D. B. p. 70.

Thomas de Blachamp and William Haſtings were ſeized of the manor of Thormenton, which they held by the ſervice of one knight's fee, 5 E. 1. and Peter de Staunton held the manor 16 E. 1. About this time it paſſed to the St. Phileberts; for Benedict Blakenham had licence to alienate one plow-tillage, and the advowſon of the chapel, to Henry de St. Philebert, 26 E. 1. John de St. Philebert, ſon of Henry, ſucceeded, and held the manor, with free warren, 14 E. 2. and died ſeized thereof 7 E. 3. leaving ſir John de St. Philebert, his ſon and heir, who levied a fine, and ſold the manor and advowſon of Thormenton, for 200 marks, to William de Eddington, biſhop of Wincheſter, 25 E. 3. The biſhop gave this manor to the Auguſtin priory of Bonhommes, at Edington in Wiltſhire, which he founded in 1352. It was dedicated to St. James, St. Catherine, and All Saints, and valued at the diſſolution at 521*l.* 12*s.* 0½*d.*

After the diſſolution of the priory, the manor and advowſon of Thormarton were granted to Michael Aſhfield 32 H. 8. who dying the ſame year, livery was granted to his ſon Robert 4 Mar. Robert Aſhfield, eſq; was lord of the manor in 1608, and ſold it to ſir Rice Jones, whoſe deſcendant, ſir Henry Jones, diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the wars in Flanders, and was ſlain there, leaving an only daughter and heireſs, married to the earl of Scarborough, who, in her right, was lord of the manor about the beginning of this century. Of him it was purchaſed by Edmond Waller, eſq; whoſe ſon Edmond Waller, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Azure, on a bend ſable cotized argent, three walnut leaves Or.

The following records ſeem to belong to Farmington, tho' ſir Robert Atkyns has placed them under Tormarton, where the Phileberts had no concern.

William de Haſtings levied a fine of lands in Tormarton [it ſhould be Tormentone] to Benedict Blakenham and Julian, or Joan, his wife, 1 E. 1.

John

John de St. Philebert levied a fine of lands in Tormarton to Roger de Aſperley, and Juliana his wife; and they reconvey Juliana's right of dower to John de St. Philebert, reſerving a rent of 20*l.* for her life, 5 E. 3. Thomas Hungerford, and others, were ſeized of 14*s.* rent, iſſuing out of two meſſuages and two yard-lands in Tormarton, in truſt for the priory of Bonhommes, at Edington in Wiltſhire, 16 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth 120*l.* a year; Edmond Waller, eſq; is patron, Mr. Binam the preſent incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a ſmall building, neatly pewed, with a low tower at the weſt end, in which are three bells. The inhabitants of this pariſh formerly buried at Northleach.

At the beginning of the preſent century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 25 houſes in this pariſh, and about 100 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. The preſent number of houſes is 38, of inhabitants exactly 195.

FILTON and HAY.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Berkeley, four miles north from Briſtol, eight ſouth from Thornbury, and thirty ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Briſtol leads through it, and one of the heads of the river Trim, or Trin, riſes in it, and runs to Weſtbury. The name is ſuppoſed to be compounded of fell, rocky, ſtony; and ton, a common termination.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, in the reign of king William the Firſt, this was a part of Horfelle, (now written Horfield) wherefore there is no account of the manor in Domeſday-book, under the name by which it is known at preſent. But Robert Fitz-Harding having given the other part of Horfelle to St. Auguſtin's monaſtery at Briſtol, this began to be diſtinguiſhed from it, by the name of Felleton, and Filton.

Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, deſcended from the above Robert Fitz-Harding, died ſeized of this manor 16 R. 2. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, Thomas Fitz-Nichols, who died 6 H. 5. leaving two daughters coheireſſes; of whom, Elianor, the elder, was married to John Browning, of Haresfield; whereby John Browning, ſon of John, became ſeized of this manor 8 H. 5.

But it was probably a moiety of the manor only, becauſe the records ſhew, that the manor of Filton, which I ſuppoſe to be the other moiety, was held by the Blounts, about the time of the above dates. Edward Blount and Margaret his wife were ſeized of it 4 R. 2. and Wenteline, widow of John Blount, died ſeized of the ſame, and of Bitton, 32 H. 6.

Thomas Mallet, eſq; died ſeized of this manor 22 Eliz. and left John, his ſon, twelve years old at his father's death. Mr. Pope was late lord of this manor.

Robert Fitz-Harding gave ſix meſſuages in this pariſh to the abbey of St. Auguſtin's in Briſtol, wherefore the abbat would have them conſidered as parcel of the manor of Horfield; and accordingly his claim to a court leet in Horfield and Filton was allowed, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. After the diſſolution of that abbey, theſe lands in Filton were granted, with the manor of Horfield, to the biſhoprick of Briſtol, 34 H. 8. and they now belong to that biſhoprick. Theſe lands were afterwards deemed a manor, for in Willis's edition of Ecton's Theſaurus, it is ſaid, the manors of Horfield and Filton were ſold out of the biſhoprick, to Thomas Andrews, for 1256*l.* 14*s.* in the year 1649.

HAMLET. Hay is a hamlet in this pariſh. John Newton, burgeſs of Briſtol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Le Hay, near Filton, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille; and John Newton, ſon of John, levied a fine of the ſame lands, to the uſe of William Moor, 28 H. 6. Henry Strangeways and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Filton and Herry-Stoke 16 H. 7.

A meadow in this pariſh belonged to the Magdalen hoſpital in Briſtol, and was granted to John Bellowe and John Bloxolme 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Briſtol, worth about 80*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron, and Mr. Davis the preſent incumbent. This is one of the ſmall livings augmented by Mr. Colſton's donation.

The rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Filton antiently belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtin's in Briſtol, and after the diſſolution of that abbey, were granted to the biſhop of Briſtol, 34 H. 8. But I underſtand by the wo[rd] rectory rectory, in this place, nothing more than the tithes of the ſix meſſuages which belonged to that abbey, as already obſerved.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is ſmall, with a little aile on each ſide of the nave, and a low tower, with five bells, at the weſt end, which had a ſpire, blown down about ninety years ſince.

FLAXLEY

IS a pariſh of no great extent, in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in the foreſt diviſion of the county, two miles diſtant ſouth-eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, three north from Newnham, and ten ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. The name was antiently written Flaxlyn, which comes from glyn, a valley; and agrees with the ſituation of the place. The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of paſture and woodlands. The manufacture of the place is iron, for making of which there is a furnace and forges.

An abbey was founded here, by Roger, the ſecond earl of Hereford, in the reign of king Henry the Firſt, for monks of the Ciſtertian order,[a] who were Benedictines reformed. The founding of which ſeems to have been occaſioned by an accident which happened to the earl's brother, who was killed by an arrow in hunting, in the very place where the abbey was afterwards built, as Leland found it related in a table hung up in the abbey church. King Henry the Second, whilſt duke of Normandy, gave the monks of this place a charter, confirming to them their lands and poſſeſſions; and afterwards, when king of England, he gave them another; both which charters are inſerted in the Appendix N°. 15 and 16. In the former, ſome particulars omitted in ſir Robert Atkyns's tranſlation are ſupply'd. In the latter, it is obſervable, that the abbat and his conventuals are called the monks of Dene; whereby it appears, that Flaxley was at that time appurtenant to Dene, and not a diſtinct pariſh; and the lands, at this time, lie very confuſed and intermixt with thoſe of Little-Dean, and with the woods of the foreſt.

The abbey was ſituated in the valley of Caſtiard, a name at preſent unknown to the pariſhioners. It was under the juriſdiction of the biſhop of Hereford,[o] by whom the abbats were conſecrated.

[a] It has been already ſhewn, (p. 11) by what means lands, formerly belonging to the Ciſtertian monaſteries, and ſome others, became exempt from tithes; and it is well known that ever ſince the diſſolution of the houſes to which they belonged, they have been privileged with the ſame exemption. But Mr. Stevens has given a very extraordinary opinion reſpecting ſuch lands, in the ſecond volume of his Supplement to the Monaſticon, which deſerves to be taken notice of. It is on the ſtate of the caſe of the owners and inheritors of certain lands within the lordſhip of Bernoldſwick, by them and their anceſtors purchaſed from king Henry the Eighth.

He ſtates, that thoſe lands were given to the Ciſtertian abbey of Kirkſtall, before the Lateran council, and were of their own manure and tillage. And that by the ſaid Lateran council it was declared, that the lands poſſeſſed by the Ciſtertians, before the holding of that council, ſhould pay no tithes.

Now comes the opinion, which Mr. Stevens produces to determine the preſent right of exemption from tithes. His words are theſe:

'In fine, it has been reſolved, by council learned in the law, that the land purchaſed in fee of king Henry the VIIIth, and occupied by the owners of the inheritance, being of the Ciſtercian order, and given to the abbey before the Lateran council, as this of Bernoldſwick was, ought to be free by law, whilſt it continues in the occupation of any owner of the inheritance, but when it is in leaſe or farm, the privilege does not extend to the farmer or tenant, and ſo they ought to pay.'

How happy is it for the proprietors of ſuch lands that the opinion or reſolution of Mr. Stevens's learned council does not conſtitute a law. I have elſewhere expreſs'd my diſapprobation of matters being ſo ſettled at the Reformation, as not to make better proviſion out of appropriations, for ſome of the parochial clergy. But, as things now are, it would be the higheſt injuſtice to take away thoſe exemptions, eſpecially from eſtates which have paſſed by purchaſe through ſeveral hands, and valuable conſiderations have been paid on account of them.

Mr. Stevens was no friend to the Reformation, as appears from ſeveral exceptionable paſſages collected from ſir Henry Spelman's Hiſtory of Sacrilege, and other ſources. Having ſhewn that king Henry the Eighth granted the ſcite of Rufford monaſtery, in Nottinghamſhire, and all its lordſhips, to the earl of Shrewſbury, he ſays, 'From the aforeſaid earl of Shrewſbury, this eſtate came by the females (the male line being extinct) to the family of the Saviles, the laſt of which line alſo was the famous viſcount, then earl, and laſtly marquis of Halifax, in the reign of king Charles and king James the Second; where we ſee the bane of 'thoſe church-lands attending both thoſe great families, quite 'extinguiſhed in ſo ſhort a time; I mean that line of the Saviles, 'for I know there are ſtill others of other branches.' And again, after ſhewing that Ralph Rowlet the elder, had a grant from king Henry the Eighth of the manor of Byſhemead, which belonged to the abbey of that place, in Bedfordſhire, he proceeds with the deſcent of the manor to Ralph his ſon and heir, who died without iſſue; and then concludes, 'Thus the family was extinct in the 'firſt heir that took poſſeſſion of this land dedicated to God.'

There is nothing in which men ſo much diſagree as in their notions of religion; nor is there any eſtabliſhment but may gain a degree of reſpect from habit and education. This makes reformation difficultly effected; for the ſmalleſt changes from eſtabliſhed principles and forms diſguſt vulgar minds. Nay we ſee that ſome perſons of learning cannot part from what they have been taught to venerate without great reluctance, tho' the ſeeming loſs ſhould be real gain. Hence they remonſtrate and complain; but ſurely the zeal of theſe men has carried them too far, in repreſenting the want of iſſue in one family, and a decline in fortune in another, (for that is alledged by them in ſome inſtances) as the judgment of God, particularly ſent to puniſh ſuch perſons as have not acted agreeably to their peculiar mode of thinking, by purchaſing lands which formerly belonged to diſſolved monaſteries; whereas they are nothing more than common events, which have happened to all ſorts of people, and are daily brought about in all countries, under every kind of eſtabliſhment.

It was dedicated to the virgin Mary, and valued at the diſſolution at 112*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* a year, as I find it ſet down in a table of the value of all the monaſteries in England, taken from a manuſcript in the Cotton library. Thomas Ware was the laſt abbat, who retired, after the diſſolution of his houſe, to Tame in Oxfordſhire, where he died in the year 1546. The abbey church is ſo totally demoliſhed, that it can only be gueſſed where it ſtood.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, this manor is included in the general account of Dene. It was given to the abbey at the foundation of it, by Roger, earl of Hereford. The abbat had a grant of an iron forge, and of two oaks every week out of the foreſt of Dean, for the maintenance of the forge, of king Henry the Second. But the taking of the two oaks was very deſtructive to the foreſt, wherefore the monks had a wood granted to them inſtead thereof, 42 H. 3.

This manor, with the wood, continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey 'till the diſſolution; and was afterwards granted to ſir William Kingſton, who died ſeized thereof 32 H. 8. and livery was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton, ſon of ſir William, the ſame year; who, by his deed, conveyed it to the king, and in the 36th year of the ſame reign, the king, by his letters patent, regranted to him the ſcite of the late abbey or monaſtery of Flaxley, and all the church, bell-houſe, and church-yard of the ſame, and all the houſes, buildings, rivers, pools, lands, grounds and ſoils of the ſame, as well within as without the ſaid ſcite; and alſo all other the manors and granges of Flaxley houſe, &c. &c.

William Kingſton, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, ſoon after which it paſſed to Abraham Clarke, eſq; who died ſeized of it in 1683.

From him the manor went to his relation, William Bovey, eſq; who dying in 1692, his widow enjoy'd it; after whom it paſſed to Thomas Crawley, eſq; who aſſumed the name and arms of Bovey. He married a daughter of —— Lloyd, by whom he had iſſue ſeveral children, and dying in the year 1775, poſſeſſed of a large eſtate in this pariſh, was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas-Crawley Bovey, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor. The arms of Bovey are, Ermine, on a bend gules and ſable, between two martlets of the latter, three gutties d'Or.

The manor houſe is that wherein the abbat formerly lived, with ſome addition to it. Notwithſtanding it is a long, low building, of two ſtories, it has a handſome and venerable appearance.

Richard Brain, eſq; died ſeized of lands in Flaxley 15 Eliz. and left Thomas, his grandſon, twenty years old at his grandfather's death.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of the foreſt. The lord of the manor is patron, Mr. Crawley is the preſent incumbent. The church was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Flaxley. The impropriation belongs to Mr. Bovey, who pays 8*l.* a year out of it to the curate; who beſides has the intereſt of 1200*l.* left by Mrs. Bovey, to improve the curacy. The church is very ſmall. It was rebuilt by Mrs. Pope.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is the following memorial on an old monument in the chancel:

On George Kingſton, Gent. who was buried Mar. 4 1644

Vixi dum vellem, moriebar tempore grato,

Kings have ſtones on them when they die,
And here Kingſtone under a ſtone doth lie.

Can ſhun Death's dart; Death ſtill will have his right.
O then bethink to what you all muſt truſt
At laſt to die, & come to Judgment juſt.

Benefactions.

Abraham Clarke, eſq; gave 60*l.* to the poor. William Bovey, eſq; gave 100*l.* to the ſame uſe. The widow Conſtance gave 20*s.* a year to the poor. Mrs. Bovey gave 1200*l.* to augment the curacy; and left 600*l.* more, now laid out in lands by truſtees; two thirds for apprenticing children of the pariſh; the remainder for buying religious books for the poor of this pariſh, and of Little-Dean.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were, according to him, 40 houſes, and about 200 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. There are now about 196 inhabitants.

FORTHAMPTON.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, in the lower diviſion of Tewkeſbury hundred, three miles weſt from Tewkeſbury, and eight north from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on the north ſide by Worceſterſhire, and has the river Severn running on the eaſt of it, for about half a mile. In the road from this this place to Tewkeſbury, is a paſſage over that river, called the Lower Load.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of rich paſture ground. Dr. York, biſhop of St David's, has repaired the roads in this pariſh, at a great expence, which before were exceedingly bad. The oak delights in a deep ſoil, and flouriſhes here; but the tenants have committed intolerable waſte, by polling the trees, that they may afterwards take the lop. This is the leſs excuſable, as coals, brought down the river from Shropſhire and Staffordſhire, are very reaſonable.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor was in the crown at the time of general ſurvey. Among the particulars of the large manor of Tewkeſbury, in Domeſday-book, it is thus recorded:

'In Fortemeltone nine hides belonged to this manor [of Teodekeſberie.] There are two plow-tillages in demean, and twenty plow-tillages are ſhared among the villeins and bordars, and ſix among the ſervi and ancillæ. There is a wood. It was worth 10*l.* in the time of king Edward, now [only] 8*l.* Earl William held theſe two eſtates [i.e. Hanlege and Fortemeltone] and they paid tax in behalf of Tewkeſbury.' D. B. p. 68.

King Henry the Second gave to the abbey of Tewkeſbury the vill of Ferthelmenton, which was held of the honour of Robert Fitz-Hamon; and the abbey had court leet, waifs, and felons goods therein, which were allowed them, in a writ of quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

The manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey 'till its diſſolution. And the manor-houſe of Forthampton, and certain lands there, were granted to Giles Harper 33 H. 8. The manor was afterwards granted to Robert, earl of Saliſbury, 1 Jac. Charles Dowdeſwell, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. His ſucceſſor, Charles Dowdeſwell, eſq; ſold it to Samuel Clarke, eſq; and he ſold it to Dr. Iſaac Maddox, late lord biſhop of Worceſter. His lordſhip left iſſue one only daughter, who, after his death, was married to the honourable Dr. James Yorke, now lord biſhop of St. David's, who in right of his wife, is the preſent lord of this manor, and proprietor of a large eſtate in this pariſh, where he has a handſome ſeat. His lordſhip's arms are, Argent, a ſaltire azure, with a bezant in the quarter.

Mr. Hayward has a good houſe and eſtate in this pariſh.

A portion of tithes in Forthampton and Buſhley, with a paſture ground called Oxley, lately belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Edward lord Clinton 1 E. 6. The cloſe called Oxley was granted to Roger Dowdeſwell 7 Jac.

HAMLETS. 1. Swaily. Edward earl of Hereford held Swaily, 4 H. 4.

Down-end is another hamlet.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, within the peculiar of Derhurſt, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* paid by the impropriator. The lord of the manor is patron and impropriator. The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a large building, and ſtands on a riſing ground, with a ſtrong tower, and five bells, at the weſt end.

FRAMPTON

IS a village in the hundred of Whitſton, in the vale part of the county; bounded on the north by the river Severn, on the ſouth-weſt by Slimbridge, on the north-eaſt by Whitminſter, and on the north-weſt by Arlingham. It is ten miles ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter, eight weſtward from Stroud, ſeven north of Durſley, and five ſouth from Newnham, acroſs the Severn. The pariſh conſiſts of rich paſture, meadow, and ſome arable land, with gravel in many places little more than a foot below the ſurface. The water riſes almoſt to the top of the gravel, ſo that the houſes have no cellaring. The

The Stroud river, whoſe name I ſuppoſe to be the Froom, riſes at Brimpsfield; paſſes by, and gives name to Frampton, a hamlet in the pariſh of Saperton; runs to Froomhill or Froomill, near Stroud, and ſo on to Froombridge in this pariſh; and at length empties itſelf into the Severn at Framilode, i. e. the emptying of the Froom; for lode comes from labian, which in the Saxon language, ſignifies to empty. Theſe circumſtances ſeem to prove that Froom is the true name of the river, which it has communicated to this village, for Frampton ſignifies the town upon the Froom. It is generally called Frampton upon Severn, to diſtinguiſh it from another Frampton, near Briſtol. What ſir Robert Atkyns ſays of the Berkeley river bounding this pariſh on the ſouth, is ſo great a miſtake, that it is in no part within ſeveral miles of it.

The turnpike-road to the paſſages over the Severn, at Framilode and Arlingham, leads thro' this village, which is one of the handſomeſt and pleaſanteſt in the county. It conſiſts chiefly of one ſtreet; and tho' the houſes are not all joined together, after the manner of our market-towns, yet they ſtand in two ſtraight rows, parallel to each other, with the ſpace of about one hundred and fifty yards between them.

The piece of ground, or ſtreet, between the rows of houſes, was formerly called Roſamond's-Green, from the name of an unfortunate lady of the family of the Cliffords, whoſe ſtory is pretty well known.

On the ſouth ſide, about the middle of this vaſt ſtreet, is an elegant free-ſtone houſe, with large offices and gardens, ſuitable to the fortune and dignity of a nobleman. This was the ſeat of the late Richard Clutterbuck, eſq; deceaſed. It is built on the very ſcite of the antient family manſion of the Cliffords. To this gentleman the neighbourhood is indebted for the improved ſtate of the pariſh. The green I have been ſpeaking of, is a flat piece of ground, and 'till lately was generally overflowed with water in the winter, and conſequently very rotten. The road was almoſt impaſſable, and the inhabitants extremely ſubject to agues. But he made underground drains to carry off the water, and threw up a fine, ſtraight, gravelly road, through the middle of the lawn, which contributes to give the place that beautiful appearance, for which it is ſo deſervedly admired. And ſince the drains have been made, the people are as free from the ague, as the inhabitants of any part of the vale.

At Froombridge in this pariſh, hath been lately erected one of the largeſt and compleateſt works in the kingdom, for making of iron and ſteel wire, uſed in this and ſome of the neighbouring counties, more eſpecially in the manufacture of cards for the clothing buſineſs. From this work alſo that valuable branch of our commerce, the Newfoundland fiſhery, is partly ſupply'd with ſteel wire for fiſh-hooks, to a very conſiderable amount annually. And at this place alſo there is a braſs-work lately erected.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Drogo the ſon of Ponz holds Frantone of the 'king. There are ten hides taxed. Erneſi held it. 'There are three plow-tillages in demean, and 'ten villeins, and eight bordars, with ſix plow-'tillages. There are nine ſervi, and a mill of 10*s.* '[value] and ten acres of meadow, a wood one 'mile long and three furlongs broad, one burgage 'in Glouceſter of 6*d.* [value]. It is worth and 'was worth 100*s.* Roger de Laci holds unjuſtly 'one hide of this manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

Ponz was a noble Norman, whoſe three ſons, Walter, Drogo, and Richard, attended king William in his invaſion of England. Drogo died ſeized of this manor without iſſue 20 W. 1. and was ſucceeded by his brother Richard, who had large revenues in Wales, and was a great benefactor to the priory of Malvern in Worceſterſhire. He had two ſons, Simon and Walter, which latter being ſeated at Clifford in Herefordſhire, took the ſurname of Clifford, and had this manor of Frampton ſettled upon him.[p] He had iſſue two ſons, Walter and Richard, and two daughters, whereof Roſamond, the younger, was the famous miſtreſs to Henry the Second,[q] and mother to William Long Eſpee, earl of Saliſbury. The manor of Frampton was ſettled on Richard, the younger ſon, who had livery of it 2 R. 1. He married Lettice, daughter of William de Albaniaco, of Camber.

Sir Hugh Clifford, ſon of Richard, ſucceeded him in this manor, and died ſeized thereof, with markets and fairs, 38 H. 3. Sir John Clifford was his ſon and heir, and died ſeized of Frampton 27 E. 1. He had a ſon Richard, and two daughters, who died before him, whereby[r] Iſabel, his only

[p] He gave a mill in Frampton, and a meadow adjoining to it, called Lecton, to the nuns of Godſtow in Oxfordſhire, to pray for the ſouls of Margaret his wife, and Roſamond his daughter.

[q] She died at Woodſtock, in a ſpacious and large appartment which king Henry the Second cauſed to be made for her, with great art, like a labyrinth, on purpoſe to ſecure her from the violence of queen Eleanor, who nevertheleſs, if we believe the common report, found out the paſſage, and poiſoned her. But John Brompton and Henry Knighton tell us, that ſhe died a natural death, ſoon after ſhe had been incloſed in the ſaid apartment. And the ſame thing is alſo aſſerted by Ranulph Higden. She was buried in the choir of the nunnery of Godſtow, and it is ſaid the following epitaph was placed upon her tomb:

Hic jacet in tumba Roſa mundi, non Roſa munda;
Non redolet, ſed olet, quæ redolere ſolet.

But Higden and Knighton have both of them quod for quæ in the laſt line.

[r] Thus it appears that the manor went out of the name of the Cliffords by the marriage of this Iſabel; but the capital meſſuage and divers lands in Frampton remained in a younger branch of that name, who in a lineal deſcent are ſeized of part of them at this preſent time, as may be ſeen by the following pedigree. Henry Clifford (brother of ſir Hugh, who was grandfather of Iſabel) was living 12 E. 1. and held an eſtate in Frampton. William Clifford, ſon of Henry, had to his ſecond wife, Catherine, daughter of Ralph de St. Maur. William Clifford his ſon died 15 E. 2. John, ſon of William, was conſtituted warden of the foreſt of Bradon in Wiltſhire, 1 H. 4. Here is a deficiency in the pedigree. Henry Clifford, ſon of James, was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 27 H. 6. James Clifford, ſon of Henry, was only ſurviving daughter, became his ſole heir. She was married to Robert Fitz-Pain, ſteward of the king's houſhold, who died ſeized of Frampton 9 E. 2. This manor was held of Thomas de Berkeley by the ſervice of 22 marks yearly. At this time there were 420 acres of arable land, let at 6*d.* an acre; 50 acres of meadow, at 2*s.* 6*d.* 30 acres of paſture, at 6*d.* and 40 acres of oak wood, the herbage of which was worth half a mark. There were 15 free tenants, who paid 8*l.* 4*s.* rent of aſſize. There were 6 yard-lands in villeinage, at 20*s.* a yard-land; and the pleas of the court were worth half a mark. Eſcheator's Book.

Robert, ſon and heir of Robert Fitz-Pain, left an only daughter Iſabel, married to ſir John Chidiock, who had iſſue another ſir John Chidiock, who, in right of his mother, had the manor of Frampton. He married Elianor, daughter of ſir John Fitz-Warren, by whom he had a ſon John Chidiock, who married Catherine, daughter of ſir Ralph Lumley, and left only daughters coheireſſes.

Catherine, one of the coheireſſes, was married to ſir John Arundel, of Llanhern in Cornwall, and afterwards to Roger Lukenore, and dying ſeized of the manor of Frampton 19 E. 4. was ſucceeded by ſir Thomas Arundel, her ſon, whoſe ſon and heir, ſir John Arundel, died ſeized of this manor 5 Mariæ. His ſon, John Arundel, eſq; had livery of it the ſame year, whoſe ſon John was ſeized of the manor of Frampton-upon-Severn in the year 1608, and afterwards ſold it to ſir Humphry Hook, alderman of Briſtol.

Sir Heel Hook is ſaid to be the preſent lord of this manor, but Mr. Stephens holds the court baron.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that William de Lucy held lands in Frampton 1 H. 3. ſir Hugh Clifford purchaſed lands in Frampton on Severn of Walter de Clifford 33 H. 3. The knights templers were ſeized of lands in Frampton upon Severn 2 E. 1. A fine was levied of lands in Frampton to Robert Iſham and others 14 H. 7.

Here is a fair kept on the 3d of February, called Frying-pan fair.

The pariſhioners have a right of common of paſture in Slimbridge-Wharfe; and have alſo a common containing about 120 acres, called Egrove.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Durſley. It is a vicarage, worth upwards of 60*l.* a year, having been doubly augmented with the queen's bounty. Mr. Wicks is patron and impropriator. Here is no parſonage houſe.

The rectory and the advowſon of the vicarage did belong to the Cliffords. Being forfeited to the crown by attainder, they were granted to Edward Couper, and Valentine Fairweather, 7 E. 6.

The vicar hath one third of all tithes, and the impropriator the other two. Chancellor Parſons, who made his collections at the beginning of this century, ſays, 'the impropriation formerly paid 18*s. per ann. to the pariſh clerk, but* [the payment] has been detained for twenty years laſt paſt. There was alſo 20*s. to the hayward, in lieu of an acre called the hayward's mead, by the lord of the manor, but detained for theſe twenty years*'. The impropriation is worth about 70*l.* a year. The preſentation formerly belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter.

The church is a neat one, conſiſting of two ailes, and a chapel on each ſide of the chancel, with a handſome gallery, and a pinnacled tower, in which are ſix bells, at the weſt end. The middle chancel belongs to the vicar, the two ſide chancels, or chapels, to the impropriator.

In the north wall of the chancel, in a niche, is the figure of a knight, lying along in full proportion, croſs-legged, with ſpurs on, a ſhield on his left arm, and a dog at his feet. Near it, in another niche, is the figure of a lady. They are both in free-ſtone, perfectly intire, and are ſuppoſed to repreſent ſome of the Cliffords.

On an old ſtone in the chancel:

William Clifford, fourth brother of James, married Joan, daughter of Thomas Beard of Saul, in Glouceſterſhire. Henry was third ſon and ſurviving heir of William. James Clifford, of Swindon in this county, who had for his ſecond wife, Blanch, daughter of Thomas Hopkins of Howelfield, or Hewelsfield, in this county, was ſeized of an eſtate in Frampton in 1608. John Clifford, ſon of James, married Mary, daughter of William Shepard of Horſley, and left only three daughters, i. e. Mary, married to Nathaniel Clutterbuck of Eaſtington; Roſamond, married firſt to Edward Haynes of Frampton, ſecondly, to John Simmons, and thirdly, to Zachariah Wintle; and Elizabeth, married to Gilbert Tripet of Aure.

When ſir Robert Atkyns wrote his Hiſtory, there were ſaid to be 100 houſes in this pariſh, and about 500 inhabitants, whereof 26 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 13. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1710 to 1719, both incluſive, there are regiſter'd 139 baptiſms, and 104 burials. In a like ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, are regiſter'd 182 baptiſms, and and 135 burials; which ſhews that the inhabitants of this pariſh have increaſed very conſiderably, ſince the date of the firſt ſeries; and they are now about 600.

FRAMPTON COTTEREL.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, five miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Sodbury, ſeven miles ſouth from Thornbury, and about thirty miles ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is ſo called from the river Froom, which runs through it, in its courſe to Briſtol, where it makes the key of that port; and from the family of the Cotels, who were antiently lords of the manor.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſture ground, with ſome arable land. The ſtone is of a rediſh brown grit, and ſeems to have a ſmall proportion of iron in it.

Here is a conſiderable manufacture of felt hats, which employs a pretty many hands.

The pariſh is ſaid to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Walter Baliſtarius holds Frantone, in Langeſe 'hundred. There are five hides taxed. Aleſtan 'held it of Boſcombe. In demean is one plow-'tillage, and ten villeins, and eleven bordars, with 'five plow-tillages. There are five ſervi, and two 'mills of 5s. [rent]. And there is a church, 'which was not [in the time of king Edward]. 'It was worth 8*l*. now [only] 3*l*.' D. B. p. 77.

This manor belonged to the family of the Cotels ſoon after the Norman conqueſt. John Cotel, the laſt of that family, died ſeized of it 29 H. 3. before which the pariſh had obtained the name of Frampton Cotel.

Robert Walerond was ſeized of Frampton Cotel, and purchaſed a charter of free warren 41 H. 3. His wife Maud held it in dower, and proved her right to markets, fairs, and free warren, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. John Walerond, and Robert Walerond, and Iſabel his wife, were ſeized of this manor 2 E. 2.

John de Willington held this manor of the honour of Wallingford 12 E. 2. and died ſeized thereof 12 E. 3. as did ſir Ralph de Willington, his ſon, 22 E. 3. whoſe ſon Henry, had livery thereof the following year. Sir John de Willington, ſon of Henry, had ſeizin of this manor, and of the advowſon of the church, 2 R. 2. and Ralph de Willington, ſon of ſir John, died ſeized thereof 6 R. 2. Joan his widow had the third part of the manor aſſigned to her in dower 8 R. 2. and having married Thomas Weſt, whom ſhe alſo ſurvived, died 6 H. 4. Ralph de Willington, ſon of Ralph and the ſaid Joan, died ſeized of the other two parts of this manor 19 R. 2. and was ſucceeded by his brother John, who died ſeized of this manor, and of the advowſon of the church 20 R. 2. leaving no iſſue; whereby his ſiſter Joan became his heir. She carried this eſtate, by her marriage, to John Wrath, and John Wrath, their ſon, dying without iſſue 13 H. 4. left his two ſiſters his heirs; of whom, Elizabeth was married to ſir William Poulton, and Iſabel was the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the moiety of the manor of Frampton 14 H. 4. They dying without iſſue, the whole manor was veſted in Iſabel Beaumont. She had iſſue John and Iſabel, who both dying without iſſue, were ſucceeded by ſir Thomas Beaumont, who died ſeized of this eſtate 29 H. 6. as did his ſon William Beaumont 32 H. 6. and Philip Beaumont, brother of William, 13 E. 4.

Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, John Baſſet and Elizabeth his wife, John Beaumont, clerk, John Chicheſter and Margaret his wife, and John Croker and Anne his wife, by ſeveral fines levied 16, 18, & 20 H. 7. convey the manor and advowſon of Frampton Cotel, to king Henry the Seventh.

The manor was afterwards granted to Giles lord D'Aubeny, who dying 6 H. 8. his ſon, Henry lord D'Aubeny, had livery thereof the ſame year. The manor again reverted to the crown, and was granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, who being attainted, John Baſſet obtained a grant of it 4 Mariæ, which was confirmed to Arthur Baſſet 7 Eliz.

The manor was afterwards purchaſed by the Players. William Player, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, as was his ſon, Thomas Player, eſq; in the year 1736. Charles Bragge, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

Sir John Seymour had a large houſe, with a park, and a good eſtate in this pariſh, from whom they went by purchaſe to Henry Symes, eſq; and were carried, by the marriage of his daughter Jane, to Edward Biſs, eſq; and then paſſed out of that name, by the marriage of his daughter, to Gabriel Hale, eſq; who was the owner of them when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh; but they are now the property of William Southwell, eſq.

John de Acton and Sybil his wife were ſeized of a mill and eighty acres in Frampton Cotel 6 E. 2. Walter Gacelyn died ſeized of one meſſuage and two plow-tillages in Frampton Cotel 7 E. 2. as did Walter his ſon 7 E. 3. and William, ſon of the laſt Walter, 20 E. 3.

Jeffry Stowel and Matthew Stowel were both ſeized of lands in Frampton 37 E. 3. William Orſter levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Frampton Cotel, to John Walſh and others 12 H. 7.

Wickwick is a tithing in this pariſh, about two miles from the church, from which an antient family reſiding here, took their name.

The manors of Magnesfield and Wickwick were granted by king Henry the Eighth, to ſir John Seymour, who died ſeized of them 27 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir Edward Seymour. The manor of Wickwick came afterwards to the Kemyſes, and then to the Browns. This manor, with a large eſtate in the tithing, was lately the property of Francis Brown, eſq; deceaſed, who leaving two daughters coheireſſes, one of them was married to —— Daubony, eſq; of the city of Briſtol, who, in her right, has a moiety of the manor and eſtate. His arms are, Gules, four fuſils in feſs argent.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 130*l.* a year. The patrons are, the duke of Beaufort, (as heir to the late lord Botetourt) Mr. Southwell, and Mr. Jacob; whoſe ſhares being unequal, an agreement was made in the year 1765, to preſent in the following order, viz. 1. FRETHORN

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Whitſtone, three miles ſouth-eaſtward from Newnham, ſix northward from Durſley, and nine ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on the weſt by the river Severn, with Frampton on the ſouth, Arlingham to the north, and Saul to the eaſt of it.

The lands are chiefly in meadow and paſture. The air is unwholeſome, and the inhabitants are ſubject to the ague.

Frith comes from Fretum, a ſtreight or narrow paſſage of the ſea; and burn ſignifies a corner.

It is ſaid, the inhabitants of this pariſh claim the privilege of being toll-free in all markets, and have free paſſage over the Severn. Fair Roſamond, miſtreſs to king Henry the Second, was born in a large houſe in this pariſh, which ſtood on the bank of the Severn. It was originally built by an anceſtor of the Clifford family, and was remarkable for a noble ſtair-caſe, and two chimney-pieces, one of them bearing the Cliffords arms, and 1598; which is ſuppoſed to be the date when it was rebuilt by James Clifford, eſq; one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to queen Elizabeth. This houſe was taken down about twenty years ago.

FROCESTER

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Whitſtone, four miles north-eaſt from Durſley, five weſt from Stroud, and eleven ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the north by Eaſington, on the ſouth by Nympsfield, with Cowley and Cam to the weſt, and Leonard Stanley to the eaſt of it.

It lies in the vale, on a declivity facing the north, with a large hanging beech-wood on the ſide towards Nympsfield, down which the turnpike-road leads from Bath to Glouceſter. The ſoil is rich and good, and the air tolerably healthy.

A ſmall

A ſmall brook runs down to Cowley, and ſo into the Severn. It is ſaid the houſes formerly ſtood near the church, in the lower part of the pariſh, but were burnt down; and afterwards, for the conveniency of a drier ſpot, the inhabitants built them where they now ſtand. There are about 207 acres of common field, lying in ſix different fields; but the greateſt part of the pariſh is rich paſture. It is not remarkable for any uncommon natural productions.

The name is differently written, as Froweceſtre, Frouceſtre, Fronceſter; but I apprehend the latter form aroſe by miſtaking the letter u for n, which in old writings are much alike. This gave riſe to the notion of its being ſo called, becauſe it was a frontier caſtle.

The abbats of Glouceſter had a ſumptuous houſe in this village; and it is ſaid, that formerly here was a college of prebendaries.

This village was honoured with a viſit from queen Elizabeth, who lay a night at the manor houſe, as appears by an entry in the pariſh regiſter, as follows: Hoc anno 1574° die feſto Laurentij martyris Sereniſſima Regina n'ra Elizabetha hoc n'rm oppidatum acceſſit et inviſit, in eoq; in Ædibus Georgii Huntleij, armigeri, comiter, benignèq; et ſum'a cum humanitate tractantis, p'noctavit, indeq; Barkleyum Caſtellum conceſſit. i. e. On the day of the feaſt of St. Lawrence, in this year, 1574, our moſt ſerene queen Elizabeth came into this our town, and lodged in it that night, at the ſeat of George Huntley, eſq; by whom ſhe was elegantly and ſplendidly entertained; and afterwards ſhe went to Berkeley caſtle.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the general ſurvey, ſoon after the conqueſt, under the head Terra S. Petri de Glowec', it is thus recorded:

'The ſame church held Froweceſtre in Blace-'lawes hundred. There are five hides. In demean 'are four plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and 'ſeven bordars, with ſeven plow-tillages. There 'are three ſervi, and ten acres of meadow, and a 'wood three furlongs long, and two broad. It 'was worth 4*l.* now worth 8*l.*' Dom. B. p. 71.

This manor continued in the abbey of Glouceſter 'till its diſſolution. After the diſſolution of monaſteries, this manor, and the advowſon of the vicarage, were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, 1 E. 6. and notwithſtanding his attainder, theſe and other particulars were confirmed to his widow, in ſatisfaction of all claim of dower, 3 Mar. The manor of Froceſter, and divers lands which had been granted before to the ſaid duke, were again granted to Chriſtopher Hatton, 17 Eliz.

Sir William Doddington, of Bremer in Hampſhire, was lord of this manor in the year 1608. He left only daughters, of whom Anne, the ſurviving heir, was married to Robert Grevile, lord Brook, whereby his lordſhip was intituled to this manor. The earl Brooke[a] and earl of Warwick is the preſent lord of the manor of Froceſter.

The ſcite of the manor houſe, with divers lands, and the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, were granted to Giles Huntley, 1 Mar. They afterwards deſcended to ſir George Huntley, who came by a violent end in the park.

[a] It is ſaid this family is of Norman extraction. The name was antiently written Graville, or Grevill, and ſometimes Grevel. William Grevill died ſeized of the manors of Inglethwait and Awldtoftes in Yorkſhire, 1294. John Grevill died before 33 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by his ſon William, who was ſeated at Campden in Glouceſterſhire, and lent king R. 2. three hundred marks. William was his ſon and heir, who purchaſed the manor of Milcot in Warwickſhire, in the year 1398. He was buried in the church of St. Mary in Campden, to the repair of which he gave 100 marks, and 200*l.* for four chaplains to ſay maſs in that church for his ſoul, for ten years following. He was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who reſided at Campden, and married, firſt, Sibil, daughter and heir of ſir Robert Corbet; ſecondly, Joyce, daughter of ſir Walter Cokeſey, knt. by whom he had iſſue John, his ſon and heir, who reſided at Charlton Regis, com. Glouc. and who had the manor of Milcot 28 H. 6. He died in the year 1480, after having the honour of knighthood conferred on him, and ſerving in five parliaments for Glouceſterſhire. Thomas was his only ſon, who aſſumed the ſurname of Cokeſey. At the coronation of king H. 7. he was created knight of the Bath, and afterwards was made a knight Banneret. He died without iſſue, whereby the inheritance of the Cokeſeys reverted to that family; but the eſtates he had from the Grevills went to John Grevill, a deſcendant of Lodowick, ſecond ſon to William Grevill of Campden. Which John was one of the juſtices for the goal-delivery at Warwick 15 H. 7. He had iſſue, by his wife Jane, daughter of ſir Humphry Forſter, two ſons, Edward and Robert. Edward was knighted for his valiant behaviour in the engagement called the Battle of the Spurs, from the ſwiftneſs of the French in running away, 5 H. 8. He was one of the knights appointed to attend the king and queen to the conference with Francis I. the French king, 12 H. 8. He obtained the wardſhip of Elizabeth, one of the daughters, and at laſt ſole heir of Edward Willoughby, the only ſon of Robert lord Brooke. He married Anne, daughter of John Denton, by whom he had iſſue four ſons, John, Fulke, Thomas, and Edward. The two laſt died without iſſue, and the elder branch, from John, became extinct in the fourth deſcent from him. Fulke, the ſecond ſon, married Elizabeth, his father's ward, one of the greateſt heireſſes in England, by whom he had three ſons, Fulke, Robert, and Edward; and four daughters. Fulke, the eldeſt, was ſucceeded by his ſon Fulke, who was advanced to the dignity of a baron, by the title of lord Brooke, with limitation of that honour, in default of heirs male of his own body, to his kinſman Robert Grevile; which ſaid Fulke lord Brooke dying unmarried, he was ſucceeded in honour and eſtates by the ſaid Robert, ſecond lord Brooke, who married lady Catherine Ruſſel, eldeſt daughter to Francis earl of Bedford, by whom he had five ſons, Francis, Robert, Edward, Algernon, (the two laſt dying batchelors) and Fulke. Francis ſucceeded his father, but died unmarried; whereby Robert became the fourth lord Brooke. He married Anne, daughter to John Doddington, eſq; by whom he had ſix ſons, who all died young, and two daughters. He died at Bath, in 1676, and was ſucceeded in honour and eſtate by Fulke, his youngeſt brother. This Fulke, fifth lord Brooke, married Sarah, daughter of ſir Samuel Daſhwood, alderman of London, by whom he had iſſue four ſons, Francis, Algernon, Doddington, and Robert; and ſeven daughters. He died in 1710, and Francis, the eldeſt ſon, died eleven days before his father, having married lady Anne Wilmot, eldeſt daughter and coheir of John earl of Rocheſter, by whom he had iſſue two ſons, Fulke and William, and two daughters.

Fulke, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded his grandfather as lord Brooke, but died at Univerſity-college, Oxford, in 1710-11, and was ſucceeded by his brother William.

Which William, ſeventh lord Brooke, married Mary, ſecond daughter and coheir of the honourable Henry Thynne, eſq; by whom he had three ſons, William, Fulke, and Francis. The two former died infants, and William lord Brooke, their father, died in 1727.

Francis, the third and only ſurviving ſon, ſucceeded to his father as eighth lord Brooke, when but eight years old. In the year 1746, he was created earl Brooke by king George the Second; and the title of earl of Warwick being extinct, by the death of Edward Rich, earl of Warwick and Holland, in 1759, his majeſty was pleaſed to add the dignity of earl of Warwick to his lordſhip's other titles, the ſame year. His lordſhip married Elizabeth, daughter to the lord Archibald Hamilton, by whom he hath iſſue three ſons and four daughters. A mill in Froceſter, lately belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted to William Rameſden and Edward Hobbey 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouſe. It is a vicarage worth 50*l.* a year. The advowſon was given to the abbey of Glouceſter by William de Blois, biſhop of Worceſter, in the year 1225, when Thomas de Bredone was abbat. Lord Ducie is patron and impropriator; Mr. Hayward is the preſent incumbent.

The demean lands are tithe free, as having belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a large ſpire in the middle, in which are ſix bells. There is a ſmall chancel on the north ſide of the large one, which formerly was the burying place of the Huntleys, and now belongs to the earl of Warwick. In the chancel is an antient monument, ſuppoſed to be for the founder. There is a ſmall farm in Cowley, and a rent-charge of 9*s.* 4*d.* both given to keep the church in repair, which is very antient, and ſtanding upwards of a mile from the houſes, divine ſervice is performed at a chapel, and not in the church, except at funerals; for they bury there. The chapel is built on lord Warwick's land.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 61 houſes, and about 250 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. But I find that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were regiſtered 107 baptiſms, and 61 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, there were 103 baptiſms, and 63 burials; and the preſent number of inhabitants is 262.

St. GEORGE's.

THIS is a newly erected pariſh. It lies in the hundred of King's Barton, about thirty-ſix miles ſouth from the city of Glouceſter. It is bounded[t] on the eaſt by Bitton, on the weſt by the out-pariſh of St. Philip and Jacob, on the north by Stapleton and Mangotsfield, and on the ſouth by the river Avon. The weſtern extremity is diſtant three quarters of a mile from [u]Laford's-Gate, in the city of Briſtol; and its greateſt length from eaſt to weſt is two miles and a quarter.

It was part of the out-pariſh of St. Philip and Jacob, but an act of parliament paſſed for erecting it into a diſtinct pariſh 24 G. 2. By that act, all rates made for the relief of the poor, for the repair of the highways, and all taxes granted, or to be granted, by parliament or otherwiſe, are to be made upon the inhabitants of St. Philip's and St. George's, jointly and in common; and the workhouſe in the old pariſh is to be for the common uſe of both. The orders of juſtices of the peace, relating to the poor, are to be made and directed as before the making of the ſaid act for erecting the ſaid pariſh; but the church-rates are to be ſeparate. There are two petty conſtables appointed annually for this pariſh, at the hundred-court.

Before this ſeparation, the whole of the out-pariſh of St. Philip and Jacob was called Eaſton, becauſe it lay eaſtward of the city of Briſtol; but more antiently, the name of it was Bertune. It was part of the antient demeſnes of the crown, as appears by Domeſday-book, and gave denomination to the hundred of Barton Regis.

The greater part of the pariſh lies within the boundaries of the foreſt, or chaſe, of [w]Kingſwood, and is one of thoſe places (all ſituated in the neighbourhood

[t] The boundaries of the pariſh are ſettled to be from a bridge at the foot of Lawrence-hill, called Lawrence-bridge, along the lane ſouthward, called Barton-hill-lane; thence, in a direct line, along Little Marſh-lane; thence by a little ſtream of water which runs from the ſaid lane into King's-pill; and thence along by the King's-pill to the river Avon, and along up the ſide of that river to the utmoſt extent and boundary of the old pariſh of St. Philip and Jacob on that ſide thereof. From St. Lawrence-bridge aforeſaid, weſtward to Dod-lane; along this lane northward to Gane-bridge, in the road leading from Briſtol to Glouceſter, and ſo on to Comb-brook, and thence to the utmoſt boundaries of the old pariſh, eaſtward to the river Avon. Act, 24 G. 2.

[u] It is generally written Lawford's Gate; but that erroneous manner of writing it deſtroys the idea which the true name conveys. The caſtle of Briſtol was built by Robert Mellent, or Fitz-Roy, conſul and earl of Glouceſter. He was lord of the manor and hundred of Bertune, wherefore this gate was called Laford's-Gate, i. e. the Lord's-Gate, from the Anglo Saxon Hlaford, which ſignifies Lord. This gate has lately been taken down.

[w] The following are the bounds of Kingſwood Chaſe, copied from a ſurvey taken by order of government, May 26, 1652, and communicated by a learned friend, for the ſatisfaction of the curious. —— Kingſwood was bounded by divers incloſed lands ſhewed to the ſurveyors by antient inhabitants within the bordering pariſhes, beginning near a ſtone in the high road called Dungel's-croſs, ſo to Roe-yate northwards, by ſeveral incloſed lands, to the manor houſe and ground called Ridgway, unto a gate called Longland's-gate, abutted on the north by ſaid Ridgway-houſe, on to Bullibroke, aud along the foot of the new pools to Rublay's-yate-lane; thence abutted on the eaſt by Longwalls, near Mangotsfield pariſh, along to Erford's-lane, ſo down Bromley's-heath unto Brimble-gate, and thence returning towards the ſouth, ſurrounding the ſaid heath, paſſing along by Player's manſion houſe and grounds called Cleave's-hill; thence ſouth-eaſtward to Downing's-green, thence northward to Sodbury-gate and road; thence eaſtward, ſurrounding the ſaid green, unto Weſterley-gate, thence unto grounds called Charnock's, and into Mangotsfield-bottom unto Siſton's-brook, and along it ſouthward, returning down Mangotsfield-bottom, unto the highway, or road, from Dungel's-croſs, abutted by Siſton's-common; and thence unto Grimſbury-lane, above Mr. Woodward's houſe; thence winding weſtward by Grimſbury-hill, and along Cock-rode-hill down eaſtward by Workman's-green, and thence ſouthward unto the highway towards Mr. Newton's houſe and manor; thence paſſing unto Herring-lane end, and over the hill called Martin's-neighbourhood of each other) whence the city of Briſtol is ſupply'd with its coal, which is ſo excellent, for its durable quality, that the very cinders will burn over and over again, 'till they are wholly reduced to vapour and aſhes.

Some of the coal-pits are of a prodigious depth. That at Two-mile-hill[x], belonging to his grace the duke of Beaufort, is 107 fathom deep. At this and many others they uſe a fire-engine, to draw out the water which flows in upon the miners, and would prevent their working.

There are the ſame kinds of foſſils found here which are particularly mentioned in Bitton, and are common to all the coal-lands in Kingſwood; but upon diligent inquiry, I cannot find that there is any thing curious or uncommon in the vegetable ſyſtem. However, I ſhould not omit to mention a flat ſtone that was found, not long ſince, near the ſide of the Avon, in this pariſh, about nine inches long and ſix broad, which had ſo beautiful an impreſſion of a very large ſpecies of the fern plant (native of America) on one ſide of it, that it looked more like the work of a maſterly engraver than the production of nature. I ſaw it in the cabinet of a curious naturaliſt, and very worthy gentleman, in the city of Briſtol. He ſhewed me, at the ſame time alſo, a ſparry incruſtation, which had almoſt filled up a pipe made of boards, of which the cavity was about four or five inches ſquare. This pipe, if I miſtake not, had ſerved for the conveyance of water to ſome of the copper-works here, 'till the ſtony matter filled up the cavity, except a ſmall hole in the middle, and rendered it uſeleſs. The grain of the wood, and the marks of the ſaw, were ſo perfectly impreſt on the incruſtation, that the eye could not diſtinguiſh it from a piece of ſawed timber.

This village is not wholly deſtitute of antiquities. On a hill, within a few yards of the turnpike-gate leading down to Crew's-hole, there is a ſmall dwelling-houſe, which in former ages was a Romiſh chapel, dedicated to St. Anthony; and it retains the name of St. Anthony's chapel to this day. In the highway, about two hundred yards weſtward of the church, ſtood Don John's Croſs, which was a round freeſtone column, ſupported by an octangular baſe. The upper part of the column, and the croſs at top, were probably deſtroyed by the parliament's party in the great civil war, who demoliſhed every thing of that ſort. When the church was built, it was removed, and the baſe is now depoſited at the door of an adjacent houſe. It is very uncertain what event this was intended to preſerve the memory of; but tradition ſays, that here the corpſe of one Don John, a noble Spaniard, reſted in its way to the place of its interment. If there be any foundation for this ſtory, it might be ſhipped for Spain, from the port of Briſtol.

Here are two copper-works, and a glaſs-houſe for the manufacture of bottles. But the principal production of art is a curious hydraulic machine, erected upon the river Avon, and invented and conſtructed by the late ingenious mechanic and mathematician, Mr. John Padmore, for throwing water into a reſervoir, for the uſe of the city of Briſtol. The reſervoir is at a little diſtance, on the top of a hill, whence, by ſubterraneous pipes, the water is conveyed to the city. There were formerly two machines for the ſame purpoſe, at Hanham-mills, in the pariſh of Bitton, but they were taken down in the year 1720.

There is a turnpike-road from Bath to Briſtol leading through this pariſh; and another from Briſtol to London, by way of Marſhfield.

Some of the ſubſequent records concern the whole hamlet of Eaſton, and conſequently have a relation, as well to the preſent out-pariſh of St. Philip and Jacob, as to St. George's; but as they could not properly be divided, they are placed here, and referred to from St. Philip's.

Martin's-horſe-hill, unto Cadbury's-bottom; thence ſouthward up Jeffery's-hill into the road-way from Briſtol to Bath, then north up the ſaid road to the door of H. Stone, where we croſs the ſaid road; thence ſouth along by ſome houſes, and weſtward along by Proſſer's-gate unto Cadimore-brook, unto Hanham's-mines, and over Jeffery's-hill, and along down Conham's-hill to the lower end of Strode-brook, ſo to Deanridge-lands, rounding them to the river Avon; thence turning ſhort about to the north-eaſt by Harris-hill, unto the north-eaſt of the ſaid hill, near to the ſouth road; ſo along weſtward by the dean and chapter's lands till we come over-againſt Sims's ſmith-ſhop and Dungel's-croſs, whence we ſet out. Total of acres of the whole chaſe were 1632 and 2 Roods. —— There were formerly 1500 or 2000 head of deer in the chaſe, but there have been none for upwards of ſeventy years paſt.

[x] In the year 1735, three men and a boy lay ten days and nineteen hours in a dark cavern, in the midſt of a coal-pit near Two-mile-hill, in this pariſh, thirty-nine fathom under ground, environed with water, and on the brink of a precipice ſixteen fathom perpendicular. As theſe perſons were wedging out coals, on the 7th of November, a prodigious torrent of water burſt on a ſudden out of a vein, and put out all the lights; the people were ſtruck with the utmoſt conſternation, and knew not which way to take, but crawling on their hands and knees from place to place to avoid the water, they providentially got to a riſing ground, where creeping up higher and higher, as the water roſe, at length reached a hollow place, whence coals had been dug, and there continued. In their way, they found a bit of beef and a cruſt of bread, together about a quarter of a pound, which they divided equally, and eat. It was for ſome time very eaſy to get water, but the water ſinking, it became more and more difficult, 'till at length, not being able to obtain it, they were forced to drink their own urine, and to chew ſome chips which they cut from a baſket; but loſing their knife, even this miſerable expedient failed them, and one endeavoured to eat his ſhoe. They were almoſt ſuffocated with heat, and with the nauſeous fumes that aroſe from their bodies, and continued without any other ſuſtenance 'till the 17th, when their friends, after ſeveral ineffectual attempts, let down a large quantity of burning coals, which diſſipated the black vapour; and the water being gone off in a great meaſure, five men ventured down, and calling out, were ſurpriſed to find them alive and able to anſwer. The eldeſt, about ſixty years old, was delirious, and all of them very weak, and for ſome time intirely blind. They were taken out, and having received ſome refreſhment, walked to their homes, to the great aſtoniſhment of a vaſt croud of people aſſembled from all parts. The men did not apprehend they had been above five days under ground. At the water's firſt burſting in upon them, there were four other boys in the mine, but being at the Tip of the work, ran to the rope, crying to be pulled up, and notwithſtanding it was done with as much expedition as poſſible, yet the water was at the heels of the laſt boy, who, as the other three were hawling up, caught hold of the feet of one of his companions, and all got ſafe out.

Of

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Under the head Terra Regis, in Domeſday-book, it is thus expreſſed:

'In Bertune at Briſtou were ſix hides. In demean were three plow-tillages, and twenty-two villeins, and twenty-five bordars, with twenty-five plow-tillages. There were ten ſervi, and eighteen free men [coliberti] having fourteen plow-tillages. There were two mills of 27*s.* [rent.] When Roger received this manor of the king, he found there two hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and ſeventeen villeins, and twenty-four bordars, with twenty-one plow-tillages. There were four ſervi, and thirteen free men with three plow-tillages.

'In Manegodesfelle, one member of this manor, are ſix cows in demean.

'The church of Briſtou holds three hides of this land, and has one plow-tillage there.

'A radecheniſter holds one hide, and has one plow-tillage, and four bordars with one plow-tillage.

'This manor and Briſtou pay 110 marks of ſilver to the king. The burgeſſes ſay, that biſhop G. [Goisfrid] has thirty-three marks of ſilver, and one mark of gold, beſides the king's farm.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The manor and hundred of Bertune have been generally held by perſons of great eminence. It appears by the fines regiſtered 3 H. 3. that Richard earl of Glouceſter had been ſeized of Bertune near Briſtol, of Finchwood, and Keynſham-chaſe. And his ſon, Gilbert earl of Glouceſter, was afterwards ſeized of them. Bertune near Briſtol was granted to queen Iſabel, in part of her dower, 11 E. 2. The manor of Bertune was granted, in part of dower, to queen Philippa, 4 E. 3. and afterwards to queen Catherine.

The manor of Bertune, and the hundred, and the advowſon of the hoſpital of St. Lawrence, within the ſaid hundred, belonged to Edward duke of York, grandſon to king Edward the Third, who was ſlain at Agincourt, and died without iſſue. His brother, Richard earl of Cambridge, having been attainted and executed, this manor reverted to the crown, and was granted to Humphry duke of Glouceſter, and to his heirs male, 3 H. 5. He and Elianor his wife levied a fine thereof to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to the king, 14 H. 6. and the duke made a leaſe of this manor and hundred to Ralph Butler and John Beauchamp, for their lives.

Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick, had a grant of the manor and hundred to him and his heirs, in reverſion, after the death of the duke of Glouceſter; but the duke of Warwick dying 25 H. 6. the year before the duke of Glouceſter, the eſtate came to Anne, an infant daughter and heir of the duke of Warwick, who dying 27 H. 6. the manor and hundred went to Anne, ſiſter to the duke of Warwick, who was married to Richard Nevil, the Make-king, afterwards earl of Warwick in her right. They join in levying a fine of this eſtate to the uſe of themſelves and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to Richard Beauchamp, afterwards earl of Warwick.

Iſabel, one of the daughters and coheirs of Richard Nevil earl of Warwick, and Anne his wife, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth; and by virtue of an act of parliament which deprived the mother, he, in right of his wife, held the manor and hundred of Bertune, of which he died ſeized 17 E. 4.[1] But Anne counteſs of Warwick was afterwards reſtored to her right, with a ſiniſter deſign, by that covetuous monarch king Henry the Seventh; for ſhe was obliged to paſs away this manor, and many others, to the king, as frequently obſerved in the courſe of this work, 3 H. 7.

The manor and hundred, and two mills, called French-Mills, were granted, by king Henry the Eighth, to his laſt queen Catherine, in part of her dower. She died 2 E. 6. and preſently afterwards the manor was granted to ſir Thomas Arundel, the duke of Somerſet's favourite, who was attainted and executed with the duke, 5 E. 6. for conſpiring the death of John duke of Northumberland, and other privy counſellors.

The manor and hundred were again granted by the crown to William earl of Pembroke, in conſideration of 8000*l.* 7 E. 6. Maurice Dennis died ſeized of the manor and hundred of Berton 5 Eliz. and left Walter Dennis, his brother and heir, then ſixty years old.

This manor and hundred were ſoon after purchaſed by Thomas Cheſter, of Knole, eſq; and from him it has deſcended, down to the preſent time, in the ſame manner with Almondeſbury in this county, to which the reader is referred.

The lords of this manor have conſtantly held courts leet and hundred courts for the manor and hundred.

Beſide the manor, the records give the following particulars of other eſtates in this pariſh, and ſuch parts of its neighbourhood as cannot, perhaps, at this time, be diſtinguiſhed therefrom. Thomas de Amenel, in right of his manor of Bitton, had tack of ſwine in Briſtol-Bertune and Finchwood 7 H. 3 Roger Corbet was ſeized of lands in Bertune by Briſtol 18 E. 1. John de Saltmarſh was ſeized of twenty acres of wood in Kingſwood-chaſe 14 E. 2. William Corbet was ſeized of fourteen acres of land in Bertune near Briſtol 2 R. 2. Sir William Rodney died ſeized of ſeveral tenements in Berton and in Briſtol 6 E. 4. Roger Kemys, a lunatick, held a tenement, called Girdelars, 21 E. 4. A meadow in Berton near Briſtol, which had belonged to St. Mary Magda-len's hoſpital in that city, was granted, after the diſſolution of religious foundations, to Henry Brain and John March, 37 H. 8. The lords commiſſioners to examine the king's revenues throughout England, made a return 6 E. 6. that the ranger of Kingſwood and Fillwood had a yearly ſalary of 11*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*

The hoſpital of St. Lawrence, for lepers, which ſtood within the bounds of this pariſh, was granted, at the diſſolution, to ſir Raufe Sadleir, knight. A piece of ground, about ſix acres, which belonged to that hoſpital, lying on the north ſide of the chapel of St. Lawrence, is exempt from tithe. Sir William Dugdale, in his Monaſticon, places this hoſpital in Somerſetſhire, by miſtake.

Blackſworth, or Blackenſworde, is a manor conſiſting of detached lands in ſeveral pariſhes. The greater part is in this, and ſome, particularly the paſſage over the river Avon at Rownham, in the pariſh of Clifton. The monaſtery of St. Auguſtin in Briſtol was endowed with this manor by the founder, Robert Fitz-Harding. It is now the property of the dean and chapter of Briſtol, and is in leaſe to Thomas Tyndale, of the Fort, eſq.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, worth 150*l.* a year, under the juriſdiction of the biſhop of Briſtol and of the archdeacon of Glouceſter; the mayor and corporation of the city of Briſtol are patrons, the reverend Mr. Hart is the preſent incumbent.

Dr. Butler, biſhop of Durham, gave 400*l.* towards endowing the church: And the late Thomas Cheſter, eſq; gave two acres, one rood, and ſix perches of land, bounded on the weſt by Don John's Croſs, (as recited in the act of parliament) for the ſcite of the church and cœmetery. Beſides theſe, other donations, to a large amount, were contributed by various perſons, for the augmentation of the vicarage; and, together with what was procured from the governors of queen Anne's bounty, were laid out, by the commiſſioners, in the purchaſe of ſeveral lands in this pariſh, to the value of between 70 and 80*l.* a year. There is a very good new houſe for the reſidence of the incumbent.

The church is a very neat, tho' plain building, ſeventy feet long by ſixty broad, conſiſting of the nave and two ailes, ſupported by two rows of handſome freeſtone pillars. The chancel is very ſmall, with a Venetian window over the communion table. At the weſt end is a large ſquare tower, ſeventy-two feet high, with two bells.

The building was begun in the year 1752. The mayor of Briſtol, attended by the reſt of the commiſſioners, went in proceſſion, on the 3d of March, from the Lamb inn to the ſpot of ground upon which the church was to be erected, where the mayor laid the firſt foundation ſtone, with this inſcription:

Several pieces of coin, incloſed in lead, being laid on the ſame ſtone, the whole was covered with a proper ſheet of lead, and then another ſtone laid thereon, with the following inſcription:

Domine Deus noſter!
Aperti ſint Oculi tui nocte dieque ſuper domum hanc; Orationes populi tui, quodcunque oraverint in loco iſto, exaudias; in Loco Habitaculi tui in Cœlis exaudias; et cum exaudieris, propitius eſto! 1 Reg. c. 8, v. 29, 30.

The church was conſecrated Sept. 6, 1756, and was called St. George's. A revel is conſtantly kept on the anniverſary of the church's conſecration, in pious commemoration of the divine goodneſs, in cauſing this fabrick, at a great expence, to be founded and endowed, for the accommodation of the inhabitants in their weekly attendance on divine worſhip: Which revel is moſt devoutly celebrated by great numbers of the pariſhioners, and others, in the adjacent ale-houſes, with all the ſolemnities of an old pagan feſtival; that is, drunkenneſs, gluttony, riot, debauchery, curſing and ſwearing, ſcolding and fighting, fiddling and dancing, Bacchanalian ſongs, and midnight impurities.

What induced the truly worthy perſons concerned in this good work to give the church the name of St. George's,[z] is to me unaccountable, as that ſaint is not to be found in the calendar of the church of England, ſince the reformation.

In a ſeries of ten years, beginning with 1760, there are regiſtered 1145 baptiſms, and 499 burials. But the burials give no light reſpecting population, becauſe many of the pariſhioners are every year interred at the neighbouring pariſhes, eſpecially at St. Philip's, where moſt of their anceſtors lie; which accounts for the great diſproportion between the numbers of baptiſms and burials here. There are about 700 houſes in this pariſh, and if we eſtimate the whole number of inhabitants to be to the average of annual baptiſms in the proportion of 30 to 1, which is the proportion commonly found in like ſituations, the number of people will then be 3435; i.e. nearly five to a houſe.

GUITING-POWER.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the Coteſwold country, in the lower part of the hundred of Kifteſgate, ſix miles diſtant weſt from Stow, ſix eaſtward from Winchcombe, and nineteen north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is generally called Lower-Guiting, from its ſituation lower down the river, to diſtinguiſh it from another Guiting, lying nearer to the ſource of that river.

It is a fine, open, ſporting country, with bold riſing grounds, conſiſting chiefly of ſheep-walks, and arable lands; but there are ſome woodlands and meadow grounds. Petrifications of the cockle, the muſcle, and the echenites are found in plenty, particularly in and about the manor of Guiting Grange; and the water of a ſtream near the village is of a ſtrong incruſting quality. The little river is the head of the Windruſh, and abounds with ſmall trout and excellent eels.

Powell Snell, eſq; has a large eſtate called the Grange, in this pariſh, with a handſome ſeat, where he reſides.

Under the head Terra Willi Goizenboded, in Domeſday-book, are the following particulars:

In demean are 'four plow-tillages, and four villeins, and three 'foreigners, and two radcheniſters, and a prieſt, 'with two bordars, who have between them all, 'five plow-tillages; and the ſervi and ancillæ 'have eleven [plow-tillages] and two mills of 14*s*. 'There are five ſalt-pits, which yield twenty ſeams 'of ſalt. Two houſes in Winchcombe pay 11*s*. 4*d*. 'It was worth 16*l*. now 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

The maſter of the knights templers, in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him, proved his right to court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Guiting-Poers, by a grant 53 H. 3.

Two virgates of land, each of 3*s*. rent, were given to the knights templers by Roger de Waittevil. Dug.

This manor, Farmcot, Cateſlade and Caldecot, were held of Roger de Quincy, earl of Wincheſter, 55 H. 3. and afterwards of Alan la Zouche, baron of Aſhley, who was grandſon and heir to the ſaid earl, by one of his coheireſſes; which Alan died 7 E. 2. and left coheireſſes.

Roger Corbet died 7 E. 2. ſeized of four knights fees and a half, and of one third part of a knight's fee, in Ebrington, Hudecote, Clopton, Farnecote, Catteſlade parva, Gytinge, and Teynton; which he held of Alan Szouche, and they were worth 48*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. Eſch.

Adam de Hermington died ſeized of the manor of Nether-Guiting 16 E. 3. and ſir John Butler died ſeized of the manors of Nether-Guiting and of Whitbridge 17 E. 4.

This manor came afterwards to the Horwoods. William Horwood was ſeized of it, and obtained a grant of the impropriation 35 H. 8. which latter formerly belonged to the knights templers. He died 37 H. 8. and left two coheireſſes; Anne, who was afterwards married to Ambroſe Dudley; and Margaret, who was married to Thomas Throgmorton. They had livery granted to them 3 Mar. And livery of one moiety of the manor, and of the rectory and advowſon, was granted to Thomas Horwood 15 Eliz.

Henry Stratford, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Sir James Howe married one of the coheireſſes of the heir of Henry Stratford, and was lord of the manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. But it did not continue long afterwards in that family, for David Hughes, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1726. He was ſucceeded by David his ſon, who dying unmarried in the year 1753, bequeathed his eſtate to his three ſiſters, of whom the eldeſt was married to Thomas Vernon, of the city of Glouceſter, eſq; deceaſed, by whom ſhe has one ſon; the ſecond to Mr. William Smart, of Winchcombe, apothecary, deceaſed; and the youngeſt to John Holland, of Sickleton in this county, gentleman, by whom ſhe had ſeveral children. Mr. Vernon and Mr. Holland are the preſent lords of the manor, and hold a court baron; but Guiting-Power, Catſlade, and Farmcot owe ſuit and ſervice to the court leet of Ebbrington, held by lord Forteſcue. The manor of Guiting-Power pays 9*l*. 19*s*. a year to William Wyndham, of Halling, eſq.

But there was another manor of Guiting at the time of the general ſurvey.

'The wife of Geri de Loges holds of the king 'four hides in Getinge, in Holiforde hundred. 'Three thanes, Gulvert, Tovi, and Turber held 'them for three manors, and paid tax. In demean 'is one plow-tillage, and one villein, with half a 'plow-tillage. It was worth 40*s*. now 20*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

It is impoſſible at this time to trace the deſcent of theſe lands diſtinctly from the former; only the records ſhew, that Gunuld de Loges, the widow of Jurie or Geri de Loges, gave two hides of land in Guiting to the monaſtery of Glouceſter, to pray for the ſoul of her huſband.

William de Ebroicis and Maud his wife, formerly the wife of —— de Trevel, levied a fine of lands in Guiting to the uſe of Maud for her life, with ſeveral remainders, 5 E. 1.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Farmcot, but antiently, and perhaps more rightly, Fernecote; from fern, and the Britiſh word coed, a wood; for there is a large wood which gave occaſion to the name. This hamlet, lying near three miles from the church, is divided from the body of the pariſh by the intervention of lands in Guiting-Temple. It is an antient manor, thus deſcribed in the ſurvey:

'William Goizenboded holds Fernecote. 'Aluuinus held it. There are three hides taxed. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins, 'with four plow-tillages, and thirteen among the 'ſervi and ancillæ. Goisfrid holds it of William. 'It was worth 10*l*. now 3*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

Roger Corbet died ſeized of lands in Farnecote, &c. which he held of Alan Szouche 7 E. 2. John Benne died ſeized of this manor 16 E. 3. as did ſir Robert Corbet 5 H. 5. having aſſigned it to Joan his widow in dower. John Grevil married Sybil, the daughter of ſir Robert Corbet, and in the life time of the ſaid Joan, entered upon the lands which ſhe held in dower, for which he had the king's pardon[a] 8 H. 5. John Grevil died ſeized of Farmcot 23 H. 6. as did ſir John Lineham 19 E. 4.

This eſtate ſoon afterwards came into the family of the Stratfords, who have continued to enjoy it to the preſent age; but that antient family falling to decay, this manor and eſtate were ſold to Robert Tracy, eſq; grandſon to the late Mr. Juſtice Tracy; who dying without iſſue, bequeathed it to Robert Pratt, eſq; repreſentative in the laſt parliament for Horſham in Suſſex.

The large wood is the property of George Pitt, eſq; repreſentative in parliament for the county of Dorſet.

On a piece of ground called the Langet, ſtood a ſmall preceptory, belonging to the commandery at Quenington in this county, to which the great tithes belonged. King Henry the Eighth ſold ſold the great tithes to biſhop Fox, who gave them to Chriſt-Church college in Oxford. The preceptory and the Langet were granted to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain of Hayles, 34 H. 8. and afterwards purchaſed of them by Mr. John Stratford, at that time owner of the reſt of Farmcot. Other lands in Farmcot, which belonged to the abbey of Hayles, were granted to William marquis of Northampton, 5 E. 6.

Here is a chapel of eaſe, where divine ſervice is performed once every kalendar month, by the miniſter of Lower-Guiting.

This tithing has its own conſtable, and pays all rates, except the poor's rate, diſtinctly.

2. Caldicot is another hamlet, but it is not known by that name at preſent. When Domeſday-book was compiled, this hamlet lay in a different hundred from the reſt of the pariſh, according to the following entry:

'William Goizenboded holds Callicote in Sale-'maneſberie hundred, and Rannulf [holds it] of 'him. Aluuin held it in the time of king Edward. 'There are three hides taxed. In demean are 'three plow-tillages, and eight among the ſervi 'and ancillæ. It was worth 60*s*. now [only] 40*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

The lands of this place are now called the Weſt Field, about a mile from the church, divided from the other lands of the pariſh, by thoſe of Naunton and Halling. This eſtate belonged to the family of Aylworth, which became extinct in the preſent age. It is now the property of Henry Blagg, of the county of Nottingham, eſq.

3. Caſtlet, antiently written Cateſlat, and Cateſlade, is another hamlet, of which it is thus recorded:

'William Goizenboded holds Cateſlat. Aluuin 'held it. There are two hides taxed. In demean 'are two plow-tillages, and four ſervi, and a mill 'of 5*s*. It was worth 40*s*. now only 10*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

This manor, tho' within the pariſh of Guiting, is a member of the manor of Ebbrington. It conſiſts of a capital meſſuage and a corn-mill. David Hughes, eſq; lately deceaſed, died ſeized of this manor. Chriſt-Church college in Oxford has the great tithes; but the vicar has tithe of hay, ſome pieces of ground excepted. Cateſlat has a diſtinct conſtable. It is exempted from ſtatute-labour, but in all other reſpects, it joins in payments with the pariſh at large.

4. The Grange. This is an independent manor, and pays an annual rent to the crown. It was a grange belonging to the abbey of Bruern, and tho' it does not appear when theſe lands were granted to that houſe, it was certainly not before the reign of king John.

Three fourths of the great tithes of this manor are paid to Chriſt-Church college, Oxford; the remainder to the truſtees of the charities left by George Townſend, eſq.

Within this manor is a plot of ground, in the midſt of an arable incloſure, where the foundations of a chapel are viſible, of which, however there is no written account. It is ſuppoſed to have been the burying-place of the inhabitants of the Grange, and to have been dedicated to the Holy Trinity, as the ford thro' the adjacent brook is even now called Trinity ford, and probably gave name to the old hundred of Holeford, i.e. holy ford, in which it lay. The piece of ground between thoſe ruins and the Grange-houſe, ſtill retains the name of the Bier-way-piece. Add to this, that the plot of ground where the foundations are ſeen belongs to the vicar.

Lands in Nether-Guiting, formerly belonging to the abbey of Bruern, were granted to Anthony Stringer and John Williams 34 H. 8. This manor and eſtate were the property of William Gardiner, eſq; at the beginning of this century, and were purchaſed of Mr. Gardiner, about fifty years ſince, by John Snell, of the city of Glouceſter, eſq; who marrying Anna-Maria, daughter and ſole heireſs of Robert Huntingdon, D.D.[b] ſometime biſhop of Raphoe, by Mary his wife, ſiſter to the late ſir John Powell, knight, one of the juſtices of the court of queen's bench, had by that marriage ſeveral ſons, of whom the late Powell Snell, eſq; was the eldeſt. He incloſed the antient grange within a park ſtock'd with deer. In the year 1737, he married Dorothy, one of the coheireſſes of Charles Yate, of Colthrop, in this county, eſq; by whom he had iſſue Powell, John, Charles, and Dorothy. And ſurviving her, married ſecondly, Suſannah, ſecond daughter of Benjamin Bathurſt, of Lidney, in this county, eſq; but by her had no iſſue. He died in the year 1767, and is ſucceeded in this and other eſtates, by his eldeſt and only ſurviving ſon, Powell Snell, eſq; who reſides here. His arms are, Quarterly, gules and azure, over all a croſs flory Or.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth 52*l*. a year. Thomas Vernon, eſq; and Mr. David-Hughes Holland are patrons; Mr. King the preſent incumbent. The impropriation belonged to the abbey of Bruern, in Oxfordſhire.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a very antient fabrick. The door-way of it, and the arch between the church and chancel, are thought to be of Saxon workmanſhip. It hath a well built embattled tower at the weſt end.

Benefactions.

George Townſhend, eſq; gave a portion of tithes in this pariſh, to be applied in apprenticing out poor children; one of this pariſh to be taken in rotation with ſome others. Two acres of land are given to repair the church. And one Compere gave 100*l.* the intereſt of which to be laid out in bread for the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 62 houſes, and about 300 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 8. Atkyns. At preſent, the baptiſms, on an average of ſeven years, are 12, burials 7; the number of houſes 82, and of inhabitants 375. Hence it appears, that the proportion of annual burials, to the whole number of inhabitants, is nearly as 1 to 53; which ſhews the place to be very healthy.

GUITING-TEMPLE.

THIS pariſh lies on the Coteſwold hills, in the lower part of Kifteſgate hundred, ſeven miles north-weſtward from Stow, five eaſtward from Winchcombe, and twenty north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

It was called Temple-Guiting, becauſe the knights templers had great property here. It is now generally called Upper-Guiting, and formerly, in old writings, Over-Guiting, becauſe ſituated above the adjoining pariſh of Guiting-Power.

It is of a middle ſize, conſiſting moſtly of arable land, with ſome paſture and woodland, and two large commons, on which great numbers of cattle are depaſtured.

It is a fine country for hunting, abounds with game, and enjoys a very healthy air, as appears by the ſtate of population at the end of this account.

The honourable and reverend George Talbot, D.D. third ſon of Charles lord Talbot, late high chancellor of Great Britain, reſides in the hamlet of Barton, in this pariſh. And Mrs. Jane Allen reſides at Guiting. She is deſcended, on the mother's ſide, from the very antient family of Puſey, of Puſey, in the county of Berks, which flouriſhed there in the time of king Canute the Dane. She is poſſeſſed of that famous Charter-Horn, of which Mr. Pegge gives ſome account in a work intitled Archæologia, publiſhed in the year 1775. This horn is ornamented with ſilver gilt rims, and a broad ſilver ring in the middle, and neatly mounted on hound's feet, which ſupport the whole. It was produced in court before lord chancellor Jefferies, in the reign of king James the Second, and proved from the inſcription upon it, and other admiſſible evidence, to be the identical horn, by which, as by a charter, king Canute conveyed the manor of Puſey to the family of that name, about 700 years before. It appears to have been originally a hunting horn, but as a hound's head, of ſilver gilt, is made to ſcrew in, as a ſtopper, at the ſmall end, it is ſuppoſed to have been alſo a drinking horn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The account of this manor, in Domeſday-book, ſtands under the head Terra Rogerij de Laci, and may be thus tranſlated:

'The ſame Roger holds Getinge in Holeford 'hundred. There are ten hides taxed, beſides 'the lord's, which is not taxed. Brictric held it, 'who was one of king Edward's thanes. In de-'mean are five plow-tillages, and twenty-five vil-'leins, and a prieſt, and ſeven radcheniſters, with 'eighteen plow-tillages. There are eighteen among 'the ſervi and ancillæ, and three mills of 24*s.* and a 'ſalt-pit of 20*s.* and twelve ſeams of ſalt, and in 'Wincelcombe three burgages of 32*d.* and two 'burgages in Glouuecеſter of 10*d.* From wood 'and paſture forty hens. It is worth and was 'worth 10*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Walter de Laci, father of the above Roger, was a great ſoldier, and very much in favour with the Conqueror; and this Roger had one hundred and ſixteen manors given him, of which twenty were in Glouceſterſhire. Taking part with Robert Curthoiſe, the elder brother, againſt king William the Second, his poſſeſſions were taken from him, and given to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother, who founded the priory of Lanthony.

Hugh de Laci left no ſurviving iſſue, whereby his inheritance deſcended to Gilbert, ſon of Emme, his ſiſter and ſurviving heireſs; which Gilbert aſſumed the name of Laci. He gave twelve hides and one virgate[c] of land, with his demeſnes in Guiting, and five burgages in Winchcombe, to the knights templers, of which order he afterwards profeſt himſelf.

Hugh de Laci, who diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the wars in Ireland, was ſon and heir of Gilbert, and died ſeized of the manor of Temple-Guiting 31 H. 2. Walter de Laci, ſon of Hugh, ſucceeded him, in whom, and his deſcendants, the manor of Guiting continued 'till the death of Alice, daughter and heireſs of Henry de Laci, the laſt earl of Lincoln of that name. The knights templers held of Alice counteſs of Lincoln, the manor of Great Guiting, called Temple-Guiting, with all its members, and the advowſon of the church, 17 E. 2. She died 22 E. 3.

From the Lacies, the manor of Temple-Guiting went to William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, who held this manor, together with the hamlets of Kynton and Bereton, in Temple-Guiting, jointly with his wife Julian, daughter and heir of ſir Thomas de Leybourn, and widow of John lord Haſtings of Bergavenny; and died ſeized thereof 28 E. 3. Julian ſurviving him, died ſeized thereof 41 E. 3. They leaving no iſſue, the manor deſcended to ſir John de Clinton, (ſon of John, the elder brother of the before-mentioned William earl of Huntington) who died ſeized thereof [d] 22 R. 2. He married Idonea, eldeſt daughter of Jeffery lord Say, and at length coheir to her brother William lord Say, and had by her, ſir William Clinton, his heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir William Deincourt, knight; but dying in the life time of his father, left iſſue William, his heir, who ſucceeded his grandfather. This William, fifth lord Clinton, bore the title of lord Say, to which he was heir by his grandmother Idonea, and was a very great warrior. He died 10 H. 6. and John Clinton, his ſon and heir, ſucceeded him; but it does not appear that he had any property in this manor, unleſs he was the ſame perſon deſcribed in the records by the name of John Clinton, of Clinton and Say, who levied a fine of lands in Over-Guiting 2 R. 3.

The manor of Temple-Guiting was ſoon after purchaſed by Dr. Richard Fox, biſhop of Wincheſter, who gave it to Corpus Chriſti college in Oxford, which he had founded: The preſident and fellows of which college are the preſent lords of the manor, and keep a court leet.

It is on record, that the knights templers purchaſed a charter of free warren, and of court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Guiting, Barton, Kyngton, Holford, and Weſton, 53 H. 3. and that their right was allowed, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. This ſeems incongruous with the preceding account of the deſcent of the manor, from before that time 'till long afterwards, in the family of the Lacies; but the difficulty immediately vaniſhes, if we conſider them as meſne lords under that family, which was really the caſe, as expreſſly mentioned by the record of 17 E. 2. But tho' they were not the chief lords, their lands and poſſeſſions in this pariſh were very conſiderable. Upon the ſuppreſſion of their order, in the reign of king Edward the Second, their lands in Guiting, and in almoſt all other places, were given to the knights hoſpitallers; and after the general diſſolution of religious foundations, the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, and lands in Temple-Guiting, lately belonging to the knights hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem, were granted to the dean and chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8.

Of ſome other eſtates, the records ſhew, that Robert de Brives died ſeized of lands in Guiting-Temple 53 H. 3. Walter de Laci gave lands in this pariſh to the abbey of Glouceſter, which abbey was ſeized of one meſſuage, one plow-tillage, and ſix yard lands in Temple-Guiting 32 E. 1. The abbey had alſo a grant of four marks rent, out of a meſſuage and one yard land, 33 E. 3.

HAMLETS. 1. Guiting, containing 28 houſes, and 177 inhabitants.

2. Ford, containing 17 houſes, and 80 inhabitants. Robert conſul of Glouceſter gave to the monaſtery of Glouceſter a water-mill in Ford, when William was abbat. Here was formerly a chapel of eaſe, long ſince converted to ſecular uſes. This hamlet pays to the church and poor of Guiting, but it is a conſtablewick annexed to Pinnock, to which it is rated for ſtatute labour. Lord Tracy is lord of the manor.

3. Kyneton, which has 16 houſes, and 84 inhabitants. Thomas Cook and Juliana his wife, and John Collet, levied a fine of lands in Kyneton 3 E. 6. One of the large commons within the pariſh is appropriated to the uſe of this hamlet.

4. Barton, containing 7 houſes, and 44 inhabitants. Livery of the manor of Barton was granted to Maurice Rodney 1 Eliz.

5. Hyde-farm. This is ſituated between Guiting and Ford; but tho' its ſituation ſeems to intitle it to be taken notice of in this pariſh, yet it pays neither to the church nor poor of Guiting, and is within the conſtablewick of Pinnock. And I conjecture, that Pinnock, Ford, and Hyde, conſtituted that diſtrict which is called Pinnockſhire in ſome antient writings.

Beſides the above, there are ſome ſcattered tenements, which make the whole number of houſes 75, of inhabitants 428.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow, and in the gift of Chriſt Church college, Oxford. Mr. King is the preſent incumbent.

The tithes and church revenues of this pariſh are appropriated, and veſted in the dean and chapter of Oxford, and the manor and temporal revenues belong to Corpus Chriſti college. Tho' both are of a conſiderable value, yet the allowance to the curate is only 20*l.* a year; upon which ſir Robert Atkyns has obſerved, that it would be an advantage to both the colleges, and juſtice to the church, to improve the curacy; for then there might be a competent proviſion for a member of their own ſociety, and the colleges might preſent alternately.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. By the generoſity of Dr. Talbot, the late miniſter, and the concurrence of the inhabitants, this church has been beautified in a more elegant manner than is often ſeen in village churches. The chancel is ſmall, but ornamented with a handſome altar-piece, and the windows are of antient painted glaſs. The church is newly pewed and glazed throughout, and the walls and cieling are of ſtucco. There is a handſome ſquare tower at the weſt end, with four bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 45 houſes and about 191 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. The average of annual baptiſms at preſent is 16, of burials 8; the exact number of houſes 75, of inhabitants 428; which ſhews that the place is very healthy; the proportion of annual burials, to the whole number of inhabitants, being exactly as 1 to 53.5.

HAMPNET

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, one mile north-weſtward from Northleach, and eighteen eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the Coteſwold country, with a healthy air, and a light ſoil, chiefly employ'd in tillage. A little rivulet riſes here, and runs to Northleach in its way to Leachlade, where it empties itſelf into the Thames. It is called the Leech, (i.e. in the Britiſh language, a ſtone) from the petrifying quality of its water, which incruſts wood and other ſubſtances lying in its courſe with ſtony matter.

The name of this village was antiently written Hantone, but there being two other pariſhes in Glouceſterſhire of the ſame name, both much larger than this, the diminutive termination was added for diſtinction, and it was then called Hamptonet, which, by vulgar uſe, was ſoon contracted to Hampnet.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The earlieſt account we have of this manor is in Domeſday-book, where it is thus recorded:

'Roger de Lurei holds Hantone in Bradelege hundred. There are ten hides. Arch-biſhop Eldred held it, to whom king Edward gave two of thoſe ten hides quit [from tax] as they ſay. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ten villeins, with a prieſt, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages. There are eleven ſervi, and ten burgages in Winchcombe pay 65*d*. It was worth 8*l*. now [only] 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

The manor of Hampton was held of Roger Mortimer, earl of March, 34 E. 3. Edward de Mortimer, earl of March and Ulſter, was ſeized of a rent out of Hamptonet, near Northleach, which was then conſidered as a member of Biſley, 2 R. 2. Richard Hercourt, and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of the manor and advowſon of Hampnet 23 H. 7.

This manor, and that of Stowel, have had the ſame owners for many generations. Edmond Horn was ſeized of Hampnet 1 E. 6. and levied two fines of the manor and advowſon of Stowel, one the ſame year, the other 4 E. 6. He died 2 Mariæ, and left an only daughter and heir, married to Anthony Bourne, who, in her right, had livery of Hampnet the ſame year.

The manor paſſed afterwards to Henry Atkinſon, of Stowel, eſq; who was lord of it in 1608. Sir Henry Atkinſon, the laſt male heir of his family, dying without iſſue, gave this manor to William earl of Strafford, grandſon to ſir William Wentworth, who had married Anne, the eldeſt ſiſter of the before-mentioned Henry Atkinſon. John How, eſq; purchaſed the manor of the earl of Strafford, and lord Chedworth is the preſent lord of the manor of Hampnet. See Stowel.

Of the other eſtates in this pariſh, the records ſhew, that John Hanborow, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of the third part of certain lands in Hampnet 36 H. 6. Alſo William Garine, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Hampnet 2 E. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth 160*l*. a year. Lord Chedworth is patron, Mr. Hawker is the preſent incumbent.

The church of Stowel was annexed to Hampnet by the conſent of the biſhop and patron in 1660. There are about fifty acres of glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is ſmall, with a tower at the weſt end, but there is nothing in it worthy notice. It is, however, remarkable, that a woman has for many years officiated as clerk of the pariſh.

There were 14 houſes in this pariſh, at the beginning of this century, and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. Atkyns. There are now the ſame number of houſes, and 78 inhabitants.

HAMPTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Longtree, three miles diſtant ſouth from Stroud, ſix north from Tetbury, ten weſt from Cirenceſter, and twelve ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name is compoſed of Ham, a village, and ton, a common termination. The manor antiently belonged to the nuns of Caen in Normandy, wherefore it was called Minchen-Hampton, from the Saxon word Mynchen, a nun, in order to diſtinguiſh it from another pariſh of the name of Hampton in this county. It is alſo called Hampton-Road, becauſe it lies on the great road from the ſouth-eaſt country to the paſſage over the Severn.

The

The greater part of the pariſh lies high and healthy. It conſiſts moſtly of arable lands, a large common, and ſome beech woods.

On the north eaſt ſide of the town, are ſeveral fortifications and rampires, thrown up at the time when the Danes ravaged this part of the country; and a great battle was fought thereabout, between Wolphang the Saxon, and Uffa the Dane, as related by one of our antient hiſtorians, wherein the latter was routed; and the place has ever ſince borne the name of Woeful Dane's Bottom, or rather, Uffa Dane's Bottom, in memory of that event. There are alſo very large intrenchments on the weſt ſide of the town, made probably about the ſame time, to check the incurtions of thoſe terrible robbers.

Within the pariſh, is a little town of the ſame name, with a market on Tueſdays, and two fairs in the year, viz. one held on Trinity-Monday, the other on the 29th of October. The abbeſs of Caen purchaſed a grant of markets and fairs here, in the fifty-third year of the reign of king Henry the Third; but the charter was renewed in 1541. The town conſiſts of four ſtreets, in the form of a croſs, with three market-houſes, one of which was built in the year 1700, for ſtoring of wool and yarn, in expectation of eſtabliſhing a great mart for thoſe commodities, as the town is well ſituated for that purpoſe in a great clothing country; but it ſeems not to have fully anſwered the deſign.

In the pariſh, not in the town, the clothing buſineſs is carried on in a very extenſive manner, where it has been ſeated for ſeveral ages, and will probably continue; for the many brooks and ſtreams of water on the north and weſt ſides of the pariſh, are particularly neceſſary for driving the fulling-mills uſed in that buſineſs.

Here was formerly a furnace for making of iron, and the place where it ſtood is now called the Iron-mills.

Amberley is a large tract of common of paſture, on the weſt ſide of the town, conſiſting of about a thouſand acres, given to the pariſh, according to tradition, by dame Alice Hampton, who lies buried in the church. In this common are quarries of very fine freeſtone, and weather ſtone.

So much of Chalford as lies on the ſouth ſide of the river, is within the boundaries of this pariſh; and notwithſtanding ſome account has been given of it under Biſley, it is neceſſary in this place to take notice of the petrifying quality of a remarkably clear ſpring of water, iſſuing from ſeveral apertures, out of the north ſide of the hill facing the bottom. The petrifying effects of this water are ſeen on various ſubſtances, lying in the courſe of the ſtream, ſuch as moſs, and ſmall pieces of wood; but they are particularly obſervable on the axis and other parts of a mill-wheel, on which the water is continually dropping; ſo that in the courſe of a year, it forms incruſtations nearly half an inch thick, not much unlike pieces of manna. Falling into cavities, it forms ſtalactites, and large petrified maſſes, in various uncommon ſhapes, pieces of which are preſerved as curioſities.

St. Mary's-Mill, in this pariſh, was formerly a chapel, famous for a room in it called Friar Bacon's Study, becauſe Roger Bacon is ſaid to have been educated there. He died in 1284, and was the greateſt mathematician and philoſopher of the dark and ignorant age in which he lived. His ſkill in thoſe ſciences was ſo much ſuperior to that of all others, that he was caſt into priſon, on ſuſpicion of having communication with the devil; and, it is ſaid, was indicted for bringing the ſun, moon, and ſtars down to the end of a long ſtick. Hence it ſeems probable that he had ſome knowledge of optical glaſſes; for what elſe can that long ſtick be, than ſome kind of teleſcope.

Mr. Sheppard has a very good houſe cloſe by the church, and a park adjoining, with plantations of beech wood, particularly large and fine.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Sir Robert Atkyns, giving an account of the antient proprietors of this manor, has appropriated ſome records to this place, which really belong to others. Thus, the manor of Hantone which the Conqueror gave to Roger de Lurei, (whom ſir Robert calls de Ivory) lay at that time in the hundred of Bradley, as appears by Domeſday-book; and tho' he has applied that account to Minchin-Hampton, yet it can belong to no other place than Hampnet in Bradley hundred. He alſo mentions, under this head, another manor of Hantone, in Biſley hundred, whereas there was no ſuch manor there. The particulars he ſpecifies, ſhould have been applied to Hampton-Meyſey, which at the time of the general ſurvey, lay in Gerſdones, not in Biſley hundred, according to the fore-mentioned record. The following account is proper to this manor:

'The church of the Holy Trinity of the nuns 'of Caen holds Hantone in Langetreu hundred. 'Goda the counteſs held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are eight hides. In demean 'are five plow-tillages, and thirty-two villeins, 'and ten bordars, with twenty-four plow-tillages. 'There is a prieſt, and ten ſervi, and eight mills 'of 45*s.* [rent] and twenty acres of meadow; a 'wood two miles long, and half a mile broad. 'It is worth 28*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The nuns of Caen in Normandy purchaſed a grant of markets and fairs in Hampton 53 H. 3. and the abbeſs proved her right to court leet and free-warren in Hampton, in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt her, 15 E. 1.

The nuns of Caen enjoy'd this manor 'till the reign of king Henry the Fifth, when all the eſtates in England belonging to alien monaſteries were taken from them. And that king having founded a ſtately nunnery at Syon in Middleſex, as already mentioned under Avening, endowed it with many great great eſtates, and among others, with the manor of Hampton. The nuns of Syon obtained a confirmation of this eſtate 1 E. 4. to be held after the death of the dutcheſs of Suffolk, who had a grant of it for her life.

After the final diſſolution of religious foundations, this manor was granted to Andrew lord Windſor, in exchange for the manor of Stanwell in Middleſex, and other lands near Hampton-court, 34 H. 8. ſince which time it has had the ſame proprietors with that of Avening, where they are particularly ſet down. Edward Sheppard, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

Sir Robert Atkyns obſerves, that the manor of Hampton was held of Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 47 H. 3. but this muſt be underſtood of Meyſey-Hampton, and not of Minchin-Hampton, where he had placed it by miſtake.

In the account of donations to St. Peter's abbey at Glouceſter, taken from ſir William Dugdale's Monaſticon, it is ſaid, that William Revel gave to the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter, one hide of land in Hamptone, with the conſent of Bernard of Newmarket, which king Henry the Firſt confirmed to the abbey, when Peter was abbat. And that Hugh Talemach, when he took the monk's habit at Glouceſter, gave one moiety of the town of Hamptone, with the church thereof, which his ſon Peter confirmed; as did afterwards king Henry the Second, when Hameline was abbat. But it is not certain that theſe particulars belong to Minchin-Hampton, nor does it appear that Glouceſter abbey ever preſented to this church.

Several lands in Muneching-Hampton were given to the monaſtery of Malmeſbury, about the time of king Henry the Second. And the records ſhew, that the following perſons had eſtates in this pariſh.

Peter de la Mere was ſeized of Minchin-Hampton, with free warren, 20 E. 1. This could not be the chief manor, but was probably the ſame eſtate of which Robert de la Mare died ſeized 2 E. 2. conſiſting of one meſſuage, and ſixty acres of land[f], for which he paid to the abbeſs of Caen 13*s.* 4*d.* and to the abbat of Malmeſbury 40*s.* yearly; and left Peter de la Mare his ſon and heir, who was ſeized of the ſame eſtate 12 E. 2.

Here it may be proper to obſerve, that in the ſubſequent account, notwithſtanding the records mention ſeveral perſons who were ſeized of the manor; yet they muſt either be meſne lords only, or the expreſſion muſt be underſtood in a qualified ſenſe, to ſignifiy ſome conſiderable eſtate, or reputed manor, and not the principal one, which was held by the religious 'till the reformation. Thus it is ſaid, Edmond de Pinkney held this manor 4 E. 3. Thomas de Rodborough was ſeized of the manors of Minchin-Hampton and Havenpen 5 E. 3. William Ballecot held Hampton 20 E. 3. Sir John Maltravers and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Minchen-Hampton 30 E. 3. and John Maltravers the elder was ſeized of one plow-tillage, twelve acres of meadow, and 100*s.* rent, with one knight's fee in Muchin-Hampton 31 E. 3. Sir John Maltravers held the ſame 38 E. 3. John Berdolf de Wermeſe was ſeized of Naleſworth, held of the manor of Munchin-Hampton, 45 E. 3. Agnes, widow of John Maltravers the elder, held the manor of Muchin-Hampton 49 E. 3.

Sir John de Arundel was ſeized of the manor of Hampton 3 R. 2. Sir John de la Mere and Maud his wife were alſo ſeized of the manor in Minchin-Hampton, held of the honour of Wallingford, 5 R. 2.. Roger Gulden levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton to John Pearl and others 14 R. 2. Hugh Rodborough held the manor of Redewike, and lands in Sencle, within the manor of Muchin-Hampton, 17 R. 2. Thomas duke of Glouceſter was ſeized of lands in Muchin-Hampton and Rodborough 21 R. 2. John Pentour and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Hampton and Rodborough 22 R. 2. Reignald Cobham the elder, of Sternbrugh, held Minchin-Hampton 4 H. 4. as did his widow 6 H. 4. Welleline, widow of ſir John Roches, was ſeized of the manor of Muchen-Hampton 12 H. 4. Sir John Philips held the ſame 3 H. 5. John Fry, ſon and heir of John Fry, levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton and Rodborough, to the uſe of John Moody, eſq; 4 E. 4.

Delamere manor, alias Lambert's, near Minchin-Hampton, was granted to George Nevil, eſq; and his heirs males 2 R. 3. Henry Hammerſton levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton 10 H. 7. John Hyet alſo levied a fine of lands in Hampton and Avening, to William Webb, 1 E. 6.

The manors and advowſons of Hampton, Avening, Pinbury, &c. which lately belonged to the nunnery of Syon in Middleſex, were granted to Henry earl of Northampton, William lord Howard, and Nicholas Barnſley, 10 Jac.

HAMLETS, and places of diſtinct names.

1. The Box. William de Laſboroke held La Box and La Planch 45 H. 3. and William de Staure held eight acres in Box 17 E. 2. Box and Longford were held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.
2. Hawcombe.
3. The Iron Mills.
4. Longford's Burley.
5. Hide.

10. Cowcombe. Three tofts, two yard-lands, two acres of meadow, and twenty of paſture in Colcombe, near Hampton, which belonged to William Mull, alias Mill, attainted of treaſon, were granted to Thomas Herbert and his heirs males in taille 5 E. 4.
11. Forwood.

[f] Eſcheator's inquiſition of that year.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 400*l.* a year. Edward Sheppard, eſq, is patron; Doctor White is the preſent incumbent.

The pariſh of Rodborough is annexed to this rectory. The abbeſs of Caen in Normandy has preſented to this church; as did Agnes abbeſs of Syon, in the year 1538.

Gilbert Bourn was rector of this church in the year 1551, and was conſecrated biſhop of Wells in 1554.

Anthony Lapthorn was preſented to this rectory in the year 1612, of whom there is this anecdote. Being chaplain in ordinary to king James, he was preſent one day when the king and ſome of the nobility were at bowls, the archbiſhop of Canterbury and others ſtanding by. The king laid a bowl cloſe to the jack, which the nobleman who bowled next ſtruck away, on which his majeſty, falling into a paſſion, ſwore at a terrible rate. The archbiſhop taking no notice of it, Lapthorn boldly expreſt himſelf as follows: The king ſwears, and the nobles will ſwear. If the nobles ſwear, the commons will ſwear. What a ſwearing kingdom then ſhall we have! And for you, my lord archbiſhop, who have the immediate charge of his majeſty's ſoul, to hear him take God's ſacred name in vain, and to have never a word for his ſake, I will ſay to you, as one Paul ſaid to Annanias, Thou painted wall, God will ſmite thee. Which reproof wrought ſo great a reformation in the court, that if the king heard any perſon ſwear, he would reprove him, and ſay Lapthorn was coming.

The church is dedicated to the holy Trinity. It is built in the form of a croſs, with two ſide ailes. It had formerly a ſpire in the middle, but half of it was taken down, and the remainder ornamented with pinnacles and battlements; of which Dr. Frampton, biſhop of Glouceſter, who had viſited the holy land, uſed to ſay, that it greatly reſembled the pillar erected in memory of Abſalom, ſon of king David.

There was a chantry in the church, dedicated to the virgin Mary. Richard Gravener, the laſt incumbent, received a penſion of 5*l.* in 1553.

The moſt antient are the effigies of a man and woman lying in two niches in the wall of the ſouth aile. This was intended for one Anſloe, who is ſaid to have built the aile.

In the north aile, engraven on braſs plates, and fixed on a flat ſtone, are the effigies of a man and his wife in ſhrouds, and this inſcription:

Benefactions.

Samuel Sheppard, eſq; built an alms-houſe here, for eight poor people, but it has no endowment.

In 1698, Mrs. Urſula Tooke gave twenty acres of land in Weſt-field, and 80*l.* in money, the produce of which ſhe has thus diſpoſed of; 8*l.* a year for the ſchooling of ſix boys; 5*l.* a year to be given to four poor people; and 2*l.* a year for the truſtees, for their care. Each charity to be benefited or abated proportionably, on an increaſe or decreaſe of rent.

Mr. Henry King gave 250*l.* with which lands in the pariſh of Randwick, and a piece of ground called Sloven's-acre, in Hide, have been purchaſed, the produce of which to be applied in teaching eight boys to read and write.

Mr. William Webb, of Hocomb, has given five thifts, or 15*s.* in money, annually for ever, for five poor widows, ſecured on Hilbore's-mead, in this pariſh.

Mrs. Sarah Webb, of Giddinap, gave 300*l.* the intereſt of which to provide twelve brown cloth, ſerge gowns, and twelve ſhifts, to be given to twelve antient maidens, or widows, of this pariſh, on the 3d of January, for ever.

Mr. William Vick, of Briſtol, gave the intereſt of 300*l.* for ever, to be diſtributed annually as follows; 1*l.* 1*s.* to the miniſter for prayers and a ſermon; 1*l.* 1*s.* to be ſpent by the veſtry at the Talbot, whilſt it continues a publick houſe; 10*s.* to the clerk; 10*s.* to the ringers; 2*s.* 6*d.* to the ſexton; and the reſt to be diſtributed by the clerk to the poor in bread. This donation, as it is expreſſed in Vick's will, is to commemorate our happy deliverer king William, and the ſecurity of our civil and religious rights by the revolution.

HARDWICK

LIES in the hundred of Whitſtone, in a deep vale country near the Severn; ſeven miles north from Stroud, and four weſt from Glouceſter. The name is probably from Hardd, Britiſh, ſplendid, and wic, a village.

The ſoil is a ſtrong clay, therefore more proper for paſture than tillage; yet they have ſome arable land: And here, and almoſt in every part of this vale, they make excellent cheeſe, and ſtout cyder.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This pariſh was probably a member of the large manor of Standiſh, when king William the Firſt cauſed the kingdom to be ſurveyed; wherefore Domeſday-book makes no diſtinct mention of it. The manor of Hardwick was antiently held of the earls of Glouceſter and Hertford. Petronella de la Mere was ſeized of Hardenwick 47 H. 3. John Kenn died ſeized of Hardwick 6 H. 4. as did Robert Kenn 31 H. 6.

John Trye was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 27 H. 6. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of Almery Boteler, a Park, of Hardwick-court, and had that eſtate in right of his wife. The manor and eſtate of Hardwick and Hardwick-court continued in the Tryes', till it was purchaſed of This family was eminent in Glouceſterſhire for many generations. Their originall deſcent & Name is from a Towne beyonnd the ſea called Trye, (as I find it written on a monument for William Trye, eſq; in the family chapel at Hardwick) whence their anceſtor came into England about ſix hundred years ago.

Rawlin Trye married Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas Berkeley, of them by the late lord chancellor Hardwick, when he was attorney-general. And when his majeſty king George the Second was pleaſed to create him a baron of Great Britain, in 1733, and afterwards to advance him to the dignity of an earl, in 1754, his lordſhip took both thoſe titles from this place. His lordſhip died[h] in the year 1764, and was ſucceeded by Philip his eldeſt ſon, the preſent earl of Hardwick, and lord of this manor.

The abbey of Glouceſter had divers lands and poſſeſſions in this pariſh. Certain lands in Hardwick which belonged to that abbey, were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, 1 E. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Rudge and Farley, lying in the lower part of the pariſh, near Elmore church. The manor of Farleigh and de la Rugge was part of the poſſeſſions of St. Peter's abbey at Glouceſter 17 E. 3. After the diſſolution of that houſe, this manor, and a portion of tithes and glebe, were granted to the biſhop of Glouceſter 6 E. 6. and are now part of the endowment of the ſee of Glouceſter.

2. Field-Court. The name was antiently written Feld, and La Feld. Feld was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon 28 E. 3. It is an antient ſeat which has been long in the family of the Berows, or Barrows. Edward Berow died ſeized of Field-court 12 Eliz. and left James Berow, his ſon, twenty-eight years old. Mr. Thomas Barrow died poſſeſſed of this eſtate in the year 1736; whoſe only daughter, Elianor, carried it, by her marriage, to the rev. Mr. Thomas Savage, eldeſt ſon and heir of George Savage, of Broadway, in the county of Worceſter, eſq; by whoſe death, in 1760, it deſcended to his only ſurviving ſon and heir, George Savage, eſq; the preſent proprietor of this eſtate, and of the manor of Blakeney in the pariſh of Awre. His arms are, Argent, ſix lioncels rampant ſable, 3, 2, 1.

The conſtable of Hardwick has juriſdiction in the hamlet of Colthrop in the pariſh of Standiſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, annexed to Standiſh, and worth to the vicar about 30*l.* a year. The tithes in Hardwick, and ſome lands called the Rugge, were given to the abbey of Glouceſter by Thomas de St. John, and after the diſſolution of the abbey, were granted to the biſhop of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and were confirmed 1 E. 6.

Berkeley, with whom he had the manor of Alkington in Berkeley, in the reign of king Richard the Second; and was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who was alſo ſucceeded by his ſon William. John Trye was ſon of William. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of Almery Boteler, a Park, of Hardwick court, and had that eſtate in right of his wife. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 27 H. 6. William Trye, ſon of John, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Baynham, and widow of Henry Clifford, of Frampton upon Severn, according to ſome accounts; but it appears by a monument in Hardwick church, that William Trye, eſq; lord of the manor of Hardwick, ſon of John Trye, eſq; lived in the time of king Edward the Fourth, and married Iſabella, daughter of James lord Berkeley, of Berkeley-caſtle. Edward Trye, ſon of William, married Sybil, daughter and coheir of ſir Simon Milborn of Herefordſhire, and widow of ſir Thomas Monington, and was ſucceeded by his ſon John Trye, who married Elizabeth, one of the coheirs of Charles Brandon, knight, duke of Suffolk, and died in the year 1579, as appears by a memorial for him. John Trye, ſon of John, married firſt, Margaret, daughter of ſir William Skipwith of Herefordſhire; ſecondly, Alice, ſiſter of ſir James Crofts. William Trye, ſon of the laſt John, married Mary, daughter of ſir Edward Tyrrell, of Thornton in Buckinghamſhire, and died in 1609. From this marriage all his deſcendants have a claim of kindred to the founder of All-Souls college in Oxford, whereby they will have a better chance of a fellowſhip in that college, than others who are not of the founder's kindred.

William Trye was ſon of William, and married Anne —— deſcended from the family of ſir Francis Vincent, of Stoke in the county of Surry, knight, and by her had eight ſons and ſix daughters. John, William, and Henry, the three eldeſt ſons, died without iſſue. Thomas, the fourth ſon, married Anne, eldeſt daughter of Richard Jones, of Hanham, eſq; and died before his father; whereby William, ſon of Thomas, was heir to his grandfather. He married Mary Horne, one of the coheireſſes of Thomas Horne, of Horncaſtle in Yorkſhire, eſq; and died poſſeſſed of the manors of Hardwick and Haresfield in the year 1717. He was ſucceeded by Thomas, his ſon and heir, who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Norwood, of Leckhampton, eſq; and was alſo ſucceeded by his ſon William Trye, late of Sudgrove in the pariſh of Miſerden, eſq; deceaſed, whoſe ſon Thomas Trye is now living. Arms, Or, a bend azure.

[h] On the day following his death, there appeared a ſhort account of his lordſhip, his offices and promotions, with his character. He ſtudied the law in the Middle-temple, with ſuch ſucceſs, that at 29 years of age he attained the office of ſolicitor-general; and the ſame year, 1720, received the honour of knighthood. In 1723-4, he was conſtituted attorney-general, and held that office 'till Oct. 31, 1733, when, having firſt received the degree of ſerjeant at law, his majeſty was pleaſed to conſtitute him lord chief juſtice of the court of king's bench, the ſame day; and to create him a baron of Great Britain, on the 23d of November following. On Feb. 21, 1736-7, his lordſhip had the great ſeal delivered to him; and in the years 1740, 1743, and 1745, he was nominated one of the lords juſtices for the adminiſtration of government during his majeſty's abſence from the kingdom, as he was alſo ſeveral times afterwards. In 1746, he was appointed lord high ſteward of England, for the tryals of the earls of Kilmarnock and Cromartie, and lord Balmerino; and again in 1747, for the tryal of lord Lovat. His majeſty, in conſideration of his long and eminent ſervices, was pleaſed to advance him to the titles of viſcount Royſton, and earl of Hardwick, by letters patent, bearing date Apr. 2, 1754. He reſigned the great ſeal in November 1756, and departed this life March 6, 1764.

The reputation with which he filled the ſeat of judicature in the king's bench could only be equalled by that with which he afterwards diſcharged the office of lord high chancellor; and it is no ſmall evidence of the abilities and integrity with which he preſided in the court of chancery, that, during the ſpace of near twenty years, in which he ſat there, (a period longer than any of his predeceſſors ſince lord chancellor Egerton) only three of his decrees were appealed from, and thoſe afterwards confirmed by the houſe of lords. His talents as a ſpeaker in the ſenate, as well as on the bench, have left too ſtrong an impreſſion to need being dilated upon; and thoſe, as a writer, were ſuch as might be expected from one who had early diſtinguiſhed himſelf in that character in the Spectator. In his public character, wiſdom, experience, probity, temper, candor, and moderation were ſo happily united, that his death, as public affairs were then ſituated, was reckoned a loſs to his country as unſeaſonable as important. And his private virtues, learning, and amiableneſs of manners were as much eſteemed and admired by thoſe who had the honour and happineſs of his acquaintance, as his ſuperior abilities were by the nation in general.

His lordſhip married Margaret, one of the daughters of Charles Cocks, of the city of Worceſter, eſq; (by Mary his wife, eldeſt ſiſter of John lord Somers) and by her ladyſhip, who died on Sept. 19, 1761, had iſſue five ſons and two daughters. 1. Philip, now earl of Hardwick. 2. Charles, who filled the offices of ſolicitor-general and attorney-general, and is now deceaſed. 3. Joſeph, knight of the Bath, and ambaſſador to the States General. 4. John, clerk of the crown, &c. 5. James, now biſhop of St. David's. And two daughters, 1. Lady Elizabeth, married to lord Anſon. 2. Lady Margaret, wedded to Gilbert Heathcote, eſq.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the eaſt end of the ſouth aile are many monuments for the Tryes, with their arms and quarterings, all in a ruinous condition. That part of the pedigree of this family which differs from ſir Robert Atkyns's, is drawn from the inſcriptions. The following are the moſt obſervable:

Here lieth y^t^ Body of William Trye y^e^ Elder Eſq^r^ Lord of y^e^ Mannor of Hardwicke, who married Mary, ſecond Daughter to S^r^ Edward Tyrrell, of Thorneton in the County of Buckingham, Knight, & died the 13^th^ Day of March, Anno Dni 1609.

Here lyeth interred the Body of William Trye, Eſq^r^; Lord of y^e^ Mannor of Hardwicke and Harsfeild, nobly deſcended by his Auncеſtors & by their matching in ſundrie Noble Families. The laſt was with one of y^e^ Coheireſſes of S^r^ Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, K^t^ of y^e^ moſt Noble Order of y^e^ Garter.

He had by his vertuous and charitable Wife M^rs^ Anne Trye fourteen Children deſcended of y^e^ Family of S^r^ Fran. Vincent Baronet of Stoke in y^e^ County of Surrey. He died one Tueſday at Night the 20^th^ Day of Decemb^r^. An^o^ Dni 1681 aged aboute 84 Years.

HARESCOMB, or HARSCOMB,

IS a ſmall pariſh, lying in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton, five miles diſtant north from Stroud, one from Painſwick, and five ſouth from Glouceſter. It conſiſts of good paſture, with ſome arable.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It is expreſſly mentioned in Domeſday-book, that Edmar, one of the king's thanes, could either give or ſell his three manors of Herſefel, Athelai, and Sanher, to whomſoever he would; and it follows immediately after,

'In Herſecome, Wiflet held three virgates of 'land as free as Edmer. He had two plow-tillages 'there, and two bordars, and five ſervi, and 'meadow [proportionable] to the plow-lands'.

This ſhort account of Herſecome is ſucceeded by the particulars of Brookthrop, already given under that head; then follows a paſſage in the record more diſhonourable to Harold and William than any I have found in that part of it relating to Glouceſterſhire. It is there ſaid, that 'Earl 'Herald took away thoſe five eſtates after the 'death of king Edward, and Roger de Lurei put 'them to farm for 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*' i.e. for the uſe of king William. Theſe were the lands which the owners held ſo freely that they might give or ſell them as they pleaſed; and if they had incurred a premunire, ſo as to forfeit their title, it would undoubtedly have been mentioned, as in the caſe immediately following: 'Uluuard held half a 'hide of king Edward free [from rent] in the ſame 'hundred, near to the city [of Glouceſter;] but 'earl William gave this to his cook, for Uluuard 'was outlawed.' But no outlawry, no crime, is pretended againſt Edmar and Wiflet; yet Harold firſt deprived them of their right, and William, far from reſtoring their property, as juſtice required, took poſſeſſion of it himſelf, upon the uſurper's title.

Roger le Rus, or le Rouſe, died ſeized of Harſcomb 22 E. 1. John Rouſe was ſeized of one meſſuage and half a yard-land in Harſcomb 19 E. 2. Joan the widow of William Bokeland died ſeized of this manor 35 H. 3. which I conjecture ſhe had in dower from one of the Rouſes, a former huſband, as it ſoon reverted to that family; for Thomas Rouſe was ſeized of the manor of Haſcomb, and of a tenement called the Orchard, 48 H. 3. and 1 R. 2.

William Mull, (perhaps a ſon of ſir Edward Mills, who lived at Harſcomb) was afterwards lord of this manor; and being attainted, his eſtate was forfeited, and granted to Thomas Herbert, and to his heirs males, 2 E. 4. which Thomas dying without male iſſue, the manor, and one toft, and one yard-land called Organs, were granted to ſir Richard Beauchamp, and his heirs, 14 E. 4.

In the charter of endowment of the biſhoprick of Glouceſter, it is recited, that the manor of Haſecomb lately belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter. And, by that charter, it was granted to the biſhoprick, 33 H. 8.

The abbat of Glouceſter was poſſeſſed of lands in this pariſh, which were granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8 and were confirmed 6 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, to which Pitchcombe is annexed, worth together about 60*l.* a year. Mr. Purnell is patron; Mr. Rice Jones the preſent incumbent. Fourteen acres belong to the glebe.

Tithes in Harſcomb, with the advowſon, which belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to the biſhoprick 33 H. 8. and again confirmed 6 E. 6. Other tithes in Haſcomb, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to ſir William Rider 7 Jac. The priory of Lanthony received a penſion of 5*s.* yearly of the rector.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, is ſmall, with only a ſmall turret.

HARESFIELD.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Whitſtone, in the vale country, five miles north-weſt from Stroud, and ſix ſouth from Glouceſter.

It is a very rich part of the country, ſituated beneath a ridge of hills, ſheltering it from the bleak eaſterly winds. The pariſh is pretty extenſive. Moſt of it is in paſturage and orcharding, and produces cheeſe and cyder of the beſt qualities.

From a hill called Broadbridge-green in this pariſh, is a very fine proſpect over the vale, for many miles above and below, with the waving woods and riſing lands of the foreſt of Dean in the front, on the oppoſite ſide of the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, this pariſh lay in two hundreds, as appears from the following extracts from Domeſday-book:

'Edmar, a thane, had three manors in Dudeſtan 'hundred, Herſefel, Athelai, and Sanher. He 'might give or ſell his land to whom he pleaſed. 'This eſtate was taxed at two hides. There were 'eight plow-tillages in demean, and four villeins, 'and four bordars, and thirty ſervi, with five 'plow-tillages, and meadow proportionable to the 'plowed-land. Domeſday-book, p. 67.

Of that part which lay in Whitſtone hundred it is ſaid, 'Durand of Glouceſter, holds ſeven 'hides taxed, in Herſefeld in Witeſtan hundred. 'Godrick and Edric, two brothers, held them for 'two manors, and could go where they would. 'There are three plow-tillages in demean, and 'nine villeins, and eleven bordars, with nine plow-'tillages. There are four ſervi, and five potters 'pay 44*d.* There is a wood half a mile long, 'and three furlongs broad. It was worth and is 'worth 6*l.* Domeſday-book[1], p. 77.

In the reign of king Stephen, this manor belonged to Milo the great earl of Hereford, ſon of Walter, conſtable of England. He married Sybil, daughter and coheireſs of Bernard de Newmarch, lord of Brecknock, by Neſta, daughter of Griffith ap Llewellin, prince of Wales, by whom he had five ſons and three daughters. This manor deſcended to Roger, his eldeſt ſon, who dying without iſſue, Walter the conſtable, of Hereford, was his brother and heir. He gave to the monks of Glouceſter, when Hameline was abbat, ſix yard-lands in Haresfield, and two yard-lands againſt Briſtol high-way, near the park, in exchange for a hundred fardingals of land in Herefordſhire. He and his brothers dying without iſſue male, this manor deſcended to Margery, his eldeſt daughter, married to Humphry de Bohun, whoſe heirs, in her right, were afterwards earls of Hereford, and ſucceeding owners of this manor.

Humphry de Bohun, great grandſon of Humphry and of Margery the heireſs, ſettled this manor on ſir John de Bohun, his eldeſt ſon by Maud de Avenbury, his ſecond wife. This ſir John took part with the rebellious barons againſt king Henry the Third, but made his peace in the 53d year of the king's reign. He proved his right to view of frank-pledge and free warren in this manor, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and died in the 20th year of that reign; as did his ſon George de Bohun, 10 E. 2. and Humphry de Bohun 46 E. 3.

This manor came afterwards to the Staffords, by marriage with a deſcendant from the Bohuns, earls of Hereford. Humphry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, died ſeized of Haresfield 38 H. 6. as did Edward duke of Buckingham, who was attainted and beheaded 13 H. 8. whereby it came to the crown.

Lord Coke, in the fourth part of his Inſtitutes, ſays, the office of conſtable of England was of inheritance, by the tenure of the manors of Haresfield, Newland, and Whitenhurſt, by grand Serjeanty. This office became forfeited to the crown by the attainder of the duke of Buckingham, and ſince that time, both in reſpect of the amplitude of the authority, in war and peace, and of the charge, it was never granted to any ſubject, but now of late hac vice.

This manor was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton 4 E. 6. from whoſe family it paſſed to the Jerninghams. Sir Henry Jerningham died ſeized of it 20 Eliz. and Henry Jerningham, his ſon, was the proprietor of it in the year 1608. Of [1] Sir Robert Atkyns mentions, as from Domeſday-book, that "Eight hides in Haresfield did belong to the manor of Berchelai in the reign of king William the Conqueror." But this is a miſtake, occaſioned by his reading Haresfield for Horſelle in that record. Of

of this name and family it paſſed to the Tryes. William Trye of Hardwick died ſeized of this manor in 1717, and was ſucceeded therein by his ſon and heir, Thomas Trye, who ſold the manors of Haresfield and Hardwick to ſir Philip Yorke, attorney-general, afterwards earl of Hardwick. His lordſhip's eldeſt ſon, Philip earl of Hardwick, is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a very large eſtate here. For his lordſhip's arms, &c. ſee Hardwick.

The records which mention the following particulars, either cannot relate to the manor of which I have been treating, or elſe the perſons mentioned therein muſt have been tenants under the Staffords. Anchoret, the widow of ſir Richard Talbot, was ſeized of the manor of Haresfield 1 H. 5. Alice, the widow of John Browning, held the ſame 2 H. 5. and John earl of Shrewſbury died ſeized of it 38 H. 6. I have given theſe a place in the account of this pariſh, becauſe I found them in ſir Robert Atkyns, and they may poſſibly relate to it. But what he ſays of Giles Bruges being ſeized of the manor of Haresfield, 6 E. 4. muſt be underſtood of Hasfield.

Beſide the manor, the records mention other proprietors of eſtates in this pariſh. The priory of Lanthony was poſſeſſed of lands in Haresfield, ſome of which were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8. And a manor in Haresfield lately belonging to Lanthony (for the religious affected to call their eſtates by that name) was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8. The inn called the George, in Haresfield, lately belonging to Lanthony, was granted to William Partridge 5 Eliz.

The lay proprietors were the following: William de Littlecot died ſeized of lands in Haresfield 1 H. 3. Reginald Fitz-Herbet died ſeized of lands in this pariſh 14 E. 1. and was ſucceeded by his ſon John Fitz-Reignald. Matthew Fitz-Herbert, a deſcendant from them, levied a fine of lands in Haresfield, with various remainders, 14 E. 3. and died ſeized of thoſe lands 30 E. 3. as did Edward St. John of Scopham, and Joan his wife, 6 R. 2. William Mull was ſeized of one toft and one yard-land in Haresfield, called Henbarrows, and being attainted, the lands were forfeited to the crown, and granted to ſir Richard Beauchamp 14 E. 4. Chriſtopher Raſtal died ſeized of land in Haresfield 16 Eliz. leaving Thomas, his ſon, thirty years old.

Mr. Samuel Niblet, of the city of Glouceſter, is poſſeſſed of eſtates to the amount of near a thouſand pounds a year in this pariſh, and of the houſe formerly belonging to the family of Rogers.

The handſome houſe, formerly the Warners, and afterwards Mr. Trye's, is now the property of Mrs. Longford, deſcended by her mother from the Tryes.

The late Mr. Smith's houſe and eſtate are the property of the earl of Hardwick.

HAMLETS. 1. Hareſcomb, which is diſtinct from the pariſh of that name.

2. Park-End. Mr. Rogers had a good houſe and eſtate in this hamlet, now the property of Mr. Bearcroft, and Mr. Jones, in right of their wives, who are the daughters and coheirs of Mr. Rogers. Sir Almarick Boteler was ſeized of the manor of Park-End (hence ſometimes called Almarick a Park) and of one furlong of land called Beaurepeire, in Harsfield, 20 R. 2. John Kenn died ſeized of fifty acres of arable, ſix acres of meadow, and twenty-four of paſture, in Haresfield and Hardwick, 16 H. 6. Robert Kenn, eſq; was lord of Beaurepeire in Haresfield 31 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 80*l.* a year. The earl of Hardwick is patron; Mr. James Comelyne is the preſent incumbent.

The rectory and church of Haresfield, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Lawrence Baſkervil and William Blake, ſcrivener, 3 Jac. The earl of Hardwick has the impropriation, which pays 9*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

Ten acres of meadow, and ten acres of arable land belong to the glebe. The vicarage houſe is a very good one, with handſome gardens, and a fiſh-pond.

The church conſiſts of the nave, with two chancels, one beyond the other. The fartheſt belongs to the vicar, the other to the impropriator. At the weſt end is a ſpire, with five bells and a clock.

There are many memorials for the family of Rogers, out of which I have ſelected the following:

To the Memory of Iohn Rogers, eldeſt Son of Iohn Rogers, Gent. & Mary his Wife, daughter of Poole Pauncefote of Newent, eſq; who was born the 9th of Auguſt 1672, and died Aug. 19, 1683. A Lad of rare Piety, Beauty, Docibility, Wit, and Good Nature.

Of gentle Blood, his Parents only Treaſure,
Theyr laſting Sorrow, & theyr vaniſh'd Pleaſure,
Adorn'd with Features, Vertues, Wit, & Grace,
A large Proviſion for ſo ſhort a Race.
More mod'rate Gifts might have prolong'd his Date;
Too early fitted for a better State.
But knowing Heav'n his Home, to ſhun Delay
He leapt o'er Age, & took the ſhorteſt Way.

There are ſeveral memorials in the chancel, for the Poultons, with their arms, viz. On a feſs, between three mullets, as many roundlets.

At the beginning of this century, there were 120 houſes in this pariſh, and about 500 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 12. Atkyns. The inhabitants are ſuppoſed to be now about the ſame number.

HARNHILL

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, three miles eaſt from Cirenceſter, and twenty ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It was antiently called Harebille, and Harnbull. It lies on the edge of a vale, and conſiſts of a due proportion of paſture and arable land. The ſoil is ſtrong, and the air healthy; but in this little village there is nothing very remarkable.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Radulf de Todeni holds Harehille in Gerſdones 'hundred, and Roger holds it of him. There are 'five hides. Elric, Aluuin, and Aluric held it for 'three manors.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

William de Harnhull died ſeized of the manor of Harnhull, with the advowſon of the church, 17 E. 2. which manor was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

Edward de Stonor died ſeized thereof 5 R. 2. as did John, his ſon and heir, 13 R. 2. He was ſucceeded by Robert de Stonor, whoſe ſon Gilbert died ſeized of this manor 3 H. 5.

From this family, it went to the Tames. Sir Edmond Tame died ſeized of Harnhill 26 H. 8. as did Edmond his ſon 36 H. 8. leaving three daughters coheireſſes, married, as related under Fairford; who, with their huſbands, had livery of this manor 37 H. 8.

Thomas Aubury, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but Thomas Smith, eſq; who reſides in Oxfordſhire, is the preſent lord of the manor of Harnhill, and has a good houſe (now occupied by the tenant of the farm) and a good eſtate in this pariſh. His arms are, Per pale, ermine and erminois, over all an eagle diſplay'd ſable, member'd gules, arm'd and langued azure.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Smith is patron; Dr. Bray is the preſent incumbent. There are no lands tithe free.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and hath a ſmall ſpire at the weſt end.

At the beginning of this century, there were 20 houſes, and about 80 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly birth 2, burials 2. Atkyns. But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in ten years, from 1700, to 1709 inclusive, there were 29 baptiſms, and 16 burials; and from 1760, to 1769, there were 24 baptiſms, and 17 burials; and the inhabitants are now exactly 89. So that 1 in 52 dies annually.

HARTPURY.

THIS pariſh lies in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's Barton, ſix miles eaſtward from Newent, nine ſouth-weſt from Tewkeſbury, and four north-weſt from Glouceſter. It conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture, with ſome very good arable land. The low grounds are exceedingly liable to floods from the Leden, and from a brook which runs from Tiberton.

This

This village is not diſtinguiſhed by antiquities, the curious productions of nature or art, nor any remarkable tranſactions: only, en paſſant, it may be obſerved, that in the great civil war, colonel Maſſy placed a garriſon in the manor houſe, after the ſiege of Glouceſter, to ſecure Corſe-lawn, and to oppoſe colonel Myn, of the king's party, who lay at Newent, Highleden, and Taynton.

Hardeper, Hardepery, and Hartpury, are variations of the ſame name, whoſe ſignification is uncertain. The vulgar notion of its ariſing from harts, or red deer, frequenting the place, is to me very unſatisfactory; for how does that account for pere, or pery. If the name of the brook from Tiberton were the Deper, the etymology would be eaſy; for rejecting the aſpirate, Ar-Deper, and Ar-Depery would denote the ſituation of the village Upon the Deper; but this is all conjecture. The name ſeems to have been given it ſome time ſince the conqueſt; for though it is affirmed that Offa, king of Mercia, gave the manor of Hardepery to the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter, when Eva was abbeſs, who died in the 33d year of her government, anno 768, it does not appear to have been given by that very name, but the contrary is moſt probable; for in Domeſday-book no ſuch name can be found, the place being there called Merewent; and part of the pariſh is diſtinguiſhed by the name of Morewent to this day.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

When Domeſday-book was compiled, Merewent was a member of the manor of Bertune, under the account of which, at p. 206, is a tranſlation of that record, which includes the particulars of this pariſh. The manor at that time was part of the poſſeſſions of the abbey of Glouceſter. King Henry the Firſt confirmed to the monks of Glouceſter the aſſart lands, or new plowed grounds in Hardeper, 23° regni, which were granted to them by William earl of Glouceſter. He alſo, by his charter, gave to Glouceſter abbey free warren in all their lands beyond Severn, and the abbey's right for Hardepirie, in particular, was allowed 15 E. 1. by which it appears, that the place had then obtained its preſent name.

The abbats of St. Peter's at Glouceſter continued in poſſeſſion of this manor, and of a very large eſtate here, 'till that houſe was diſſolved.

Walter Compton, eſq; died July 26, 7 Eliz. ſeized of the manor of Hartpury, and of the capital meſſuage there, called the Abbat's-Place, and of fifty yard-lands belonging thereto, all which he had by the grant of William Herbert, knight of the garter, dated Feb. 20, 4 E. 6. Eſch. ſub anno.

The above Walter Compton was deſcended from the Comptons in Wiltſhire. From him the manor paſſed, thro' ſeveral generations, down to ſir William Compton, baronet, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. He was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir William Compton, baronet, who had iſſue three ſons and three daughters. One ſon died an infant. William, the eldeſt, ſucceeded to the title and eſtate, but dying without iſſue, his brother, ſir Walter Compton, baronet, ſucceeded him. Which ſir Walter Compton deceaſing in the year 1773, without iſſue, this manor and eſtate devolved on his two ſurviving ſiſters, Catherine and Jane; Helen, the third ſiſter, being then dead. Catherine was married to Edward Bearcroft, of Droitwich in the county of Worceſter, eſq; and died in the year 1775, without iſſue alſo; Jane is married to John Berkeley, of the city of Worceſter, eſq; who, in her right, is the preſent lord of the manor of Hartpury.

HAMLETS. 1. Morewent-end. William de Morewent, (who took his name from this place, where he had a conſiderable eſtate) gave twenty acres of wood for ever to the poor, which therefore bore the name of William's Wood; but the wood was deſtroy'd in the reign of king Charles the Firſt, and is now in waſte.

2. Moor-end, where is a common by the ſide of the Leden.

3. Corſe-end.

4. Blackwell's-end.

5. Lamper's-end.

6. Butter's-end.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 80*l.* a year. The biſhop of Glouceſter is patron; Mr. Sparks is the preſent incumbent.

The great tithes were appropriated to the abbey of Glouceſter, and were granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, conſiſts of the nave, with a tower at the weſt end, on which are the Comptons arms, viz. Sable, a lion paſſant gardant Or, between three helmets cloſe proper. The church is out of repair, and in a filthy condition.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

This was not the common burying-place of the Compton family, ſo that there are but few memorials for them; but within the communion rails, on braſs, is the following:

Here lye ye Bodys of Willi. Compton Eſqr. Lord of y^e^ Manor of Hartpvry, & Elinor his Wife, Daught. of S^r^ Iohn Mevx, K^t^. She died Anno 1631. He died Anno 1641. to whoſe Memory their dear Daughter Dame Elinor Button Wife of S^r^ Robert Button Baro^nt^ here put this Monument.——Arms, 1. There is a memorial for Walter Compton, eſq; who died in 1627.

Lands in this pariſh, given to the poor by a perſon unknown, now let at about 8*l.* a year. Mr. Anthony Jelfe gave 50*l.* with which lands in Longney have been purchaſed for the uſe of the HASFIELD.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of Weſtminſter hundred, ſix miles diſtant eaſt from Newent, five ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and ſix north from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated on the north-weſt ſide of the Severn, and conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture. About a thouſand acres of meadow ground, lying along the ſide of the river, are in common part of the year. But there are only 125 acres of arable land in all the pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Brictric held one hide and a half at Hasfelde, 'of the church of Weſtminſter, in the time of 'king Edward. Turſtin the ſon of Rolf now 'holds it.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The above could not be the manor, for king Henry the Third gave that to Richard Pauncefot, in the thirty-third year of his reign, whoſe family had been eminent in this county, and flouriſhed in Wiltſhire in the time of king William the Firſt. Grimbald Pauncefot, ſon of Richard, proved his right to privileges in this manor, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and dying 8 E. 2. left Almarick his brother and heir. John Pauncefot died ſeized of this manor 3 H. 5. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir John Pauncefot, who was ſeveral times high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire. Livery of the manor of Hasfield was granted to John Pauncefot, ſon of Nicholas, 1 Eliz.

Paul Tracy, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Sir Humphry Tracy ſold it to Mr. John Parker, about the year 1655, and John Parker, eſq; a deſcendant from him, is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a good eſtate in the pariſh. His coat armour, as I find it in the laſt herald's viſitation, is, Sable, a buck trippant argent between three pheons Or. But he now uſes the following: Sable, a feſs argent charged with a buck's head caboſhed and two pellets of the field, between three pheons Or.

Edward Bruges of Lone, brother of ſir Giles Bruges of Coberley, died 15 H. 6. ſeized of four meſſuages, and eight acres of land, and a tenement called Underhills, conſiſting of thirteen acres of arable, and of eight acres of meadow and paſture; which eſtate is called the manor of Hasfeld in the eſcheator's inquiſition of that year. By another, taken at Glouceſter 15 Eliz. it was found, that Edmund lord Chandois died ſeized of the manor of Harsfield; but this was not the manor which had been ſo long enjoy'd by the Pauncefoots.

The eſtate held by the church of Weſtminſter at the time of the conqueſt, was ſometime afterwards called a manor. At the diſſolution of religious foundations, it was veſted in the crown, and granted to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter 34 H. 8. but reſumed, and granted to the abbat and convent of Weſtminſter 4 Mar. and again regranted to the chapter 2 Eliz. The right of the church of Weſtminſter to the manor of Hasfield was tried 33 C. 2. when it appeared from the court-rolls, as early as 8 E. 2. that the manor was then held of the heirs of William Ruſſel, and not of the church of Weſtminſter, by the ſervice or rent of a ſparrow-hawk yearly.

Thomas Throckmorton levied a fine of lands in Hasfield to John Webb, 1 E. 6.

Wickeridge is a hamlet in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, within the peculiar of Derhurſt, worth about 130*l.* a year. John Parker, eſq; is patron; Mr. Parker is the preſent incumbent. The rector pays 20*s.* yearly to the crown.

Thirteen acres of meadow, and ſome arable, belong to the glebe.

A portion of tithes in Hasfield, formerly belonging to the monaſtery of Derhurſt, was granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 1 Eliz. and another portion, likewiſe belonging to the ſame convent, was granted to Richard Hill and William James 13 Eliz. Theſe tithes afterwards belonged to the Browns, and, by purchaſe, are now the property of Nicholas Hyett, of the city of Glouceſter, eſq; who pays a fee-farm rent of 3*l.* a year to the crown.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is pleaſantly ſituated on a riſing ground. It is twenty-eight yards long, with a ſtrong embattled tower at the weſt end. In the windows were the following coats, 1. Gules, ſix plates, 3, 2, 1.—2. Pauncefoot. —3. Or, a lion rampant gules ſemeé with croſs croſslets. —4. Bridges.

HASLETON

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, three miles north-weſtward from Northleach, nine ſouth-eaſtward from Winchcombe, and ſeventeen eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated high on the Coteſwolds, with a fine healthy air. The country hereabout is almoſt deſtitute of trees, and ſo much expoſed to the winds from every quarter, that vegetation is not a little retarded. The ſoil is generally light and ſtony, and moſtly in tillage; yet agriculture is lately ſo much improved in this open, I had almoſt ſaid naked region, that the farmers obtain good crops of corn, and feed and fat great numbers of ſheep, and ſome black cattle; and many of them keep a little dairy beſides. This pariſh hath lately been incloſed, and it is hoped that, as well for profit as ornament, planting of beech, aſh, and fir, which ſuit the ſoil, may take place with other improvements.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Sigar de Cioches holds Haſedene in Bradelege hundred. Goda the counteſs held it. There are ten hides. King William granted three of them free from tax, as the county affirms. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins, and a prieſt, with ten plow-tillages; and there are ſix ſervi. It was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

This manor was given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by Robert Gyves, 35 H. 3. and the abbat proved his right to free warren therein 15 E. 1. and continued in poſſeſſion of the abbey 'till the general diſſolution, and was granted to Thomas Culpeper the younger, and to his heirs males, 1 H. 8. reſerving a rent of 16*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Notwithſtanding this, Richard Tracy obtained a grant of the manor of Haſleton, and Haſleton-grove, lately belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, 36 H. 8. However, Thomas Culpeper ſtood ſeized of the manor 1 Eliz. when livery was granted to Alexander Culpeper, his ſon; and ſir Anthony Culpeper was lord of it in the year 1608. Mr. Serjeant Wyat, of Kent, was afterwards lord of the manor of Haſleton; as was Mr. Serjeant Winniſter, of Turk Dean, at the beginning of this century. Edmund Waller, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and of Farmington.

HAMLET. Yanworth is a hamlet in this pariſh, from which it is ſeparated by the pariſh of Hampnet.

'Sigar de Cioches holds Ieneurde in Bradelege 'hundred. Goda held it. There are five hides, 'of which three are exempted from tax by king 'William, as Sigar's man ſays. There are three 'plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins, 'and two bordars, with ſeven plow-tillages. 'There are ſeven ſervi, and a mill of 40*d.* [rent] 'a wood three furlongs long, and two broad. It 'was worth 7*l.* now 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Radulph de Zouch gave Janeſworth [i.e. his property therein] to the church of St. Peter of Glouceſter, free and quit from all ſervices. And Reginald Thucks gave to the ſame church, his village of Janeworth [i.e. his ſhare of it] in perpetual right of inheritance, free and quit from all ſervices and cuſtoms. Earl Robert de Bertone gave to the ſame church 10*s.* rent out of Janeſworth, in the time when Walter de Lacy was abbat. And king Stephen and king Henry the Second, confirmed theſe grants to the abbey. See p. 148.

John de Ganeworth, or Yanworth, was abbat of Winchcombe 31 H. 3. and probably he procured this manor from the abbey of Glouceſter to his own houſe, either by purchaſe or exchange; for in the proceedings of a Quo warranto, the abbat of Winchcombe proved his right to privileges in Yanworth, 15 E. 1. and the manor continued in that houſe 'till it was diſſolved.

After the diſſolution of the abbey of Winchcombe, the manor of Yanworth was granted to Thomas Culpeper 35 H. 8. as that of Haſleton had been, and was enjoy'd by that family. But other records mention, that the manor of Yanworth, a quarry of ſtones, and the church-houſe, lately belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8. And that Henry earl of Arundel had the manors of Haſleton and Yanworth, for they were granted to Edward earl of Bedford, 8 Jac. and in his grant they are mentioned to have been lately the earl of Arundel's. Theſe ſeeming inconſiſtencies may be reconciled, by conſidering that, as Yanworth was given in ſeveral portions to the abbey, ſo in all probability, each grant had relation only to one of thoſe eſtates, all different from each other, tho' all deſcribed by the name of Yanworth. Lord Chedworth is the preſent lord of the manor of Yanworth, which deſcended to him from his anceſtor, ſir Richard How of Compton.

This place has a chapel of eaſe, dedicated to St. Michael, with an aile on the north ſide, and an embattled tower at the weſt end. The inhabitants antiently buried at Haſleton, but are now buried at this chapel. The biſhop of Worceſter, in 1366, made a decree between the abbat of Winchcombe and the rector of Haſleton, concerning the ſettling of a chaplain at Yanworth.

Of

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 110*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Rawlins is the preſent incumbent. At the incloſing of the pariſh, the rector had lands allotted to him in lieu of tithes.

The abbey of Winchcombe preſented to this church in the reign of king Richard the Firſt. The advowſon of the rectory and vicarage of Haſleton belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and was granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is ſmall, with a low tower at the weſt end.

HATHEROP.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, ſeven miles diſtant ſouth-eaſt from Northleach, ten eaſtward from Cirenceſter, and twenty-four ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſays, The Name is derived from Throp, which in the Saxon Language ſignifies an Habitation, and Heither, becauſe it lies lower on the River than Bouthrop, which lies higher. As I profeſs not to underſtand the latter part of this ſentence, I ſhall paſs it over without further remark, and give my own opinion of the derivation of the name, which was antiently written Hetrope, and Etherope. The village is ſituated upon an eminence, but particularly above Quenington, an adjoining pariſh, which lies in a little narrow valley to the ſouthward; and it was undoubtedly this high ſituation that gave occaſion to the name; for Þeah, in the Anglo-Saxon, ſignifies high, and Ꝺnop, a village.

There are two camps in this pariſh, one about a mile to the north-weſt of the Roman Ikenild-way; the other near the ſide of that antient road, at a place now called Aſton-Barrow. The latter is thought to be that which was antiently called Brictwoldeſberg, and gave name to the hundred, now corruptly written Britwell's-barrow.

Sir John Webb has a noble old houſe here, but not making it his conſtant reſidence, 'tis too much neglected, and the offices and gardens are falling to ruin. About the year 1773, ſir John exerted a very laudable ſpirit, in ſearching ſeveral places in this pariſh for coal, with uncommon perſeverance; but his ſucceſs was not equal to the wiſhes of the country, nor to his own expectations. It is ſaid that the workmen found ſome detached pieces of coal, but no continued ſtratum. It is ſaid alſo, that they drew up a quantity of aſhes from the depth of a hundred feet. If this be true, it ſeems utterly unaccountable how they ſhould be lodged there.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

There were antiently two diſtinct manors in this pariſh, of which the following was the moſt conſiderable:

'Ernulf de Heſding holds Etherope in Brict-'uoldeſberg hundred. There are ſeven hides. 'Uluuard held it. There are ſix plow-tillages in 'demean, and twenty-three villeins with ten plow-'tillages. There are twelve ſervi, and a mill of '15*s.* It was worth 8*l.* now 12*l.*' D. B. p. 77.

Ernulf de Heſding gave the church of Hey-thrope, and a water-mill, with the lands belonging to the prieſt, in the ſame place, to the monks of Glouceſter, when Serlo was abbat; which particulars were confirmed to them by king Henry the Firſt, and king Stephen, p. 147.

This Ernulf de Heſding was alſo lord of the manor of Kempsford, in this county, which he conveyed to Patrick de Chaworth, in the reign of William the Firſt; and probably this manor paſſed to the Chaworths at the ſame time; and came to Walter, grandſon of Walter de Ewrus, earl of Roſchar, by his marriage with Sybilla de Chaworth. He gave lands in Hatherop to the priory of Bradenſtoke in Wiltſhire, which was of his foundation, and he and his wife lie buried near the choir of that monaſtery.

Patrick his eldeſt ſon, created earl of Saliſbury by the empreſs Maud, was ſlain in a quarrel by Guy de Lozinnian 13 H. 2. His ſon and heir, William earl of Saliſbury, married Alianore de Vitrei, daughter of Tirrel de Mainers, by whom he had Ela, his only daughter and heireſs, married to William Longeſpee, natural ſon to king Henry the Second, by Fair Roſamond.

She ſurvived her huſband, and founded a nun-nery at Lacock in Wiltſhire, of which ſhe herſelf was abbeſs, and endowed it with the manor of Hatherop, with the advowſon of the church, and with the hundred of Briteſwold Barrow; which endowment was confirmed by her ſon, William de Longeſpey, and by king Henry the Third. She died in the year 1300, having founded the church at Rewley near Oxford, and was buried before the high high altar there, as appears by an inſcription on a ſtone dug up in the year 1705. This manor continued in the nunnery of Lacock 'till its diſſolution.

The other manor is thus deſcribed:

'Roger de Laci holds Hetrope in Brictwoldeſberg 'hundred, and William holds it of him. There 'are two hides. Duning held it in the time of 'king Edward. There are two plow-tillages, 'and three villeins, and three bordars, with one 'plow-tillage. There are ſix ſervi. It is worth 'and was worth 100*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Eubulo le Strange, and Aleria his wife, levied a fine of this manor to Hugh le Diſpencer 18 E. 2. and Theobald de Verdon died ſeized thereof 10 E. 3.

Hugh le Diſpencer conſtituted John de Handelo governor of St. Briavel's caſtle, and warden of the foreſt of Dean, in the year 1299, which John levied a fine of the manor of Hatherop, with ſeveral remainders, in the year 1325, and was ſeized of it in 1340. His ſon Richard married Iſabel, daughter of Almarick de St. Amand, and died before his father, but Iſabel held Hatherop in jointure, and died ſeized of it in 1355. Edmond, ſon of Richard, was heir to John his grandfather, and died ſeized of a great eſtate in Kent, and other counties, and of the manors of Hatherop, Wike, and Williamſtrip, in Glouceſterſhire, leaving two ſiſters his coheireſſes. Margaret, the eldeſt, was married, firſt to Gilbert Chaſtelain, or Chateline, and afterwards to John Appleby; and Elizabeth, the other ſiſter, was married to Edmond de la Pool. But the above-mentioned lands, lying in Glouceſterſhire, were aſſigned to Margaret, whereby John Appleby, in her right, was lord of this manor.

This is an abſtract from the records, as I find them applied to Hatherop by ſir Robert Atkyns; but it may be obſerved, that in the deſcent of the manor of Williamſtrip, he makes Edmond de Handelo grandſon of Richard. In all other reſpects the accounts are conſiſtent.

It will be proper now to paſs to the manor poſſeſſed by the nunnery of Lacock.

After the diſſolution of that houſe, their manor and eſtate at Hatherop, and lands in this pariſh which had been veſted in the priory of Bradenſtoke, were granted to ſir William Sherington 2 E. 6.

About this time, both the manors in Hatherop were enjoy'd by the ſame proprietor, and ſo continuing, the diſtinction was loſt by unity of poſſeſſion.

John Blomer, deſcended from the antient family of the Blomers in Weſtmoreland, had livery of the manor of Hatherop 1 Eliz. William Blomer was lord of it in the year 1608. John Blomer, ſon of William, married Frances, daughter of Anthony viſcount Montacute, by whom he had three ſons and three daughters, who all died without iſſue, except Mary, the youngeſt, who was married, firſt to Richard Draycott, of Painſly in the county of Stafford, eſq; and afterwards to ſir John Webb, of Canford in the county of Dorſet, baronet. Her iſſue by her firſt huſband left no children, whereby ſir John Webb, ſon and heir, by her, of ſir John Webb, ſucceeded to this manor and eſtate; and ſir John Webb, baronet, grandſon of the laſt mentioned ſir John, is the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Gules, a croſs between four muſcovy ducks Or.

John Tame and Edmond Tame levied a fine of lands in this pariſh 13 H. 7. And ſir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of the ſame lands 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 160*l.* a year. Sir John Webb is patron; Dr. William Sandford is the preſent incumbent. There were about 100 acres of land belonging to the glebe. But the pariſh hath lately been incloſed by act of parliament, and the rector hath other lands allotted to him in lieu of tithe.

The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, conſiſts of the nave only, with a tower between that and the chancel, in which are ſix bells.

In the chancel, on a flat ſtone, is a memorial for John Bradley, rector of Hatherop, &c. who died in 1741, with his arms, Gules, a feſs between three buckles argent.

At the beginning of this century, there were 30 houses in this parish, and about 150 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. Atkyns. The inhabitants are now increased to 204.

HAWKESBURY.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Grumbald's-ash, four miles distant north from Sodbury, four north-east from Wickwar, and twenty-five south from Gloucester. Two turnpike-roads, one from Gloucester to Bath, the other from Oxford to Bath and Bristol, lead through it.

Part of it lies upon the hills, in a fine, healthy, open country, mostly corn fields; and part on the west side, beneath the great ridge which separates the upland, or Cotswold country, from the vale.

The name was antiently written Havochesberie, i. e. Havoche's-hill, or camp, according to the explanation of berie, already given. But of this Havoche history gives no account.

Petrifications of the bivalve kind are common in the upper part of the parish. Two little brooks rise here, and empty themselves into the Berkeley river.

Gilbert Ironside, bishop of Bristol, is said to have been born here in the year 1588.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The church of St. Mary of Persore holds 'Havochesberie in Grimboldestou hundred. There 'are seventeen hides. In demean are five plow-'tillages, and eighteen villeins, and twenty-five 'bordars, with fifteen plow-tillages. There are 'two servi, and seven free-men [coliberti.] Three 'mills of 19*s*. 2*d*. [rent] and ten acres of meadow. 'A wood two miles long, and one broad. It 'was worth 16*l*. now 10*l*.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The abbey of Pershore had a grant of markets, fairs, free warren, and court leet in Hawkesbury 37 H. 3. which they pleaded in a Quo warranto brought against them 15 E. 1. and their claim was allowed.

William Wasp and others were seized of the manor of Hawkesbury, and of twelve messuages, one toft, three plow-tillages, nine acres of meadow, three acres of wood, and a yearly rent of 7*s*. 2*d*. in Hawkesbury and Hildesley, in trust for the abbey of Pershore, 15 R. 2. at which time the abbey was seized of the town of Hawkesbury in their own hands.

At the dissolution of this abbey, the manor of Hawkesbury was granted to John Butler. And lands in Kilcot, Tresham and Seddlewood, and a wood in Hawkesbury, Stoke, &c. lately belonging to the abbey of Pershore, were granted to the same John Butler 37 H. 8. who died seized thereof 5 E. 6. After whom, Sylvestra, his widow, held the manor in jointure, and died 7 Eliz. William Butler, son and heir of sir John, had livery of the manor the same year, as also of Hilsley, Kilcot, Tresham, Seddlewood, Upton, and Guston. Nicholas Butler, esq; was lord of the manor of Hawkesbury in the year 1608.

The manor passed from the Butlers to the Crews, and from them to the family of the present owner, sir Banks Jenkinson, boronet, who is lord of the manor of Hawkesbury. His arms are, Azure, on a fess undy argent a cross paty Gules; in chief two estoiles Or. The manor-house having been uninhabited for some time, is gone to decay.

John le Fisher was seized of a reputed manor in Hawkesbury 19 E. 3. which was held by John Doily in the 33d year of that reign. William Cheltenham held lands in Hawkesbury 33 E. 3. as did Thomas Beverstone 48 E. 3. Richard Urdle levied a fine of lands in Hawkesbury 18 R. 2. Robert Stanshaw was seized of lands in Hawkesbury, Hilsley, Kilcot, and Tresham 12 E. 4. And John Stanshaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Hawkesbury and Tresham 12 H. 7.

Lands in Ingstone, in Hawkesbury, which belonged to the knights templers, and afterwards to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem; and lands and a fulling-mill in Dilton, in Hawkesbury, formerly belonging to the priory of Bonhommes, at Eddington in Wiltshire, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8.

TITHINGS. 1. Hilsley. This is a very considerable village, and has a distinct tithingman.

'Turstin the son of Rolf holds Hildeslei in 'Grimboldestou hundred, and Bernard holds it 'of him. There is one hide. Aluric held it. In 'demean are two plow-tillages, and five half vil-'leins, and seven bordars, with two plow-tillages. 'There are eight servi, and three mills of 18*s*. 'rent, and eight acres of meadow. It was worth '40*s*. but is now worth 60*s*.' Domesday-book, p. 78.

Robert Lynet held Hildsley of William Russel, whose heir he was, and he held one messuage, a small wood, and certain lands at Brodecroft of the abbey of Pershore, at the rent of 4*s*. a year, 9 E. 2. Esch. William Cheltenham held lands in Hildsley in trust for the abbey of Pershore 40 E. 3. & 19 R. 2. The manor of Hilsley belonged to the Cosyns for several generations, and passed out of their name, by the marriage of an heiress, to Mr. Tipping of Oxfordshire. It is now vested in Matthew Hale, of Alderley, esq.

Here was a chapel dedicated to St. Giles, now converted into tenements for the poor. Sir Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife were seized of the advowson of the chapel of Hildsley 5 Pl. 5. of which William, earl marshal, levied a fine fine 3 H. 7. And there was a chantry in this chapel 40 E. 3. of which Thomas Swetheman was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 5*l.* in the year 1553.

2. Tresham, i.e. the village place. Thomas Kennet and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Tresham and Hull 21 E. 3. This manor belongs to Mr. Hale. Here is likewise a chapel of ease, with divine service once a month.

3. Kilcot, perhaps from the British Cyll, the hazle-tree, or Cil, out of sight, and coed a wood. Maud de Evers was seized of the manor of Kilcot, with free warren, 15 E. 1. John Bodisant, and Joan his wife, who had been the widow of Robert Stanshaw, levied a fine of lands in Kilcot, Hildesley, and Tresham, 14 H. 7. The manor of Kilcot belonged to the late Samuel Barker, of Fairford, esq; deceased, and is now the property of William Springett, esq.

4. Settlewood. This estate was late Mr. Workman's. It now belongs to Mr. Timothy Thomas, of Uley. Tresham, Kilcot, and Settlewood are united in one tithing.

5. Upton. This is a large tithing, situated upon the hill. John Cotherington and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Hawkesbury Upton 39 H. 6. in which year that king recovered the crown for a short time. This manor belongs now to sir Banks Jenkinson, baronet.

6. Wast. The abbat and convent of Pershore granted a licence 47 E. 3. to Thomas Beverston clerk, and John Godwell, to give their manor and lands of Waast, in the manor of Hawkesbury, to the abbey of Gloucester, on condition that the latter do grant to the abbat of Pershore and his successors 6*s.* 8*d.* out of those lands on the death of every abbat of Gloucester. And accordingly Beverston and Godwell gave the same manor, with the advowson of the chapel, to the abbey of Gloucester, by their deed executed at Standish 49 E. 3. The chapel of le Wast, with all tithes and appurtenances, were granted to Francis Moris and Michael Cole 12 Jac. The manor of Wast belonged afterwards to Robert Cotherington, of Didmarton, esq; and is now the property of the duke of Beaufort.

A moiety of lands in Wast, which antiently belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to Arthur Swayne and William Bennet 41 Eliz. See Boxwell.

7. Little Badminton, belonging also to the duke of Beaufort.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, to which it gives name. It is worth about 80*l.* a year. Sir Banks Jenkinson is patron; Mr. Potter Cole is the present incumbent. The vicar's income, for the chapels of Tresham and Little Badminton, arises from certain estates there, out of which he receives in the proportion of 6*d.* to the pound of their respective rents. At present, Little Badminton pays 19*s.* Tresham 7*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*

The chapel of Little Badminton was taken down in the year 1750, by the consent of the bishop, &c. and the inhabitants have seats in the church of Great Badminton, who, as to ecclesiastical concerns, are made subject to the vicar of that church. The scite of the chapel, and the yard, which may be still used for sepulture, is to be kept well fenced round by the duke of Beaufort.

The vicar of Hawkesbury receives mortuaries from Alderley, which parish still repairs a part of the church-yard wall at Hawkesbury.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Pershore. The tithes in Hawkesbury and Hawkesbury Upton, lately belonging to that abbey, were granted to John Butler 37 H. 8. The impropriation of this large parish is now divided between the duke of Beaufort, sir Banks Jenkinson, and other persons.

The church is large, and adorned with battlements. It has a south aile, the upper end of which belongs to sir Abraham-Isaac Elton, and a lofty embattled tower at the west end. It was formerly said to be the mother of seven daughters, or chapels of ease, within her jurisdiction. A licence was obtained to set up a gild, or fraternity, in this parish, dedicated to the virgin Mary, and to purchase land of 10*l.* a year for its endowment, 30 H. 6.

He married Mary the Daughter of S^r Jonathan Cope, Bar^t but left no issue, yet let his Name be preserved to Posterity, for his filial Piety, his conjugal Love, and fraternal Affection, and all those virtues which best adorn the honest English Gentleman and sincere Christian. Fortified with these he bore with Patience a long and painful Illness 'till he resigned his soul with faith and Confidence into the Hand of his Creator. Disdain not, Reader, what, from too high a Veneration for more glaring and ostentatious Characters, thou mayest be taught to think a very humble Encomium; for remember, that Purity of Life and Integrity of Manners will receive the greatest Praise at the last Day, from him who is the supreme Judge of all Virtue and Merit, and who alone can assign them their due Reward.

HAWLING

IS a pariſh in the lower diviſion of Kiftſgate hundred, in the Coteſwold country, ſix miles north-weſtward from Northleach, ſix ſouth-eaſt from Winchcombe, and ſeventeen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The turnpike-road from Stow to Glouceſter leads through it.

This village, which lies in an open champaign country, is ſaid to be one of the higheſt places on the Coteſwolds, and is remarkable for its healthy air, ſound ſheep, and ſweet mutton. Huſbandry is the chief employment of the male inhabitants, but the women and children ſpin woollen yarn for the clothiers. The common fields in this pariſh, containing 977 acres, were incloſed by act of parliament in the year 1756.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Sigar de Cioches holds Hallinge, in Holiforde 'hundred, of the king. Goda the counteſs held 'it. There are ten hides taxed. In demean are 'three plow-tillages, and twenty villeins, and five 'bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There are ſix 'ſervi, and three ancillæ. There is a wood. It 'was worth 7*l.* now 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

This manor was given to the abbey of Winchcombe by Robert Gyves 35 H. 3. and the abbot proved his right to free warren, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. The ſame abbey enjoy'd the manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved, when the manor of Hallynge, alias Hawlynge, was granted by the crown to William Whorwode, eſq; in conſideration of 791*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* 36 H. 8. He died the following year, leaving two daughters coheireſſes, of whom Anne was married to Ambroſe Dudley, and had livery of the manor 37 H. 8. and Margaret was married to Thomas Throckmorton, who had livery granted to them 3 Mariæ. Livery of one moiety of the manor was granted to Thomas Horwood 15 Eliz.

Henry Stratford, eſq; was lord of the manor in 1608, and died in 1649. Henry Stratford, his ſon, died in 1671; and Richard Stratford, eſq; lord of the manors of Guiting and Hawling, died in the year 1692. Henrietta, one of the ſiſters and coheireſſes of Richard Stratford, was married to William Wyndham, eſq; (younger ſon of ſir Wadham Wyndham) who, in her right, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; and William Wyndham, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor of Hawling. His arms are, Azure, a chevron between three lions heads erazed Or.

HAMLET. Rowell, or Roell, is accounted extraparochial, but being contiguous to Hawling,

I have placed it in the manner of a hamlet. It is an antient manor thus deſcribed in Domeſday-book:

'The church of St. Ebrulf holds Rawelle in 'Holeford hundred of the king. Wluuard held it in 'the time of king Edward. There are ten hides. 'In demean are four plow-tillages, and ſixteen 'villeins, and two bordars, with ſix plow-tillages. 'There are three ſervi. It is worth and was 'worth 10*l.* This manor never paid tax.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The church of St. Ebrulf in Normandy was ſeized of the manor and church of Rowel, and of two plow-tillages, 56 H. 3.

At the ſuppreſſion of alien monaſteries, this manor was granted to the abbey of Winchcombe, which continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution, when it was granted, together with the tithes, to ſir Ralph Sadleyr, 1 E. 6. Livery of the manor of Rowel was granted to Brian Carter, and Mary his wife, daughter of ſir Philip Hobbey, 1 Eliz.

The manor came afterwards to lord Chandos. Chriſtopher Montacute, eſq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Montague is the preſent lord of the manor.

Here was a chapel of eaſe, now demoliſhed.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of ...tow, worth 69*l.* a year. Mr. Wyndham is ...atron; Mr. Lawrence is the preſent incumbent.

When the common fields were incloſed in 1756, the rector quitted claim to all tithes, &c. in conſideration of receiving 25*s.* yearly, in money, for ...very yard-land; the whole to be reckoned at 30 ...rd-lands. At the beginning of this century, there were 21 houſes, and about 100 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. Atkyns. There are now about 132 inhabitants.

HAYLES.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, at the foot of that range of hills which divides the Coteſwold from the vale part of the county, running from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt nearly the whole length of it. It ſtands two miles diſtant north-eaſt from Winchcombe, ten eaſt from Tewkeſbury, and ſeventeen north-eaſt from Glouceſter. A ſmall brook runs from this place into the Avon at Eveſham in Worceſterſhire.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſays, It is ſo called from haly, which is Saxon for holy: and indeed if this name had been given it after the founding of its monaſtery, the reſidence of ſo many holy men, or of any other religious houſe prior to that foundation, there might have been ſome reaſon for this conjecture; but Heile being the antient name of the place long before any religious houſe was here founded, this etymology will fail. Hail, or heile, antiently, as well as at preſent, ſignified ſtrong, healthy; and lei, ley, or lie in the Saxon language ſignifies a paſture ground; ſo that this place was probably ſo called from the ſtrength and fertility of the ſoil, for which the piece of ground wherein the church ſtands, in particular, is now very remarkable. Beſides paſture, here are woodlands, and ſome rich arable lands; but this pariſh furniſhes nothing remarkable in the foſſil or vegetable kingdoms.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'William Leuric holds Heile in the hundred of 'Greteſtan. Oſgot held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are eleven hides. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and nine villeins, and 'eleven bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There 'were twelve ſervi, whom William made free. 'There is a mill of 10*s.* [rent] and a wood one 'mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth '12*l.* [but] now [only] 8*l.* This manor pays 'tax.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

A conſiderable part of this manor was granted to the abbey of ſaint Ebrulph in Normandy. Jeoffrey de Luci was ſeized of it 6 John, and the 17th year of the ſame reign, he granted part of the lands to Robert de Maci. John de Julin was alſo ſeized of it 3 H. 3. and 10 H. 3. it came to the crown, when the inhabitants of the pariſh were diſcharged from the hundred of Winchcombe. King Henry the Third granted it to his brother, Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, who, in the year 1246, founded a monaſtery in this place, and endowed it with this manor.

Adam le Hunt alſo granted twenty ſolidates of land in Hayles, and one meſſuage, one toft, and three acres of meadow in Sudely, to the abbey of Hayles, 13 E. 2. See accounts of other grants to this abbey under Didbrook, Pinnock, Churchdown, Sudely, Guiting-Power, Longborough, Todington, and other pariſhes. For the charter of the endowment of the abbey, ſee N°. 17, in the Appendix.

This abbey was ſurrendered to the king's commiſſioners, Dec. 31, 1539, by Stephen Sagar, the laſt abbat, and not Whaley[k], as mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns; and was valued at 357*l.* 7*s.* 8*d. ob. per annum*.

After the diſſolution, the ſcite of the monaſtery, and the greater part of the manor, (probably Hayles-wood, Pinnock's-wood, and Hayles-park) containing 500 acres, value 65*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* were granted to ſir Thomas Seymour, in fee, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6. He being attainted of high treaſon, and afterwards beheaded, the ſcite of the monaſtery, and the reſt of the lands, were granted to William marquis of Northampton, June 12, 4 E. 6. The marquis, on the 16th of June, in the ſame year, leaſed it to one Hodgkins, for twenty-one years, at 159*l.* 16*s.* It ſeems afterwards to have been in the crown, for queen Elizabeth, July 18, in the 7th year of her reign, leaſed it again to Hodgkins for twenty-one years at the ſame money. Hodgkins had three ſons, but he bequeathed this eſtate to his daughter, who married William Hobby, eſq; of whoſe family this manor and eſtate was purchaſed by John lord viſcount Tracy, whoſe deſcendant, Thomas-Charles lord viſcount Tracy, is the preſent proprietor, and reſides at Todington in this county.

Hayles-wood, containing 102 acres, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, was granted to Robert earl of Saliſbury, 5 Jac. Lord viſcount Tracy is the preſent poſſeſſor, and pays an annual rent out of it to the preſent earl of Saliſbury.

A meadow which belonged to the marquis of Northampton, and formerly to the abbey, called Browning's, was granted to Henry Browning and Charles Brockton, 2 Mariæ.

Other lands in this pariſh, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to Theophilus Adams and Richard Adams, 25 Eliz.

An inn and divers houſes, formerly granted to the marquis of Northampton, which, before the diſſolution, belonged to the abbey, were granted to ſir Thomas Smith and Edward Laſcelles, 2 Jac.

Of the ABBEY.

In the year 1246, Richard earl of Cornwall, in performance of a vow which he made when he was in great danger at ſea, on his return from Gaſcony[l], erected a monaſtery in this place, and brought hither twenty monks, of the Ciſtercian order, from Beaulieu in Hampſhire[m]. These monks choſe one from among themſelves to be abbat, whom the earl inveſted with the abbey, and all things belonging to it. On the 5th day of November, 1251, being the year in which the church, dormitory, cloiſters, and refectory were finiſhed, the earl procured this church of Hayles, which he had built at a vaſt expence, to be dedicated, with great pomp and ſolemnity, to the virgin Mary, and to All Saints, by the biſhop of Worceſter; the king, the queen, and above three hundred perſons of quality being preſent on the occaſion. Thirteen biſhops celebrated maſs on the day of dedication, each at a ſeparate altar, the biſhop of Lincoln officiating at the high altar. This grand company was all entertained together, upon a ſunday, with a noble and magnificent [k] Sir Robert Atkyns ſays, 'Abbot Whaley was the laſt Abbot, 'who, in hopes of a Penſion, ſurrendered it to King Henry the 'Eighth.' This is aſſigning no very laudable motive for the abbat's reſignation. But why this reflection; what had he done? He gave up all the dignity and ſtate, the authority and power, attendant on his office, for a private ſtation; and this, probably, not by choice, but in obedience to that authority which he could not withſtand. Certain writers, however, have endeavoured to blacken the characters of many that appear to have been merely paſſive in the firſt ſteps to the Reformation. Stevens ſays of Thomas Kampſwell, the laſt prior of Worceſter, that 'He was 'one of thoſe poor ſpirited creatures, who, either out of fear, or 'ſome worſe conſideration, ſurrendered their monaſteries to king 'Henry VIII. at the general diſſolution; by which means he procured to himſelf a good penſion of 133*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* as the reward 'of his treachery and ſacrilege. Death was the penalty for 'refuſing to ſubmit, and a plentiful ſupport for an idle or vicious 'life the recompence for complying: How few are there that can 'bravely face the terrors of the former, and withſtand the temp'tations of the latter.'——True, very true, Mr. Stevens, You and I are happy in not having been put to the trial, or we ourſelves might have ſhrunk at the ſight of the gallows.

dinner, worthy of themſelves and of the occaſion: But the religious dined upon a vaſt variety of fiſh, at a ſeparate table. An eminent writer, ſpeaking of this affair, delivers himſelf to the following purpoſe. 'If I ſhould endeavour fully to deſcribe the 'magnificence of that entertainment, every one 'would conclude that I exceeded the truth; and 'leſt I ſhould write a falſity, I will relate what I 'had from Matthew Paris. The earl aſſured him, 'for an undoubted truth, that, reckoning all 'charges, he had expended 10000 marks on the 'building of that church, adding theſe memorable 'and commendable words, "That he wiſhed to "God that all the money which he had laid out "on the caſtle of Wallingford had been expended "ſo wiſely, and to ſo good purpoſe as this."

The abbey church and moſt of the buildings were burnt down in the year 1271, and the damage was eſtimated at 8000 marks.

This was a mitred abbey. Stevens, in his Monaſticon, gives a liſt of abbats, &c. ſummoned to parliament, from the clauſe rolls in the tower, by which it appears, that the abbats of this houſe, and of Hales-Owen in Shropſhire, were uſually ſummoned together; but neither of them in the year 1294, as ſir Robert Atkyns affirms, in which there were only two ſummonſes extant.

The abbat and convent paid an annual rent of 16*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.ob.* for Pinnockſhire, 27 E. 1. which rent was, the ſame year, ſettled by the king on queen Margaret, as part of her dower.

In the annals of this monaſtery is recorded the hiſtory of the founding of a ſmall one, of monks of the order of Bon-hommes, or Good-men[n], the ſubſtance of which is as follows. Edmund earl of Cornwall, as yet a boy, being with his father in Germany, and ſeeing a large, cloſe, golden vial, full of relicks of the precious blood of our Lord, which had been ſent as a great preſent to Charlemain, from Greece, he prevailed to have conſiderable part given him, which he brought into England with him, and carried to the monaſtery of Hayles, and laid it up in the abbey church there, both the convents of Hayles and Winchcombe attending; Edmund himſelf, who was preſent for his devotion, carrying the veſſel in ſolemn proceſſion. This precious relick he divided, and leaving one part at Hayles, gave the other to the monaſtery of Aſhridge in Buckinghamſhire, which he himſelf had built. — At the diſſolution of Hayles monaſtery, this precious blood is ſaid to have been diſcovered to be the blood of a duck, or perhaps ſome other animal, which was weekly renewed. Of this it was affirmed, that a man living in mortal ſin, and not abſolved, could not ſee the blood; but as ſoon as he was abſolved, he might plainly diſcern it. The prieſt ſhewed it in a cabinet of cryſtal richly adorned, both ſides whereof ſeemed alike, yet one ſide of the cryſtal was as much thicker than the other; and until the penitent had paid for as many maſſes as the prieſt thought fit, the thicker ſide of the cryſtal was preſented towards him, through which nothing could be ſeen; but having paid to the prieſt's ſatisfaction, the thin and more tranſparent ſide of the cryſtal was preſented, and then, to his great joy, he might diſcern the blood. This impoſture had been practiſed for many ages, and greatly enriched the monaſtery.

The following account of the penſions aſſigned to the religious at the ſurrender, is taken literally from Willis's Hiſtory of Abbies, viz. 'Stephen 'Sagar, late Abbot ther, 100*l.* and alſo to have of 'the Kyngs Majeſtie the Capital Meſſuage or 'Manſion-Houſe callyd Coſtombe, alias Coſton, 'within the Pariſh of Didbroke in the Countie 'aforeſaid, with the Stable ther, and oon Cloſe 'nere therunto adjoyning; and the furſt Veſture 'oone lytle Mede adjoyning unto a Grove callyd 'Coſtcombe-Grove, with the lytle Garden; and the 'Courte ther duringe the natural Liff of the ſame 'Stephen, untill the ſeid Stephen be promoted by 'the King's Majeſtie to ſome Benefyce or Bene'fyces to the Some aboveſeid, and further to have 'fortye Lodes of Fyreword and Houſebote ſuf'ficient out of the Kings Majeſties Woods callyd 'Hayles Wood by th' Aſſignement out of the Re'ceyvor of his Highneſs Court of Augment within 'the ſeid Countie, (or his ſufficient Deputy for the 'tyme byinge.) John Dawſon, B. The abbat's houſe was a large, handſome building. John lord viſcount Tracy died there, anno 1686, but was buried at Todington, ſince which time it has not been the reſidence of any of his family. It is now ſo far fallen to decay, as to be habitable for a few poor perſons only. Long ſince ſir Robert Atkyns publiſhed his hiſtory, the arms of the founder were in the hall window, and round them, in old characters, RICARD' PLANTAGENET SEMPER AUGUSTUS FUNDATOR NOSTER. The arms, and other painted glaſs of the windows of this houſe, have lately been put up in the hall windows at Todington; and a noble old chimney-piece from hence is alſo put up in the great hall there, by the preſent lord Tracy.

What now remains of the old abbey is ſituated in a rich paſture ground, of five or ſix acres. The north-weſt ſide of the cloiſter, in length about thirty-five yards, is tolerably intire; in the roof of which are the following arms: Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Five fuſils in feſs. 2d and 3d, Barry of ſix, a bend over all. — Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Sable, a lion paſſant gardant Or between three helmets argent, for Compton earl of Northampton. 2d and and 3d, A chevron within a bordure charged with roundlets. — Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Gules, fretty argent. 2d and 3d, Two bars, impaling A lion rampant. — A chain with a ſhack-bolt at each end between three mitres, which are ſuppoſed to be the arms of the abbey.

The outer walls of the other three ſides of the cloiſters are in part ſtanding. There are three or four doors leading out of the north-eaſt ſide to the place where the church ſtood, of which nothing remains, except part of the foundation.

Round the area are four or five habitations, formed from the outer buildings of the old monaſtery, as appears by the arches of the windows and doors, now walled up.

The inn, already mentioned to have been granted to the marquis of Northampton, is ſtill remaining. It is a large old building near the abbey houſe, formerly uſed for the reception of pilgrims and devout perſons viſiting the monaſtery; and has been kept open, as an inn, ever ſince the reformation, 'till very lately.

Upon a large ſtone, lying in a heap near the abbey houſe, I obſerved a device in a ſcutcheon, expreſſed in the following manner: A mitre pierced with a croſier in pale; on the dexter ſide, the letter A; on the ſiniſter, the letter Ω ſtanding over a tun; intended for a kind of rebus on the name of Melton, one of the abbats. In the floor of the hall at Southam Houſe are a great many painted bricks, taken from this place, and carried thither when the abbey houſe belonged to Mr. Hobby, who was related to the De-la-Bere family. Upon ſome of them is the ſame rebus, and upon others, the name of Ford ſeveral times expreſſed within a wreathe; and there are the arms of benefactors to the abbey upon others, as deſcribed under the account of that houſe, in the pariſh of Cleeve.

The inhabitants ſay there is a ſubterraneous paſſage from this place to Coſcomb, which was called the Abbat's-lodging. One Freeman of Didbrook, in this neighbourhood, declared to an old man at the abbey houſe, that he went ſo far in it 'till he came to a pair of iron gates, which ſtopt him from proceeding; that the top is handſomely arched with ſtone, and in the walls are niches, or ſeats, all along: The mouth, or opening, he ſaid, was in the orchard near the houſe; but Freeman is dead, and nobody could ſhew it me, yet the people give intire credit to his relation.

Richard[o] earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, and brother to Henry the Third, died at the caſtle of Berkhamſted, April 2, 1272. His heart was buried in the church of the friars minors in Oxford, and his body at Hayles. His wife, who died 1261, was buried here; and Edmund, their ſon, earl of Cornwall, was interred in this church anno 1300. His funeral was performed with great ſolemnity, king Edward the Firſt, and a great number of the nobility attending; ſo that this abbey church contained the aſhes of a king, a queen, and their ſon.

Viewing the venerable remains of theſe once noble buildings, where the aſhes of ſo many eminent perſons lie ſcattered and undiſtinguiſhed amongſt the ruins, 'tis not eaſy to avoid reflecting on the tranſitory nature of riches, power, titles, honours, which ſo much engage the attention of the buſy world, and which all muſt ſhortly leave behind.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſpeaks of Alexander de Hales[p], whence it might be inferred that he had ſome connexion with this place: And Camden, in his Britannia, ſays, 'this place is famous for its 'great ſcholar, Alexander de Hales;' but as it is generally agreed that he died in the year 1245, he certainly could have no relation to this monaſtery, which was not founded 'till the year following. The truth is, this great ſchoolman was of Hales-Owen in Shropſhire.

In the reign of king Henry the Fourth, a battle was fought on Braham-moor, in the north of England, between the earl of Northumberland, and other rebels, and ſir Thomas Rokeſby, ſheriff of Yorkſhire, on the part of the king; the firſt were routed, and the abbat of Hales being then taken

[o] He was a powerful prince in his time, and a religious perſon; valiant in war, and of great reſolution and conduct. In Aquitain he behaved with wonderful courage, and had equal ſucceſs. He forced the Saracens to a truce in the Holy Land; refuſed the kingdom of Apulia, when offered him by the pope; quieted ſeveral tumults in England; and being choſen king of the Romans in 1257, was crowned at Aix la Chapelle; but this got him no great reputation, for, according to a common verſe, he is ſuppoſed to have bought this honour:

Nummus ait pro me nubit Cornubia Romæ.
Cornwall to Rome almighty money joyn'd.

For, before that time, we are told by a cotemporary writer, that he was ſo famous a monied man, as to be able to ſpend 100 marks a day for ten years together. This is the ſubſtance of Camden, col. 27.

[p] He went to France, and ſtudied ſchool divinity and canon law in the academy at Paris, in both which he became ſo very famous, as to be commonly called Doctor Irrefragabilis. He flouriſhed about 1230, and having entered himſelf in the order of Franciſcans, died at Paris, Aug. 27, 1245. — Cave's Hiſtoria Literaria, p. 714. — He lies buried in the midſt of the body of the church of the Cordeliers in Paris. Near the ſteps aſcending to the choir is a monument of black marble, raiſed about two feet from the ground, with this inſcription in yellow letters:

Reverendiſſimus pater Benignus a Genua, totius ordinis ſancti Franciſci miniſter generalis, pro ſua in ſanctum doctorem pietate et religionis zelo, hoc monumentum erigi curavit, A. D. 1620. Martij 25.

in armour againſt the king, was hanged for his defection. The biſhop of Bangor was taken at the ſame time, but his life was ſpared, becauſe he was found in his ordinary habit. Notwithſtanding this ſtory is admitted here, it is moſt probable that the unfortunate abbat belonged to Hales-Owen, as in many inſtances theſe two places are not properly diſtinguiſhed in hiſtory.

In the ſupplementary part of Mr. Willis's Hiſtory of Abbies, after the index to the ſecond volume, under Hayles, at p. 10. is the following note; 'This abbey, tho' ſurrounded with Glouceſterſhire, 'and at a diſtance from any part of Wiltſhire, is 'reputed in Wiltſhire.'—This is a miſtake, for it was always reputed in Glouceſterſhire. However, this blunder, I think, ſhould not be charged on Mr. Willis, which I preſume was the printer's, who ſhould have placed the note under the account of the abbey of Kingſwood, immediately following, of which the obſervation is juſt.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Campden. In the year 1738, by the conſent of the biſhop, the patron, and the incumbent, the rectory of Pinnock, the vicarage of Didbrook, and the donative of Hayles were conſolidated into one preſentment. Lord Tracy is patron and impropriator; and his lordſhip's brother, the honourable John Tracy, D. D. warden of All Souls college in Oxford, is the preſent incumbent of theſe conſolidated churches, which are worth, comm. ann. about 120*l.* a year.

The curacy of Hayles was augmented by lot, with queen Anne's bounty, in the year 1738, as the vicarage of Didbrook had been two years before.

The rectory, chapel, and tithes of Hayles, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to John Dudley and John Aſcough, 18 Eliz.

Godfrey Giffard, biſhop of Worceſter, in the year 1270, endowed[q] the vicarage of Hayles with ten marks yearly, (a ſum equal in value, at that time, to 100*l.* of our preſent money) to be paid by the abbat and convent, in two equal portions, with the allowance of offerings, and a houſe and garden.

The church is a mean ſtructure, with a ſmall wooden tower. It was built by William Hobby, eſq; who was buried in it Mar. 17, 1603, aged 103, but there is no memorial for him. In the churchyard is a memorial upon a grave-ſtone, placed over the remains of John Langley, eſq; (ſon of Philip Langley of Mangotsfield) who married a daughter of John lord Tracy.

HEMPSTED

IS a ſmall pariſh in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton, diſtant about a mile ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter, upon the turnpike-road from that city to Briſtol.

The name of it has been variouſly written in different ages, as Hechaneſtede, about ſeven hundred years ago; afterwards Hey-Hamſteed, and by contraction, Hampſtead, and Hempſted, as we now uſe it. I apprehend the firſt form is moſt agreeable to the original orthography, and ſignifies Hechane's-town; for ſted, or ſtadt, is a town or ſtation.

This village is bounded on the north by the river Severn. It conſiſts of rich paſturage and orcharding, and produces excellent cheeſe and cyder. Daniel Lyſons, eſq; a phyſician, has a very handſome houſe and a large eſtate in this place, with plantations of trees that run up to the great road, whence it is ſeen at an agreeable diſtance.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Edric Lang, a thane of earl Herald's, held 'Hechaneſtede in Dodeſtan hundred. There were 'five hides, and in demean three plow-tillages, 'and ſix villeins, and eight bordars, with ſix plow-'tillages. There are ſix ſervi, and half a fiſhery. 'Earl William held this manor in demean, and it 'was not in farm; but now the ſheriff has let it 'at 60*s.* a year.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

[q] The endowment runs thus: *Univerſis et ſingulis Chriſti fidelibus, ad quos preſens ſcriptura pervenerit, Godfridus, permiſſione divina, Wigorn. epiſcopus, ſalutem in Domino ſempiternam. This manor was given to the priory of Lanthony by Milo earl of Hereford, in the year 1136. The prior's claim to court leet and felons goods was allowed, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and in the 21ſt year of the ſame reign, he purchaſed a charter of free warren in Hey-Hempſtead and Podgmead. The manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the priory of Lanthony 'till that houſe was diſſolved; and was then granted, together with a fiſhery in the Severn, to Thomas Atkyns and Margaret his wife, 37 H. 8. Sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. Daniel Lyſons, eſq; died ſeized of it in the year 1773, and was ſucceeded by his ſon, Daniel Lyſons, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Gules, a chief argent, on the lower part thereof a cloud, the ſun's reſplendent rays iſſuing thereout proper.

Certain lands and tithes in Hempſted, with a fiſhery in the Severn, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8.

HAMLET. Rea is a hamlet, lying about half a mile from the church.

Podgmead is a tithe free farm of conſiderable value, in this pariſh, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony. The ſcite of the manor of Poddeſmead, and ſeveral other lands, in conſideration of 266*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* were granted to Joan Coke, 31 H. 8. to be held by the tenth part of a knight's fee, paying 30*s.* yearly to the crown. Podgmead came afterwards to Mr. Hoſkins, who granted it to the corporation of the city of Glouceſter, on condition that they ſhould conſtantly renew to the next heir male of his family, a leaſe for thirty-one years, at a certain reſerved rent, on the payment of a ſmall fine.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 90*l.* a year. The hon. Mr. Howard, who married Miſs Scudamore, is patron in her right; Mr. Taylor is the preſent incumbent. It was formerly a chapel belonging to St. Owen's in Glouceſter.

In the year 1137, earl Milo gave the tithes of this church to the priory of Lanthony. Small tithes in Hampſtead, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, 24 Eliz.

John lord Scudamore, in the year 1662, ſettled on the miniſter the vicarage houſe, garden, and orchard, the parſonage cloſe and barn, and a parcel of meadow ground in Hempſted-moor, with his tithes, &c. in Hempſted, which particulars he had purchaſed of Henry Powle, eſq; of Williamſtrip in this county, as appears by a conveyance, dated Jan. 17, 13 C. 2. To the above he added the church-yard of Lanthony priory, and all the tithes of his demeans there. Theſe particulars were ſettled by act of parliament. He likewiſe built the preſent parſonage houſe, at the expence of 700*l.* over the door of which is written, in gold letters,

Whoe'er doth dwell within this door,
Thank God for viſcount Scudamore.

The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, ſtands on a riſing ground, whence there is an extenſive proſpect over the vale, and has a tower between the nave and the chancel.

Againſt the north wall of the chancel is a very handſome raiſed monument, for Richard Atkyns, chief juſtice of South Wales, with his effigy, in judge's robes, lying thereon. A flat ſtone near it bears this inſcription:

Here lyeth buried the body of Richard Atkins of Tuſley Eſquior waighting for the reſurrection of glory, and was buried the 3 day of November ano 1610.

Benefactions.

Sylvanus Lyſons, eſq; left an eſtate of about 300*l.* a year, after his widow's death, which happened in 1750, charged with the payment of 20*l.* a year each to nine clergymens widows of this dioceſe, (the Foreſt deanery excepted;) 2*l.* 2*s.* for a ſermon in Hempſted church; and 5*l.* for an entertainment on Aſcenſion-day. If any overplus remains, it is to go to the rector of Hempſted. Five feoffees (three clergymen and two laymen) are appointed to the management of the charity.

Mrs. Harris of Abergavenny, ſiſter to Sylvanus Lyſons, eſq; left 1000*l.* now laid out in the purchaſe of an eſtate at Upton St. Leonard's, the rents to be apply'd as follows: 20*s.* for an anniverſary ſermon on the 27th of June, which was the day of her death; 5*s.* to provide bread and wine for a ſacrament, and 2*s.* 6*d.* to the clerk; and the ſame at Whaddon. Four widows are to be clothed on that day. What remains of the rent to be employed in putting out boys apprentices, two of this pariſh for one of Whaddon. If the boys are not apprenticed, then the money to be expended in clothing poor men.

At the beginning of this century, there were 30 houſes in this pariſh, and about 140 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 4. Atkyns. The inhabitants are now about 129; ſo that population is on the decline.

HENBURY.

THIS is an extenſive pariſh, lying at the weſtern extremity of the county, part of it in the hundred of its own name, and part in the hundred of Berkeley; five miles diſtant northward from Briſtol, and thirty-five ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſt by Almondeſbury and part of Weſtbury, on the weſt by the Avon, on the north by the Severn, and on the ſouth by Clifton and part of Weſtbury.

The name ſufficiently evinces the antiquity of the village. It is compoſed of hen, Britiſh, old, and berg, a camp, or fortification; and ſignifies emphatically the old camp, for there were more bergs, or camps, than one in this place, and its neighbourhood, when the name was firſt given it.

Lord Clifford has a fine ſeat at King's Weſton, in this pariſh, enriched with plantations, and beautiful lawns and paſture grounds. It lies at the diſtance of about two miles from the Severn, which appears from thence like a large arm of the ocean, with ſhips generally lying at anchor in Kingroad, either bound to or from the port of Briſtol. From a little hill, not far from the houſe, the proſpect is exquiſitely beautiful, and uncommonly extenſive, commanding the country on the Briſtol channel, from Pembrokeſhire on one ſide, and Somerſetſhire on the other, almoſt up to the city of Glouceſter, with the Welch mountains, at a vaſt diſtance, for an evaneſcent ground. Turning ſouthward, the view is leſs extenſive, but not leſs agreeable, over a rich cultivated country, interſperſed with villas, on the Glouceſterſhire ſide of the Avon, as far as the city of Briſtol. Mr. Jones, in his CLIFTON, ſlightly touches on the beauties of this ſeat:

KING'S WESTON there, delightful various ſcene!
The muſe enjoys, and reigns a raptur'd queen,
With throbbing boſom, and extatic eye,
O'er all the ſubject, ocean, hills, and ſky,
The faint perſpective, and the dying view,
The boundleſs plan to juſt proportion true,
Where each bright beauty ſpreads its tints abroad
In all the ſplendors of thy pencil, Claude!
Where parts on parts reflect a lucid ray,
That all the luſtre of the whole diſplay;
Where harmony her happy order ſhews,
In all the art that on the canvaſs glows;
The plaſtic picture ſtrikes th' aſtoniſh'd mind,
The ſhips in proſpect, and the hills behind;
The woods, the mountains at due diſtance riſe,
In perfect uniſon with ſea and ſkies:
There light and ſhade their wond'rous ſtrength impart,
There nature ſeems to take the hint from art.
The vale incult, by random robe ſee grac'd,
With SOUTHWELL ſoaring to the mark of taſte;
Whoſe claſſic eye each erring ſtroke ſhall ſcan,
Reform the model, and improve the plan;
To ſimple majeſty reduce the pile,
And bid diſcretion through the garden ſmile;
Make truth and unity in all combine,
And taſte and judgment crown the clear deſign;
Unnumber'd beauties thence attract the ſoul,
That ſeem expanded to the diſtant pole;
The outline endleſs, charms th' inſatiate eyes,
Within that trait ten thouſand beauties riſe,
With incidents above Salvator's hand,
Of ocean, air, of foreſt, ſky, and land.

From this ſhort viſit to King's Weſton, we return to the village of Henbury; where, not far diſtant from the church, ſtands Blaſe-hill, of a ſugar-loaf form, whoſe ſides are covered with a fine wood. It is ſo called from an old chapel formerly erected upon it, ſaid to have been dedicated to St. Blaſius, biſhop of St. Sebaſte, and patron of the wool-combers. On the ſummit of this hill are ſtrong lines of fortification, which were very probably the old camp that gave name to the village.

About the year 1766, in digging the foundation of a pleaſure houſe on the top of this hill, ſome braſs coins of Veſpaſian, Antoninus, Conſtantine, Conſtantius, Tetricus, and others of the later empire, were found, with a few ſilver ones, chiefly of Gordianus. The moſt curious of them all was a large braſs medal, with a very fine head of Fauſtina, and a female figure, holding an infant in one hand, on the reverſe; whence, and from the inſcription, FERTILITAS, it is ſuppoſed to have been ſtruck upon the occaſion of that empreſs's lying-in. But theſe remains were only the gleanings of a fuller harveſt, which happened in the year 1707, when many coins, and other Roman antiquities were found there, as we are told in general by ſir Robert Atkyns. Then, alſo, the foundation of the old chapel was dug up, and a vault diſcovered, ten yards long, and ſix broad, wherein were many human bodies, with the ſculls intire, and teeth white.

Beſides this camp, there are two others, one on King's-Weſton-hill, the other on the ſummit of Comb-hill, both ſuppoſed to be Roman.

Blaſe-caſtle, which is the name of the pleaſure-houſe above-mentioned, is elegantly finiſhed in the Gothic ſtile, at a very conſiderable expence, by Thomas Farr, eſq; the preſent chief magiſtrate of the city of Briſtol, who has a good houſe and a large eſtate in this village. From this caſtle is a moſt delightful proſpect of the country round it, with the windings of the Avon, the beautiful riſing incloſures on the ſide of Dundery-hill, the more diſtant country of Glamorganſhire, Monmouthſhire, and the waving woods of Dean-foreſt on the oppoſite ſide of the Severn, with the mountains in Wales to cloſe the landſkape.

Here FARR with inbred rapture may reſort,
And ſee his ſhips glad ſailing into port,
With Indian treaſures on the current ride,
To crown the proſpect, and enrich the tide:
What nameleſs raptures muſt his joys renew,
With growing taſte at once, and wealth, in view;

The

The harbour, ſhips, the ſea, the mountains ſhine,
With inſtant luſtre, and with ray divine;
Lo, SOUTHWELL's landſkip, happy FARR, is thine!
There on the right a Roman camp we find,
Left by the lords and maſters of mankind;
Where coins and medals narrative are found;
Thoſe ſtory'd regiſters from under ground,
A moral lecture to the mind convey;
The Latian glories, in their laſt decay,
May mad ambition's frantic boaſt deride,
And human vanity, and human pride.
From hence kind nature opens wide her arms,
Her pictures raviſh, and her proſpect charms;
From hence the fated ſoul forbids the ſight,
O'ercome, and fill'd with ſurfeits of delight.
Where erſt the Roman eagles wav'd in air,
Behold a peaceful growing pile appear,
For friendly banquet, in a Gothic guiſe,
From forth the center of the camp ariſe;
Which ſhall each ſenſe with each regale ſupply,
But feaſt for ever the inſatiate eye;
Thence down a vegetable arch we ſtray,
A growing gallery, with winding way,
Where lovely labyrinths in mazes run
To the ſweet ruſtic lawn where we begun:
There FARR with willing heart can frequent blend
The connoiſſeur, the merchant, and the friend;
At the rich genial board in each can ſhine,
And make his converſe lively as his wine;
His three years toil with happy eye may view,
And joyful gueſs what three years more can do.
His lov'd LUCINDA in her orb can charm,
Her ſmile can gladden, and her muſic warm;
From forth the anſwering keys her fingers call
The ſoul of harmony, that joy of all;
Her meaſures, like her mind, are fill'd with grace,
In ſounds you hear, you ſee it in her face.
Jones's CLIFTON.

Here, with the poet, we take leave of Blaiſe-hill, and obſerve, that Mr. Sampſon, and Mr. Miller have very good houſes in the midſt of the village, and good eſtates in the pariſh.

Henbury, Clifton, Redland, Kingſdown, Stapleton, and Winterbourn are to Briſtol, what Iſlington, Hempſtead, Bow, and other circumjacent villages are to London; an agreeable retreat from the noiſe and hurry of a buſy life, and they mark the taſte and opulence of a trading people.

This large pariſh conſiſts chiefly of paſture and meadow ground, with ſome arable and woodland, and there are ſome marſhy grounds next the Severn.

Aſparagus Paluſtris, [Officinalis Linnei] Marſh Aſparagus; flowering in autumn. Park. 454. Gerh. p. 947. Found in Maidenham, or Madam-meadow, in Lawrence-Weſton.

Naſturtiolum Montanum annuum tenuiſſime diviſum, [Lepidum petreum Linnei] Finely cut annual Mountain Creſs; flowering in the ſpring, on the low rocks over-againſt Goram's-chair. Ray, 304.

Polygonum minus. Small Knot-graſs. Park. 446, ſect. 4. On the ſhore of the Severn, about Weſton.

The Entrochus, a petrification of the worm, or grub claſs, from one to three inches long, compoſed of ſeveral joints, with radii on each diſk, and perforated through the middle, is ſometimes found at King's Weſton.

In this pariſh are two ferries over the Severn. The uppermoſt, or Old Paſſage, is in the tithing of Auſt, thirteen miles on a turnpike-road from Briſtol: There the river is above two miles over, and the oppoſite houſe is at Beachley, in the pariſh of Tidenham in this county. The other ferry, called the New-Paſſage, is at Redwick, about three miles further down the river, and eleven miles diſtant from Briſtol. There the water is about three miles over; and the oppoſite paſſage-houſe is at a place called the Black Rock, near St. Pierre's in Monmouthſhire. See obſervations on theſe paſſages, p. 47.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Sir Robert Atkyns, attempting to give an account of this manor from Domeſday-book, has intermixed with it ſome particulars of that of Sodbury, which commence in the fourth line, and run on to the end of his account. In the detail of the large manor of Weſtbury, in Bernintree hundred, which, before and after the conqueſt, belonged to the church of St. Mary of Worceſter, it is thus recorded: 'Theſe members, Henbery, 'Redeuuiche, Stoche, Giete, belong to this manor. 'In theſe are nine plow-tillages in demean, and 'twenty-ſeven villeins, and twenty-two bordars, 'with twenty-ſix plow-tillages. There are twenty 'ſervi, and two ancillæ, and twenty free men, '[coliberti] with ten plow-tillages, and a mill of '20*d.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The biſhop of Worceſter proved his right to court leet and free warren in Henbury, in a Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1.

In an antient taxation of the manor, found in the Cottonian library, it is ſaid, The lord biſhop of Worceſter has at Henbury in the Salt-marſh 40*l.* in rent of aſſize; and five carucates of land, worth two marks each; and a dove-houſe, worth 6*s.* 8*d.* and in pleas and perquiſites of the court, twelve marks; and a water-mill, with ſome other income, worth 100*s.* In all 60*l.* Tiberius, C. 1. E. 76.—In another ſurvey of the manor, 26 H. 8. it was valued at 71*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* per annum.

Henbury continued in the ſee of Worceſter from before the conqueſt, 'till Dr. Heath alienated this manor, and that of Stoke-Biſhop, with the advowſon of the vicarage of Henbury, to the crown, in the year 1547, in exchange for ſome other manors and eſtates in Herefordſhire and Worceſterſhire.

King Edward the Sixth, by letters patents, 30 Jun. 1° regni, grants the manors of Biſhop's Stoke and Henbury in Salt-Marſh, and the hundred of Henbury, with the advowſon of the vicarage of the pariſh church of Henbury, late parcel of the poſſeſſions of the biſhop of Worceſter, to ſir Rafe Sadleir, and his heirs. Sir Thomas Sadleir, ſon of Rafe, was owner of theſe eſtates 32 Eliz. and left one ſon, Rafe Sadleir, eſq; who had no iſſue, and and one daughter Gertrude, married to ſir Walter Aſton, of Tixal in Staffordſhire.

Walter lord Aſton, their ſon and heir, ſold the manor and hundred of Henbury, with the advowſon of the vicarage of Henbury, and the manor of Weſtbury Bryan, alias Weſtbury upon Trim, lately belonging to the college of Weſtbury, to Thomas Yate and Gregory Gearing, 20 May, 1675; from whom they paſſed by purchaſe to ſir Samuel Aſtry, of Henbury, in 1680.

By the death of ſir Samuel Aſtry, the manor and hundred of Henbury, &c. deſcended to his three ſurviving daughters and coheireſſes; Elizabeth, married to ſir John Smyth, baronet; Diana, the wife of Richard Orlebar, eſq; and Arabella, the lady of Charles-William earl of Suffolk, whom ſhe ſurvived. And dying without iſſue, ſhe left her third part to ſir John Smyth, baronet; whoſe ſon, ſir John Smyth, ſold a moiety of that third to the heirs of Edward Colſton, eſq; who had purchaſed the third part late Mr. Orlebar's. A moiety was then in ſir John Smyth, whoſe three ſiſters and coheireſſes ſold it to ſir Jarrit Smith, baronet, who married Florence, one of the ſaid coheireſſes. The other moiety deſcended to the two daughters and coheirs of Thomas Edwards, eſq; one of whom was married to Francis lord Middleton; the other was wedded to Alexander Ready, eſq; who afterwards took the name of Colſton, and died in the year 1775. So that ſir Jarrit Smith is the preſent owner of one moiety of the manor and hundred of Henbury, &c. and the honourable Thomas Willoughby, ſecond ſon of the late lord Middleton, and Alexander Colſton, eſq; at the time of his death, were proprietors of the other moiety. Sir Jarrit Smith bears for his arms, Gules, on a chevron between three cinquefoils argent, as many leopards faces ſable.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. King's Weſton, where lord Clifford has a fine ſeat, as mentioned in the introductory part of the account of this pariſh. This tithing received its name from being the king's antient demeſnes, and lying fartheſt weſtward of any part of Berkeley hundred, of which it is a member, tho' far detached from the continent of that hundred.

It is thus mentioned in Domeſday: 'Seven hides and one virgate in Weſtone belong to Berchelai.' King Henry the Second granted the lordſhip of Berkeley, and Berkeley herneſſe, or the diſtrict of Berkeley, to Robert Fitz-Harding, who ſettled this manor and that of Beverſtone, on Robert his ſecond ſon. From that time the manor of King's Weſton and that of Beverſtone deſcended to the ſame proprietors, as related under the account of the latter, down to 11 R. 2. when Catherine, the widow of Thomas lord Berkeley, died ſeized of both, after having married, to her ſecond huſband, ſir John de Throp, who was poſſeſſed of King's Weſton 11 R. 2.

Sir Maurice Berkeley held this manor 2 H. 4. and was ſucceeded by ſir John Berkeley, his heir, who enjoy'd it 6 H. 6. From him it deſcended to ſir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone, who dying 38 H. 6. was ſucceeded by ſir Maurice Berkeley of Uley, who was ſeized of this manor 4 E. 4. His ſon and heir, ſir William Berkeley, taking part with king Richard the Third, his eſtate was ſeized by king Henry the Seventh, and the manor of King's Weſton was granted to Jaſper duke of Bedford, and to the heirs males of his body. But the king granted the reverſion, after the duke of Bedford's entail, to ſir William Berkeley, the former owner, 4 H. 7.

Sir John Berkeley, ſon of ſir William, ſucceeding his father, died ſeized of King's Weſton 37 H. 8. and left Richard, his ſon, who had livery 6 E. 6. and deceaſing the ſame year, was ſucceeded by his couſin John Berkeley, ſon of ſir William Berkeley, who was younger brother of ſir John Berkeley.

Sir William Berkeley, ſon of ſir John, ſold this manor to ſir William Wintour 12 Eliz. And ſir Edward Wintour was ſeized of it 8 Jac. From the Wintours it paſſed by purchaſe to Humphry Hook, alderman of Briſtol, whoſe ſon ſir Humphry Hook conveyed it, in the year 1679, to ſir Robert Southwell, a gentleman of great abilities and worth, deſcended from an antient family, ſeated at a place of the ſame name; whence they removed to Woodriſing, where, and in other parts of Norfolk, they enjoy'd large eſtates.

Richard Southwell was eminent in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and was by that king conſtituted one of the overſeers of his laſt will.

Robert Southwell, eſq; married Helena, daughter of major Robert Gore, by whom he had ſir Robert Southwell, the purchaſer of King's Weſton.

Sir Robert Southwell married Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter of ſir Edward Dering, of Surrenden-Dering in Kent, baronet, and had iſſue by her ſix children. He died in the year 1702, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir, Edward Southwell, eſq;

Which Edward Southwell entered early on buſineſs, under the conduct of his father, and, like him, deſervedly filled ſeveral offices of the greateſt eminence in the kingdom of Ireland. He married firſt, the lady Elizabeth Cromwell, daughter and heireſs of the earl of Ardglaſs, by whom he had iſſue Edward, who ſucceeded him; and Robert, Thomas, and Elizabeth, who died in their infancy. But this lady deceaſing in 1709, he married, ſecondly, Anne Blathwayte, by whom he had iſſue one ſon, William Southwell.

Edward Southwell, the father, dying in the year 1730, was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir, the right honourable Edward Southwell, who married Catherine Watſon, daughter of Edward lord Sondes, and had iſſue by her one ſon Edward, and one daughter Catherine. He ſerved in three ſucceſſive parliaments for the city of Briſtol, and died in the year 1755.

Edward Southwell ſucceeded his father, and having been choſen one of the repreſentatives of this county in three ſucceſſive parliaments, which important truſt he diſcharged with great ability and independency, was ſummoned by writ to the houſe of peers in 1776, by the title of baron Clifford, of Clifford in Glouceſterſhire. This title had been for ſome time in abeyance, to which he had a claim as being lineally deſcended by his mother from Robert lord Clifford, who was firſt ſummoned to parliament 28 E. 1. This Edward lord Clifford married Sophia, daughter of Samuel Campbell, eſq; of Mount Campbell in the county of Leitrim, in the kingdom of Ireland, and dying ſeized of King's Weſton in 1777, left iſſue by his lady, who ſurvives him, four ſons, viz. Edward, now lord Clifford, born in 1767; Robert-Campbell, born in 1770; Henry, and John, which two laſt are deceaſed: Alſo five daughters, viz. Mary, Katherine, Sophia, Elizabeth, and Henrietta, all living. His lordſhip bears two coats, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, three cinquefoils gules, each charged with five annulets Or, for Southwell. 2d and 3d, Checky Or and azure, a feſs gules, for Clifford. CREST. A demy goat argent, eared and gorged with a ducal coronet, and charged with three annulets in bend gules. SUPPORTERS. On the dexter ſide, A wivern gules; on the ſiniſter, A monkey proper. MOTTO. LE ROY LE VEUT.

The monumental inſcriptions in the cloſe of this account exhibit many intereſting particulars of his lordſhip's family, to which, for brevity ſake, the reader is referred.

Thomas Mallet, eſq; died ſeized of lands in King's Weſton and Lawrence-Weſton 22 Eliz. and left John his ſon twelve years old.

There was formerly a chapel of eaſe in this place, but it is now intirely demoliſhed. The rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of King's Weſton belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtin's in Briſtol, and were granted to the biſhoprick of Briſtol 34 H. 8.

Bewy's-croſs, of which there are ſtill remains, ſtood near the ſide of the Severn. It was formerly held in high eſtimation by ſeamen, who paid their devotions to it on their ſafe landing.

2. Lawrence-Weſton, ſo called, becauſe the hoſpital of St. Lawrence near Briſtol had lands there. Nicholas de Caldecot levied a fine of the manor of St. Lawrence Weſton, to the uſe of John Bradley, and Iſabel his wife, 12 E. 2. which John and Iſabel levied a fine of lands in Weſton St. Lawrence, Charleton, and Thredland, (i.e. The Redland) to John de Weſtbury, and to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to Walter, Robert, and Thomas, brothers of John, in ſucceſſive fee taile, 5 E. 3. Sir William Berkeley died ſeized of this manor 5 E. 6. and John his ſon and heir had livery thereof 6 E. 6. Henry Lewis, eſq; was ſeized of this manor in the reign of king James the Firſt, and was ſucceeded therein by his ſon George, who died 10 C. and left William his ſon and heir, then ſeven years old. Six acres in Biſhop's Moor, and other meſſuages and lands in Weſton St. Lawrence, lately belonging to the Magdalen hoſpital in Briſtol, were granted to John Bellowe and John Bloxholme 37 H. 8. as appears by a copy of the grant B. 2, Appendix to Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon. Here was alſo a chapel of eaſe, now demoliſhed.

3. Redwick, which lies along the Severn, five miles from the pariſh church. I have already ſhewn from Domeſday-book that this was a member of the large manor of Weſtbury, and that the New Paſſage over the Severn is in this tithing. Maurice de Gaunt died ſeized of the manor of Redwick, with markets and fairs, 6 H. 3. as did Robert de Gourney 53 H. 3. whoſe ſon Anſelm was ſucceeded by John de Gourney, whoſe only daughter, Elizabeth, was married to John Ap Adam, (ſometimes called John de Badenham) which John and Elizabeth levied a fine of the manors of Redwick and Northwick 25 E. 1. John de Knovill held theſe manors 13 E. 2. and Alice his widow died ſeized of Redwick 28 E. 3. Sir John Walſh died ſeized of the manors of Redwick and Northwick 38 H. 8. of which livery was granted to his ſon, Maurice Walſh, the ſame year; and Nicholas Walſh died ſeized of them, and of Camer's Place 20 Eliz. and Henry Walſh, his ſon, obtained livery thereof in that year.

Reginald de Botreaux and Iſabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Redwick 4 E. 3. William Stokes and Iſabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Redwick and Northwick, and of a fiſhery called Cheſyll-pill, to the uſe of Robert Pointz 49 H. 6. Richard Beke levied a fine of lands in Redwick and Gronen-down-hill, to Edward Veel, 1 Mar.

4. Northwick. The records concerning this hamlet are ſet down with Redwick. It remains to obſerve that here is a chapel of eaſe.

5. Auſt. This tithing was antiently called Auſtre Clive, becauſe it is ſituated on the ſouth cliff of the river Severn.

There is great plenty of alabaſter in the rocks all along the ſhore at this place, and I have ſeen a grinding tooth of ſome animal, nearly as big as a man's fiſt, taken out of theſe rocks. Here I expected to have found great plenty and variety of petrifications, as others have done; but was diſappointed, after a diligent examination.

Walter Mapes relates a memorable tranſaction at this place. Edward the Elder, ſays he, lay at Auſt Clive, and Leoline prince of Wales at Bethery [Beachley] on the oppoſite ſhore. When the latter refuſed to come acroſs the Severn, to a conference with the king, Edward paſſed over to Leoline; who knowing the king, threw his royal robes upon the ground, which he had prepared to ſit in judgment with, and leaping breaſt high into the water, embracing the boat, ſaid, 'Moſt wiſe king, your humility has conquered pride, and your wiſdom triumphed over my folly. Mount upon that neck which I have fooliſhly exalted againſt you, ſo ſhall you enter into that country which your goodneſs has this day made your own.' And ſo, taking him upon his ſhoulders, he made him upon his robes, and joining hands did him homage.

Domeſday-book ſays, 'Turſtin the ſon of Rolf holds five hides in Auſtreclive of the land of this manor,' i.e. of the manor of Hueſberie. William uſſel held the manor of Auſt 4 E. 2. and Roger Acton was ſeized thereof 35 E. 3. John emiſh, eſq; and Margaret his wife, and Stephen atfield and Iſabel his wife, levied a fine of one oiety of the manor of Auſt to the uſe of ſir aurice Berkeley of Uley, 15 R. 2. And ſir homas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of e other moiety of that manor, and of lands in oats near Auſt, 15 R. 2. Sir Thomas Brook d ſeized of the manor 5 H. 5. and Joan his dow died ſeized thereof, and of Coats near uſt, which ſhe held in dower, 15 H. 6. It probable that ſhe had married ſir John Strad-g, for he and Joan his wife held the third rt of the manor of Auſt, in right of dower H. 6. Thomas Chedder was ſeized of the nor of Auſt and of Coates 21 H. 6. and John miſh held Auſt 16 E. 4. The manor of Auſt onged afterwards to the Denniſes of Durham, d paſſed to the Capels. Sir Giles Capel married bel, one of the daughters and heirs of Richard wton, eſq; ſon of ſir John Newton, and died ed of Auſt 3 Mar. and was ſucceeded by his ſir Henry Capel, who dying without iſſue, ward Capel his brother had livery 5 Mar. Sir ward Capel, with Humphry Capel, and Roger pel, eſq^rs. ſold this manor to John Browning, of whoſe family it went by purchaſe to ſir nuel Aſtry, in the year 1652. Sir Samuel iſed it to dame Elizabeth his widow, who e all her eſtates between her three ſurviving ughters, and upon a partition, this manor fell the youngeſt daughter, Arabella counteſs of ffolk, who deviſed it to ſir John Smith, baronet. s ſon, ſir John Smith, dying in 1741, without e, deviſed his eſtate to his three ſurviving ers and coheirs, who, in 1750, ſold this manor ſir Jarrit Smyth, baronet, who ſold it to the erend Staunton Degge, late of Over, and Mrs. lmot is the preſent lady of this manor.

Livery of Auſt-paſſage, alias Haman Hay, was nted to Elizabeth Randoll 15 Eliz. It was rchaſed by ſir Samuel Aſtry, and has ſince paſſed the manor of Auſt. There is a neat chapel this tithing. See Inſcriptions and Benefactions.

6. Stowick, which lies in the marſhy part, along banks of the Severn. The low grounds near river were antiently called Salt Marſh. John Stoner died ſeized of lands in Salt Marſh 9 E. 2. did his ſon John de Stoner 28 E. 3. and Edward of the laſt John 5 R. 2. and John ſon of ward 13 R. 2. Sir Ralph Stoner held the ſame lands 18 R. 2. and Gilbert de Stoner, ſon of Robert, died ſeized of the ſame 3 H. 5. Sir Edward Seimour, ſon of Edward duke of Somerſet, and lady Catherine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Salt Marſh 1 E. 6.

7. Aylminton, alias Elminton. Four hides in Almintune belonged to the lordſhip of Berkeley at the time of the general ſurvey. John Muſgroſe was ſeized of this manor 3 E. 1. John Blount held the manor of Aylminton in Henbury 22 H. 6. as did Wentlyn his widow 32 H. 6. and Edward Blount, eſq; and Simon his ſon and heir were ſeized of it reſpectively 8 & 16 E. 4. Sir John Smyth was lord of this manor, whoſe coheirs ſold it in the year 1749, to ſir Jarrit Smyth, baronet, who is the preſent lord of the manor of Aylminton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Briſtol, worth about 80 l. a year. The preſentation to the vicarage is alternate in the heirs of ſir John Smyth, baronet, and the heirs of Thomas Edwards, eſq; Mr. Gardiner is the preſent incumbent. The church was appropriated to the ſee of Worceſter, and the advowſon of the vicarage was in that biſhoprick before the reign of king Edward the Sixth.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It conſiſts of the nave and two ailes, with a handſome altar-piece railed in, and a large tower at the weſt end, containing ſix bells and a clock. Lands worth 60 l. a year are given to keep it in repair.

Plain is the Tale unvaried Life affords,
And ſuch an artleſs narrative records.
Yet think not all of human glory ſprings
From Camps, from Senates, or the Pow'r of Kings.
True Wiſdom oft avoids the Pomp of State,
Serene, collected, in an humbler Fate.
There too fair deeds & Joys unmixt are known,
While Virtue ſeeks no Trophies but her own.

At bottom are theſe arms, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, a feſs flory between four eſcallops ſable; 2d and 3d, Gules, a feſs undy between three fleurs de lis Or.

Hee was devout towards God, & remarkable among Men for Antient Freedom & Integrity of Mind, protecting ye innocent, puniſhing and repreſſing ye injurious, acting by perſwaſion & Gentleneſs rather then by extremity and force, compoſing differences and promoting peace, whereby hee diſcharged ye duty of a true CHRISTIAN.

At the beginning of this century, there were 218 houſes, and about 880 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 150 were freeholders; yearly births 27, burials 26. Atkyns. But ſince that time population hath very much increaſed, and tho' I could not obtain the exact number of inhabitants, they are now eſtimated to be at leaſt 1200.

HEWELSFIELD

Is a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of St. Briavel's, ſix miles diſtant north-eaſt from Chepſtow in Monmouthſhire, ſeven ſouth from Colford, and twenty-four ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated on high ground, in the foreſt of Dean, and enjoys a healthy air and a variety of ſoil. It was conſidered as a part of Lidney 9 E. 1. when the ſheriff made a return of all the hundreds and vills in the county of Glouceſter.

The inhabitants claim the privileges of the dutchy of Lancaſter, to which they pay a certain ſum annually; and they have common of paſture and of wood in Harthill.

The name has been variouſly written in different ages, as Hurwaldesfield in the time of king Edward the Firſt, Huersfielde, Huelsfielde, and Huetsfield about the reign of queen Elizabeth, and, in the latter ages, as it ſtands at the head of this account. It has been ſuggeſted, that it was occaſioned by ſome general (I ſuppoſe either Briton or Saxon) of the name of Huer, or Huel, or perhaps Hurwald, very antiently obtaining a victory upon this ſpot; becauſe, it is ſaid, the names of places ending in field have commonly been given them upon ſuch an occaſion. But if this opinion ſhould have any weight as to other places, it cannot be applied in the preſent caſe; for the name of this place does not appear to be Hurwaldsfield, but Hiwoldeſtone, about the time of the conqueſt; and dividing it into Hiwolde's Town, it becomes eaſy and intelligible to every body.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

What I have aſſerted concerning the orthography of the name will be juſtified by the following extract from the antient ſurvey, where, among the eſtates belonging to William the ſon of Baderon, it is thus recorded:

'The ſame William holds Hiwoldeſtone in 'Ledenei hundred. Ulfeg held it in the time of 'king Edward. There are three hides. By the 'king's order this eſtate is in the foreſt. It is 'worth 30*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

Walter Wither was ſeized of Hawaldsfield 54 H. 3. John de Monemuta was afterwards ſeized of this eſtate, and gave lands in this pariſh, called the Vineyard, and a meadow called the Vineyard-meadow, together with 100*s.* rent, to the hoſpital of the holy Trinity in Monmouth, which he had founded. Dugd. Monaſt. And it appears by an inquiſition taken 4 E. 1. that Hualdesfield had eſcheated from John de Monemuta to the crown, and that the king had then given it to the abbat of Tintern in free alms.

The abbey of Tintern held this manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved.

By an inquiſition taken at Wotton-under-edge, Feb. 4, 4 E. 6. after the death of Henry earl of Worceſter, it appears that he died, Nov. 26, 1549, ſeized of Hewelfield, and of 82 meſſuages, three mills, 1000 acres of plowed land, 70 of meadow, 1000 of paſture, 600 of wood, 500 of heath and turf, and 20*l.* 8*s.* rent in Brockwere, Wolveſton, Almington, Alveſton, Hewelsfield, and Modeſgate, with the fiſheries in the Wye called Plomwere, Aſhwere, Ithelſwere, and Walwere; and the rectory of Walwere, and advowſon and vicarage of the ſame; the manor of Tiddenham, and divers meſſuages, lands and tenements in Stroud, Widden, Widden, Biſten, Betteſley, and Sudbury, all in the county of Glouceſter. The duke of Beaufort is the preſent lord of the manor.

John Calmer and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Hueldfield, to John Maddox, ſen. and to John Maddox, jun. 21 H. 7.

Thomas Symonds, of Pengethly in Herefordſhire, eſq; has a good houſe and eſtate in this pariſh, which his anceſtor, Robert Symonds, purchaſed of the daughters and coheirs of ſir Nicholas Throckmorton, who held the ſame in right of his wife, Alice, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Richard Gough, ſon of William Gough, eldeſt ſon of George Gough of Hewelſfield, whoſe ſeat and eſtate it had been.

James Rooke, of Bickſwear, eſq; eldeſt ſon to major-general Hayman Rooke, deſcended from a family of long ſtanding in the county of Kent, died about the year 1771, ſeized of good eſtates in this pariſh and in Woollaſton, in right of his wife, Jane, only daughter of Tracy Catchmay, eſq; ſon and heir of ſir William Catchmay, by Eleanor his wife, the other daughter and coheireſs of the above-named Richard Gough. And James Rooke, eſq; a major in his majeſty's forces, ſucceeds his father in thoſe eſtates.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, annexed to Lidney, the incumbent of which hath all the tithes of this pariſh, great and ſmall, worth 60*l.* a year.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, with the tower in the middle, and a ſmall aile on the north ſide.

HILL

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Berkeley, four north from Thornbury, and twenty-two ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It was called Hull, or Hill, from the elevated ſituation of part of the pariſh towards the eaſt.

The ſeat of ſir John Fuſt, baronet, is pleaſantly ſituated on the ſide of that acclivity, with the river Severn in front, at the diſtance of about two miles to the weſt; of which river, and of the high lands and pendent woods of the foreſt of Dean on the other ſide, it commands an uninterrupted and moſt agreeable proſpect for many miles.

This place was formerly dependent on Berkeley, which it even now acknowledges, by paying one ſhilling a year towards the great bell-rope, and the like ſum towards the wall of the churchyard there.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Four hides in Hill belonged to the great lordſhip of Berkeley at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears by the account of the members of that lordſhip. This manor was granted to Robert Fitz-Harding, anceſtor of the Berkeley family.

Maurice lord Berkeley gave the manors of Hill and Nimpsfield to his brother Nicholas, and died 1 R. 1. William Berkeley, ſon of Roger, died ſeized of Hull 46 H. 3. John Fitz-Nicholas was lord of this manor 9 E. 1. His family name was Berkeley, but being the ſon of Nicholas, he took the name of Fitz-Nicholas. Nicholas Berkeley, ſon of Ralph, held this manor in the 15th year of the ſame reign, when a Quo Warranto was brought againſt him to ſet forth his right to privileges, and his claim was then allowed.

John Fitz-Nichols died ſeized of Hull 15 E. 2. John Fitz-Nichols, ſon of John, died ſeized of the manor of Hull 29 E. 3. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols held this manor, and two plow-tillages, and a yearly rent of 20*s.* in Hull, 7 R. 2. and ſir Thomas Fitz-Nichols died ſeized of this manor 6 H. 5. Catherine, one of his daughters and coheirs, was married to Robert Pointz, eſq; by which marriage this manor was carried into the family of Pointz. Elianor, the other daughter and coheir, was married to John Browning, eſq.

Sir Nicholas Pointz died ſeized of Hill 4 Mar. and it continued in that name and family 'till ſir John Pointz ſold it, in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

The family of the name of Pointz, or Pontz, is ſaid to have come into England with William the Norman, or ſoon after. The eldeſt branch of that family ſettled at Sutton in Dorſetſhire, and the male line ending with one Nicholas Pontz, his lands paſſed, by heirs general, to the Newborows and Fitz-James's. Leland.

Henry Fleetwood was lord of the manor of Hill in the year 1608; ſoon after which it paſſed by purchaſe to Richard Fuſt, of the city of London, eſq.

eſq. His ſon, ſir Edward Fuſt, married Bridget, daughter of ſir Thomas Denton, of Hillerſden in Buckinghamſhire. He was created a baronet Aug. 21, 14 C. 2. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir John Fuſt, who married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Richard Cocks of Dumbleton, and was high ſheriff of this county 27 C. 2. Sir Edward Fuſt, his ſon, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Stephens, of Lypiat, eſq; his ſecond wife was Elizabeth, daughter of William Mohun, of Portiſhead in Somerſetſhire; his third wife was Catherine, daughter of Francis Mohun, of Fleet in the county of Dorſet, eſq; and he took to his fourth wife, Suſanna, daughter of Richard Cocks, eſq; of Dumbleton. By his ſecond wife he had ſir Edward Fuſt, who ſucceeded to the title and eſtate, but dying without male iſſue, they devolved to his brother Francis, eldeſt ſon of ſir Edward by his third wife; which ſir Francis, in the year 1724, married Fanny, daughter of Nicholas Tooker, of the city of Briſtol, merchant, by whom he had eight ſons and four daughters. Sir Francis died in the year 1769, and was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir John Fuſt, baronet, who married Miſs Philippa Hamilton, and is the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Argent, upon a chevron between three hedge bills erected ſable, as many mullets of the field.

By records of the following dates it appears, that Adam le Waleys died ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Hull 9 E. 2. Robert Wither granted one yard-land, twenty-nine acres of arable, and a yearly rent of 13*s.* 6*d.* in Hull, Berkeley, and Bevington, to the abbey of Kingſwood, 2 E. 2. which were granted, after the diſſolution of the abbey, to ſir Nicholas Pointz, 31 H. 8.

William Martel held three yard-lands and 20*s.* rent iſſuing out of Hull, 14 E. 2. John de Hull held lands in this pariſh 16 E. 3. as did Gilbert Tynden 24 E. 3. and John Sergeant 30 & 36 E. 3. Thomas Kennet and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Hull 21 E. 3, as did Richard Forſter, to John Walſh and others, 12 H. 7. Richard Tyladam died ſeized of lands in Hill 34 Eliz. and left two daughters coheireſſes.

HAMLETS. 1. Nupdown. 2. Woodend.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a donative, in the deanery of Durſley, worth 30*l.* a year, in the gift of ſir John Fuſt.

The tithes of hay in Hill and Ham, which belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtin's in Briſtol, were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8. to whom the impropriation now belongs.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a ſmall chancel on the ſouth ſide, built by ſir Edward Fuſt, and ſince uſed as the burying place of the family. Over the door, within the church, is the following inſcription:

To drain this pariſh from its during flood;
To model and repair this houſe of God;
Are patterns good I ſet to future time.
Free profit yours; y^e^ coſt & labour mine.

Sir Francis Fuſt, Baronet, lord of this manor, for the benefit of its inhabitants, at his own expence, planned, built and erected, in the year 1750, the great ſewer at Hill-pill, next the river, called the Imperial Draught, and the two others above it. He alſo, in 1759, new modelled and repaired this church. All the coſts and materials for all the ſaid works are a gift from him freely to this pariſh, for the uſe above. Let thoſe of ability ſtrive to do good.

At the beginning of this century, there were 42 houſes, and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. If this account may be depended on, population has been much on the decline ſince that period. In ſeven years, beginning with 1766, there are entered 17 baptiſms and 27 burials, in the pariſh regiſter, which has been very ill kept. The houſes in Hill are 32, and the preſent number of inhabitants exactly 146.

HINTON

Is a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Tibbleſtone, three miles ſouth from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, eight weſt from Campden, and twenty-three north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The pariſh lies in a rich vale country, and conſiſts almoſt intirely of paſture land, whence it is ſometimes called Hinton on the Green.

A little river, which comes from Wormington, runs by this village, and falls into the Avon at Hampton, near Eveſham.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the year 981, Elfrede, ſiſter of king Etheldred, gave Hynetune to the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter, to pray for her ſoul; and the king, at her requeſt, exempted it from all ſecular charges. Und-

Under the head Terra S. Petri de Glowec' in Domeſday-book, is is thus recorded:

'The ſame church holds Hinetune in Tetboldeſtanes hundred. There are fifteen hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and thirty villeins, and ſeven bordars, with ſixteen plow-tillages. There are eleven ſervi, and one foreigner. It was worth 3*l.* now 10*l.* This manor is free from tax, and from attendance on any court but that of the church.' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Hinton, with markets, fairs, court leet, and free warren, and their right was allowed in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

In the year 1156, it was adjudged in the county court of Glouceſterſhire, that the manor of Hinetune being time out of mind free from all charges, therefore it ought to be free from fines for murder.

The abbey continued in poſſeſſion of this manor till the general diſſolution, when it came to the crown, and was granted, with the advowſon of the church, to ſir Edward Worth 36 H. 8. Thomas Warners was afterwards ſeized of the manor, and left an only daughter and heireſs married to Thomas Baker, who was ſeized of it in right of his wife; and ſir Thomas Baker was lord of the manor in 1608.

The manor came afterwards to ſir John Hanner, who ſold it to ſir Robert Jaſon. His widow held it in jointure, and was afterwards married to ſir Chriſtopher Aires; and ſurviving him, was married, thirdly, to David Warren, eſq; who, in her right, was lord of the manor at the beginning of the preſent century.

About the year 1739, Joſeph Swayne, of Briſtol, eſq; married the widow of a ſucceeding ſir Robert Jaſon, and became poſſeſſed of the manor of Hinton, which he ſold, together with the Jaſon eſtate, to the reverend Dr. Stephens, who bequeathed it to his brother Philip Stephens, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hampden, worth 120*l.* a year. Philip Stephens, eſq; is patron, and the rev. Mr. Stephens is the preſent incumbent.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter. The biſhop of Glouceſter has two thirds of the great tithes.

Four acres of meadow, eight of paſture, and one third of the great tithes belong to the rector.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, conſiſts of the nave only, and has a handſome embattled tower, with five bells, at the weſt end.

In the year 1740, an old grave-ſtone being removed, the following mutilated inſcription was found on the under ſide:

HORFIELD

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, two miles north from Briſtol, nine ſouth from Thornbury, and thirty-four ſouth from Glouceſter. It conſiſts moſtly of rich paſture land.

One of the heads of the little river Trin, or Trim, riſes in the north weſt part of this pariſh, and runs down to Weſtbury, (from this brook called Weſtbury upon Trim) and thence into the Avon, about three miles below Briſtol.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

When Domeſday-book was compiled, this was a member of the great lordſhip of Berkeley, as may be ſeen in the copy of that record, p. 68.

Robert Fitz-Harding, the firſt lord Berkeley of his family, gave the manor of Horfelle to the abbey of St. Auguſtine's in Briſtol, which he himſelf had founded. And the abbat's claim to court leet in this manor was allowed in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

At the diſſolution of religious foundations, the manor and rectory were granted to the biſhoprick of Briſtol 34 H. 8. And the biſhop of Briſtol is the preſent lord of this manor.

Roger, the ſon of Roger, was ſeized of eight acres of arable in Horfield 3. E. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the dioceſe and deanery of Briſtol, formerly worth only 8*l.* a year to the curate. But in the year 1718, it was augmented by the queen's bounty, and the joint donations of Edward Colſton, and Thomas Edwards, eſq". The biſhop of Briſtol is patron and impropriator.

The church is a ſmall building, with a low pinnacled tower at the weſt end, and affords nothing worthy of obſervation.

HORSLEY.

THIS pariſh is in the hundred of Longtree, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſt from Hampton, four north from Tetbury, and fourteen ſouth from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſt by Avening, on the weſt by Nimpsfield, on the north by Woodcheſter, and on the ſouth-weſt by Beverſtone. Here is a market on Saturday, now almoſt diſuſed.

The name ſignifies a woody place. It is derived from ƿyɲɲe, a Saxon word for wood; and lei, contracted from leza, a place; and the preſent condition of the pariſh juſtifies the propriety of the name, for a conſiderable part of it is ſtill in woodland.

There are in this pariſh, more eſpecially where ſome of the houſes are built, ſeveral dingles and narrow bottoms, with hanging woods, and verdant ſteeps, which give it a romantic appearance, not eaſily to be deſcribed. By the highway, towards the top of that part where the houſes are, next to Avening, I obſerved two or three ſmall ſprings, ouzing out of the ſide of the bank, pretty ſtrongly tinged with iron mine.

The cloathing buſineſs hath encouraged great numbers of families to ſettle here, but that manufacture declining of late, the poor are very burthenſome, for want of employment; but much of their wretched condition is owing to idleneſs and bad habits.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Martin of Troars holds 'Horſelei' in Langetrew hundred, by the gift of 'king William. Goda, ſiſter to king Edward, 'held it. There are ten hides. There are four 'plow-tillages in demean, and ſix villeins, and 'five bordars, with ſix plow-tillages, and one 'radcheniſter. And there is a houſe in Glouue-'ceſtre of 6*d.* [rent]. There is a mill of 50*d.* 'It was worth 12*l.* and is now worth 14*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

It appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition, taken 1 R. 2. that this manor was exchanged with the prior of Bruton[t] for lands in Normandy belonging to that priory, 45 E. 3.

After the diſſolution of religious foundations, the manor of Horſley, with lands called Crainmere, were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 33 H. 8. and after his attainder, ſir Walter Dennis had a grant of it 7 E. 6.

Richard Stephens died ſeized of this manor 41 Eliz. as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition the ſame year; where it is ſaid that this Richard ſettled Chavenydge-farm on his wife Anne, one of the daughters of John Stone, haberdaſher of London, 35 Eliz. This manor and eſtate have continued ever ſince in the ſame name and family. The reverend Mr. Robert Stephens, of Chavenage, is the preſent proprietor of them. His arms, and ſome account of his family, may be ſeen under Eaſington. Chavenage hath been variouſly written, as Chavenydge, Thevenage, &c. and may be ſo called from its ſituation on the borders of the pariſh of Avening, q. d. Aven-edge.

Sir Walter Dennis was ſeized of lands in Horſley and Thevenage 28 H. 8.

TITHINGS. 1. Tichmor-end. 2. Nup-end. 3. Barton-end. 4. Nailſworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stonehouſe. The rectory was antiently appropriated to the priory of Bruton. In the year 1380, the biſhop of Worceſter, at the requeſt of the prior, appointed twelve marks a year to be paid to the vicar of Horſley, by the ſaid priory, as appears by the antient regiſter of that dioceſe; and the vicar now receives 8*l.* a year of the impropriator. In the year 1733, the vicarage was augmented by the benefaction of Paul Caſtleman, eſq; and queen Anne's bounty, which, together, make the preſent value about 45*l.* a year, beſides a houſe called Rockneſs, lately purchaſed for the vicar. Lord chancellor is patron.

The rectory coming to the crown at the diſſolution, was granted to ſir Walter Hungerford 6 Eliz. It is now the property of Mr. John Selfe, and is worth about 80*l.* a year. The prior of Bruton had a ſeat here, of which little more than the gate-way remains. There was alſo near the church, a building called the chapel, now reduced to ruins.

The church is large, with an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a handſome tower at the weſt end adorned with pinnacles and battlements. It is dedicated to St. Martin. There is alſo a ſmall aile on the north ſide, called St. George's chapel.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his hiſtory, there were 300 houſes, and about 1200 inhabitants in this pariſh, of whom 18 were freeholders; yearly births 22, burials 20. But from an examination of the pariſh regiſter, it appears that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1718, where the regiſter begins, to 1727 incluſive, there were 296 baptiſms, and 248 burials. And in a like ſeries, from 1760, to 1769 incluſive, there were 423 baptiſms, and 414 burials. Upon which it is to be obſerved that the inhabitants have increaſed greatly between theſe two periods of time; but we cannot make any tolerable judgment of the number of them from the burials, becauſe there are in this pariſh and neighbourhood three meeting houſes, of different denominations, at two of which they adminiſter baptiſm, and there is ſepulture at all of them.

HORTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, two miles diſtant north-eaſt from Chipping Sodbury, four ſouth-eaſt from Wickwar, and about twenty-ſeven ſouthward from Glouceſter.

About half the pariſh lies in the vale, and conſiſts of paſturage, with an extenſive common; the other part is ſituated on the ſide of a hill, and on a lofty plain above, where the ſoil is lighter, but produces good corn. On the brow of the hill facing to the weſt, there are the intrenchments of a camp, called the Caſtles, overlooking the vale country to a very conſiderable extent. The camp is of a ſquare form, ſuppoſed to be Roman, but I cannot learn that either coins or inſtruments have been found near it, by which it may be determined of a certainty to what people it belonged.

Mr. Paſton has a large, antient ſeat, cloſe to the church, where his anceſtors have reſided ever ſince the year 1710, upon their manſion-houſe at Appleton, in the county of Norfolk, being intirely burnt down in the year 1708.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Robert de Todeni holds Horedone in Grim-'boldeſtou hundred. There are ten hides taxed. 'Ulf held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, 'and eleven villeins, and eight bordars, with 'eight plow-tillages. There are ſeven ſervi, and 'a mill of 6 s. and twenty acres of meadow; a 'wood two miles long, and one broad. It was 'worth 12 l. now 7 l.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

Richard de Abbingdon was lord of this manor 9 E. 1.

William Kayleway and Alice his wife levied a fine of the manor of Horton to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to the heirs of Alice in ſpecial taille, the remainder to the right heirs of Thomas de Bradeſtone, 19 E. 3.

Thomas de Bradeſton died ſeized of Horton 34 E. 3. as did Agnes his widow 43 E. 3. and Thomas Bradeſton his ſon 48 E. 3. Ela the widow of Thomas de Bradeſton died ſeized of the manor of Horton 11 H. 4.

Thomas Burton and William his ſon levied a fine of Horton to the uſe of Thomas Burton, ſon of William, in ſpecial taille.

This manor afterwards paſſed to William Knight, eſq; prothonotary of the Common Pleas, who built the large manor houſe. Edward Paſton, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and Clement Paſton, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor of Horton.

But there were two reputed manors in this pariſh; for Agnes, who had been the wife of Hubert de Ria, and Henry her ſon, gave the manor of Hortun to the church of Saliſbury, in the time of Richard Powr, biſhop of that ſee; and it was annexed to a prebend of the ſame, of which Ralph de York was prebendary; who ſet forth his claim to free warren and court leet within the manor of Horton, in his anſwer to a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1. and his claim was allowed. The ſame manor continued in that prebend 'till king Edward the Sixth granted it to Edward duke of Somerſet, who being attainted, it was afterwards granted to Clement Paſton, eſq; and the manor and prebend of Horton, and the advowſon of the rectory, were again granted and confirmed 1 Mar. This manor was formerly known by the name of Horwood. The manerial rights of the whole pariſh now belong to Mr. Paſton, whoſe deſcent and arms are exhibited under Monumental Inſcriptions.

Sir Walter de la Pool, and Elizabeth his wife, were ſeized of Draycot's Place, in Horton 12 H. 6. William earl marſhal and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Horton 3 H. 7. Certain lands in Horton, called Frayres-hay, which belonged to the commandery of the knights-templers at Quenington, were granted to John Bellowe 38 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 130 l. a year, having the great and ſmall tithes of the whole pariſh, except of Horwood eſtate, called the demeſnes, for which a modus of 2 l. 13 s. 4 d. is paid in lieu of all tithes, as I was informed by the late Mr. Paſton, who ſold the right of preſentation ſome years ſince for three lives, to John Unwin, of Took's Court, London. Mr. Edward Draper is the preſent incumbent. Thirty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It hath an aile on the north ſide, which Mr. Paſton repairs, repairs, on account of Horwood eſtate, and a tower with a clock at the weſt end. An acre in Caſtle-field, an acre and a half in the Inn-field, and 6*d.* each from two houſes, are given for repairing the church.

HUNTLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of the dutchy of Lancaſter, in the Foreſt diviſion, five miles north eaſt from Dean, eleven eaſt from Roſs in Herefordſhire, and ſeven weſt from Glouceſter.

The pariſh conſiſts of good arable and paſture land. Part of Yartleton-hill lies within it, and is eſteemed the higheſt ground in the Foreſt diviſion. It affords plenty of iron ore, intermixt with ſhining particles of a white and yellow colour, vulgarly ſuppoſed to be ſilver and gold, but I never heard that either of thoſe precious metals have been extracted from the ore.

In the great civil war, the parliament had a garriſon in this place, which captain Davis betrayed into the hands of ſir John Wintour.

The great turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Hereford leads through this village.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Reginald

Reginald de Gray purchaſed a charter of free warren in Hunteley, and all his lands in Glouceſterſhire, 53 H. 3. Robert Sapye, or de Sapy, was lord of Huntley, with free warren, 9 & 11 E. 1. and died ſeized thereof 20 E. 2.

Richard lord Talbot, of Goderick-caſtle in Herefordſhire, (whoſe anceſtor, Richard Talbot, came into England with the Conqueror) married Elizabeth, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of John Comyn, of Badenagh, of the blood royal of Scotland, and with her had the manor of Huntley, of which he died ſeized 30 E. 3. Elizabeth, his widow, ſurvived him, but dying ſoon after, this manor deſcended to Gilbert lord Talbot, ſon of Richard, who died ſeized of Huntley and Longhope 10 R. 2 leaving Richard lord Talbot his ſon and heir, who died ſeized of Huntley, Longhope, Leigh, and Lidney 20 R. 2. Gilbert lord Talbot, ſon of Richard, on the death of his mother, had livery of a fourth part of this manor 1 H. 5. Dugd. Bar. He died ſeized of the above-mentioned manors, and of a moiety of the manor of Badgworth, and of a third part of thoſe of Painſwick, Moreton-Valence, and Whaddon, 7 H. 5. leaving Ankaret, or Anchoret, his only daughter and heireſs, who dying at the age of four years, 9 H. 5. John lord Talbot, brother of Gilbert, and uncle to Anchoret, ſo famous for his victories in France, as to be eſteemed the Achilles of England, was her heir. He was created earl of Shrewſbury 20 H. 6. and was ſlain[v] by a cannon ſhot, at the ſiege of Chaſtillon in France, July 20, 31 H. 6. and died ſeized of the before-mentioned manors which had belonged to his father and brother. He was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his ſon and heir, John, ſecond earl of Shrewſbury, who took part with the houſe of Lancaſter, and was ſlain at the battle of Northampton, July 10, 1460.

John, third earl of Shrewſbury, died ſeized of all the before-mentioned manors 13 E. 4. Catherine, his widow, ſurvived him, and had this manor aſſigned her in part of dower 15 E. 4.

George, fourth earl of Shrewſbury, ſon of the laſt John, died 30 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Francis, fifth earl of Shrewſbury, who had livery of this manor the ſame year, and dying 32 Eliz. was ſucceeded by Gilbert his ſon, the ſixth earl of Shrewſbury, who died ſeized of Huntley, and other manors in Glouceſterſhire, 14 Jac. leaving three daughters coheireſſes.

Elizabeth, his ſecond daughter, was married to Henry earl of Kent, who had for her ſhare the manor of Huntley, and other eſtates in Glouceſterſhire, which muſt have been ſettled on him and his heirs, otherwiſe they would have deſcended to the iſſue of Gilbert earl of Shrewſbury; for the above Henry earl of Kent dying without iſſue in 1630, the manor of Huntley came to Anthony Grey, the next heir male of his family, who died ſeized of it, leaving Henry earl of Kent his ſon and heir. He died in the year 1644, and was ſucceeded in honour and eſtate by Anthony his ſon and heir. Henry duke of Kent, ſon of Anthony, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century.

The manor came not long afterwards to John Hopkyns Probyn, eſq; and Edmund Probyn, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor of Huntley, and reſides at Newland. His arms are, Ermine, on a feſs gules a lion paſſant Or.

Thomas Rawlings and his wife levied a fine of lands in Huntley to William Baynham 8 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 60*l.* a year. Mr. Morſe is patron and incumbent.

Wienochus de Monemut gave the chapel of Huntley to the monks of the church built by him in his caſtle of Monmouth, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Florence de Salurmo. Dugd. Mon.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, has a tower at the weſt end, and a ſmall chancel.

The church houſe, and ſome lands, worth together about 4*l.* a year, are veſted in feoffees, and the produce diſtributed to the ſecond poor.

ICOMBE

IS a tithing and hamlet in Icombe, of which the chapel and the greater part of the place is in Worceſterſhire; but the hamlet of Icombe lies in the hundred of Slaughter, and conſtitutes a part of the county of Glouceſter. It is diſtant two miles ſouth-eaſtward from Stow, ten northward from Northleach, and twenty-ſix north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It had been long accounted extraparochial, and not ſubject to the orders of the magiſtrate touching the maintenance of the poor, &c. But on a late trial in the court of king's bench, it was adjudged to be a vill to all intents and purpoſes, a conſtable having been always appointed for it by the lord of the hundred and leet of Slaughter.

[v] When the body of the earl of Shrewſbury, the Achilles of England, was found, after the battle of Chaſtillon upon Dordon, by his herald, who had worn his coat of arms, he kiſſed the body, and broke out into the following dutiful expreſſions: Alas! is it you? I pray God pardon all your miſdoings. I have been your officer of arms forty years or more, 'tis time I ſhould ſurrender it to you. And while the tears trickled plentifully down his face, he diſrobed himſelf of his coat of arms, and threw it over his maſter's body, which was the accuſtomed rite performed heretofore at funerals. Collins, from Anſtis.

The name, contrary to vulgar uſage, ſhould be written with one [C] only. It is the ſame in ſound and ſignification with the Britiſh Ycwm, i.e. the valley, and is deſcriptive of the ſituation of the place, in a fine valley, on the ſide of the river Evenlode, which ſeparates it from Worceſterſhire.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, Icombe in Glouceſterſhire included a much larger diſtrict than the hamlet ſo called at preſent; for there were then three manors of the name of Icombe, two of which have ſince exchanged it for that of Weſtcot. The third is thus deſcribed in the record:

'Durand of Glowec' holds Iccumbe, and Walter 'holds it of him. There are two hides taxed. 'Turſtan held it. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and two villeins, and two bordars with 'one plow-tillage, and ſix between the ſervi and 'ancillæ. It was worth 30*s*. now 40*s*.' D.B. p. 76.

In obedience to the king's writ, the high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire returned the names of all the vills within the ſaid county, by which it appears that the fourth part of the vill of Icombe was in the hundred of Salmoneſburye, and that Thomas de Icombe was lord of the ſame fourth part 9 E. 1. Several different manors paſſing by the ſame name in the records occaſions confuſion, and renders it impoſſible to diſtinguiſh one from the others. I have therefore ſet down the ſubſequent records as I find them in ſir Robert Atkyns's account, notwithſtanding ſome of them may be miſapplied.

Elias de Icombe died ſeized of Icombe 5 E. 3. John earl of Kent was ſeized of it 26 E. 3. and Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, held Combe near Stow (probably Combe-Baſkerville, in Weſtcot) 2 H. 4. Elizabeth, widow of John earl of Kent, held the manor of Icombe in part of dower, and died ſeized thereof 12 H. 4.

Robert Whitney died ſeized of Icombe 33 H. 8. and Robert, his ſon, had livery granted to him 37 H. 8. as had James Whitney, ſon of the laſt Robert, 9 Eliz.

The eſtate, conſiſting of the hamlet of Icombe, came afterwards to colonel William Cope, of the family of the Copes of Oxfordſhire and Berkſhire. He was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir colonel Henry Cope, who held it at the beginning of this century. Mr. Hopton and Mr. Gregory are the preſent proprietors of it. The large manſion-houſe of the Copes is now in decay, and occupied by one of the farmers.

Sir Robert Atkyns, with diffidence, appropriates the following particulars to this place, which, however, have no relation to Icombe in Glouceſterſhire, viz. Certain lands therein, and the advowſon of the rectories of Icombe and Sodbury were reputed a manor, and did belong to the monaſtery of Worceſter, and after its diſſolution, were granted to the dean and chapter of Worceſter 33 H. 8. The manor of Icombe, and a yearly rent of 8*l*. formerly belonging to the biſhoprick of Worceſter, were granted to the chapter of Windſor 1 E. 6. Another record mentions the manor of Icombe, lately belonging to the priory of Worceſter, to have been granted to the chapter of Worceſter 6 Jac.

The inhabitants of this hamlet have the uſe of one aile in Icombe chapel, which lies in Worceſterſhire, but is within the deanery of Stow.

KEMERTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, four miles diſtant north-eaſtward from the town of that name, ſeven north-weſtward from Winchcomb, and fourteen northward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the vale of Eveſham, with Beckford to the eaſt, Overbury and Breedon in Worceſterſhire to the north and weſt, and Tredington to the ſouth of it; and is reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter.

The name is variouſly written, as Canebertu, Chenemertone, and Chinemertune, and is of uncertain derivation. It may ſignify either the chief farm, from chen, or kyn, which is augmentative, and berton, a farm; or the town at the great or ſtrong camp, from chen, as before, beorg, a camp, and ton a common termination; or it is reſolvable into the Britiſh word Cwmru, and ton, that is, the Briton's town.

Breedon-hill, celebrated by Drayton for its proud ſituation in the boſom of the vale, not far from the Avon, is remarkable for its fine paſturage, and fertile corn fields. And as part of it lies in this pariſh, it is proper to take notice of the camp on the top, which appears to be Roman, from the many coins that have been found there, of which a country-man gave me the four following:

1. IMP. CARAVSIVS P. F. AVG. Reverſe, a female figure, with an olive branch in her hand. Legend, PAX AVG.

2. IMP. MAXENTIVS P. F. AVG. Reverſe, a ſoldier ſitting in a temple. Legend, CONSERV. VRB. SVAE.

3. MAGNENTIVS P. F. AVG. Reverſe, a ſoldier holding a ſtandard in his left hand, and in the right a victory, crowning him with laurel. Legend, FELICITAS REIPVBL.

4. IMP.

4. IMP. LICINIVS P. F. AVG. Reverſe, a ſoldier. Legend, obliterated.

On the brow of the hill, near the camp, ſtands a ſtone of a prodigious magnitude, which the people of that neighbourhood call Benbury-ſtone, placed there, without doubt, to commemorate ſome ſignal event; but time has totally defeated the intention, and left us no part of its hiſtory beſide the name, which ſignifies the ſtone at the top of the hill, or head of the camp.

The curious natural productions of this village conſiſt of foſſil ſhells, particularly of the muſcle kind; and I am informed that the aſtroites have been found in ſome parts of the pariſh.

Mr. Parſons has a very good houſe here, where he reſides.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book, reciting the particulars of the large manor of Tewkeſbury, has this paſſage:

'Brictric the ſon of Algar held this manor in 'the time of king Edward. He had in his time 'the ſubſequent eſtates of other thanes under his 'authority:

'Let held eight hides in Chenemertone, and they 'were a manor. Now Girard holds them, and has 'three plow-tillages there, and fourteen villeins, 'with four plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, 'and three mills of 15*s*. [rent]. It was worth 8*l*. 'now 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

'Leuuinus held half a hide at Chinemertune, 'which Girard now holds.' and which was appurtenant to the manor of Derherſt.

'Eluuinus held half a hide at Chinemertune, 'which Baldwin the abbat holds.'

'Beſide theſe, Girard the chamberlain holds eight hides in Chenemertune, and three hides in Botingtune, which always paid tax, and did other ſervices in Derheſte hundred; but after Girard had them, they neither paid tax nor did ſervice.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The manor of Kemerton was held of the Clares and their ſucceſſors, earls of Glouceſter. William, ſon of Gerald, was ſeized of Kenemerton, with markets, 2 H. 3. Robert Muſgroſe died ſeized thereof 38 H. 3. as did John Muſgroſe 3 E. 1. and Robert Muſgroſe 9 E. 1. leaving Hawiſe his only daughter and heir, then married to ſir William Mortimer, a younger ſon of Roger earl of March, who in her right had livery of the manor 9 E. 1. But it ſeems ſhe was twice married, for ſome authors mention her as the wife of John de Ferrers, baron of Chartley.

The manor of Kemerton belonged afterwards to Thomas earl of Arundel, whoſe ſiſter and heireſs, Joan, carried it in marriage to William de Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny, who dying 2 H. 4. ſhe ſurviving him, was ſeized thereof at the time of her deceaſe 14 H. 6.

Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſon and heir of William and of Joan, left Henry, afterwards duke of Warwick, his ſon and heir, who dying at twenty-two years of age, and leaving an infant daughter, who ſurvived him but a ſhort time, his ſiſter Anne became his heir; but Cecily, his widow, held this manor for life, in part of her dower. The ſaid Anne was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Saliſbury and of Warwick, by whom ſhe had two daughters. Iſabel, the eldeſt, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth. By virtue of an act of parliament which deprived the mother, he, in right of his wife, died ſeized of this manor 17 E. 4. But Anne counteſs of Warwick was afterwards reſtored to her right, with a ſiniſter deſign, by king Henry the Seventh, to whom ſhe was obliged to paſs away this manor, and her other great eſtates, 3 H. 7. and died ſoon after.

Sir Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, married Elizabeth, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of ſir Richard Beauchamp, by Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Humphry Stafford. She ſurvived him, and died ſeized of Kemerton 6 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted to Edward Willoughby, their ſon and heir, the ſame year. He left three daughters coheireſſes; Elizabeth, married to Fulk Grevil; Anne, who died unmarried; and Blanch, married to ſir Francis Dautry. Anne, the ſecond ſiſter, dying ſoon after, livery of a moiety of a third part of the manor of Kemerton was granted to Francis Dautry and Blanch his wife, 25 H. 8.

The manor of Kemerton was afterwards granted to Thomas Hewes and Margaret his wife, and to their heirs in ſpecial taille, 4 Mar.

Livery of the manor of Kemerton was granted to Richard Ligon 9 Eliz. Sir Arnold Ligon and Thomas Hewes, eſq; were lords of this manor in 1608. John Parſons, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and dying in 1721, was ſucceeded by his ſon, John Parſons. He died in 1759, and was ſucceeded by his ſon, John Parſons, eſq; the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Azure, a chevron ermine between three trefoils argent.

Aſton upon Carant is a tithing in the pariſh of Aſhchurch, but is within the conſtablewick, and part of the tithing within the manor of Kemerton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 300*l*. a year. The corporation of the city of Glouceſter are patrons; the rev. Mr. Godfrey Goodman is the preſent incumbent.

Godfrey Goodman, biſhop of Glouceſter, May 8, 1638, granted the advowſon of the church of Kemerton to the mayor and burgeſſes of the city of Glouceſter, who reconveyed the ſame to the biſhop for his life.

On the vacancy of the rectory, the corporation of Glouceſter are to enquire of the corporation of Ruthyn in Denbighſhire for a relation of biſhop Goodman's, to be preſented to this living. If there there ſhould be none, then the living to go to a ſon of the mayor of Glouceſter, or of the ſenior alderman.

The rector, on the ſealing of his preſentation, pays 10*l.* for a dinner at St. Bartholomew's hoſpital in Glouceſter, to which the biſhop muſt be invited. He likewiſe pays two quarters of wheat yearly, to the treaſurer of that hoſpital, for the poor people there, in the week before Eaſter.

Alicia de Bello Campo preſented to this church in the reign of king Edward the Third.

The church is large, with an aile on each ſide, and a low pinnacled tower at the weſt end, in which are ſix very muſical bells.

KEMPLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the foreſt diviſion of the county, five miles north-weſt from Newent, ſix ſouthward from Ledbury in Herefordſhire, and fifteen north-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is of a middle ſize, bounded on the north by Dimmock, on the ſouth by Oxenhall, on the eaſt by Pauntley, and hath Herefordſhire on the weſt. It poſſeſſes an agreeable variety of ground, with eaſy ſlopes, and bolder acclivities, which however riſe not into hills. Something more than half the pariſh conſiſts of meadow, paſture, and orcharding; the reſt is arable and woodland, where the oak grows with uncommon vigour.

Here the arable lands are planted with rows of fruit-trees, with large intervals between; for the ſoil of theſe parts produces a rich and pleaſant cider, which is a principal object with the farmer. What has been ſaid of Dimmock is equally applicable to Kempley. Theſe places, with Preſton and Oxenhall, make a diſtrict of rich country, in the neighbourhood of Herefordſhire, with which the produce is nearly the ſame, and the methods of cultivation ſimilar to thoſe in uſe in that fine county, as mentioned under Dimmock.

Stonehouſe, in this pariſh, is a ſeat of the antient family of the Pindars, where they reſided at the beginning of the preſent century; but it hath long ſince been occupied by the tenant of the principal farm. Indeed the founderous and impaſſible condition of the public roads, in the winter, is an inſuperable objection to a gentleman's reſidence.

The air is ſaid to be pure and healthy; and it is remarked, in Dr. Parſons's account of this village, that no native had ever been known to have either gout or ſtone; and that no perſon had died in Mr. Pindar's houſe within the memory of man, notwithſtanding there were near fifteen or twenty in family great part of the time, to the year 1703. Perhaps cider, which is here the common liquor, may be a preſervative from the above-mentioned diſorders.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Laci holds Chenepelei in Botelau 'hundred of the king. Edric and Luric held it 'for two manors, in the time of king Edward, 'and could go where they would. There are 'three hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, 'and ten villeins, and ſeven bordars, with twelve 'plow-tillages. There are ſeven ſervi. It was 'worth 4*l.* now 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

Henry de Grey held the manor of Kempley in the reign of Richard the Firſt. John de Grey, ſecond ſon of Henry, was ſeized of it 9 E. 1. and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon Reginald, who died 1 E. 2. leaving John de Grey[x], his ſon, forty years old. John died 17 E. 2.[x] ſeized of Kempeley, which he held in capite by the ſervice of half a knight's fee, and left Henry de Grey, his ſon and heir, who died ſeized of this manor 16 E. 3.[y] Richard Grey held the manor of Kempley 22 R. 2.

John Abrahall, eſq; was ſeized of the manor of Kempley 3 E. 4. William Pigot died ſeized of it 7 E. 6. leaving Edward his ſon forty years old, who had livery granted to him the ſame year. Henry Pigot, ſon of Edward, left Anne, his only daughter and heireſs, married to Henry Finch, who, in her right, was ſeized of Kempley in the year 1608, and died in 1631. Francis Finch, ſon and heir of Henry, married Jane, daughter of Dr. Thornborough, biſhop of Worceſter, and left John Finch his ſon and heir.

The manor was ſoon afterwards purchaſed by ſir Thomas How, of the family of that name at Compton. And from him it paſſed, in the ſame manner, to Reginald Pindar, eſq; who was lord of the manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. Thomas Pindar, eſq; died in 1722, and Reginald-Pindar Lygon, of Maddersfield in Worceſterſhire, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Argent, two lions paſſant gardant in pale gules.

antiently, for there is ſtill in being a leaſe from them, to Ralph Dragun and Emma his wife, of all their land in Kenepeleya, which Henry Hythenard ſometime held of them, at the rent of three cranocs [half quarters] of wheat, and two quarters of oats.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 60*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Hereford, as guardians of the hoſpital of Ledbury, are patrons; Mr. Bourn is the preſent incumbent.

The vicar has the great tithes, except of Prior's-court, which is ſubject to the repair of the chancel, and is held under the hoſpital of Ledbury.

The church is ſmall, with a ſmall ſpire at the weſt end, in which are three bells. The churchyard is near an acre of ground, and intirely planted with apple trees.

KEMPSFORD

IS a pariſh of a middle ſize, in the hundred of Britwel's-Barrow, four miles ſouth-weſtward from Leachlade, nine eaſtward from Cirenceſter, and twenty-five ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The river Coln enters this pariſh on the north ſide, from Fairford, and running through it, falls into the Thames, which, at this place, is a boundary between Glouceſterſhire and Wiltſhire.

The name was antiently written Chenemeresford. Chene, or Kyn, is of extenſive ſignification, as ſtrenuous, bold, valiant; and in compoſition, great, principal, chief; mer ſignifies the ſea, or ſome large water, and mere is alſo a boundary: The name therefore ſignifies the Ford of the principal river, or great boundary, as the Thames may be very properly called in this part of the country.

Some topographers have taken this for the ford through which Ethelmund, general of the Wiccian army, paſſed to give battle to Werſtan earl of Wiltſhire; but by Higden's account of that tranſaction, who ſays, Ethelmund leaving his own territories, marched out as far as the ford Chimeresford, it appears that this could not be the place; for all Glouceſterſhire lay in Wiccia. Beſides, it is moſt probable, from other circumſtances, that it was at Cummerford, near Calne in Wiltſhire, for near that place are remains of large intrenchments, which ſeem to put the matter out of doubt.

About half the pariſh is rich meadow and paſture, and the other part very good arable land; but it affords nothing curious in natural hiſtory.

Henry duke of Lancaſter reſided here in the reign of king Edward the Third, where his only ſon came to an unfortunate end, which determined the duke to leave the place; and his horſe caſting a ſhoe at his departure, the inhabitants nailed it to the church door, where it remains as a memorial of that event at this day.

The family of the Thynnes have alſo honoured this village with their reſidence for many ſucceſſive generations, one of whom built the antient manor houſe near the church, which was very large and handſome, but is now uninhabited, and in a very ruinous condition.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Hernulf de Hefding holds Chenemeresforde 'in Brictuoldesberg hundred. There are twenty-'one hides taxed. Oſgot held it of earl Herald. 'In demean are ſix plow-tillages, and thirty-eight 'villeins, and nine bordars, and one radcheniſter, 'with eighteen plow-tillages. There are fourteen 'ſervi, and four mills of 40*s.* and 40*d.* rent, and '9*l.* from the meadows beſide the paſture of the 'cattle, and from the ſheep-fold 120 weight of 'cheeſe. In Glouuec' ſeven burgeſſes paying 2*s.* 'In the time of king Edward it was worth 30*l.* 'now 66*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

This manor was the head of an antient barony, called the barony of Kenemeresford or Kenesford; and Hannington, and a moiety of Ingleſham, both lying in Wiltſhire, and Etloe in Awre, were members of it.

About the end of the reign of king William the Firſt, Ernulf de Heſding conveyed this manor to Patrick de Chaworth, who was one of the Gadurci in France, and therefore ſometimes called de Gadurcis. Which Patrick granted three water-mills in Kynemeresford to the abbey of Glouceſter 20 W. 1. and the grant was confirmed by William Rufus. Patrick, his ſon, gave a water-mill called Horcote, with the lands adjoining, and the tithes of the meadows of the ſaid village, to the ſame monaſtery, when William was abbat. He paid 6*l.* upon levying of ſcutage for the redemption of the king out of captivity 6 R. 1.

Pain de Chaworth, ſon and heir of the laſt Patrick, married Gundred, daughter and heir of William de la Fert, and was buried in the chapter houſe of the abbey of Glouceſter. Patrick the Third, ſon of Pain, being under age at his father's death, paid 500*l.* for his own wardſhip and marriage, 23 H. 3. He married Hawiſe, daughter and heir of Thomas de London, lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly in Wales, and obtained a grant of markets and fairs in Kempsford 28 H. 3. and died ſeized of Radene, and of the barony of Kenesford, 42 H. 3. His ſon Pain being then only thirteen years of age, his mother purchaſed his wardſhip at 1000 marks. Pain, with his two brothers, attended prince Edward in the Holy Land 54 H. 3. and died without iſſue 7 E. 1.

Patrick the Fourth, brother to the laſt Pain, ſucceeding him, married Iſabel, daughter of William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and died 11 E. 1. leaving Maud his only daughter and heireſs. Iſabel, his widow, ſurviving him, held the manor of Kempsford in dower. She being ſoon after married to Hugh le Deſpencer, without the king's licence, this manor was ſeized by the crown, and granted to Ela counteſs of Warwick 15 E. 1. but Iſabel was reſtored upon payment of 2000 marks. After the death of Iſabel, the manor came to Maud, her daughter by her former huſband: She was married to Henry, afterwards earl of Lancaſter, nephew to king Edward the Firſt, who joined with his elder brother, Thomas earl of Lancaſter, and other barons, againſt king Edward the Second, to expel the Spencers. Thomas earl of Lancaſter was taken priſoner, and beheaded at Pontefract for treaſon, and Kempsford, with all the other eſtates of Henry, was ſeized by the crown 15 E. 2. and granted to Roger Boyfield the ſame year. Upon the dethroning of king Edward the Second, Henry ſucceeded to his brother's honour, and had reſtitution of this manor, of which he died ſeized 19 E. 3. leaving Henry, his ſon and heir, afterwards created duke of Lancaſter. He reſided ſome time at Kempsford, but taking a diſlike to the place, on account of the unfortunate death of his only ſon; he granted the manor of Kynemersford, one third of Chedworth, Hanendon [Hannington in Wiltſhire] a moiety of Ingleſham, and other lands, to the collegiate church of St. Mary the Leſs in the caſtle of Leiceſter, for the maintenance of a hoſpital there, called Newark, or New-work, of which he was the founder, 28 E. 3. The dean and college of Leiceſter purchaſed a grant of free warren in Kynemeresford and Chedworth 30 E. 3. and continued poſſeſſed of this manor 'till the general diſſolution of religious foundations.

King Edward the Sixth, in the third year of his reign, granted this manor to ſir John Thynne, (deſcended from ſir Geoffery Botevile, as mentioned under Bagendon) a very eminent perſon, who was at the battle of Muſſelburgh, and was knighted in the camp before Roxburgh in Scotland, by the duke of Somerſet, to whom he was ſecretary, and received the Scotch lion as an addition to his arms. He built a noble manſion at Longleate in Wiltſhire, ſaid to be the firſt well built houſe in England, which was finiſhed in the year 1579, at the expence of 8016*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* beſides the timber and ſtone, which were his own. He married, firſt, Chriſtian, daughter of ſir Richard Greſham, lord mayor of London, and ſiſter and heir to ſir Thomas Greſham, who founded and endowed Greſham college, and built the Royal Exchange in London, with whom, it is ſaid, he had eſtates to the amount of 2000*l.* a year, and by

by her had iſſue three ſons and eight daughters. His ſecond wife was Dorothy, daughter of ſir William Wroughton, by whom he had five ſons, and dying May 21, 1580, was buried at Deverel-Langbridge in Wiltſhire.

Sir John Thynne, eldeſt ſon of ſir John, by his firſt wife, had livery of this manor on the death of his father, and married Joan, daughter of ſir Rowland Hayward, with whom he had Caus-caſtle, the manor of Stretton-hall in Shropſhire, and other lands to the value of 1000*l.* a year. He was knighted by king James the Firſt, May 11, 1603, and died in 1606, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, (but Nov. 21, 1604, according to Collins) and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon, Sir Thomas Thynne, who was lord of this manor in 1608. He married, firſt, Mary, daughter of George Touchet, lord Audley; and ſecondly, Katherine Howard, grandaughter of Thomas viſcount Bindon, by whom he had three ſons and one daughter, and died in 1639.

Sir Henry-Frederick Thynne, ſecond ſon of ſir Thomas, had this manor given him by his father. He married Mary, one of the daughters of Thomas firſt lord Coventry, and was created a baronet July 15, 1641, by king Charles the Firſt, in whoſe cauſe he was a great ſufferer, being obliged to pay 3554*l.* compoſition, beſides ſettling lands of the value of 200*l.* a year, as the ſequeſtrators directed. He died in 1680, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon,

Sir Thomas Thynne, created baron Thynne of Warminſter, and viſcount Weymouth, in 1682. By the death of his uncle, ſir James Thynne, without iſſue, and of his couſin Thomas Thynne, eſq; who was murdered by the procurement of the Count Conningſmarke, he ſucceeded to their great eſtates. He married lady Frances Finch, eldeſt daughter of Heneage, ſecond earl of Winchelſea, and died in 1714.

Thomas, ſecond viſcount Weymouth, great nephew to the above Thomas, ſucceeded him in honour and eſtate. He married, to his ſecond wife, lady Louiſa, daughter of John earl of Granville, and died in 1741, leaving

Thomas, third viſcount Weymouth, his ſon and heir, who ſold this manor to Gabriel Hanger, afterwards lord Coleraine, whoſe widow is the preſent lady of the manor of Kempsford.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth 230*l.* a year. The biſhop of Glouceſter is patron; Mr. Price is the preſent incumbent.

Ernulf de Heſding gave the advowſon of this church to the abbey of Glouceſter, and the grant was confirmed by king Henry the Firſt. The abbey had likewiſe the impropriation of Welford, which, together with the advowſon, was granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church is large and handſome, with a lofty well built tower in the middle, in which are ſix muſical bells. KINGSCOT.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, five miles diſtant north-weſt from Tetbury, ſix north-eaſt from Wotton-under-edge, and ſixteen ſouth from Glouceſter.

It appears by Domeſday-book that Chingeſcote was part of the antient demeſnes of the crown; and it is probable, from the preſent ſtate of the pariſh, which conſiſts principally of woods and of arable lands, and from the name it bears, that it was formerly much overgrown with wood, for Chingeſcote ſignifies the King's Wood.

The inhabitants have a tradition, that there was once a city here, of the name of King Cheſter, which, however may be a miſtake, if underſtood agreeably to their notion of a city; but as tradition has generally ſomething of truth for its foundation, it ſerves, at leaſt, to ſhew that this village has been antiently diſtinguiſhed by camps or ſome eminent buildings. And accordingly it appears that there was a Roman ſtation at a place called the Cheſtles, not only from the name of it, which ſeems to have ſomething of a military ſignification, as if it were the ſame with caſtle, from caſtellum a fort or town; but alſo from the remains of a teſſelated pavement, and great numbers of Roman coins which have been found there, in plowing the fields at different times: A large ſtatue of ſtone, and other remains of antiquity, have alſo been turned up by the plow in the ſame field. I ſaw many of the coins, and ſome of the dice-like pieces that compoſed the pavement, which were of brick of different colours, in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Brooks of this place. There was alſo an antient Fibula Veſtiaria, of braſs, curiouſly chequered on the back part with red and blue enamel, found in the ſame field in the year 1691, as mentioned in the late editions of the Britannia, with ſome deſcription of the manner of uſing it. Had a perſon of judgment been preſent when theſe things were diſcovered, many curious particulars might have been preſerved, which were either unnoticed, or deſtroy'd by the plow-man.

I ſuppoſe the Cheſtles to have been the King Cheſter above-mentioned, and the greater camp referred to by the name of a little village in this neighbourhood, called Laſborough, but more truly and antiently written Leſſeberge, which ſignifies the ſmaller camp, or fortification.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor, at the time of the general ſurvey, was a member of the lordſhip of Berkeley, belonging to which there were 'in Chingeſcote four 'hides and a half.' D. B. p. 68. It was given to Roger de Berkeley, by king William the Firſt, and afterwards taken from another Roger de Berkeley, by king Henry the Second, and given to Robert Fitz-Harding; whoſe daughter Aldeva was married to Nigell de Kingeſcote, and had this manor for her portion.

But the records ſhew, that Anſelm de Gournay was ſeized of Kingſcot 14 E. 1. Nigell de Kingeſcote died ſeized of one meſſuage and one carucate of land in Kingeſcote, worth 60*s.* 19 E. 2. which he held of Thomas de Berkeley by the ſervice of one ſixth part of a knight's fee. William the ſon of Nigell being a minor at his father's death, the eſtate was in the cuſtody of Maurice de Berkeley, ſon of Thomas; who engaging in the barons wars, the king ſeized Kingſcote and other eſtates, and put them in the cuſtody of Robert de Aſton, on account of Maurice's rebellion. Eſch. 19 E. 2.

Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died ſeized of Kingſcot 17 H. 6. which was at the time of the violent law ſuits and outrages which happened about the lordſhip of Berkeley, as mentioned p. 275. And Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury was ſeized of the manor of Kingſcot 7 E. 4. William earl of Nottingham, and earl marſhal, (afterwards marquis of Berkeley) levied a fine of lands in Kingſcot 3 H. 7.

Anthony Kingſcot, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and died in 1654. Nigell Kingſcot, eſq; died unmarried in the year 1774, and left this manor, and a large eſtate in this pariſh and other places, to his nephew Robert Kingſcot, eſq; ſon of Robert, brother of the ſaid Nigell, who is the preſent lord of the manor of Kingſcot, and has an antient ſeat cloſe by the church. His coat of arms, and many particulars of his family, are given under Monumental Inſcriptions.

HAMLETS. 1. Binley. William Mauduit forfeited his lands in Beley for treaſon 1 E. 1.

2. Hailecot.

3. Smith's-Shop, lying on the great turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Bath.

Of the Church, &c.

This is a chapel in the deanery of Durſley, annexed to Beverſtone. The manor lands pay a modus in lieu of tithe of hay.

The chapel, dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt, is ſmall, with a low tower at the weſt end, in which are five bells.

LANTHONY.

THIS place lies in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton, adjoining to the ſouth ſide of the city of Glouceſter, and is accounted one of the ſouth hamlets. It is extra-parochial, and obtained its name from the famous monaſtery of Lanthony that ſtood there, of whoſe original and foundation the following is a ſhort account.

At Ewias, in the north part of Monmouthſhire, is a ſolitary place, among woods, rocks and vallies, where St. David, biſhop of Menevia in Pembrokeſhire, (which from him obtained the preſent name of St. David's) built a ſmall chapel and cell, in the ſixth century, and lived many years retired from the world, by the ſide of the brook Hotheni; which place, from the name of the biſhop, and of the little river, the Britons called Llandeuui Nanthotheni; that is, the church of David on the brook Hotheni, and in proceſs of time, the name was corrupted to Lanthony.

After the death of St. David, this place was deſolate and uninhabited. But in the year 1103, Hugh de Laci, an Engliſh nobleman, going a hunting that way, with many knights, gentlemen, and attendants, was led into that valley, and one of thoſe knights, of the name of William, admiring the ſolitude, and ſeeing a chapel already built, took a reſolution to forſake the world, and devote himſelf to an hermetical life there. And having lived ſome years in that manner, he became ſo famous for his auſterity and holineſs, that Erneſi, who was chaplain to queen Maud, and a perſon of conſiderable account in the court of king Henry I. took a journey to viſit him; and being highly pleaſed with his holy converſation, and place of retirement, became his aſſociate.

Theſe two holy men having ſpent ſome time together, mutually encouraging and ſtrengthening each other in pious habits, Hugh de Laci took them into his ſpecial protection and favour, and enabled them to build a ſmall church, which was conſecrated by Urban, biſhop of Landaff, and Rameline, biſhop of Hereford, anno 1108, and dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, the patron of the hermits. The ſame perſon granted them ſome of his large farms for their maintenance; but they, preferring little before too much, accepted what they thought juſt neceſſary, and peremptorily refuſed the reſt.

Having found ſo good a benefactor, they began afterwards to think of taking others into their holy ſociety, which William was averſe to at firſt, but at length yielded to the perſuaſions of Erneſi. And with the advice and approbation of Anſelm, archbiſhop of Canterbury, a monaſtery was founded of the order of the canons regular of St. Auſtin; which order they choſe, becauſe thoſe canons were ſatisfied with the moſt moderate ſubſiſtence, were moſt eſteemed for their charity, and wore the moſt decent habit without affectation of ſanctity.

They now invite divers perſons, fearing God, out of the eminent convents of Moreton, the holy Trinity at London, and Colcheſter, to be brethren at Lanthony, and being thus increaſed to the number of forty or more, chooſe Erneſi for their firſt prior. The ſtrict rules, and ſolemn devotion which he kept up in his monaſtery, made the great men of the kingdom, and even the king and queen themſelves, deſirous of the prayers of this holy congregation; and hence the monks found many benefactors, who conferred more lands and revenues on them than they would receive.

Robert de Beton ſucceeded upon the death of Erniſius, and ſome time afterwards was tranſlated to the biſhoprick of Hereford.

Robert de Braci ſucceeded him. In his time the convent was much infeſted and ravaged by the Welch, whereupon, applying to the biſhop of Hereford for advice and protection, the biſhop reſigned his palace to them, and maintained them at his own charge for two years, (ſome few only excepted, who would not leave the place of their converſion and profeſſion.) But the inteſtine diſturbances continuing in that part of the nation, the biſhop applies to Milo earl of Hereford, the king's conſtable, on behalf of the diſtreſſed monks of Lanthony, reminding him of his father's devotion, who lay buried in their monaſtery; and ſo prevailed with the earl, that he gave them a place near Glouceſter, called the Hide, where they built a church and monaſtery. This place they called Lanthony, from their former ſeat, and this was the original of the place of which I am to give an account. The church was conſecrated by Simon, biſhop of Worceſter, and Robert, biſhop of Hereford, anno 1136, and dedicated to St. Mary the virgin. From this time, the following perſons were priors:

William of Wycombe, who had been chaplain to Robert biſhop of Hereford, occurs prior in 1137. He was a man of profound learning, and had publiſhed in writing The whole Tyranny and malicious Proceedings of Milo earl of Hereford, who for ſome time violently perſecuted the church and church men, for which he was puniſhed with excommunication. This made him odious to Roger earl of Hereford, the patron of the monaſtery; and beſides, he was diſliked by the monks of his own houſe, on account of his great auſterity; wherefore he reſigned his government, and retired with one canon to Freme, for the remainder of his life.

Clement, the ſub-prior, being choſen in his room, governed the monaſtery for many years.

Roger de Norwich, ſub-prior, ſucceeded next. He preſided in 1178, and was ſucceeded by Geffry de Henelawe, a clerk of great fame, who had lived in the ſervice of Robert Hardingh, at Briſtol, and was much celebrated for his ſkill in phyſic. He was preferred to the ſee of St. David's in the year 1203, whereupon Matthew was elected to this dignity, who, in the year 1214, was made abbat of Bardney, in the county of Lincoln.

John occurs prior anno 1218, and dying in 1240,

Godfrey ſucceeded him, and reſigning in the year 1251,

Everard was elected prior. After him,

Martin; and then

Roger de Godeſtre; and after him

Walter, in the year 1285; and

John de Chaundos, anno 1289. To whom, I judge, (ſays Mr. Willis) ſucceeded

Stephen; and to him,

Philip, by ſome called Peter; then

David, whoſe ſucceſſor was

Thomas de Glouceſter. He reſigned in 1301, and was followed by one

John, occuring anno 1310. After him are found

Simon Brockworthe,

Edward St. John, and

William Cheritone,. Then ſucceeded

William de Penebury, and

Tho: Elinham, who preſided anno 1415.

Henry Dean, who preſided here in the time of king Edward the Fourth. He was firſt made biſhop of Bangor, and afterwards, in 1502, archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Edward Foreſt ſucceeding, governed in 1513, and had, it is preſumed, for his ſucceſſor, Richard Hempſted, whom A. Wood calls Hart. He, with William Nottingham, and twenty-one others, ſubſcribed to the king's ſupremacy, Sep. 2, 1534, and on May 10, 1539, with the like number of monks, ſigned the ſurrender, and had a penſion of 100*l. per ann.*

This monaſtery was valued at the diſſolution at 748*l.* 0*s.* 11½*d.*; but according to ſir William Dugdale, at 648*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* At firſt, this was only a cell to the former monaſtery in Monmouthſhire, and was ſo confirmed by king John, who was a conſiderable benefactor to it, and made them large grants of land by charter, confirmed to them 18 E. 2. But king Edward the Fourth, in the twentieth year of his reign, united theſe two monaſteries of Lanthony by his charter, making this near Glouceſter the principal, and obliging theſe monks to maintain only a reſidentiary prior and four canons in the old priory to ſay maſſes, which prior was removable at will; and thus the monaſtery of Lanthony in Monmouthſhire became a cell to this near Glouceſter.

In the year 1553, there remained 20*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in annuities, and the following penſions, viz. To Will. Henlowe, John Ambros, David Matthew, alias Kempe, 8*l.* each. John Kellom, Will. Worceſter, George Dean, Richard Weſtbury, Will. Abington, Will. Barrington, 6*l.* each. John Hempſted, Maurice Berkley, Will. Byford, Will. Preſbury, 4*l.* each. Willis.

Many deſcendants of the great family of Bohun, earls of Hereford, and lords of Brecknock, were buried in the church of this monaſtery, viz. Margery Margery de Bohun, eldeſt daughter of Milo earl of Hereford, and patroneſs of this monaſtery. She was married to the lord Humphry de Bohun, ſteward to king Henry the Firſt, and died in 1187. —Humphry de Bohun, the fourth of that name, (ſon of Margery) and Elianor his wife.—Henry Bohun the Good, earl of Hereford, and Maud his wife, daughter of the earl of Ewe, and Alice her daughter.—Humphry de Bohun, the fifth of that name, who died in 1275, and Maud de Avenbury his wife.—The aſhes of all theſe great perſons, and many more, lie buried in the ruins of Lanthony; and it is to be lamented, that the noble tombs deſigned to preſerve their memory, were ruined and deſtroyed ſoon after the diſſolution. Of the monaſtery itſelf there are very few remains, beſides a large gateway, upon which are the arms of the noble family of the Bohuns, who were great benefactors to the priory.

The ſcite of this monaſtery, and the adjoining lands, were granted to ſir Arthur Porter 32 H. 8. and Thomas Porter had livery of this eſtate 1 Eliz. who dying in the 40th year of that reign, left Arthur Porter, his ſon, then thirty years old, on whom he had ſettled the capital meſſuage or ſcite of the late priory of Lanthony, with lands in Hempſted, as expreſſed in the inquiſition after his death, taken by the king's eſcheator the ſame year. But ſir Robert Atkyns has it, that Thomas Porter left an only daughter, married to ſir John Scudamore, anceſtor to lord viſcount Scudamore, of Ham Lacy in Herefordſhire, who was the proprietor of this eſtate when ſir Robert drew up the account of it. The honourable Charles Howard the younger, in right of his wife Frances Fitzroy Scudamore, is the preſent proprietor of Lanthony, and patron of the vicarage of Hempſted.

This hamlet, at the diſſolution of monaſteries, was exempted from the payment of tithes, as having been the demeſne lands of the priory of Lanthony. But John lord Scudamore, in the year 1662, generouſly annexed all the tithes of Lanthony to the rectory of Hempſted, which was confirmed by act of parliament, and has improved that rectory to a very conſiderable amount.

A ground called Long Madely, and other lands belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to the city of Glouceſter 34 H. 8. Other lands called Madely, belonging to the ſaid priory, were granted, the ſame year, to Thomas Bell.

Richard the prieſt of Hatherleya, about the time of king Henry the Third, gave to the priory of Lanthony by Glouceſter 220 marks, that they ſhould every day give ten loaves, called the loaves of Dudeſtan, to the poor of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, which were to be of the ſame corn, weight, and quantity as the loaves were which the brethren of the upper hoſpital of Dudeſtan received of them, or ſixpence in lieu thereof.

Anne, widow of Thomas earl of Stafford, and daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, by will dated 16 Oct. 17 H. 6. bequeathed 100 marks, and 20*l.* yearly for twenty years, to this church, where ſhe was buried.

For the ſeveral grants and confirmations to this priory, ſee Appendix, N°. 18, 19, 20, 21.

LASBOROUGH.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Longtree, in the Coteſwold country, five miles eaſt from Wotton-underedge, five weſt from Tetbury, and nineteen ſouth from Glouceſter. The lands are chiefly in tillage, and produce very good crops of corn.

A ſmall ſtream riſes here, and after joining another from Boxwell, runs down to Berkeley, and afterwards into the Severn.

Leſſeberge, the antient name of this place, ſignifies the ſmaller camp, or fortification, ſo called in reſpect to ſome larger work in the neighbourhood, which, from its vicinity, I conjecture to be the Cheſtles, in the pariſh of Kingſcot, where was a Roman lodgment, upon which this ſmaller poſt, or Leſſe-berge, depended.

A few years ſince a monumental ſtone was turned up by the plow, in Bowldown-field in this pariſh, with the following inſcription, communicated to me by Mr. James Dallaway, then reſident at Briſtol. There is no date of the year upon the ſtone, but by the two firſt letters, which are to be read Diis Manibus, it appears to have been before the eſtabliſhment of chriſtianity in this country, and conſequently is of great antiquity. The three firſt letters of the ſecond line are ſuppoſed to be the initials of the perſon's name, and ICENA denotes her to be one of the people called Iceni, who inhabited Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeſhire. One letter, if not more, is broken off from her age, which might be either XXIIII, XXXIIII, or LXIIII. There were ſeveral ſtones, with inſcriptions of the ſame kind, found at Cirenceſter, as mentioned in the account of that antient place. The memorials are ſuppoſed to be for perſons who died when the Romans were in theſe parts, tho' the time cannot be preciſely determined, for want of dates.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book this manor is thus deſcribed: 'Hugo Maminot holds Leſſeberge in Langetrew hundred of Giſlebert biſhop of Liſiaux. 'Leuuinus held it. There are five hides. In 'demean is one plow-tillage, and five villeins, and 'a prieſt, with two plow-tillages. There are ſeven 'ſervi. It was worth 10*l.* now 50*s.*' D. B. p. 73.

The manor antiently belonged to a family that took their name from the place, for William de Laſſeburge died ſeized of it 45 H. 3.

William

William de Dene died ſeized of Laſſebergh, which he held of Hugo le Deſpencer by the ſervice of one knight's fee, 12 E. 2. Eſcheat.

John Baſſet had a confirmation of a grant of free warren in Laſſeburge 28 E. 3. and died ſeized of the manor 36 E. 3. John Baſſet, ſon of John, died ſeized of the manor of Laſſeburge, and of the advōwſon of the church, 7 R. 2. as did John Baſſet, ſon of the laſt John, 21 R. 2. leaving Margaret, his daughter and heireſs, married to Walter Brown, who, in her right, became ſeized of Laſborough.

Thomas Perry levied a fine of the manor of Laſborough 5 Mariæ, and Thomas, his ſon, had livery granted to him 7 Eliz.

The manor afterwards came to the Eſtcourts. Walter Eſtcourt, eſq; was lord of the manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. It came next to Thomas Eſtcourt, whoſe only brother, Edmund, ſucceeded him, and left one daughter, Anna-Maria, married to Thomas Earl, of Malmeſbury, eſq; ſince deceaſed; but he bequeathed the bulk of his large fortune to Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq; ſon of Matthew Eſtcourt, of Cam, in this county, who is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a large old houſe here, and a park adjoining, of conſiderable extent, part of which lies in the pariſh of Newington Bagpath.

Lands in this pariſh belonged to St. Catherine's chantry in Campden, and were granted to ſir William Ryder 7 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 60*l.* a year, in the gift of Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq. It is a free chapel, but takes inſtitution from the biſhop of Glouceſter. The chapel and the rector's houſe are incloſed in the park.

LASSINGTON.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, eight miles ſouth from Tewkeſbury, eight eaſtward from Newent, and about two miles north-weſtward from Glouceſter.

The pariſh lies on a point of land between the Severn and Leaden, and conſiſts principally of rich meadow and paſture, with ſome very good arable land. Part of the village lies on a riſing ground, on the bank of the Severn, from which ſituation it moſt probably took its name, which in Domeſday-book is written Leſſedune, and ſignifies the ſmaller hill, as it might with propriety be called, in compariſon of Circeſdune, on the other ſide of Glouceſter, which then belonged to the ſame proprietor.

On the ſide of the hill, in this pariſh, are found little ſtar ſtones, called aſtroites, of a greyiſh colour, and formed by nature of a very curious pentangular ſhape. They are from one to three inches in length, with a ſtar-like appearance at the ends, ſtriated from the center to the circumference. They break uniformly into lamina, about the thickneſs of a halfpenny, in a tranſverſe direction, as tho' at ſo many joints, for which reaſon they have been ſuppoſed to be a petrification of ſome marine animal; but the more general opinion is, that they are a ſpecies of coral. When put into vinegar, it is ſaid they have a motion for a conſiderable time; but I don't affirm this from my own knowledge, having never made the experiment.

Part of Laſſington is in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode, in Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Ulchetel held Leſſedune in Langebrige hundred, a manor of two hides. Now Roger holds it of Thomas the archbiſhop [of York]. This eſtate pays tax. In demean is one plow-tillage, and five villeins, and two bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are three ſervi, and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 40*s.* now 30*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The family of Muchegros, or Muſgroſe, was very antiently ſeized of lands in this pariſh, for it appears from the deeds and evidences belonging to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital in Glouceſter, that Walter de Muchegros gave to the brethren and ſiſters of that hoſpital, two cranocs [eight buſhels] of oats, payable at Michaelmas for ever, out of his barn at Laſſedune. William de Muſegroſe died ſeized of Leſſendun 49 H. 3. John Monemothe died ſeized of Laſſingdon 9 E. 1. according to ſir Robert Atkyns; but in the ſheriff's return of all the vills in this county, the ſame year, it is ſaid, Laſſingdon, et ejuſd. ville eſt d'na Abbatia de Helyon. Walter Helvin died ſeized of the manor of Laſſingdon 16 E. 3. John Cooſſe, or Coaffe, or Cove, held Laſſington 32 E. 3. and was that year found to be an ideot, and died 36 E. 3. John Pyrie, parſon of Staunton next Cors, Thomas de Beverſtone, and John Godwell, who probably had a claim to the manor in right of their wives, as heirs of Cooſſe, had livery granted to them 37 E. 3. and obtained a licence from the king, to grant a third part of the manor of Laſſyndon, with all the lands and appurtenances thereto belonging, and a third part of the advowſon of the church, to the abbey of Glouceſter.

The manor came ſoon afterwards to Thomas Raleigh, who died ſeized thereof 21 R. 2. as did his ſon, Thomas Raleigh, 6 H. 4. and was ſucceeded ceeded by his ſon, Walter Raleigh, who died 8 H. 5. Edward Bromfleet and Joan his wife, daughter of William Raleigh, levied a fine of the manor of Laſſington to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 5 H. 6. William Raleigh, eſq; and Elizabeth his wife, and John Oldney, and Idonea his wife, levied a fine of a moiety of this manor to the uſe of Edward Bromfleet for his life, the remainder to William Raleigh, and his heirs, 28 H. 6.

Sir John Scudemore was ſeized of this manor; but being attainted for treaſon, in the beginning of the reign of Edward the Fourth, the manor came to the crown, and was granted to ſir Richard Herbert, and his heirs males, 4 E. 4. It afterwards belonged to William Whorwood, eſq; lord of the manor of Hawling, who dying 37 H. 8. left two daughters, whereof Anne was married to Ambroſe Dudley, Margaret, the other daughter, was married to Thomas Throgmorton, who, with Margaret his wife, had livery of a moiety of the manor 3 Mariæ.

Edward Cook, of Highnam, eſq; was lord of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, and his family had been for ſome time poſſeſſed of it. William Cook was ſon and heir of Edward, and dying unmarried, was ſucceeded by his brother Dennis, who leaving no male iſſue, the manor came to his two ſiſters. One of them was married to Roynon Jones, eſq; the other to Henry Guiſe, eſq; whoſe ſon, John Guiſe, of Highnam, eſq; purchaſed Mr. Jones's moiety, and is the preſent lord of this manor.

That part of Laſſington which lies in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode, belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, by the gift of John Pyrie, &c. as before related, and was granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 32*l.* a year. John Guiſe, eſq; has two turns in the preſentation, and the biſhop of Glouceſter has the third. Mr. Philips is the preſent incumbent.

Eight acres belong to the glebe.

The rectory formerly belonged to St. Auguſtin's abbey, and it now pays 8*s.* to the dean and chapter of Briſtol. It appears by the viſitation of the archbiſhop of York, in 1618, that this church was a peculiar.

In the taxation of eccleſiaſtical preferments 9 E. 1. it is ſaid, Porcio prioris S. Oſwaldi in eccleſ. de Laſſyndon 8*s.*

The church is a ſmall building, with a low lean tower at the weſt end.

ONE part of this place lies in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in Glouceſterſhire, the other part is in Herefordſhire. It is diſtant two miles north from Mitchel-Dean, ſix ſouth from Newent, and twelve weſt from Glouceſter. The church lies about a quarter of a mile on the left hand of the great road from Glouceſter to Hereford.

Richard Talbot had a grant of the manor of Lea, (or Leigh, as it is ſometimes called) with a weekly market on Wedneſday, and a yearly fair on St. Bartholomew's day, 21 E. 3. Richard Talbot, of Caſtle Richard, died ſeized of the manor 43 E. 3. as did ſir Gilbert Talbot 20 R. 2. John Talbot, the great earl of Shrewſbury, held it at his death 31 H. 6. and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon, John Talbot, ſecond earl of Shrewſbury, who was ſlain at the battle of Northampton 38 H. 6.

John Throckmorton died ſeized of this eſtate 13 E. 4. and Philip Throckmorton died 5 H. 8. ſeized of 30 meſſuages, and land in Lea, of which William Throckmorton, his ſon, had livery the ſame year. Richard Hameline was lord of this manor in 1608. Maynard Colcheſter, eſq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century, and Maynard Colcheſter, of Weſtbury, eſq; a deſcendant from him, is the preſent proprietor.

Thomas de Bruge and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Lea, and in the bailiwick of Dean, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, the remainder to Richard Curle, 5 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the Foreſt deanery, annexed to Linton in Herefordſhire. The ſmall tithes only belong to the curate. It has been augmented with the queen's bounty. Mr. Weſtphaling is patron. The biſhop of Hereford has the impropriation.

The church is dedicated to St. John Baptiſt. It is a handſome building, with a double roof, ſupported by pillars in the middle. It has a handſome handſome ſpire at the weſt end, and a ſmall chancel by the ſide of the greater.

In that part of Lea which lies in this county, there were 20 houſes, and about 80 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders, at the beginning of the preſent century; yearly births 2, burials 2. Atkyns. There are now about 96 inhabitants.

LEACHLADE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, ſix miles diſtant weſt from Farringdon in Berkſhire, about nine ſouth from Burford in Oxfordſhire, twelve eaſt from Cirenceſter, and twenty-nine, thro' the laſt-mentioned town, from the city of Glouceſter.

It conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture-ground, with ſome arable land. There is a ſmall market-town of its own name, ſeated within it, whoſe market on the Tueſday is at preſent but little frequented.

The river Thames waters it on the ſouth and eaſt ſides, and divides it from Wiltſhire and Berkſhire. The Lech alſo, one of the little rivers from the Coteſwold country, directs its courſe thro' the north ſide of the pariſh, which takes the one half of its name from that river, and the other from the old Saxon word, labian, to empty, becauſe here the Lech empties itſelf into the Thames.

The laſt-mentioned river is navigable at this place for barges of forty or fifty tons burthen, but the want of water one part of the year, and long continued floods at other times, render the navigation extremely uncertain, and notwithſtanding it leads to the metropolis, 'tis not ſo beneficial to the town as might be ſuppoſed, becauſe it cannot be depended on for the general conveyance.

The junction of this river with the Severn has been long talked of, but the execution of that project, on a good plan, is rather to be wiſhed than expected. A late application to parliament on behalf of the Stroud-water canal, brought this ſcheme anew into contemplation, and the country was ſlightly ſurveyed in the year 1775, in order to extend the canal from Sroud to Cricklade, where the Thames is firſt navigable; but what purpoſe can ſuch a junction anſwer, unleſs the navigation of that river were improved?

The great road from London to Cirenceſter, and other places weſtward in that line, leads through the town of Leachlade, and is very much travelled. That part of it which was formerly obſtructed by floods, about a mile eaſtward of the town, is now ſo much raiſed and improved, that travellers may paſs commodiouſly at any time. Mr. Buſching, in his Geography, pretends to have found traces of a Roman way from this town to Cirenceſter, but I am convinced that none but himſelf ever dreamt of any ſuch thing. The Roman road, which was the great one in uſe for about a thouſand years after the Romans left Britain, from the weſt of Glouceſterſhire, and part of South-Wales to London, led through Cirenceſter, and Cricklade, and ſo to Wallingford; and it was not 'till after king Henry V. built a bridge at Abingdon, and the roads were greatly repaired thereabout, that this through Leachlade was much frequented; and then the towns of Cricklade and Wallingford, which before drew great advantages from travelling, began to decline.

Here are two fairs in the year, one on the 10th of Auguſt, for horſes and other cattle; the other on the 9th of September, chiefly for cheeſe, and great quantities are brought hither, but nothing like ſo much as formerly. The latter is held in a meadow, near the bridge which belonged to a ſmall priory in this place, dedicated to St. John, wherefore 'tis called St. John's-bridge fair; and the bridge, which ſtands over the Thames, is repaired by the lands formerly belonging to the priory.

This priory was founded by Richard earl of Cornwall and Senchia his wife, and confirmed by king Henry III. who gave to the brethren there the hermitage of Lovebury, in the foreſt of Whichwoode, on condition that they ſhould provide a chaplain to celebrate maſs daily in the ſaid hermitage. It was dedicated to St. John Baptiſt. King Edward IV. in the 12th year of his reign, granted the patronage and advowſon of it to his mother Cicely, dutcheſs of York, with licence to change it into a chantry of three perpetual chaplains, to celebrate divine offices daily at the altar of our lady, in the church of Lechelade, who ſhould be a body corporate, and have power to purchaſe land, and have a common ſeal. By the ſame deed, the king granted liberty to John Twynnihoo of Cirenceſter, to found another chantry at the altar of St. Blaſe, in the ſame church, for one perpetual chaplain, to whom the fore-mentioned three were allowed to grant a yearly rent of ten marks. In the reign of king Henry the Seventh, Underwood, dean of Wallingford, procured two of the three prieſts to be removed thither. John Lece, the laſt incumbent of Blaiſe chantry, had a penſion of 5*l.* in the year 1553.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following particulars are extracted from the public records:

'Henry de Fereres holds Lecelade in Brictwoldeberg hundred. Siward a baron held it. There were fifteen hides, which paid tax in the time of king Edward, but that king granted that five hides ſhould be quit from tax, as all the county witneſſeth, and he that keeps the ſeal. There are

'are four plow-tillages in demean, and twenty-'nine villeins, and ten bordars, and one ſtranger 'holds the land of one villein. They have among 'them all ſixteen plow-tillages. There are thir-'teen ſervi, and three mills of 30*s.* and a fiſhery 'of one hundred and ſeventy-five eels; from the 'meadows 7*l.* 7*s.* beſides hay for the cattle. In 'Wicelcumbe two burgages pay 16*d.* and one in 'Glouceſter without aſſeſſment. In the time of 'king Edward the whole manor was worth 20*l.* 'and ſo it is now likewiſe.' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

In our antient books is the following fabulous account of the deſcent of Siward. The daughter and heireſs of a great earl, of the royal blood of Denmark, walking in a wild foreſt, was raviſhed by a bear, and bore a ſon with ears like a bear. This ſon of a bear ſucceeded his mother in the earldom, and was father of Siward, who quits Denmark, and arrives in England, where he is kindly received by king Edward the Confeſſor; and upon a quarrel with Tofti earl of Hunting-don, he ſlew him, and carried his head to the king, who in reward gave him the earldom of Hun-tingdon and Northumberland, and made him governor of the northern counties, which were much infeſted by the Danes.

The above Henry de Fereres, or de Ferrariis, was ſon of Guicheline de Ferriers in Normandy. His chief ſeat was at Tutbury in Staffordſhire. He was ſuceeeded by his ſon Robert de Ferrers, who was created earl of Derby 3 Steph. and died the year following, leaving Robert his ſon and heir. William de Ferrers, ſon and heir to the laſt Robert, married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Peverel of Nottingham, by whom he had two ſons; Robert, the eldeſt, who ſucceeded him in the earldom of Derby, and Walcheline, his younger ſon, who had the manor of Leachlade. Hugh Ferrers, his ſon and heir, dying without iſſue, left Iſabel his ſiſter and heir, married to Roger Mor-timer, progenitor of the earls of March, and grand-ſon of Ralph de Mortimer, who came in with William the Conqueror, and behaved with great courage in the battle of Haſtings. She doing her fealty, had livery of the manor of Leachlade of John. It is probable that ſhe was married a ſecond time to Peter Fitzherbert, for he obtained[z] a licence to erect a gate on the cauſeway at Leach-lade-bridge, com. Glouc. before the hoſpital there founded by him; and dying 19 H. 3. Iſabella his wife had livery[a] of the lands of her inheritance, particularly of the manor of Leachlade. She is ſaid to have founded a nunnery at Leachlade, but of that houſe I find no farther particulars.

This manor came to the crown, and was granted by the king to his brother Richard earl of Corn-wall, king of the Romans, and to Senchia his wife, and the heirs of their bodies, 36 H. 3.

Edmund earl of Cornwall, ſon of Richard, was ſeized of it 4 & 15 E. 1. and dying 28 E. 1. without iſſue, the manor of Leachlade reverted to the crown, and was granted, by king Edward the Firſt, to Richard Talbot the younger, and Elizabeth his wife; which Richard was ſon of Richard Talbot, who had married Joan, one of the daughters and coheirs of Hugh de Mortimer.

But upon the revolution of public affairs, in the turbulent reign of king Edward II. this manor was granted to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, who being ſoon after attainted and executed, it was again granted, 1 E. 3. to Edmond of Wood-ſtock, earl of Kent, ſecond ſon of king Edward the Firſt; and he being attainted and executed at Wincheſter 4 E. 3. the manor was granted to Jeffry de Mortimer, and the heirs of his body, the remainder to Roger Mortimer and his heirs.

John earl of Kent, ſon of Edmond, being re-ſtored, died ſeized of this manor 26 E. 3. But Elizabeth, the widow of John earl of Kent, and daughter of the duke of Juliers, held this manor in dower, and had a confirmation of fairs and markets in Leachlade 18 & 22 R. 2. and died ſeized of this eſtate the 10th, or according to ſome accounts 12 H. 4.

After her death, the manor of Leachlade de-ſcended to her huſband's heir, who was Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, ſon of Elianor Holland, ſiſter and heir to John the laſt earl of Kent, by her huſband Roger Mortimer, earl of March. Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, died ſeized of the manor of Leachlade 3 H. 6. leaving Joan, one of his ſiſters and coheirs, then the widow of ſir John Grey, who died ſeized of it, and of the advowſon of the church 4 H. 6. This manor was granted to Cicely dutcheſs of York, for life, 38 H. 6. and again confirmed 1 E. 4. She died 10 H. 7.

The manor and town of Leachlade were after-wards made part of the dower of Catherine, queen to king Henry the Eighth; and after her death, they were granted to Dennis Toppes and Dorothy his wife 4 E. 6. in exchange for the manor of Rockholts, and other manors in Norfolk, reſerving a rent of 27*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* to the crown.

The manor and town of Leachlade were granted to Robert Bathurſt, eſq; 4 Jac. Robert Bathurſt, ſon of Robert, died under age, ſeized thereof 3 C. and left Edward Bathurſt his brother and heir, thirteen years old. Edward Dadge, eſq; was ſeized of this manor, (by what means I cannot learn) and gave it to ſir Edward Bathurſt, baronet, who died ſeized thereof in 1674. He was a perſon of great loyalty to king Charles the Firſt, and paid a compoſition of 720*l.* for his ſequeſtered eſtate. Lawrence Bathurſt, eſq; ſon of ſir Edward, died in 1670, and left two daughters coheireſſes; one married to Mr. Coxeter, the other to Mr. John Greening, whoſe deſcendants ſold the manor in moieties to different perſons, and it paſſed, ſo divided, to ſir Jacob Wheate, baronet, and Mr. Pullen, who were lords of the manor in the year 1774, when ſir Jacob purchaſing Mr. Pullen's moiety, became the ſole proprietor. His arms are Vert, a feſs dancetty Or, in chief three garbs of the ſecond. In a canton the arms of Ulſter.

The farm called the Priory, which formerly belonged to the college of Wallingford, was granted to Dennis Toppes 14 Eliz. and the lands formerly belonging to the priory of St. John in this place, were granted to Thomas Toppes 20 Eliz.

Mr. Charles Loder, Mr. Robert Loder, and Mr. Richard Ainge, have good houſes in the town of Leachlade, and good eſtates; and Mr. Day has a good eſtate at Clay-Hill, which he purchaſed of the Bathurſt family. The arms of Day and Ainge are emblazoned p. 366; thoſe of Loder are, Or, ſix annulets ſable.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 300*l.* a year. Sir Jacob Wheate is patron; Mr. Wheate is the preſent incumbent. The patronage and impropriation formerly belonged to the priory of St. John Baptiſt in this place.

Lawrence Bathurſt, eſq; ſon of ſir Edward Bathurſt, endowed the vicarage with the tithes of his whole eſtate, by his will dated Sept. 16, 1670, which hath improved the vicarage above 150*l.* a year. There is no glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. It is large and handſome, with double ailes, ſupported by two rows of fluted pillars, and has a handſome ſpire, with five bells. It was new built, with the aſſiſtance of the priory and inhabitants, by Conrade Ney, who was vicar in the reign of king Henry the Seventh.

There was a priory or hoſpital, and ſeveral chantries here, of which ſome account has been already given.

On a handſome marble monument in the chancel,

Near this place lie the Remains of Mrs Anne Simons, whoſe Life compleated the true Character of the Gentlewoman, the Friend, and the Chriſtian. She was ſincere in her Friendſhip, affable and candid in her Converſation, pious in her Devotion, liberal and ſecret in her Charity. Her acquaintance have loſt a real Friend, the Poor a daily and conſtant Benefactreſs. She lived to a good old Age, and tho' ſhe declined gradually thro' the Weakneſs and Infirmity of Body, yet ſhe retained a chearful Temper and Vivacity of Spirits to the laſt. She is gone to receive the Reward of her Virtue, and has left her Friends to imitate her Example. She died the 24th of September 1769, aged 76.—— Arms, in a lozenge, Or, a bend ingrailed vert, between two roſes gules.

Within the communion rails is a memorial for ſir Edward Bathurſt, baronet, with his arms, impaling a chevron between three greyhounds courant, ſuppoſed for his ſecond wife, whoſe name was Morris. There are alſo memorials for ſeveral other perſons of his family; and for ſeveral of the Coxeters, (deſcended in the female line from Lawrence Bathurſt, eſq;) with their arms, Argent, a chevron between three fighting cocks heads erazed, gules. As alſo for the Bamptons, with their arms, Checky, on a chief three garbs.

Benefactions.

In 1586, Nicholas Rainton, gent. gave 4*l.* a year to repair the church. In 1599, Edward Dadge, eſq; by his will, gave 5*l.* a year to the poor. In 1602, William Blomer, eſq; and his heirs, &c. were compelled by law, to deliver to the vicar and church-wardens, five buſhels of wheat, and five of barley, given by two maiden ſiſters, for the uſe of the poor for ever, out of the profits of Dole-mead. In 1703, Mr. Richard Wellman gave 10*s.* a year out of Pidgeon-houſe cloſe, to be given to the poor in bread. In 1720, Francis Loder, gent. gave the intereſt of 100*l.* to orphans or widows, natives of the pariſh. In 1721, Robert Loder, gent. gave 20*s.* a year in bread to the poor. In 1725, Mr. Richard Ainge gave 20*s.* a year to be diſpoſed of in like manner. Mrs. Simons, by her will, gave the intereſt of 200*l.* to the poor. LECHAMPTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Cheltenham, three miles diſtant ſouth from the town of that name, twelve north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, and eight eaſtward from Glouceſter.

About half the pariſh lies in dairy farms, in the vale of Glouceſter, the other part ſtretches eaſtward over a ſtupendous ridge of hills, whence there is a large proſpect over the vale and the river Severn, above and below the city of Glouceſter. It probably takes the former part of its name from the vaſt rock of ſtone, on the brow of the hill, for Lech, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies ſtone; and ſerves to diſtinguiſh this pariſh from ſeveral other places of the name of Hampton, in Glouceſterſhire. But there was then another manor, according to the record.

King William, 'as he was going into Normandy, granted both 'eſtates to Brictric. He has one plow-tillage in 'demean, and nine bordars, with three plow-'tillages, and two ſervi, and one ancill. There 'is a wood half a mile long, and half a mile broad. 'It is worth 30*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Adam le Diſpencer, ſon of Triſtram, was ſeized of this manor, and had a grant of fairs, markets, and free warren 37 H. 3. which he pleaded in a Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1. and his plea was allowed. The ſame grant was alſo allowed 16 Jac. and the original is now in the cuſtody of Mr. Norwood, the preſent poſſeſſor of this manor.

This manor was held by grand ſerjeanty of the king, by performing the ſervice of ſteward at the great feſtivals of Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide, as appears by a record 23 E. 1. Walter de Munemuth held it 30 E. 1. and John Limell died ſeized of it, and of the advowſon of the church, 2 E. 2.

It ſoon after came to the Giffards, for ſir John Giffard died ſeized of it 3 E. 3. and it continued ſeveral generations in that name and family; but after the death of John Giffard, the laſt heir male, this manor paſſed by the marriage of Elianor, one of his daughters and coheirs, to [b] John Norwood, in whoſe family it has continued ever ſince, and Henry Norwood, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor of Lechampton. His arms are, Ermine, a croſs ingrailed gules.

Robert Preſbury held lands in Lechampton 18 E. 2. Sir John Berkeley was ſeized of ſeventy acres of land in this place, held of the manor of Cheltenham 6 H. 6. as was ſir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone 38 & 39 H. 6. and 14 E. 4. William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Lechampton to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to William Panton and to Joan his wife, daughter of William Golding.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 140*l*. a year. Mr. Norwood is patron, and Mr. Draper the preſent incumbent. The advowſon, and one of the manors

[b] This family is deſcended from the Norwoods of Kent. Jordan Norwood, of the iſle of Shepey, flouriſhed in the reign of king Henry the Second, and lies buried in Minſter church, with many of his poſterity, and his monument is ſtill remaining. He was ſeized of the manor of Northwood, to which one hundred burgeſſes of the city of Canterbury owed ſuit and ſervice in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor.

Stephen Norwood, ſon of John, reſided near Shepey, at Norwood-Chaſtners, ſo called from the abundance of cheſnut trees growing there.

Sir Roger de Norwood, ſon of Stephen, was ſeized of the manor of Shorne in Kent, 54 H. 3. He diſdaining to hold his lands by the lazy tenure of Gavelkind, changed it for the more active one of knight's-ſervice, in the 14th year of king Henry the Third. He married Bonafilia, ſiſter and heir of John de Wantham of Shorn, with whom he had that manor, and dying 13 E. 1. was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir ſir John de Norwood, who married Joan, ſiſter and heireſs to Giles lord Badleſmere. He was high ſheriff of Kent 20, 21, 23, 24, & 28 E. 1. and was ſummoned to parliament in ſeveral years of that reign, particularly in the 22d, and 6 & 9 E. 2.

His ſon, ſir John de Norwood, married Agnes, daughter and coheireſs of William Grantſon, deſcended from William de Grantſon, who had married Sibele, daughter and coheireſs of John lord Tregoz; which John died 12 E. 2.

Sir Roger Norwood, ſon of the laſt ſir John, married Julian, the daughter, or ſiſter, of Geffrid lord Say. He was one of the conſervators of the peace for the county of Kent 34 E. 3. Sir John de Norwood, eldeſt ſon of this Roger, married Joan, daughter and one of the coheireſſes of Robert Hert, of Feverſham, eſq. His name occurs in the ſummons to parliament 43 & 47 E. 3. but not the name of Roger, as mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns.

William de Norwood, ſecond ſon of ſir John, ſucceeded his father, Roger, his elder brother, dying unmarried. John de Norwood was ſon and heir of William, and died without iſſue. James de Norwood, next brother to the laſt William, and third ſon of the laſt ſir John, married Margaret, daughter and coheireſs of Robert Gralle, of Gralle in the county of Suffolk, by whom he had iſſue John de Norwood, eſq; who married Margaret, daughter of John Martin, eſq.

James de Norwood, his ſon and heir, married Jane Clinton, as appears upon her tomb in the church of Milton. His ſon and heir, John de Norwood, eſq; was lieutenant of the Tower of London, and conſtable of Queenborough. By Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheireſs of Miles of Elton, ſon of ſir John of Elton, he had the manor of Gilling; and dying 4 H. 7. lies buried at Milton. John de Norwood, eſq; married Elizabeth, daughter and coheireſs of Thomas Fragenhall, eſq. He died 12 H. 7. leaving only three daughters.

John Norwood, couſin and heir male of the laſt John, married Elianor, daughter and coheireſs of John Giffard, with whom he had the manor of Lechampton, and died in 1509.

Roger Norwood of Lechampton, ſon of John, married Alice, daughter of ſir John Butler of Badminton. Ralph Norwood, ſon of Roger, married Jane Knight of Shrewſbury. Henry Norwood, ſon of Ralph, married Catherine, daughter of ſir Robert Throgmorton, of Coughton in Warwickſhire. William Norwood, ſon of Henry, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ligon, of Madersfield in Worceſterſhire. Richard Norwood, ſon of William, married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Steward, LL. D. and died without iſſue. Francis Norwood, his brother, and ſecond ſon of William, married Judith, daughter of Timothy Gates, rector of Cleeve. He died in 1682.

Henry Norwood, ſon of a younger brother of Richard, purchaſed Lechampton of Francis; and having diſtinguiſhed himſelf for his loyalty in the civil wars, was made governor of Tangier by king Charles the Second, and ſerved in parliament for the city of Glouceſter. This colonel Henry Norwood underwent great variety of fortune. He was one of the company, in a voyage, who were reduced to the laſt extremity for want of victuals. They caſt lots to determine which of them ſhould be killed to be a morſel for the reſt, and he on whom the lot fell was directed to go into the hold of the ſhip to prepare himſelf. Their ravenous hunger compelled them to follow him in a ſhort time, where they found him dead; and notwithſtanding the accident, they greedily fell to, and made a hearty meal of the carcaſe. The remains were buried handſomely.

Colonel Norwood died in 1689, and by will returned the eſtate to the family of Francis Norwood. Richard Norwood, William, and Thomas, ſons of Francis, ſucceeded to it in order, and the reverend Thomas Norwood, eighth ſon of Francis, was the owner of Lechampton at the beginning of this century. Charles Norwood poſſeſſed it afterwards, and Henry Norwood, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

By this pedigree it appears, that the family of the Norwoods have a right to quarter the ſeveral coats of arms of Tregoz, Wantham, Badleſmere, Grandiſon, Hert, Gralle, Elton, and Giffard.

formerly belonged to the abbey of Fifchamp in Normandy; and a portion of tithes in Lechampton, formerly belonging to the nunnery of Uſk in Monmouthſhire, was granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. which tithes, worth 3*l.* a year, now belong to the impropriator of Cheltenham. Mr. Norwood has the tithes of one tithing, worth 10*l.* a year.

Ten acres of paſture, and ſome arable, belong to the glebe.

The church hath a handſome ſpire, with ſix bells, in the middle, and an aile on the ſouth ſide, the eaſt end of which aile is the burying-place of the lord of the manor.

There is a raiſed tomb under the arch between the nave and the aile, upon which are the figures in ſtone of a man and woman lying along. The man is in armour, with a large ſhield over his left arm, is girt with a ſword, and has ſpurs on, his feet reſting on a lion. Theſe figures are ſuppoſed to repreſent ſome of the Giffards, who were lords of the manor. The woman's dreſs is about the age of Henry the Fourth.

The LEIGH, or LYE,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the vale of Glouceſter, lying partly in the hundred of Derhurſt, and partly in the lower diviſion of that of Weſtminſter. It is ſix miles diſtant weſtward from Cheltenham, four ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and ſix north from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in a flat country, very ſubject to floods from the Severn, particularly a large tract of rich paſture ground, which lies in common between the inhabitants of this pariſh and thoſe of Derhurſt. A few years ago the people of the Lye dug a large trench acroſs that common, to divide their part from Derhurſt; but they were obliged, by a ſuit at law, to open the communication again.

The name is written Lalege in the antient record, with the prepoſitive article, after the Norman manner; and Lege,* properly ſignifies the place. It was uſual with our Saxon anceſtors to give this name to a ſeat or capital manſion, which later generations have converted into lye. But ley, and lay ſometimes ſignify alſo a paſture ground. Perhaps the prior of St Dennis, or ſome other perſon of eminence, had a ſeat here in early times, called La lege, which afterwards gave name to the whole pariſh.

This place is remarkable for nothing in natural hiſtory, but for a large quantity of dwarf elder growing here.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Dennis of Paris holds one 'hide in Lalege, in Derheſt hundred.' D.B. p. 72.

Gilbert de Kynerdeſley granted the manor of Lye, with all his lands in Staverton, Heydon, Hawe, and Turley, to Joan de Rodborough, lady of Notgrove, 7 E. 3. William de Redbeargh held Lye, and two meſſuages, and two plow-tillages in Lye and Heydon 3 R. 2. John de Redbearghe died ſeized of the manor of Lye 7 R. 2. as did John Browning 3 H. 5. to whom ſucceeded Richard Browning, who dying without iſſue, Cicely Browning was his ſiſter and heir: She was married to ſir Guy Whitington, who, in her right, had Notgrove, Lye, and Rodborough. Richard Whitington, ſecond ſon of ſir Guy, by Cicely his wife, had this manor ſettled on him. Thomas Whitington, eſq; who married Margery, daughter of William Needham, died ſeized of the manor of Leigh, 38 H. 8. and left ſix daughters coheireſſes, by which means it went out of this name.

Richard Brown, eſq; died ſeized of this manor 15 Eliz. and Thomas Brown, his grandſon and heir, had livery granted him 17 Eliz. William Riddale, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608.

Lord Tracy afterwards purchaſed this manor, and ſold it to Stephen Cook, eſq; to whom ſuc-

HAMLET. Evington is a hamlet in this pariſh, but it lies in the lower diviſion of Weſtminſter hundred, of which manor the late right honourable William Dowdeſwell, eſq; died ſeized in the year 1775. Half the mill-houſe is in this hamlet, and the other part in the pariſh of Bodington.

Lands in this pariſh formerly belonging to the White Friers in Glouceſter, were granted to Thomas Bell 36 H. 8. And tithes in Lye antiently belonging to the priory of Derhurſt, and afterwards to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Richard Pate 16 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, within the peculiar of Derhurſt, worth about 60*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. John Cheſter the preſent incumbent.

The impropriation belonged to the priory of Derhurſt in 1379, and is now veſted in Corpus Chriſti college in Oxford. It pays 11*l.* 10*s.* yearly to the crown.

The church is ſmall, with a ſmall croſs aile on the ſouth ſide, and a low embattled tower at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. James, according to biſhop Benſon's book.

LEMINGTON

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, five miles diſtant ſouth-eaſt from Campden, five ſouth-weſt from Shipſton upon Stoure in Worceſterſhire, and thirty-three north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

The greater part is paſture, with a conſiderable tract of ground in common, over-grown with furze, fern, and hawthorn buſhes, and capable of great improvement.

The pariſh lies on the verge or extreme limit of the county, next to Oxfordſhire, wherefore, like the town of the ſame name in Hampſhire, it was antiently called Limentone, and ſince altered to Lemington, from Limes, a boundary; but it has another title to its name, on account of the great Roman Foſs-way entering Glouceſterſhire at this place, for the ſame Latin word ſignifies alſo a great broad way. It is called Lower Lemington, to diſtinguiſh it from Lemington, a hamlet in the pariſh of Toddenham. Before Mr. Camden's time, many Roman coins were plowed up here, and ſome have been found ſince, for which reaſon it is thought that the Romans had a ſmall poſt or ſtation at this place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The church of Tewkeſbury held twenty-four hides of land in Glouceſterſhire, which were taxed only as twenty, in the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, of which eſtate the record ſhews, that 'There were three hides in Limentone. There 'were two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, with 'four plow-tillages, and ſix ſervi, and one bordar. 'It was worth 60*s.* now 40*s.*' Dom. Book, p. 68.

The abbey of Tewkeſbury had court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Lemington, by the grant of king William the Second, which were allowed 15 E. 1. And the abbey continued in poſſeſſion of this manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved. The manor was afterwards granted to Ambroſe Smith 18 Eliz. and paſſed to ſir William Juxton, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Lady Fane, who was the relict of ſir William Juxton, and afterwards married to lord viſcount Fane, is the preſent lady of this manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Campden, value 10*l.* from the impropriation, beſides the income of about fourteen acres of land, purchaſed with queen Anne's bounty, and other money, raiſed in 1737, to augment the living. The impropriation belongs to lady Fane, who is patroneſs of the curacy, and Mr. Baker is the preſent incumbent. It was formerly reputed a rectory, worth 50*l.* a year. The church is ſmall.

On a plate of braſs, fixed to a blue ſtone in the chancel, is the following memorial:

THEY WERE BROVGHT VP AND LIVED TOGETHER IN A VERTVOVS AND PIOVS COVRSE, AND TAKING TRVE CONTENT AND COMFORT ONE IN THE OTHER, LEDD SINGLE LIVES AND DIED BATCHELLORS ANNO DNI 1736.——Over the inſcription, is a large ſcutcheon, with

with the Grevills arms, Sable, a croſs and bordure engrailed Or, pelletty, and twenty-four quarterings. The Grevills of this place ſprung from Lodovick Grevill, of Drayton in Worceſterſhire, anceſtor of the preſent earl Brooke, and earl of Warwick; and were allied to the Grevills of Campden.

Benefaction.

There is a charity of 200*l.* given to the poor, one half of which is laid out in the purchaſe of land.

At the beginning of this century, there were 7 houſes, and about 36 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 2 were freeholders. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 10, the burials 6; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 20, the burials 8; and the preſent inhabitants are in number 59, which ſhews the place to be remarkably healthy.

LIDNEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Blideſlow, in the Foreſt diviſion, ten miles ſouth-eaſt from Monmouth, eight north-eaſt from Chepſtow, and twenty ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter. The turnpike-road from that city, thro' Newnham to Chepſtow, and ſo on to Cardiff, Swanſea, and Milford-haven, is carried thro' it.

It probably took its name from being ſituated upon a broad part of the river Severn, for Llydan, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies broad, and the termination ey denotes a watry ſituation. Conſiſtent with this explanation of the name, the river is here between two and three miles over, and it was formerly much broader. Lidney antiently gave name to a hundred; for in Domeſday-book Aluredeſtone, Ledenei, Hiwoldeſtone, and Wigheiete, are mentioned as places within the hundred of Ledenei; but in the reign of king Edward the Firſt, there was no hundred of that name.

Lidney Park, the reſidence of Thomas Bathurſt, eſq; is a handſome ſeat, about a mile weſt of the church, with large gardens and offices, and very extenſive wōods adjoining; of which ſeat that gentleman has obliged the public and the editor with the engraving annexed. It ſtands on the north-weſt ſide of the Severn, at about a mile and a half diſtance, and commands a large view of that river, of the ſeat of ſir John Fuſt, at Hill; of the town of Thornbury, and other places on the oppoſite ſide of the Severn; which, eſpecially from the height behind the houſe, make a rich and beautiful landſcape.

The pariſh is of great extent, conſiſting of rich meadow and paſture land, with ſome arable, and a large proportion of woodland. It is well watered on the eaſt by Linch-brook, dividing it from Awre; by Newarne-brook, running thro' the middle of it; and by Woodward's-brook, which is a boundary weſtward between this pariſh and Alvington, where it obtains the name of the Coln. All theſe riſe in the foreſt of Dean, and empty themſelves into the Severn.

The New Grounds here are a tract of above a thouſand acres of land next the river. In theſe vegetation is quick and luxuriant, and cattle depaſturing on them improve uncommonly faſt. Horſes particularly are ſent in the ſpring from places at a great diſtance, to take the benefit of reſt, and of the ſalubrious food of the ſalt marſh. I cannot learn for a certainty when the waters firſt deſerted theſe grounds, but it muſt have been at the ſame time that a like event happened at Slimbridge, on the other ſide of the river, and ſince a ſuit at law was commenced in the reign of king Charles the Firſt, againſt lord Berkeley, to obtain the new grounds in the laſt mentioned pariſh for the crown, it muſt have been before that time.

That the tide in the Seven ſhould abate of its former height and power, and confine itſelf within a narrower channel, ſo as to leave dry this large tract of land, which it once overflowed, is an operation in nature not to be accounted for by all our philoſophy. Whatever was the cauſe, I am inclined to think the event was not ſudden, but gradual and progreſſive; and that even the old meadows here, which lie higher and further up, are acquiſitions from the river, tho' of longer ſtanding. And I am the rather diſpoſed to think ſo, from a tradition which the inhabitants have ſtill among them, that the tide in its uſual courſe formerly came up to a bank of earth called the Turret, juſt without the church-yard; and that a large ſhip was built near the place where there is now a ſpring of fine water, called the Turret-well.

Theſe are changes in the terraqueous globe, brought about in a long courſe of time, which however happen ſeldomer in this country than in moſt others.

To what hath been ſaid of the ſoil of the pariſh, and produce of the ground on the ſurface, ſhould be added, that below it are inexhauſtible treaſures of iron ore and cinders, pit-coal, red and yellow ochre, lime-ſtone, and other foſſils; and Mr. Bathurſt has a large furnace for ſmelting the iron ore, and ſeveral forges for manufacturing of iron.

The Aſteria Columnaris, a pentangular ſtone about the thickneſs of a large gooſe-quill, with a ſtar of five rays at each end, is commonly to be found at Pirton-paſſage; and ſeveral other curious ſubſtances, particularly (if I miſtake not) the grinders of an elephant, have been found at the ſame place.

Not far above Mr. Bathurſt's houſe, there is a cavern in the wood, called the Scowls, the entrance to which is between very long unwrought ſtones, ſerving as pillars to ſupport a rocky roof, on which ſeveral large trees are now growing. The ſpace within is about ſixteen or eighteen feet broad, and nine or ten deep, and beautifully lined with moſs, which grows ſpontaneouſly to the thickneſs of two or three inches. Tradition is intirely ſilent as to this place, and no traveller has taken notice of it. Perhaps it is nothing more than an old mine.

Upon the ſummit of a little hill, in that part of Mr. Bathurſt's park which lies contigious to Ailberton, are the remains of a large encampment, with foundations of many antient buildings; among which are the ruins of a Roman hypocauſt, or bath, of an oval form. The longeſt diameter is about ſeventeen feet, the other ſeven, as near as I could judge by my walking-ſtick, with which I meaſured it. Below the ſurface of the ground, the walls are intire; and part of a very ſtrong terras, about ſix inches thick, which ſerved for the floor, is ſtill remaining. A little weſtward of this bath was a teſſellated pavement, now intirely broken and deſtroy'd; but great quantities of ſquare bits of ſtone and brick, like dice, which compoſed it, lie ſcattered all about. An old man informed me, that he had ſeen a part of this pavement, in a piece about a foot ſquare. There have been alſo great quantities of Roman coins found in this place, and carried away; yet they ſtill lie ſo plentifully amongſt the rubbiſh, that a gentleman told me, he never failed to find ſome of them after a ſhower of rain; and I have myſelf found many pieces of urns and fine pottery. There were two ſtatues in ſtone of human figures, dug out of the ruins, and are now placed on the ſide near the ſummit of the hill.

This place is admirably ſituated for defence; the approach to it is by a ſteep aſcent every way; and a fine ſtream of water runs on the north ſide of it, juſt at the foot of the hill. It was not ſufficiently, if at all, known to our learned Camden; yet every circumſtance inclines me to think it the ſcite of the Abone of Antoninus. In the former part of this work, I have ſlightly mentioned the prevailing opinions concerning the ſituation of that Roman ſtation. I ſhall now briefly enter into a further diſcuſſion of them.

Mr. Camden fixes the Abone at Alvington, as well on account of the reſemblance of the names, as becauſe the latter is nine miles from Caer Went, the Venta Silurum of the Romans; which is the exact diſtance ſet down in the Itinerary from that ſtation to the Abone. But it has been objected that Alvington lies only about four miles from the Trajectus, which our learned antiquary fixes at Oldbury, whereas from Abone to the Trajectus ſhould be nine miles, according to the Itinerary; wherefore, if the diſtances in the Itinerary are right, either Oldbury cannot be the Trajectus, or Alvington is not the Abone. But it is pretty generally agreed, that the Trajectus was at Oldbury.

The learned Dr. Gale, in his Commentary on the Itinerary, ſuppoſing Antoninus's diſtances to be right, thinks the ſtations are tranſpoſed by careleſs tranſcribers; and placing Abone after Trajectus, makes the former to have been at Hanham, in the pariſh of Bitton, where are many old ruins and foundations of antient buildings; and the diſtance from thence to Bath agrees with that ſet down in the Itinerary, from the preceding ſtation to Aquæ Solis. The doctor interprets the name of Hanham, either as a contraction of Avonham, a ham or ſtation at Abone; or conſiders it as a ſmall variation from Henham, an antient ham, or ſtation.

Thus, by tranſpoſing the order of the ſtations, he thinks to accommodate the diſtances ſomething better to the Itinerary. But, had that been the caſe, it is a bad expedient to correct one error by committing another. The miſtake ſeems more likely to be in the diſtances than in miſplacing the ſtations. The former are evidently wrong, as may be proved by the Itinerary itſelf. In the fourteenth Iter, from Iſca to Calleva, the diſtance is ſaid to be 103 miles; but caſting up all the ſpaces between the ſeveral ſtations, the ſum falls ſhort by five miles of that number. So in the thirteenth Iter, from Iſca to Calleva, through Clevum and Durocornovium, i.e. Glouceſter and Cirenceſter, it is ſaid to be 109 miles; whereas the ſum of all the diſtances between the intermediate ſtations is only 90. In this journey, it is ſet down from Glouceſter to Cirenceſter 14 miles, which agrees exactly with the old computation; and from the latter to Spinæ, i.e. Speenham-land, (adjoining to Newbury) 15 miles. But every body knows that it is twice as far between the two laſt mentioned ſtations, as from Glouceſter to Cirenceſter. Here then is a very great miſtake in diſtances, yet I believe nobody will contend, that Speenham-land is not the ſcite of the Roman Spinæ.

Theſe circumſtances conſidered, will probably ſo far eſtabliſh the order of the ſtations as they ſtand in the Itinerary, that no perſon may hereafter attempt to break it, merely to ſupport the exactneſs of the diſtances; ſince it has been proved, that, in reſpect to the latter, the Itinerary is inconſiſtent with itſelf, in the very journey that mentions the ſtation in queſtion.

I am now to offer the reaſons which induce me to fix on this place for the ſcite of the Abone, in preference to Alvington and Hanham.

It was neceſſary for the Romans, having conquered the country, to fortify their ſeveral ſtations; and it is evident they did ſo, from the ruins and fortifications found in almoſt every place where they had them. In thoſe places alſo, are found the remains of baths and teſſellated pavements, with coins and other veſtiges of that people. But none of all theſe have been found at Alvington, wherefore I think it cannot have been the Abone. As to Hanham, there is no doubt but the Romans made a lodgment there, as well as at many other places on the ſides of the Avon; but neither can that have been the Abone, which we are to look for ſomewhere between Venta Silurum and the Trajectus. And ſince Ailberton is diſtinguiſhed with every mark of antiquity, not only in the inſtances already taken notice of, but in the very name itſelf, which is evidently Alb-beorg-ton, i.e. the town of the old camp or fortification, I think we need go no further for the Abone. It ſtands at the proper diſtance from Caer Went, on one hand, but from hence, acroſs the river to Oldbury, (if Antoninus did not make ſome allowance for the zig-zag manner of ſailing) is not more than five or ſix miles. As to the diſtance from Oldbury, the ſuppoſed Trajectus, to Aqua Solis, there is undoubtedly a miſtake in the Itinerary, which I know not how to rectify; only, if inſtead of VI. we read XI. for the diſtance, it will come nearer the truth, and exactly make good the deficiency in the ſum of the diſtances in the Iter from Iſca to Calleva. But theſe matters I ſubmit to better judges, who may depend on the facts I have related, admitting or rejecting the argument as they ſee occaſion.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

The following particulars ſtand in the antient ſurvey, under the head Terra Willi filii Baderon.

'The ſame William [the ſon of Baderon] holds 'Ledenei in Ledenei hundred. Alfer held it in 'the reign of king Edward. There are ſix hides 'taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'three villeins, and five bordars, with two plow-'tillages. There are three ſervi, and a mill of 5*s.* '[rent,] and twenty acres of meadow, and half a 'fiſhery in Waie; a wood one mile long, and half 'a mile broad. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

But there was then another manor, as we learn from the ſame record, wherein it is ſaid:

'Earl William made a manor in Lindenee, in 'Bliteſlau hundred, of four eſtates which he took 'from the lords thereof. Three hides from the 'manor of the biſhop of Hereford; ſix hides from 'the manor ſet apart for the ſuſtenance of the 'monks of Perſhore, where were ſix villeins, with 'four plow-tillages. He took three hides and a 'half from two [d] thanes. There are in demean 'three plow-tillages, and eight bordars, and a mill 'of 40*s.* [rent,] a wood a mile long, and half a 'mile broad. It paid 7*l.* in the whole.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Thus it appears, that there were two manors in this pariſh of the names of Ledenei, and Lindenee, which I take to be only an accidental variation from inaccuracy in writing, of which there are many more inſtances in the records. The principal manor was in the Beauchamp family for a long courſe of time; the other belonged to the Talbots..

Henry earl of Warwick, ſon of Walerond earl of Warwick, married Margery, coheireſs of Henry D'Oiley, and died ſeized of the manor of Lidney, and of an iron forge in his woods there, and of other forges in the foreſt of Dean [e] 13 H. 3. His ſon Thomas de Newburg, earl of Warwick, ſucceeded him. He married Ela, ſecond daughter of William Longeſpee, earl of Saliſbury, natural ſon of king Henry the Second by Fair Roſamond, and died without iſſue 26 H. 3. John de Placetis married Mary, or Margaret, ſiſter and heir to Thomas earl of Warwick. He was in great favour with king Henry the Second, who made the match, and obliged the lady to ſettle her whole eſtate on him for life, although ſhe ſhould have no children by him. He took the title of earl of Warwick, and died ſeized of Lidney 47 H. 3. But Mary, or Margeret, his wife, having no iſſue, the inheritance of the family went to the iſſue of her aunt Alice, daughter to Walerond earl of Warwick, who had been married to William Manduit, baron of Hanſlape in Buckinghamſhire, and by him left a ſon and a daughter, [f] William Manduit and Iſabel. William, in right of his mother, was created earl of Warwick, but died 52 H. 3. without iſſue; whereby his ſiſter Iſabel, who was married to William Beauchamp, became his heireſs. This William de Beauchamp died ſeized of Lidney [g] 52 H. 3. and was ſucceeded by his ſon William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who died ſeized of this manor 26 E. 1. Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was his ſon and heir. He died ſeized of a purparty of Lyden, held of the king in capite, appurtenant to his earldom, [h] 9 E. 2. And there were one hundred acres of underwood, worth (ſays the record) 1*d. per* acre per ann. becauſe it was in the royal foreſt.

Thomas, ſon and heir of Guy, was only two years old at his father's death. He was one of the chief commanders, who, under the Black Prince, led up the van of the Engliſh army at the battle of Creſſy; and fought ſo long at that of Poictiers, that his hand was galled with the exerciſe of his ſword and battle-ax. He married Catherine, daughter of Roger lord Mortimer, and died of the plague at Calais, ſeized of Lidney, 43 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his ſurviving ſon and heir, who married Margaret, daughter to William lord Ferrers of Groby. He had taken up arms againſt king Richard the Second, and was attainted, and his eſtates forfeited, whereupon this manor was granted granted to John Montacute, earl of Saliſbury; who afterwards endeavouring to reſtore the ſame king, and being taken priſoner at Cirenceſter, and there beheaded by the townſmen, 1 H. 4. as related more largely under that head, this eſtate was reſtored to Thomas de Beauchamp, 2 H. 4. who died ſeized of Lidney the ſame year.

[d] There were two orders of thanes: The royal thanes were the great feudatories, or nobility, of the kingdom, who held of the king in chief by knight-ſervice, and were equivalent to the barons, as they were called, after the eſtabliſhment of the Normans. The other thanes were ſub-feudatories, not honorary; the ſame whom the Normans called Vavaſors, which word occurs in Domeſday as a ſynonymy with liberi homines regis; but it grew out of uſe after the reign of king Henry the Fourth.

Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſucceeded Thomas his father, and married, firſt, Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of Thomas lord Berkeley, viſcount Liſle, by whom he had three daughters: ſecondly, Iſabel, the only ſurviving heireſs of the Diſpencers, who were heirs to the Clares earls of Glouceſter, and died ſeized of Lidney 17 H. 6. Henry, his ſon, was created duke of Warwick, and died ſeized of this manor 23 H. 6. He left Anne, his only daughter and heireſs, an infant; who dying ſoon after, the inheritance came to Anne, his ſiſter; but the manor was aſſigned to Cicely dutcheſs of Warwick, his widow, in dower, 25 H. 6. This laſt Anne was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Saliſbury, who, in her right, was alſo earl of Warwick. He was famous for his great power, and was often called the ſtout earl of Warwick, and the king-maker; for king Henry the Sixth and king Edward the Fourth held the crown by turns, as this earl favoured the ſide; but he was at laſt ſlain in Barnet-field, in which battle king Edward ſecured the crown to himſelf. Anne, his widow, had two daughters by him, coheireſſes to her vaſt eſtate; and becauſe ſhe had taken part in the deſigns of her late huſband, her eſtate was taken from her by an act of parliament 14 E. 4. and ſettled on her two daughters, of whom, Iſabel, the eldeſt, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to the king, and Anne, her ſiſter, to Richard duke of Glouceſter, afterwards king Richard the Third.

George duke of Clarence was drowned in a butt of Malmeſey-wine, ſeized of Lidney, 18 E. 4. his brother, Richard duke of Glouceſter, moſt inhumanly aſſiſting at the execution. His children were Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick, attainted by court contrivances, and beheaded 15 H. 7. and Margaret counteſs of Saliſbury, beheaded 33 H. 8.

King Henry the Seventh pretending the injuſtice of diveſting Anne dutcheſs of Warwick of her inheritance, procured another act in the beginning of his reign, to reinſtate her, and then artfully prevailed with her to ſettle that great inheritance on him and his heirs, to the diſinheriſon of the iſſue of her own daughters; and accordingly ſhe gave a fine of Lidney and many other manors to the king, 3 H. 7.

This manor continued in the crown 'till it was granted, by the deſcription of late Warwick and Spencer's lands, to ſir Thomas Seymour, 1 E. 6. but upon his attainder, it reverted to the crown, and was afterwards granted, by queen Elizabeth, to ſir William Wintour, [1] vice admiral of England; who, with great valour and ſucceſs, oppoſed the famous Spaniſh Armada, and was well rewarded by that queen. He built a ſtately houſe at Lidney, called the White Croſs, which was begun in 1588.

Sir Edward Wintour, ſon of ſir William, ſucceeded him, who married Anne, daughter of Edward earl of Worceſter. Sir John Wintour, ſon and heir of ſir Edward, was eminent for his loyalty to king Charles the Firſt, throughout the whole civil war. He fortified his houſe at Lidney, and made it almoſt inacceſſible, to oppoſe the garriſon at Glouceſter. At length he was put to flight, and, if you will believe a wonderful ſtory, made a wonderful eſcape, by leaping down from the rocks at Tiddenham (mentioned in Dr. Parſon's M S. to be near 200 yards high) into the river, which has given the name of Wintour's Leap to a place there. But tho' it may be true that he eſcaped by taking the water, it is nevertheleſs impoſſible to be as related. The White Croſs houſe was afterwards demoliſhed, and turned into buildings for an iron furnace. Sir Charles Wintour, ſon of ſir John, ſucceeded to the manor of Lidney. He married one of the daughters and coheireſſes of —— Napper, eſq; who ſurvived him, and was owner of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns publiſhed his Hiſtory of Glouceſterſhire.

Of the other manor, the following account is extracted from the records: William Hatheway died ſeized thereof 10 H. 2. and was ſucceeded by Ralph Hatheway his ſon. Walter Wither died ſeized thereof 54 H. 3. William Buttler held Lidney and Peritune mills, and a bailiwick in the foreſt of Dean 13 E. 1. He died the ſame year, and left Perine, his only daughter and heireſs, married to Gilbert lord Talbot, who, in right of his wife, died ſeized of Lidney 20 E. 3. Richard lord Talbot died ſeized of Lidney, Huntley, Longhope, and Leigh 20 R. 2. Gilbert lord Talbot, his ſon, ſucceeded, and died ſeized of thoſe manors, and a moiety of Badgworth, with a third part of the manors of Painſwick, Morton Valence, and Whaddon 7 H. 5. He left Ankoret, his only daughter and heireſs, but ſhe dying at four years of age, John lord Talbot, her uncle, (ſo famous for his victories in France as to be eſteemed the Achilles of England) was her heir. He was created earl of Shrewſbury 20 H. 6. and being ſlain at the ſiege of Chaſtillon in France, by a cannon bullet, died ſeized of the manor of Lidney, &c. 31 H. 6. and was ſucceeded by John earl of Shrewſbury, his ſon and heir, who engaging on the part of the Lancaſtrians, was killed in the battle of Northampton 38 H. 6. He was ſucceeded by John his ſon, the third earl of Shrewſbury, who married Catherine, daughter of Humphry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, and died 13 E. 4. as appears by the eſcheator's book of that year, n. 52. From this time I have no account of the deſcent of this manor, ſeparate from the firſt; wherefore I conclude that the diſtinction was loſt by unity of poſſeſſion, and that both were afterwards enjoyed as one manor.

The manor of Lidney was purchaſed of the Wintour family by Benjamin Bathurſt, eſq; third ſon of ſir Benjamin Bathurſt, baronet, and uncle to the preſent earl of Bathurſt. He married Finetta, daughter and heireſs of Henry Poole, of Kemble in the county of Wilts, eſq; by whom he had iſſue, 1. Thomas, of whom hereafter: 2. Poole, ſometime commander of a company of foot in his majeſty's ſervice; who, in 1776, married Anne, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of —— Haſketh, of the city of Saliſbury, eſq. 3. Anne, the eldeſt daughter, married to Charles Bragge, of Mangotsfield in this county, eſq; by whom he hath iſſue two ſons and one daughter: 4. Suſannah, the ſecond daughter, married to Powell Snell, of Guiting-Grange in this county, eſq. 5. Finetta, who died unmarried; and 6. Catherine, now unmarried. The ſaid Benjamin Bathurſt married, ſecondly, Elizabeth, daughter of the reverend Dr. Broderick, one of the prebendaries of Weſtminſter, and rector of Mixbury in the county of Oxford; by whom he hath a numerous iſſue. He died on Nov. 5, 1767, in the 76th year of his age, having repreſented the borough of Cirenceſter in three parliaments, the city of Glouceſter in four, and the borough of Monmouth in two.

Thomas Bathurſt, eſq; the eldeſt ſon and heir of Benjamin Bathurſt, married Anne, daughter and ſole heireſs of ſir William Fazakerly, of Totteridge in Hertfordſhire, and is the preſent lord of this manor. His arms, and a large account of his family, are given under Cirenceſter, to which the reader is referred.

Of the other eſtates in Lidney, the records ſhew, that Bogo de Knovil died ſeized of aſſart lands at Gravenhull and Zerkeley, near Lidney, 12 E. 3. but this particular ſeems to belong more eſpecially to the foreſt of Dean. John Charburghe died ſeized of lands in Lidney and Aileberton 49 E. 3. Lands called Newton Myne, in Lidney, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to John Marſh and John Turpine 2 Eliz. Other lands called Palewell Myne, in Lidney, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Anthony Collins and George Woodnet 26 Eliz. In the tithing of Lidney are 48 families, and 246 inhabitants.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Ailberton. This tithing lies about a mile weſt from the church, and conſiſts of 49 families, and 231 inhabitants. William Harpetre died ſeized of the manor of Halberton 12 H. 2. William Harpetre, ſon of William, was his heir. He had committed many treſpaſſes in the foreſt of Dean, for which his lands were ſeized; but compounding for 100 marks, was reſtored to his eſtate 22 H. 2. Robert Harpetre was his ſon and heir, who dying was ſucceeded by John Harpetre. He died without iſſue, whereby his ſiſter became ſole heireſs, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, and being married to Anſelm Gournay, was ſucceeded in the manor of Aileberton by Robert Gournay their ſon and heir, who died ſeized thereof 53 H. 3. But this ſeems to be a miſtake; for Thomas Harpetre, brother of John, ſucceeded to this eſtate, and married Eva[k], daughter of Robert de Berkeley, who aſſumed the name of de Were, from the great lordſhip of Were in Somerſetſhire. They had iſſue Robert, who ſometime after aſſumed the name of Gournay, and had livery, 15 H. 3. of part of the poſſeſſions of Maurice de Gaunt, his uncle, and of all his lands in Glouceſterſhire, except Beverſtan, Weſton, Radewic, Oure, and Albricton, which however, he not long after obtained of the king, and died 53 H. 3. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Anſelm, whoſe ſon John Gournay died 19 E. 1. and left Elizabeth, his only daughter and heireſs, married to John ap Adam, or, as he is ſometimes called, de Badenham, who had iſſue Thomas ap Adam.

Sir Robert Atkyns's account of the deſcent of this manor breaks off at 53 H. 3. probably from ſome defect in the records he had conſulted; but he ſays, it came afterwards to the family of the Berkeleys, by the marriage of an heireſs. It is however moſt probable, that it deſcended from Robert Gournay, together with the manors of King's Weſton and Beverſtone, down to Thomas ap Adam; and like them was ſold by him into the Berkeley family. Sir Maurice Berkeley purchaſed King's Weſton of ſir Thomas ap Adam 4 E. 3. which deſcended thro' ſeveral generations to ſir Maurice Berkeley of Uley, who died ſeized of that manor and of Aileberton 4 E. 4. Sir William Berkeley ſucceeded his father in this eſtate; but taking part with king Richard the Third, his eſtates were ſeized by king Henry the Seventh, and granted to Jaſper duke of Bedford in the firſt year of that reign. Robert Woodroffe died ſeized of Aileberton 15 Car. and left Thomas his ſon and heir ſeventeen years old. Thomas Bathurſt, eſq; is lord of this manor.

Sir Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Aileberton 15 R. 2. Le Sterte and Goldgrove in Ailberton, and divers woods in Ailberton and Alvington, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to William Wintour 32 H. 8. Here is a chapel of eaſe, with a ſmall tower at the weſt end.

2. Pirton, or Purton, is a tithing three miles ſouthward of the church, conſiſting of 8 families and 44 inhabitants. Beſides what is mentioned of of this manor in the abſtract from Domeſday-book, under Naſs, there are a few particulars relating to it that could not be ſeparated from the account of Awre, of which, according to that record, it was antiently a member, and a fief belonging to William de Ow.

Robert Gournay held Pereton 53 H. 3. John de Badeham, or ap Adam, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Peritone to John de Knovil, to the uſe of themſelves and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to the heirs of Elizabeth, [k]25 E. 1. Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died ſeized of Peretone and Purton 9 E. 2. Maurice, ſon of Thomas de Berkeley, held Piriton [l]42 E. 3. Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died ſeized of Peritone 2 H. 4. Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife were ſeized of Purton 5 H. 5. Robert Goodrick and Edith his wife levied a fine of the manor of Purton 5 Mar. What ſir Robert Atkyns ſays here of lands in Purton belonging to St. Oſwald's in Glouceſter, ſhould be apply'd to Pirton in Churchdown. This manor is now the property of Thomas Bathurſt, eſq. Purton-paſſage over the Severn is in this hamlet, concerning which there are ſome uſeful obſervations at p. 47.

3. Naſs. This hamlet lies about two miles ſouth-eaſtward from the church, conſiſting of 6 families and 35 inhabitants. Domeſday-book gives the following account of it:

'Earl Herald held Neſt in Bliteſlau hundred. 'There were five hides, and in demean one plow-'tillage, and ten villeins, and two bordars, with 'nine plow-tillages. It was not put to farm in 'the time of king Edward. But earl William 'joined it to two other manors, that is to ſay, 'Pontune and Peritune. In theſe were nine hides, 'and two plow-tillages in demean, and fifteen 'villeins, and two bordars, and two ſervi, with 'nine plow-tillages. There is a fiſhery. The 'ſteward lately increaſed Pontune by one plow-'tillage. Peritune is in the king's farm. They 'pay 11 lib. in the whole.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Robert Grinder, eſq; was ſeized of Naſſe and Hurſt 22 H. 6. Sir John Barr died ſeized thereof 2 E. 4. John Baynham died ſeized of Naſſe 20 H. 8. and livery of it was granted to William his ſon 26 H. 8. in which family it continued to the reign of queen Elizabeth; and from that time it has been in the family of Roynon Jones, eſq; who is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a good eſtate and a ſeat here. He is ſon of the late William Jones, eſq; by Cholmley his wife, daughter of ſir John D'Oyley, baronet, of Cheſſel-Hampton in Oxfordſhire. His arms are, Argent, a lion rampant gules.

4. Alliſton, two miles north-eaſtward from the church, conſiſting of 24 houſes and 105 inhabitants. Of this tithing it is thus recorded:

'William de Ow holds Aluredeſtone in Ledenei 'hundred. Bondi held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are three hides taxed, no lands in 'demean, but five villeins and three bordars have 'three plow-tillages. There is a fiſhery of 12*d*. '[rent] and ten acres of meadow; a wood half a 'mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth '20*s*. now 30*s*. Henry de Fereriis claimed it 'becauſe Bondi held it; but Ralph de Limeſi alſo 'held it, who was predeceſſor to William. The 'ſame William holds two hides there which are 'taxed, and there are two villeins, with two plow-'tillages. Ulnod held them, and they are now 'and were then worth 10*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

There was a caſtle at Alliſton in the reign of king William the conqueror, who made Gwarine de Meez, of the houſe of Lorrain, governor of it, and gave him Aleſtune to defend the marches againſt the Welch. But whether this laſt particular be true of Alliſton in Lidney, or of Olveſton in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, may admit of ſome doubt. Sir Robert Atkyns applies it to both places, of which however it cannot be equally true. But as this was ſituated in the marches which Gwarine was to defend, and as the record mentions a diſpute between two perſons concerning their right to this eſtate; it is probable the king afterwards put an end to the controverſy, by giving the manor to Gwarine de Meez. This Gwarine married Millet, one of the daughters of Pain Peverel, lord of Whitington in Shropſhire, who had declared, that whoſoever behaved himſelf with the greateſt courage at tilts, at the caſtle of Peake in Derbyſhire, ſhould wed his daughter; whereupon Gwarine meets at the place, and having there vanquiſhed a ſon of the king of Scotland, and a baron of Burgoyne, gained her for his wife.

Fulk, the ſon of Gwarine, ſucceeded him, of whom there is this remarkable anecdote. Playing at cheſs with king John, the king broke his head with the cheſs-board; but Fulk returned the blow, and almoſt killed the king. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Fulk, who was ſlain at the battle of Lewes, 48 H. 3. This family obtained the name of Fitz-Warine, from Gwarine their anceſtor, who came into England with the Conqueror.

5. Soilwell, or Sully, is a hamlet in Alliſton. Edward duke of York was ſeized of the manor of Sully 3 H. 5. Edward James, eſq; died ſeized of Sully, alias Soilwell-houſe, and Radmore 4 C. 1. He married Eleanor, daughter of John Powell, of Preſton, eſq; and left Thomas, his ſon, one year and eight months old. William James, eſq; was proprietor of this eſtate at the beginning of this century; but Soilwell-houſe and eſtate became afterwards the property of Mr. Richard Williams, by purchaſe from the family of the James's. Mr. Williams has now ſold it to John Townſend, of Chiſwick in the county of Middleſex, eſq; the preſent proprietor.

[k] Sir Robert Atkyns has it 25 E. 3. But this is a miſtake, as appears by his account of Beverſtone, King's Weſton, Churchdown, &c.

[l] There is another hamlet of the name of Pirton in the pariſh of Churchdown, in this county, which occaſioned ſir Robert Atkyns, by miſtake, to apply this record and ſome others to that hamlet, whereas they belong to Pirton in this pariſh. There are alſo ſome other miſtakes in ſir Robert Atkyns, which are taken notice of under Churchdown.

6. Hurſt is a hamlet in Alliſton, about a mile eaſtward from the church. This was antiently a wood, or woody place, and took its name from the Saxon ꝑeꝛꝛc, a wood. Mrs. Morgan, relict of Probert Morgan, eſq; eldeſt ſon of Richard Morgan, eſq; by Elianor his wife, daughter of Henry Probert, of the Ar-goed in the county of Monmouth, eſq; has a ſeat here.

7. Newarne. This hamlet lies about half a mile eaſtward from the church, and is part in the tithing of Lidney, and part in Alliſton. Mrs. Lewis, daughter of Richard Morgan, of Hurſt, eſq; has a handſome houſe here.

8. Rodleys is a houſe and eſtate belonging to Mr. Edward Jones.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 260*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Hereford are patrons and impropriators; the reverend Mr. Evans, one of the canons of Hereford, is the preſent incumbent. The abbey of Lyra in Normandy formerly had the impropriation. Ailberton, St. Briavel's, and Hewelsfield are chapels annexed to this church.

The glebe at Ailberton lets at 2*l.* 15*s.* a year, but there is no glebe at Lidney.

The church is large, with an aile on each ſide, ſupported by two rows of pillars, and it has a very handſome ſpire at the weſt end. A ſmall chancel on the north ſide of the great one, and a vault within the rails of the great chancel belong to the lord of the manor.

There was a chantry in this church, endowed by John Chardbrough and Julian his wife, 49 E. 3. whereof John Cook, the laſt incumbent, retired with a penſion of 5*l.*

Monument and Inſcription.

Mr. ſerjeant Powlet, recorder of the city of Briſtol, and one of the juſtices of South Wales, died in 1703, and was buried in this church, but I find no memorial for him.

On a flat ſtone in the church,

Underneath this Stone lies buried the Body of Roynon Jones, of Naſs, Eſq; who died July the 26th A. D. 1732, Aged 69. ——Arms, 1. Jones, as before, impaling 2. Or, a chevron checky gules and azure, between three cinquefoils of the laſt, for Cooke.

Benefactions.

There is an almſhouſe of four rooms for the uſe of the poor.

Mr. Dunning of Purton, by his will dated 1625, gave 20*s.* a year to the poor. Mr. Morgan of Hurſt, in 1660, gave 40*s.* a year, half to the poor, the other half for two ſermons.

By indenture dated June 8, 1680, Chriſtopher Willowby, of Biſhopſton, eſq; gave 16*l.* a year, charged on the tithes of Clent, in the pariſh of Milton-Abbats in Wiltſhire; of which 4*l.* a year each to be given to two poor old women, natives of Ailberton, for their lives; as often as one dies another to be choſen in her ſtead; 4*l.* 10*s.* to be equally divided between four poor perſons of the ſame place; 10*s.* to each church-warden; 10*s.* to the pariſh clerk; 20*s.* to the miniſter for a ſermon, and 20*s.* more for his trouble in keeping a regiſter of the diſtribution of this charity, for want of which the whole to go to Biſhopſton.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 153 houſes, and about 700 inhabitants, whereof 24 were freeholders; annual births 28, burials 26. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 249 baptiſms, and 251 burials; and in ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 196, and the burials 170; and the preſent number of inhabitants is 661. Upon comparing theſe numbers it will appear, that the people have decreaſed here this laſt century; that they were more healthy during the latter period of ten years, than in the former; and that the average proportion of burials to the whole number of ſouls is nearly as 1 to 39.

LITTLETON

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Grumbald's-Aſh, two miles diſtant north-weſtward from Marſhfield, ſix ſouth-weſt from Sodbury, and thirty-one ſouth from Glouceſter.

This was formerly a tithing in Tormarton, in reſpect to which it was a little town; but it is now a diſtinct pariſh. It is called Weſt Littleton, to diſtinguiſh it from another Littleton, not far diſtant, in Wiltſhire. The lands in this pariſh are chiefly arable.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, this manor was not diſtinguiſhed in the record from Tormarton.

Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hereford, was ſeized of the manor of Littleton 47 H. 3. It afterwards went to the family of De la Riviere, and from them to the Willingtons, and from them to the St. Loes. Whilſt it remained in theſe families, it had the ſame owner with the manor of Tormarton.

George earl of Shrewſbury had married Elizabeth the widow of ſir William St. Loe, captain of the guard to queen Elizabeth, the moſt diſtinguiſhed lady of her time, for the beauty of her perſon and endowments of her mind, who had the inheritance of this manor, whereby the earl was ſeized of Littleton in her right, in the year 1608. They joined in conveying this manor to her ſon, William Cavendiſh, earl of Devonſhire, who ſold it to Mr. Willoughby, and others, by which means the manor was divided amongſt divers freeholders.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, and is annexed to Tormarton. It is worth about 50*l.* a year.

The church is ſmall, with a little low ſpire in the middle.

LITTLETON upon SEVERN.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, three miles ſouth-weſtward from Thornbury, ten north-weſtward from Chipping-Sodbury, and twenty-ſix ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſture, with ſome arable land, and is bounded on the weſt and north-weſt by the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Mary of Malmeſberie holds Liteltone in Langelei hundred. There are five hides, of which two and a half pay tax, the others are quit. In demean are two plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and two bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There is a church and a prieſt, and thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 60*s.* but it is now worth 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

A Quo Warranto was brought againſt the abbat of Malmeſbury to ſet forth his right to court-leet in Littleton. He pleaded a grant from king Edward the Second, before the conqueſt, and his claim was allowed. The manor continued in the abbey of Malmeſbury 'till the diſſolution, and was granted, with the tithes of the demeans, to ſir Richard Long, reſerving a rent to the crown of 8*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* 33 H. 8.

The manor was ſoon after purchaſed by Richard Hampden, who died ſeized of it 4 E. 6. and livery was granted to Edmond Hampden, ſon of Richard, 5 E. 6.

Edward Filton, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608; as was Mr. Hopton at the beginning of this century, and Mr. is the preſent lord of the manor.

HAMLET. Stock is a hamlet in this pariſh, of which there is a diſtinct account in Domeſday-book:

'The biſhop of Conſtance [in Normandy] holds 'Eſtoch in Sineſhoved hundred, and Tetbald holds 'it of him. Eldred held it of earl Harold, and 'could go where he pleaſed. There are two hides, 'one taxed, the other not. There is one plow-'tillage in demean, and two villeins, and one 'bordar, with one plow-tillage. There are ſix 'ſervi, and five acres of meadow. It was worth '40*s.* now 20*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

Sir Robert Atkyns, or ſome perſon for him, by miſtake, appropriated an abſtract of the above account both to Stoke-Biſhop in Weſtbury, and to this hamlet, which are diſtinct places.

Richard Foſter levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Stoke to John Walſh 12 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Briſtol, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Willoughby is patron, and Mr. Johns the preſent incumbent. The abbey of Malmeſbury had the advowſon.

The church is ſmall, with a nave and a little north aile, and a ſmall tower covered with tiles, and two bells in it.

LONGBOROUGH.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper part of Kiftſgate hundred, three miles diſtant north from Stow, ſeven ſouth from Campden, and twenty-five eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated on an eaſy declivity facing the eaſt, and commands a pleaſant view of part of Oxfordſhire, and ſome detached parts of Worceſterſhire and Warwickſhire. Two turnpike-roads lead through the pariſh, one from Stow to Worceſter, the the other from Bath and Briſtol, thro' Cirenceſter, to Harford-bridge in Warwickſhire, and ſo on northwards.

The greater part of the pariſh is arable land, which furniſhes huſbandry buſineſs for the men, whilſt the women and girls employ themſelves in winding of ſilk for the throwſters at Blockley.

The name of the village was antiently written Langeberge, which was undoubtedly given it from the long form of a camp thrown up here, not far from the Roman Foſs-way, which paſſes by the village.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

One manor in this pariſh is part of the antient demeſnes of the crown, as appears by the following extract:

'King Edward held Langeberge in Chefteſiat 'hundred, with Mene, a member thereof, in each 'of which were eight hides. There are three 'plow-tillages in demean, and ten villeins, and 'four bordars, with ſix plow-tillages, and a mill 'of 5*s*. and ſix ſervi, and a meadow of 10*s*. rent. 'In the time of king Edward the ſheriff paid for 'the farm what it yielded. It now pays 15*l*. with 'two hundreds which the ſheriff added to it.' Domeſday-book, p. 67.

But one part of this pariſh lay in Witelai hundred.

'Earl Moriton holds Langeberge in Witelai 'hundred. Tovi held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are two hides. In demean are 'two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and one 'bordar, with one plow-tillage, and four ſervi. It 'was worth 4*l*. now 40*s*. and pays tax.' Ib. p. 73.

'Hunfrid the chamberlain holds Langeberge in 'Witelai hundred of the king. There are four 'hides taxed. Elſtan, Blacheman, Edric, and 'Alric held it for four manors, and could go where 'they would. In demean were four plow-tillages, 'and three villeins, and five bordars, with three 'plow-tillages. There are nine ſervi. It was 'worth 16*l*. now 100*s*.' Ibid. p. 78.

Two of theſe manors were afterwards confuſed and united. Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, and brother to king Henry III. had a grant of the manor of Longborough. He founded the abbey of Hayles in the year 1246, and endowed it with this manor. A Quo Warranto was brought againſt the abbat, 15 E. 1. to ſhew by what right he held a court leet, and challenged waifs and felons goods, and his claim was allowed. The manor was held of the honour of Wallingford, and continued in poſſeſſion of the abbey of Hayles 'till the diſſolution.

The manor was granted to Rowland Hill and Thomas Leigh 1 Mar. Livery of it was granted to Rowland Leigh 15 Eliz. whoſe deſcendants have enjoyed it to the preſent time, and the heir of James Leigh, late of Addleſtrop, eſq; deceaſed, is the preſent lord of the manor.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that William de Montacute was ſeized of lands in Longborough, and granted them to William Forho, reſerving to himſelf the advowſon, 16 H. 3. William de Bruſe held one meſſuage and ſix yard-lands in Longburg 15 E. 1. John de la Crane was ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Langeberge the ſame year. William de Cheſter and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Longborow to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to John their ſon, 13 E. 2. Thomas Cole and others were ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land, in truſt for the abbey of Hayles, 15 R. 2. Lands in Longborough, which belonged to the abbey of Bruerne in Oxfordſhire, were granted to Edmond Hermas 35 H. 8.

HAMLET. Banksfee, or Southfield, is a hamlet and diſtinct manor, lying part in this pariſh and part in Condicot. It is ſometimes alſo called Longburrowe in the writings and evidences reſpecting it, and is undoubtedly one of thoſe manors called Langeberge in Domeſday-book. It is ſuppoſed afterwards to have received the name of Blanck's-fee, now ſomewhat changed to Bank's-fee, from Richard le Blanck, who was ſeized of one meſſuage and three plow-tillages here 15 E. 1. The college of Weſtbury upon Trim was ſeized of this manor, and continued in the poſſeſſion of it 'till the diſſolution of monaſteries. It was granted to ſir Ralph Sadleir 35 H. 8. William Freeman died ſeized thereof 20 Eliz. and livery was granted to his ſon Thomas the ſame year. John Talbott, of Longfere in the county of Salop, was in poſſeſſion of this manor 43 Eliz. as appears by evidences in the hands of the preſent poſſeſſor. In the year 1686, it was ſold to ſir Charles Shuckborough, baronet, in whoſe family it remained 'till 1753, when it paſſed, by purchaſe, to John Scott, eſq; who has built a handſome houſe on the ſcite of the old manor houſe, which he calls Banksfee-Houſe. He is in the commiſſion of the peace for the counties of Middleſex and Glouceſter, and has conſiderable eſtates in both counties. He is deſcended from an antient family in Scotland, and married Jane, daughter of Edward Wilſon, of Didlington in Norfolk, eſq; by whom he has one ſon and two daughters, John, Charlotte, and Catherine. His arms are, Per pale indented argent and ſable, a ſaltire counterchanged.

Here was antiently a chapel in this hamlet, dedicated to St. Edmond; but it is now wholly demoliſhed.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 50*l*. a year. The impropriation was in the abbey of Hayles from its firſt endowment in the year 1251.

Richard Pennehey was ſeized of the advowſon of this church 15 E. 1. The rectory and the advowſon of the vicarage were granted to ſir Rowland

Rowland Hill and Thomas Leigh 1 Mariæ. The heir of the late James Leigh, eſq; preſents for two turns, and the earl of Guildford one. Mr. Leigh is the preſent incumbent.

The vicarage was endowed in the year 1326, in the time of Thomas Cobham, biſhop of Worceſter, (called the good clerk) by the abbat of Hayles, with the tithe of ſixteen yard-lands, then the fee of Richard de Hodington, and all privy tithes, except lamb and wool. And if the portion of the vicar, by reaſon of barrenneſs, or any other occaſion, ſhould not amount to 10*l. per ann.* by the oath of the vicar, the abbat and convent were to make it up to that amount. The demean lands pay no tithes.

A portion of tithes in this pariſh, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, was granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. Other tithes, which belonged to Hayles abbey, were granted to Theophilus Adams and Richard Adams 25 Eliz.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It has an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a handſome tower, with pinnacles. There is the effigy of a man in armour in the aile, without arms or inſcription; and a handſome monument of black and white marble, with the effigies of ſir William Leigh and his lady. He died in 1631.

At the beginning of this century there were 80 houſes in this pariſh, and about 400 inhabitants, whereof 15 were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. Atkyns. There are now exactly 82 houſes, and 389 inhabitants.

LONG HOPE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, three miles north-eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, and nine weſt from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in a bottom, which gave occaſion to the name; for Hope is a valley, ſays lord Coke, in the firſt part of his Inſtitutes. It was called Long Hope to diſtinguiſh it from Manſel-Hope, not far diſtant from it, in Herefordſhire. The greater part of the pariſh is arable land, with ſome woodland and paſture ground.

Part of Yartleton-Hill lies in this pariſh, and part in ſeveral others. Annually, on the firſt day of May, there is a cuſtom of aſſembling in bodies on the top of that hill, from the ſeveral pariſhes, to fight for the poſſeſſion of it, upon which account it is ſometimes called May-Hill. What gave riſe to this cuſtom I cannot with any certainty learn; but ſome are of opinion that it is a relick of the antient Campus Martius, which was an annual aſſembly of the people upon May-day, when they confederated together to defend the kingdom againſt all foreigners and enemies, as mentioned in the laws of Edward the Confeſſor.

There is a remarkable inſtance of longevity in the perſon of Thomas Bright, who was a native of this pariſh, and died here in the year 1708, one hundred and twenty-four years old, as appears by the inſcription for him, on his grave-ſtone.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'William the ſon of Baderon holds Hope in 'Weſtberie hundred. Forne and Ulfeg held it of 'king Edward. There were five hides taxed, and 'thoſe thanes might go where they would. There 'are two plow-tillages in demean, and twelve vil-'leins, and one bordar, with twelve plow-tillages. 'There are three ſervi, and a mill of 17*d.* It 'was worth 8*l.* now 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

William the ſon of Baderon was ſucceeded by Withenock his ſon, who took the name of Monmouth from his father's government. Baderon was ſon and heir of Withenock, and Gilbert was ſon and heir of Baderon. John de Monemuta was ſon and heir of Gilbert, and was made governor of St. Briavel's caſtle 18 H. 3. He died ſeized of the manor of Long Hope 40 H. 3. and having no male iſſue, gave the inheritance of all his lands to prince Edward, eldeſt ſon to king Henry the Third.

This manor was ſoon after granted to Gilbert Talbot, one of the juſtices itinerant for the county of Hereford, and governor of the caſtle of Monmouth. He married Gwenthlian, daughter of Rheſe ap Griffith, prince of South Wales, and died ſeized of Rodleigh, and of Long Hope 2 E. 1. but the wife of John de Monemuta the younger held the latter ſome time in dower. Gilbert Talbot, ſon of Richard, ſon of Gilbert, died ſeized of Long Hope and Huntley [m] 10 R. 2. as did Richard, ſon of Gilbert, 20 R. 2. Gilbert, ſon of the laſt Richard, on the death of his mother, had livery of the fourth part of the ſaid manors 1 H. 5. and John, brother and heir to Gilbert, died ſeized of the ſame 31 H. 6.

This manor continued long in the family of the Talbots, and had a ſucceſſion of the ſame owners as the manor of Huntley. Edmund Probyn, of Newland, eſq; is the preſent lord of both the ſaid manors.

John Sabin and others were ſeized of one meſſuage and ſixty acres of land in Long Hope and Huntley, in truſt for the abbey of Flaxley, 10 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage endowed. It lies in the Foreſt deanery, and is worth about 250*l.* a year. Mr. David Jones is patron and incumbent.

[m] Dugdale's Baronage.

Robert de Chandos, who came into England at the Norman invaſion, gave the advowſon of the church of Hope to the abbey of Lyra in Normandy. The impropriation belonged afterwards to the priory of St. Mary and St. Florence in Monmouth. After the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries, the impropriation was veſted in the Nourſes, and deſcended to Mr. Nourſe Yate, who reſtored it to the vicarage in the year 1701.

The church is built in the form of a croſs. It has a ſpire and five bells at the weſt end. The chancel was rebuilt, and the church repaired in 1771.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a memorial in the chancel for Thomas Maſter, gent. who died in 1682, with the arms of the family of the ſame name reſiding at Cirenceſter. There are alſo ſeveral memorials, on flat ſtones, for the Yates of this pariſh, with the arms of the Yates of Arlingham; and for Yate Bromwich, clerk, vicar of the pariſh, and patron of the living, who died in 1774; with his arms, i. e. Or, a lion rampant ſable, gutty of the field; impaling, 2. Yate.

On a ſtone in the church-yard is this inſcription,

His Patience was by long Affliction try'd;

Benefactions.

John Palmer, gent. gave one meſſuage and fifteen acres of land in Long Hope, in the reign of king Richard the Second. John Bodenham gave other lands in the reign of Henry the Fifth, as did John Appleby, gent. in that of Henry the Sixth. Richard Elly, of Mitchel-Dean, gave a meſſuage and lands in Long Hope, in the reign of Henry the Seventh; and about the ſame time, Walter Giffard, alias Pekks, gave a tenement in Mitchel-Dean, and lands in Long Hope; and other lands were given to this pariſh, by Thomas Bond, in the ſame reign. John Gwin gave lands alſo in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. All theſe donations are for the purpoſe of repairing the pariſh church, and for the relief of the poor.

In the year 1675, Mr. Thomas Nourſe charged the impropriation with 5*l.* a year for ever to buy clothes for the poor; and 5*l.* for binding out one apprentice yearly. In the year 1701, Mr. Nourſe Yate endowed the vicarage with the impropriation, ſubject to the ſaid charities of 10*l.* a year.

LONGNEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Whitſtone, ſeven miles north-weſt from Stroud, three eaſt from Newnham, and ſeven ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns aſſerts, that it has been formerly called Long-Iſland, which gives, ſays he, the derivation of that name. But no inſtance has occurred to me of the place being ſo called; and it could not be ſo, without the greateſt impropriety, as neither the pariſh, nor any part of it, is ſo much as peninſulated. The name ſeems to be compounded of Lang, long, or along, and Ea, water, (the letter n ſerving only to facilitate pronunciation) and it is perfectly deſcriptive of the ſituation of the place, which ſtretches along the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the river Severn, and conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture grounds, with orcharding, and ſome arable land. This ſituation ſubjects the inhabitants to the topical diſorders incident to ſuch places.

I have had frequent occaſions of mentioning the cheeſe made in theſe parts with the commendation it deſerves; and with pleaſure I take this opportunity of recommending a particular ſort of cyder, of good ſtrength, colour, and excellent flavour, made in this pariſh and its neighbourhood, from an apple which, being originally cultivated here, is called the Longney Ruſſet. This village furniſhes nothing further remarkable in natural hiſtory, and is intirely deſtitute of antiquities.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is thus recorded:

'Elſi holds Langenei in Witeſtan hundred of 'the king, and he held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are five hides taxed. In demean 'are two plow-tillages, and ſix villeins, and twelve 'bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There are 'four ſervi, and ten acres of meadow, and a 'fiſhery. It was worth 100*s.* now 60*s.*' p. 79.

Soon after the Norman conqueſt, this manor was given to the monaſtery of Great Malvern in Worceſterſhire, by one Oſbert, or Oſburt, who in the charter is called Oſburt fil. Pontii; and it was confirmed by king Henry the Firſt to that monaſtery, which was founded by Aldwin an hermit, in the year 1085, and endowed by king William the Conqueror, and the before-mentioned king Henry. That monaſtery pleaded their right to court-leet, free warren, and felons goods in this manor, in a Quo warranto brought againſt them, 15 E. 1. and their claim was allowed.

The manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the monks of Malvern 'till the diſſolution, after which it it paſſed into lay-hands. Sir William Bond was lord of it in the year 1608.

Henry Smith, eſq;[a] a very charitable perſon, dying in the year 1627, his truſtees, purſuant to the directions of his will, purchaſed ſeveral eſtates, and amongſt others the manor of Longney, with the demean lands, and the rectory and parſonage, the income of which to be diſpoſed of in charities. And the manor, &c. ſtill continue veſted in ſuch truſtees, who hold a court leet here.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that William Mull, or Mills, who had eſtates in Hareſfield, Duntiſbourn-Rouſe, and Harſcombe, was ſeized of ten acres of meadow, ten of paſture, and ſix acres of wood in this pariſh; but being attainted 2 E. 4. his eſtates were ſeized by the crown, and granted to ſir Thomas Herbert and his heirs male; and were afterwards granted to ſir Richard Beauchamp, 14 E. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 50*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Joſeph Cheſter is the preſent incumbent. The advowſon formerly belonged to the priory of Malvern.

The impropriation is veſted in Mr. Smith's truſtees. About 80 acres, called Sten-Meadow, are tithe-free.

The truſtees to Mr. Smith's charity have an eſtate in Suſſex, the income of which they divide amongſt the poor clergy; and Longney being a ſmall living, they ſometimes give the vicar a ſhare, as they do at preſent 10*l.* a year; but both the ſum and the continuance of it are intirely at their diſcretion.

The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, hath a ſmall chapel on the ſouth ſide of the chancel, belonging to the manor. It has a handſome embattled tower on the ſouth ſide, with five bells in it. There are neither monuments nor memorials worthy notice; but it is ſaid that the founder of the church lies buried under a niche in the wall, on the north ſide of the chancel.

[a] The following ſhort account of that very extraordinary man may be acceptable to my readers. The vulgar ſtory concerning him is, that he was a beggar, followed by a remarkable dog, whence he is often in Surry called Dog-Smith; and that he was whipped through ſeveral pariſhes in that county as a vagrant. But all this ſeems to be fiction. There was a reſpectable family of the Smiths, who had a manor and a conſiderable eſtate at Wandſworth in Surry, 11 Eliz. which they enjoy'd 'till about the year 1664; and as he was born and buried there, according to Mr. Aubrey, it is probable, tho' not abſolutely certain, that he was one of that family; and there is a monument for him in Wandſworth church. At length he became a citizen of London, of the ſalters company, tho' it is ſuppoſed he was a ſilverſmith; and having a very large real and perſonal eſtate, veſted the whole of it, in the year 1620, in truſtees, for the relief of poor priſoners, hurt and maimed ſoldiers, portions for poor maids on their marriage, ſetting up of poor apprentices, repairing of highways, and loſſes ſuſtained by fire, ſhipwreck, or otherwiſe; or ſuch other charitable uſes as he ſhould by deed or will direct, or as his truſtees, their heirs or aſſigns ſhould think moſt meet and convenient; reſerving 500*l.* per ann. for his own uſe during his life. Afterwards, by deed-poll, dated Jan. 26, 1626, he ordered that his perſonal eſtate ſhould be laid out in purchaſing lands, to be ſettled to the ſame uſes; and directed, that the ſums allotted by him or his truſtees to any pariſh, be diſtributed by the churchwardens and overſeers, for the relief of the aged, poor or infirm people, married perſons having more children born in lawful wedlock than their labours can maintain, poor orphans, ſuch poor people as keep themſelves and families to labour, and put out their children apprentices at the age of fifteen; but by no means for the relief of perſons given to exceſſive drinking, whoremongers, common ſwearers, pilferers, or otherwiſe notoriouſly ſcandalous; nor to any that have been incorrigible or diſobedient to thoſe whoſe ſervants they have been, nor to any vagrants having no conſtant dwelling, nor to any that receive inmates to dwell in the houſe with them, or that have not inhabited in ſuch pariſh five years before the making of ſuch diſtribution, or, being able, refuſe to work, labour, and take pains.

He afterwards made his will, by which he gave ſome few legacies, but left the bulk of his eſtate to the diſpoſal of his truſtees, and died in January 1627.

Beſides Longney, there are ſeveral conſiderable eſtates in Suſſex, Kent, Hants, London, Middleſex, and Leiceſterſhire, given by Mr. Smith, or purchaſed with his money, and veſted in the truſtees to this well-directed charity, who, in the year 1772, when this account was communicated to me by William Bray, eſq; were the following noblemen and gentlemen, viz.

The earl of Aſhburnham,
The right honourable lord George Germaine,
Lord Onſlow,
Lord Pelham,
The right honourable George Onſlow, of Ember-Court in Surry, eſq;

MANGOTSFIELD.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of King's-Barton, near Briſtol, four miles diſtant north-eaſt from that city, ſeven ſouth-weſt from Chipping-Sodbury, and thirty-two ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It derives its name, ſays ſir Robert Atkyns, from Mane, a Saxon general, who gained a victory in this place over the Britons. But with due deference to that gentleman, this ſeems not altogether ſatisfactory; for who has read of any ſuch general gaining a victory here? Beſides, ſir Robert's notion that the names of pariſhes which terminate in field are moſt commonly derived from a general having obtained a victory in ſuch places, as delivered by him in his account of Hewelsfield, is ill founded and erroneous.

In Domeſday-book the name is written Manegodesfelle, as I conceive, from maen, Britiſh, ſtone, goed, or coed, in the ſame language, a wood, and felle, a hill, or common, in which ſenſe it is ſtill uſed in the north of England; the whole, therefore, taken together, ſignifies a ſtony place in the wood upon a hill. And this explanation agrees with the ſituation and antient condition of the place; for tho' the woods are now aſſarted, it muſt formerly have been woody, as lying in Kingſwood-chaſe; and on the hill, at Downend in this pariſh, is one of the fineſt rocks of ſtone in the county. It riſes in very large ſuperficial dimenſions, and ſo evenly bedded as to be fit for pavements, without the leaſt labour to ſmooth the ſurface. Theſe circumſtances ſeem to confirm the etymology.

There are few or no antiquities here, except a ſmall camp of obſervation, at a place called Bury-hill, with a deep foſs, and high agger, thrown up, as ſuppoſed, by the Romans under Oſtorius. And there is another of the ſame kind, not far from it, in the pariſh of Winterbourn.

Leland, in the ſixth volume of his Itinerary, calls the village Magatesfeld and Magnusfeld, but he was not very accurate in writing the names of places, which he commonly did as they were pronounced upon the ſpot. Speaking of a ruin which he found here, he ſays, It was ons withowte fayle a nunnery. Parte of the Cloyſter ſtandithe yet. But the ruin has been long ſince deſtroy'd, and we know nothing more of the nunnery than what he ſays of it.

This village is one of thoſe places in the neighbourhood of the city of Briſtol, which abound with a very laſting kind of coal, already mentioned in the accounts of Bitton and St. George's.

Mangotsfield is reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter, now held at Thornbury.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

The abſtract from Domeſday-book concerning the large manor of Bertune, of which Manegodesfelle was a member, ſtands in the account of the pariſh of St. George in Kingſwood.

One manor in Mangotsfield belonged to the Blounts of Bitton, whoſe arms are cut in ſtone on the church porch, i.e. Argent, two bars azure, over all an eſcarbuncle of eight rays gules, promette and florette Or.

This manor was purchaſed by William Player, eſq; in whoſe family it continued for ſeveral generations. It is now the property of Charles Bragge, eſq; who married Anne, the eldeſt daughter of Benjamin Bathurſt, late of Lidney-Park in this county, eſq; deceaſed, by whom he hath iſſue two ſons, Charles and William; and one daughter, Anne. He has a handſome ſeat at Cleeve-Hill, in this pariſh. His arms are, Or, a chevron between three buffalos ſable.

Another manor, held of the honour of Glouceſter, antiently belonged to the Putots, whom ſir Robert Atkyns calls Piccots. William de Putot died ſeized of it 15 H. 3. He built a chapel in his manor houſe at Manegodesfeld, and had a ſpecial grant° of a free chantry in that chapel.

° This grant is inſerted in Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon, as follows:

Conceſſio facta W. de Putot de libera Cantaria habenda in Capella Curiæ de Manegodesfeld.

He

He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire for ſeveral years. Lord Berkeley was ſeized of it afterwards, and granted it to Philip Langley, eſq; 9 Jac. 1. It was again ſold, in the year 1665, to John Meredith, eſq; who planted a large vineyard in this place, and was ſucceeded in the manor by his ſon John Meredith, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Mr. William Meredith ſold it to Edward Colſton, eſq; and it is now in jointure to the widow of the late Mr. Francis Colſton.

Ruggeway, or Ridgway, is alſo a diſtinct manor, lying part in this pariſh, and part in that of Stapleton. Nicholas Barſtable held Ruggeway within the manor of Bertune 13 H. 4. Edward earl of Hertford was owner of it 31 H. 8. It belonged to Matthew Smyth, of Long Aſhton in com. Somerſet, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and is now the property of ſir Jarrit Smyth, bar^{t}. by purchaſe of the coheireſſes of the late ſir John Smyth, baronet.

Edward Andrews, eſq; has a handſome ſeat in this pariſh, called Hill-houſe.

HAMLETS. 1. Downend is a populous hamlet, already taken notice of on account of its quarries of excellent paving ſtone.

2. Morend, in which the before-mentioned camp is ſituated.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Briſtol, ſaid in Ecton to be about 20*l.* a year clear value; but it was augmented, in the year 1720, by the donations of Edward Colſton and John Dowel, eſq^{rs}. and by queen Anne's bounty; and a ſecond time, in 1758, by contribution of the principal inhabitants, and by the queen's bounty. It was originally only a chapel of eaſe to St. Peter's church in Briſtol, and belonged to St. James's monaſtery there. The rectory and advowſon were granted to John Brain 35 H. 8. and paſſed afterwards to Mr. Dowel, and then to Mr. Wolly and others, who ſold to the ſeveral proprietors of lands the tithes of their reſpective eſtates. Mrs. Wilmot is patroneſs, and Mr. Chriſtopher Haines is the preſent incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It conſiſts of the nave, two ailes, and a chancel, with a ſpire ſteeple on the ſouth ſide, in which are ſix bells and a clock. There is a ſmall chancel on the north ſide of the great one, which is the burying-place of ſeveral of the family of the Merediths. Here are two effigies in ſtone, at full length, and well preſerved, ſuppoſed to be deſigned for ſome of the family of the Blounts, who had great property here, and in the neighbouring pariſh of Bitton.

At the beginning of the preſent century there were 150 houſes, and about 750 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 24 were freeholders; yearly births 17, burials 15. Atkyns. But at that time the regiſter was very ill kept. In ten years, beginning at 1760, the baptiſms were 623, and the burials 372. And the preſent number of inhabitants is ſomething above 2000. By which it appears that the proportion of annual burials is to the number of inhabitants about as 1 to 51, and that the ſituation is very healthy.

MARSHFIELD.

THIS pariſh conſtitutes the upper diviſion of the hundred of Thornbury. It lies ſeven miles north-eaſtward from Bath, ſeven ſouth-eaſtward from Chipping-Sodbury, twelve and a half eaſt from Briſtol, thirty-five ſouth from Glouceſter, and one hundred and three weſt from London.

It is ſituated on high ground, with a fine healthy air, and bounded on the ſouth by a brook which divides it from Somerſetſhire; on the eaſt by the pariſh of Wraxal, in Wiltſhire; on the weſt by the village of Cold Aſton; and on the north by Sherill's-brook, which ſeparates it from Littleton. The greater part is a light ſoil, better adapted to corn than paſture, and there are ſome wood-lands which produce good oak, aſh, and elm, but no beech wood.

The town of Marſhfield ſtands near the middle of the pariſh, and conſiſts chiefly of one ſtreet, near a mile long, through which a turnpike-road leads from London to Briſtol. The buſineſs of making malt to ſupply the cities of Bath and Briſtol was formerly very great here, for which the town is conveniently ſituated in a corn country; and tho' it has been for ſome time declining, yet it is ſtill pretty conſiderable.

The market, which is but little frequented, except in the malting ſeaſon, is held on Tueſday; and there are two fairs in the year, on the 24th of May, and the 24th of October, for which privileges their charter was renewed in the reign of king James the Firſt.

The town has a bailiff for its chief officer, choſen annually at the court-baron. He is attended occaſionally by a ſerjeant at mace, and other officers, to examine the weights and meaſures, which ſeems to be the proper duty of his office; but he always acts as a peace officer in the abſence of the conſtable; and it is ſaid that he has authority to commit to priſon for certain offences, but no ſuch thing is remembered to have been done by any of the preſent inhabitants. There are three tithings in the pariſh, with their diſtinct peace officers. The borough, as it is called, and the pariſh are reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the honour of Glouceſter.

An extenſive down of fine paſture (which is common to the freeholders) lies a little eaſtward of the borough, where are viſible traces of intrenchments, and not far diſtant from them, five tumuli, or barrows, bearing teſtimony of a battle having been fought there. The people call the largeſt of them Oſwald's Tump, and have a tradition among them that the engagement was between Oſwald king of the Northumbrians, and Peuda king of the Mercians, wherein the latter proved victorious. It is probable, that upon the credit of this tradition ſir Robert Atkyns framed the etymology of the name of the town, which he aſſerts is called Marſhfield from the Mercians, who gained a great victory over the Weſt Saxons near this place. But the battle between Oſwald king of Northumberland, and Peuda king of Mercia, wherein the former was killed, really happened at a place called Maſerfeld, which being ſomething like Marſhfield occaſioned the miſtake. Oſwald's body was cruelly expoſed by his enemy upon a croſs, which, it is ſaid, occaſioned the place to be afterwards called Oſweſtre, in Britiſh Croix Oſwald, now a town in Shropſhire.

Our chronicles make no mention of any battle happening in this place, (tho' the barrows may be conſidered as an inconteſtible proof of it) wherefore we are totally in the dark as to the parties between whom, and the time when it happened.

There are three ſtones, near a place called the Rocks, to mark the limits of the counties of Glouceſter, Wilts, and Somerſet, where they meet in a point. One of thoſe ſtones ſtands in the pariſh of Marſhfield, which borders upon the two laſt mentioned counties; and I am inclined to think that this circumſtance gave occaſion to the name of the pariſh, for Mearc, in the Anglo Saxon language, ſignifies a limit, or boundary. So Rodmarton, Didmarton, Tormarton, are names of villages all bordering on Wiltſhire, and are ſuppoſed to take their origin from the ſame circumſtance of ſituation, and to have the ſame Saxon word in their compoſition. Yet I am not ignorant that ſome would have the name derived from Mars, the god of war; whilſt others ſuppoſe that the true reading is Marysfield, from the dedication of the church to the virgin Mary; but the manner of writing it in Domeſday is unfavourable to theſe chymerical notions.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This place is arranged in Domeſday-book under the title Terra Regis, and is conſequently part of the antient demeans of the crown.

'Queen Eddit held Meresfelde in Edredeſtane 'hundred. There are fourteen hides, and in de-'mean five plow-tillages, and thirty-ſix villeins, 'and thirteen bordars, with thirteen plow-tillages. 'There are eighteen ſervi. A prieſt hath one of 'thoſe hides. In the time of king Edward it paid '35 l. but it now pays 47 l.' Dom. Book, p. 68.

Soon after the Norman conqueſt, this manor was given to the biſhoprick of Wells, and afterwards alienated, by John de Villula, biſhop of that dioceſe, who firſt aſſumed the title of biſhop of Bath, to the monaſtery of Bath in the year 1106. But it is probable they had only a term in it, for it paſſed afterwards to the earl of Glouceſter. William, the ſecond earl of Glouceſter, gave the manor of Marſhfield, with the hundred, to the abbey of Keynſham in Somerſetſhire, which he had founded for black canons, and amply endowed.

The abbat of Keynſham purchaſed a charter of markets and fairs, free warren, and other privileges, 50 H. 3. and a Quo Warranto iſſuing againſt him 15 E. 1. he pleaded this charter, and his plea was allowed; as it was in another Quo Warranto 2 R. 2. The abbat had a confirmation of markets, fairs, and other privileges, 2, 3, & 4 E. 4. and the manor continued in that abbey 'till it was diſſolved.

King Henry the Eighth granted a leaſe of this manor to ſir Anthony Kingſton, for ſix years, at 80*l.* rent; and lord Willoughby and ſir Thomas Henage obtained a grant of the inheritance, in exchange for lands in Lincolnſhire, 2 E. 6. Lord Willoughby conveyed the manor to the duke of Somerſet, by whoſe attainder it reverted to the crown.

King Edward the Sixth then granted a leaſe thereof, for thirty-nine years, at 80*l.* yearly rent, to ſir Henry Sydney. After which queen Elizabeth granted the fee to Thomas Ratcliffe, earl of Suſſex, and lord chamberlain, for his good ſervice againſt the rebels in the north. The earl ſold the manor to John Gorſlet, John Chambers, Nicholas Webb, and Thomas Cripps, which laſt died 43 Eliz. ſeized of Eggleſcombe's-wood, and divers meſſuages, lands, tenements, and of a certain annual ſum of money, called Port-rent and Burrowe-downe-rent, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition taken the following year. But much the greateſt ſhare of the eſtate was purchaſed by Gorſlet.

William Gorſlet, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, from whom it deſcended to John Harrington, of Kelſton in Somerſetſhire, eſq; whoſe mother was the daughter and heireſs of Mr. Gorſlet. From the Harringtons it paſſed by purchaſe, and is veſted in ſir William Codrington, baronet, the preſent lord of the manor.

William Att-Green was ſeized of four meſſuages and two yard-lands in Marſhfield, in truſt for the abbey of Keynſham, 19 E. 2. Sir John Tracy and others were ſeized of lands in this place 37 E. 3. William Gibbs and others were alſo ſeized of two meſſuages in Marſhfield, in truſt for the abbey of Keynſham, 21 R. 2.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

Beſide the borough, there are the eaſt, ſouth, and weſt tithings, with their proper officers. The hamlets are,

1. Weſtonton, formerly called Old Marſhfield, or Little Marſhfield. It has been a diſtinct pariſh, called St. Pancras, according to ſir Robert Atkyns; and a well in this hamlet ſtill bears the name of that ſaint.

The

The other hamlets made another diſtinct pariſh, under the denomination of St. Nicholas's pariſh.

2. Okeford. William de la Green held lands in Okeford and Upton, within the manor of Marſhfield, 4 E. 3. John Jacob, eſq; deſcended from the family of the Nortons in Wiltſhire, was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century, from whom it deſcended to Miſs Jacob, who has a handſome ſeat called the Rocks, near this place.

3. Ayford.

4. Aſhwick. Mr. William Webb was lord of the manor of Aſhwick, and proprietor of a good houſe and eſtate there, all which are now the property of Mr. Iſaac-Webb Hardwick.

5. Bicks. This manor formerly belonged to the Criſps, afterwards to ſir William Deans, and is now the property of Miſs Oland.

The manor of Meers in Marſhfield belonged formerly to the earls of Stafford. It was forfeited to the crown by the attainder of the duke of Buckingham, and granted to Henry lord Stafford, and to Urſula his wife, 2 Mar. and the ſame family now receives chief rents of ſeveral perſons in this place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year, including the ſeveral donations for its augmentation, before which it was valued at 50*l.* only.

In the reign of king Richard the Second, the impropriation and the advowſon belonged to the abbey of Keynſham; they were afterwards veſted in the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and coming to the crown at the diſſolution, queen Mary, 2° regni, gave them both, in exchange for the manor of Steepinglee, and other manors in Bedfordſhire and Eſſex, to New College in Oxford, who are patrons, and Mr. Michell is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation is worth about 300*l.* a year, and now in leaſe to Mr. Merryweather.

The vicarage was augmented in the year 1725, with a donation of 200*l.* by ſir William Perkins, and the queen's bounty.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a handſome building, conſiſting of the nave and an aile on each ſide, and a lofty tower, with pinnacles, at the weſt end, which, from its elevated ſituation, is ſeen at a great diſtance.

There were two chantries in this church: Jeſus chantry, of which Henry Neal was the laſt incumbent; and St. Clement's chantry, of which Robert Savage was the laſt incumbent, each of whom enjoyed a penſion of 1*l.* 10*s.* in the year 1553.

In the year 1529, Thomas Parker, who was chancellor and vicar general to Jeronimus de Ghinucciis, or de Nugutiis, an Italian, biſhop of Worceſter, at the requeſt of John Goſſelat the bailiff, and lord of the vill of Marysfield, (as it is called in a certain antient writing) and the greater part of the community of the ſame vill, eſtabliſhed a gild in this church, with rules or ſtatutes for the government of all that ſhould enter into that fraternity. More of the nature of theſe gilds may be ſeen under Dyrham. The ſame Thomas Parker new built the vicarage houſe, but that was taken down, and a very handſome one built on the ſcite of it, by Mr. Carey, the vicar, about the year 1734.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is nothing very curious under this head, what I have taken notice of being chiefly for the ſake of family arms, and charitable donations; except, indeed, the following quaint epitaph. Over it, in a ſcutcheon, is a lion rampant.

Life is the Day of Grace, and Death the Night;
Live well, who knows when he ſhall looſe the Light.
Soe did the tenant of this tombe, for hee
Made haſt to purchaſe Immortalitie.
Death finding him receaving Cuſtomes, lookes
Tymes Records, ſumde his Days, and croſſd the Bookes.
And now the Cuſtomers from Cuſtomes free,
He paid to Nature what her Duties bee.
Scarce had hee ranne ovt halfe his race of life,
When Heaven and Earth to have him were at Striſe:
Whoſe active Sovle wore ovte his fleſh ſoe nigh,
Twas time ſhe ſhovld the tired corps lay by.
To bad men death is ſad; when good men dy
It is their Birth to ioyes eternitie:
Iudg then, what he did looſe who loſt but breath,
Liv'd to die well, and dyed A MEREDETH.

Non tam vita quam mortalitas finita.

Benefactions.

The donations to the vicarage are ſpecified under the account of the church.

John Harrington left 6*l.* a year, and the reverend Mr. Kennings 20*s.* a year for teaching children to read. Mrs. Dioniſia Long gave an eſtate of 29*l.* a year in Frampton Cotterel, and another of 26*l.* a year in Iron Acton, both purchaſed in the year 1731, and 900*l.* in South-Sea Annuities, with which a ſchool is endowed, and twenty boys have their clothing and education. But out of the income of theſe eſtates, ſix poor widows are to be paid 6*l.* a year each. The biſhop of the dioceſe is a truſtee.

Mr. Elias Criſpe, alderman of London, gave 4*l.* a year, paid out of Salter's-Hall, for eight ſermons. He alſo founded an almſhouſe, conſiſting of a chapel, with a ſpire in the middle, and eight dwellings for as many poor men and women, and endowed it with 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year; which income ſir Nicholas Criſpe afterwards enlarged by a donation of 100*l.* ſo that the poor people now receive 1*s.* 6*d.* a week each. It appears by an inſcription on the almſhouſe, that it was built in the year 1619.

Mr. Gunning, of Briſtol, gave 5*l.* a year to the poor, and a piece of land has been purchaſed with 150*l.* given at ſeveral times to the ſame uſe.

Mr. Willis, killed at Gibraltar about eighty years ago, gave 25*l.* to be a ſtock for the poor for ever.

At the beginning of this century there were 150 houſes, and about 800 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 29, burials 24. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms, excluſive of the diſſenters, were 343, the burials, including all, 303; and the preſent number of inhabitants is about 1237.

MARSTON, or MARSTON SICCA.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Kifteſgate, ſix miles ſouth-weſt from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickſhire, ſix north from Campden, and thirty-four north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

It lies in a flat vale country, yet the greater part of the pariſh is arable land. Antiently the name was written Mereſtone, which I ſuppoſe to ſignify the marſhy town, or watry town, for the pariſh is very ſubject to floods in the winter. This etymology is rendered more probable by conſidering that there are ſeveral Marſtons in Warwickſhire and Wiltſhire, which, as well as the place under conſideration, lie in flat countries ſubject to floods. The addition of Sicca, or Dry, tho' of an oppoſite meaning, and incongruous to the former part of the name, is not unaptly apply'd to this place; for notwithſtanding its ſuperabundance of water in the winter, it is frequently very much diſtreſſed for want of it in dry ſeaſons, and having no ſpring in the pariſh, the inhabitants are then obliged to drive their cattle to the Avon: What water they uſe for culinary purpoſes, they commonly ſtrain through ſieves, to cleanſe it from myriads of inſects with which it abounds in the ſummer months. It is alſo called Long Marſton, from the length of the village, and becauſe the greater part of the houſes ſtand in a row on the ſide of the road.

The only curioſity in the village is a roaſting-jack, in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Tomms, ſaid to be the ſame which king Charles was ſet to wind up, when he appeared as ſervant to Mrs. Lane. It is not curious in itſelf, but only as it is connected in ſtory with that prince.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of S. Mary of Coventreu holds 'Mereſtone in Celfleode hundred. There are ten 'hides, and three plow-tillages in demean, and 'fifteen villeins, and three bordars, with twelve 'plow-tillages. There are ſix ſervi, and a meadow 'worth 10*s.* It was worth 8*l.* now 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The eſtate mentioned in the record to have been held by Hugh de Grentemaiſnor, and apply'd to this pariſh by ſir Robert Atkyns, lies in Broad Marſton, in the pariſh of Pebworth.

The prior of Coventry purchaſed a charter for court leet, gallows, and tumbrel in this manor, in the reign of king Henry the Third, and pleaded this charter in a Quo Warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1. and his claim was allowed. It appears that the abbey of Winchcombe had a manor in Marſton at the ſame time, for the abbey purchaſed a charter of free warren in Merſton 35 H. 3. and bought the advowſon of the church in the ſame reign. He was ſeized of the manor of Marſton, with free warren, 15 E. 1. at which time a Quo Warranto was alſo brought againſt that abbat. But ſoon after, the whole manor was veſted in the abbey of Winchcombe, and ſo continued 'till the diſſolution.

It was granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter 8 Eliz. and the lands were ſoon afterwards ſold among ſeveral of the inhabitants, but the royalty of the manor was veſted in Ralph Sheldon, eſq; in the year year 1608, from whom it deſcends to William Sheldon, eſq; the preſent lord of this manor. His arms, as they are blazoned in the heralds laſt viſitation of this county, are, Sable, a feſs Or between three drakes argent, a mullet for difference.

The records ſhew, that Lettice the daughter of Nicholas purchaſed lands in Marſton, of Joan her ſiſter, who was married to Richard de la Hay, 8 Joh. Henry Cooper purchaſed lands in Dry Marſton, when they were divided, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and left them to Thomas his ſon, who died ſeized thereof 9 Car. leaving Henry his ſon two years old.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, of which Mr. Loggin is patron and incumbent. The pariſh has been lately incloſed, and lands allotted to the rectory in lieu of tithes, whereby the living, which before was worth about 145*l.* a year, is greatly improved. About 120 acres of paſture were the antient demean, and are tithe free.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It is a ſmall one, with a low tower. There is an inſcription for Mr. Samuel Burton, archdeacon of this dioceſe, which the reader may ſee at p. 164.

At the beginning of this century there were 40 houſes, and about 190 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 21 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. But ſir Robert's account was not accurate, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 70, and the burials 46; and in a like period, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 67, and the burials 42; and the preſent number of inhabitants is 199, which is in the proportion of ſomething more than 47 to 1 of the annual burials.

MATSON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, ten miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Cheltenham, ſeven north from Stroud, and three ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is very pleaſantly ſituated on the ſlope of a ſugar-loaf-hill, called Robin Hood's hill, which ſtands in the midſt of the vale, and tho' the aſcent is near a mile to the top of it, the ſoil is every where rich and fertile, and produces an excellent kind of herbage.

From before the Norman conqueſt, and for many ages afterwards, making and forging of iron was the principal employment of the town of Glouceſter, and the ore was fetched from this hill, where it is ſaid to be found in great plenty. The city of Glouceſter is ſupplied with their beſt water from ſprings that riſe on the ſide of it; and it appears by antient writings, that an aqueduct was carried from hence to that city, above four hundred years ago; for one William Gerard having granted the monks of the Grey Friers in Glouceſter a ſupply of water from this place, a diſpute aroſe between that houſe and St. Peter's abbey concerning the quantity the former was to receive, which was ſettled by Edward the Black Prince, in the year 1357.

The water of one of thoſe ſprings running over a bed of iron ore, diſolves ſome of the finer particles, and is reputed to poſſeſs chalybeate properties.

The name of Matſon does not occur in Domeſday-book, nor does it appear by what name this village was known, when that record was compiled. About the reign of king Henry the Third, it was variouſly written, as Matteſdune, and Mateſdone; and afterwards Matiſnoll, Mateſden, and now as at the head of this account.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

The manor of Matſen was held of Humphry de Bohun and Joan his wife 46 E. 3. William de Gardinis was lord of Matteſdon in the reign of king Edward the Firſt.

William Nottingham, eſq; the king's attorney-general, by his deed, dated Aug. 13, 10 E. 4. gave the manor of Matteſdon to the abbey of Glouceſter, for the erecting of a chantry in the abbey, to be ſupplied by two of their own monks; and a family of the name of Robins, alias Botcher, were for ſeveral generations ſucceſſive tenants under the abbey. After the diſſolution, the manor was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8.

There is another manor in this pariſh, for the records ſhew, that William Gerard de Mateſden, and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Matteſden, and of lands in Cugley in the pariſh of Newent, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 8 E. 2.

The manor-houſe of Matteſdon, and all the buildings, orchards, gardens, and all the paſture and arable lands, formerly appurtenant to the houſe, being parcel of the land that belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted, by the crown, to the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter, Sept. 11, 34 H. 8. And the mayor and burgeſſes, with the king's licence, ſold the ſame to Thomas Lane, eſq; Dec. 10, 35 H. 8.

Richard Pate was ſeized of Matſon in the reign of king Edward the Sixth. Richard Liggon had livery of it 9 Eliz. ſoon after which it was convey'd to the Selwyns.

William Selwyn was governor of Jamaica. He had three ſons, John, of whom hereafter; Charles, who died without iſſue; and Henry, who married Ruth Compton, daughter of Anthony Compton of Gainſlow, near Berwick upon Tweed, eſq; and by her had iſſue two ſons, Charles-Jaſper, and William; and ſeven daughters, Albinia lady Boſton, Catharine Wilkes, Mary, Charlotte, Frances, Hannah, (deceaſed,) and Louiſa.

Charles-Jaſper, the elder ſon, married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Coxeter, of Bampton in Oxfordſhire, and by her hath three ſons and three daughters.

William, the ſecond ſon, is an eminent barriſter at law. He married Frances-Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. John Dod, of Woodford in Eſſex, and by her hath iſſue two ſons, George and Thomas, and two daughters.

I return now to John the eldeſt ſon of governor Selwyn. He married Mary, daughter of major-general Farrington, of Chiſlehurſt in Kent, by whom he had iſſue two ſons, John, and George-Auguſtus; and one daughter Albinia, married to the honourable Thomas Townſhend, lately deceaſed, and by him had iſſue three ſons, Thomas, Charles, and Henry; and two daughters, Albinia, married to George lord Middleton; and Mary. Thomas Townſhend, the eldeſt ſon, married Elizabeth Powys, and by her hath iſſue four ſons and two daughters. Charles, the ſecond ſon, died unmarried. Henry, the third ſon, was a lieutenant-colonel of the firſt regiment of the foot-guards, and was killed at Wilhelmſtahl, in the year 1762.

John Selwyn, ſon of John, died unmarried in the year 1751, whereby

George-Auguſtus, the ſecond ſon, ſucceeded his brother, and is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a handſome ſeat near the church, and a large eſtate here. He has repreſented the city of Glouceſter in five ſucceſſive parliaments, and is now one of the repreſentatives for that city. His arms are, Argent, on a bend ſable, cotized azure, three annulets, within a bordure ingrailed gules.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 25*l.* a year, beſides the augmentation it has received by Mr. Hodges's legacy, and the queen's bounty. There is no houſe for the incumbent.

Ernulph the ſon of Ralph gave the church of Matteſdone to the abbey of Glouceſter, and Simon biſhop of Worceſter confirmed the grant. The advowſon of the rectory of Mattiſdon, late belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, (not to the priory of Lanthony, as in ſir Robert Atkyns) was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter 34 H. 8. And the dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons.

The church is ſmall and neat, with the following inſcription over the door: This Church rebuilt at the ſole Expence of Albinia Selwyn, Relict of his Excellency Major-General Selwyn, A. D. 1739.

IS a parish in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, seven miles south-east from Newent, eight south-westward from Tewkesbury, and two north-west from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of rich meadow and pasture land. The turnpike road from Gloucester to Worcester, and to Ledbury, leads through it; and there is a bridge over the Severn at a place called the Lower Lode, which is repaired at the expence of this parish. Upon Maysemore bridge there formerly stood a cross, with this inscription:

In honore Dni nri Ihu Cristi qui nobis crucifixus erat. Ceosie croz fist Willm fiz Anketill de Lilton, et Ciseoli Willm fiz Anketill comenza pont de Mazemore. That is, For the honour of the lord Jesus Christ, who was crucified for us, William the son of Anketill made this cross, and the same William the son of Anketill began the bridge of Maysemore.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The name of this manor is not to be found in Domesday-book, for when that record was compiled, this was part of the parish of St. Mary de Lode.

King Henry the First gave this manor, then called Ablode, and the grove of Barton, called Haygrave, to the abbey of Gloucester, ad victum Monachorum, in exchange for an orchard in Gloucester, which belonged to the monks of that abbey; and in the year 1101, granted the abbey free warren therein, which was allowed 15 E. 1. It continued in that house 'till the dissolution, and upon erecting the see of Gloucester, was granted to the bishoprick 33 H. 8. as appears by the endowment. It was confirmed 6 E. 6. and the bishop of Gloucester is lord of the manor.

Henry Bawn and others were seized of two messuages and one yard-land in Maysemore and Eghterton, in trust for the abbey of Gloucester, 1 R. 2. John Trimmes and others were seized of two messuages, twenty acres of arable, eight acres of meadow, and two acres of wood in Maysemore, one toft in Gloucester, and one acre in Elmore 15 R. 2.

A portion of tithes, and common in Pully-mead in Maysemore, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Arthur Porter 5 H. 8.

HAMLET. Overton is a small hamlet in this parish, of which there is nothing remarkable.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester. The bishop has the impropriation, and his lessee provides a minister with the bishop's approbation, to whom he pays 12*l.* a year. This curacy has been twice augmented, in the years 1719, and 1733, by donations from their lordships the bishops of Winchester and Gloucester, and by a legacy left by Mr. Hodges, and the Queen's bounty; so that it is now worth 60*l.* a year. The church formerly belonged to St. Mary before the abbey gate. Abbat Gilbert Foliot granted it to the light of the altar of St. Peter, at the intreaty of the whole convent.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Giles, has a handsome embattled tower at the west end, with five bells.

Benefactions.

Mr. Francis Wheeler, arch-deacon of Salop, who died in 1675, and was buried here, gave 50*s.* for a sermon on New-years-day, paid by the minister and bailiffs of Bridgnorth, and secured by lands near that town. He also gave bread monthly to the poor, which charity is secured by an acre of land in Wickham meadow. Mrs. Grace Wheeler, his widow, has given the like charity; and Mr. Edmond Ready has given bread to the poor.

In the year 1562, there were 36 housholders in this parish. At the beginning of this century, there were 44 houses, and about 200 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 6, and burials 6. The inhabitints are now 210.

MEYSEY-HAMPTON.

PART of this parish lies in Wiltshire, but the greater part is in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, in Gloucestershire, and antiently lay in Gersdones hundred. The church stands six miles distant west from Leachlade, six east eaſt from Cirenceſter, and twenty-three (by the road through the laſt-mentioned town) ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture, and very good arable land. It is bounded in part by the river Thames on the ſouth ſide, and by the road from Cirenceſter to London on the north.

The name of Hampton has been already explained. The prenomen was taken from the family of the Meyſies, who were antiently owners of this manor, and ſerved to diſtinguiſh it from two or three other places in this county of the ſame name.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The Domeſday account belonging to this pariſh, was miſapplied by ſir Robert Atkyns to Minchin Hampton. It may be thus tranſlated:

'Earl Roger holds Hantone in Gerſdones hundred, and Turold, nephew to Wiget, holds it of him. Leueric held it. There are five hides. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four villeins, and two bordars, and a prieſt, and two other men, who have among them all two plow-tillages and a half. There are ſix ſervi. It was worth 8*l.* now [only] 3*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

This manor was held of the honour of Glouceſter, and the pariſh is now within the juriſdiction of the court of that honour. The maſter of the knights-templers had court-leet, waifs, and felons goods, by the grant of king Henry the Third, which were allow'd in a Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1.

Robert de Meyſie was lord of this manor, and high ſheriff of the county, in the year 1255, whoſe ſon William ſucceed him, and left John Meyſie his ſon and heir. Robert Meyſie, kinſman to John, was ſeized of Marſton Meyſie in the ſame pariſh, and agreed to pay John 12*d.* yearly, that the tenants of Marſton Meyſie ſhould pay ſuit of court to the manor of Hampton Meyſie only twice a year, 43 H. 3. The ſame John de Meyſie left Eve, or Elianor, an only daughter and heireſs, married to Nicholas de St. Maur, who, in her right, died ſeized of the manor of Hampton Meyſey, and the advowſon of the church, 11 E. 2. Eſch.

Richard Seymour, ſon of Nicholas, died ſeized of this manor 2 H. 4. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Richard, who had an only daughter and heireſs Alice, with whom this eſtate paſſed by her marriage to William lord Zouch.

William Zouch died ſeized of Meyſey-Hampton 23 H. 8. leaving Frances, his only daughter and heireſs, married to William Sanders, who levied a fine thereof to Edmond lord Chandos 4 Mar. Sir John Hungerford was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards the property of ſir Matthew Hale, from whom it paſſed in exchange for Alderley, to Mr. Barker of Fairford, whoſe deſcendant, Mrs. Lambe, is the preſent lady of this manor, and keeps a court leet.

HAMLET. Marſton is a very large hamlet and tithing, lying in Wiltſhire, on the north ſide of the Thames, and had its name from its low and marſhy ſituation. The biſhop of Saliſbury is lord of this manor. For the convenience of the inhabitants, who are at a conſiderable diſtance from the church, there is a neat chapel of eaſe built in this hamlet, dedicated to St. James. The rector of Meyſey-Hampton is patron. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty. The intereſt of 70*l.* is left for the education and apprenticing of poor children of this hamlet.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 300*l.* a year, in the gift of Corpus Chriſti College in Oxford. The reverend William Camplin, clerk, is the preſent incumbent. Livery of the advowſon was granted to Giles Bridges, lord Chandos, 15 Eliz.

The glebe conſiſts of about 80 acres of arable, and 25 acres of meadow and paſture. No lands are exempt from tithe.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is built in the form of a croſs, with a tower in the middle, in which are ſix bells.

Benefactions.

In the year 1650, Richard Samway, rector of the pariſh, gave 10*l.* the intereſt to be equally diſtributed every year between the poor of Meyſey Hampton, and thoſe of Marſton; and in the year 1712, John Beall, D.D. then rector, gave the like ſum to the ſame uſe. In 1706, Anne Forſhew gave 5*l.* In 1715, Thomas Gegg gave 5*l.* In 1721, John Forſhew gave 5*l.* the intereſt of which ſums to be given to the poor of this place. And John Kireheval, D.D. rector of this pariſh, gave 10*l.* each to Meyſey Hampton and Marſton, the intereſt to be expended in the ſchooling and apprenticing out of poor children; and in 1756, John Jenner gave 20*l.* to the former, and 10*l.* to the latter, for the uſe of their poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 3 houſes, and about 360 inhabitants in the whole pariſh, whereof 14 were freeholders in the Glouceſterſhire part; yearly births 8, burials 8. Atkyns. In the year 1776, there were 54 houſes, and 265 inhabitants in the Glouceſterſhire part; and the ſouls in the hamlet of Marſton are computed to be at leaſt 200.

MICKLETON.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Kifteſgate, ſeven miles diſtant eaſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, five north from Campden, and thirty-one north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the vale part of the county, and conſiſts wholly of rich paſture land. The name ſignifies the great town, from the old word mickle, muckle, which is ſtill uſed for great in Scotland, and now obſolete in this part of our iſland. And it was very properly ſo called, for whilſt the neighbouring pariſhes conſiſted of three or four, and ſome of five or ſix hides of land, it appears by Domeſday, that there were no leſs than four-and-in Mickleton, independent of the hamlets of Hopton and Hidcote.

Meen-hill, ſtanding between this pariſh and Queinton, is no leſs beautiful on account of the richneſs of its verdure, than conſpicuous from its ſituation in the midſt of the vale. Part of it lies in this pariſh, and part in Queinton, under which head more may be read in its commendation from the good old poet Drayton, as well as ſome account of the camp on its top, and of the battle ſaid to have been fought there.

Giles Widows, and Thomas his brother, were natives of this place, and zealous friends to the royal cauſe in the great civil war. The former diſtinguiſhed himſelf as a clergyman, by his loyal ſermons, preached at Oxford, whilſt that city was garriſoned by king Charles the Firſt. He died in 1645. Thomas was ſucceſſively maſter of the ſchools at Glouceſter, Woodſtock, and Northleach, and author of a ſatyrical piece intituled, The Juſt Devil of Woodſtock, giving an account of the frightful apparition that diſturbed the parliament commiſſioners in the ſale of the king's lands. He died in 1655.

That great and eminent lawyer, ſir Anthony Keck, was alſo born here, in 1630, and was conſtituted one of the lords commiſſioners of the great ſeal of England, in 1688. At his death, he left a large eſtate to his ſon Francis Keck, of Great Tewe in Oxfordſhire, eſq; which is ſtill enjoy'd by his deſcendants.

But not leſs eminent for learning than either of the forementioned perſons, was Mr. Richard Graves, lord of this manor, who died in the year 1729. With great diligence he employ'd the latter part of his life time to inveſtigate, and to give an hiſtorical account of the antiquities of the country in this neighbourhood; but his papers were never publiſhed, and the editor of the preſent work greatly regrets the misfortune of not being able to avail himſelf of them.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor was in the crown in the year 960, in the reign of king Edgar. Æthelmere, or Ailmer, earl of Devonſhire, gave it, with the advowſon of the church, to the abbey of Eynſham in Oxfordſhire, which he founded in the year 1005, for monks of the Benedictine order. In Domeſday it is thus recorded:

'The church of Egleſham holds Muceltude in 'Celſſedetorn hundred. There are fourteen hides, 'and five plow-tillages in demean, and twenty 'villeins, and eight bordars, with ten plow-tillages. 'There are eight ſervi, and two ancillæ, and 'twenty-four meaſures of ſalt from Wich. It is 'worth and was worth 10*l.* The ſame church 'held it in the time of king Edward.' D. B. p. 72.

The abbat of Eynſham pleaded his right to court leet and free warren, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him, 15 E. 1. and his claim was then allowed, as it was again 34 E. 3.

By the diſſolution of the abbey, the manor came to the crown, and it was not alienated 'till queen

Elizabeth, in the year 1591, granted it to Richard Lukenore, and others, in truſt for John lord Lumley, who, in the year 1597, ſold it to Edward Fiſher, eſq; who died ſeized of it in 1627. Sir Edward Fiſher, his ſon, ſucceeded him, whoſe ſon, Edward Fiſher, eſq; ſold this eſtate, in the year 1656, to Richard Graves, eſq; who alſo purchaſed the manors of Weſton-Subedge, Aſton-Subedge, and the royalty of the hundred of Kifteſgate.

Richard Graves, eſq; dying in 1669, was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir Samuel Graves, who died in 1708. His ſon, Richard Graves, eſq; ſucceeded him, and was father of Morgan Graves, eſq; who died about the year 1771, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir Walwyn Graves, eſq; the preſent lord of this manor, and of thoſe of Weſton-Subedge, and Aſton-Subedge, and of the royalty of the hundred of Kifteſgate. His arms are, Gules, an eagle diſplay'd Or, as I find them, with many quarterings, on the monuments for this family, in the church of Mickleton. He has a good houſe, and a large eſtate here, and in other parts of this county, and elſewhere.

The earl of Coventry has alſo a good eſtate in this pariſh.

John de Vall was ſeized of lands in Mickleton 36 E. 3. as were William Grevil of Campden 3 H. 4. and ſir John Burge 11 E. 4. William Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Mickleton 11 H. 7.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Hidcote is a tithing in this pariſh, diſtinguiſhed by the additional name of Bateram, from another Hidcote in the pariſh of Ebrington. In Domeſday it is thus recorded:

'The church of Wincelcumbe holds Hidicote 'in Celſtede hundred. There are two hides free, 'and one plow-tillage in demean, with one ſervus. 'It is worth and was worth 40*s*.' D. B. p. 71.

This eſtate was afterwards veſted in the priory of Bradenſtoke in Wiltſhire, and at the diſſolution of that houſe, was granted by the crown to John Wyley and John Scudamore 37 H. 8. The manor now belongs to Thomas Edwards Freeman, of Batsford, in this county, eſq.

2. Clopton is another tithing. 'William Goizen-'boded holds Cloptune in Ceolſtede hundred. A 'houſe-carle held it in the time of king Edward. 'There are ten hides, and three plow-tillages in 'demean, and twelve villeins, and four bordars, 'and one radecheniſter, with nine plow-tillages. 'In Wicelcumbe there is one burgage [belonging 'to it.] It was worth 8*l*. now 100*s*.' D. B. p. 74.

This manor was given to the priory of Bonhommes at Eddington in Wiltſhire, and was granted by the crown to Michael Aſhfield 32 H. 8. It afterwards paſſed to the family of the Overburies, then to Thomas Rowney, of Oxfordſhire, eſq; and was given by a deſcendant from him to the honourable Mr. Noel, who is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of a conſiderable eſtate in this place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth 80*l*. a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Benjamin Feild is the preſent incumbent.

The rectory belonged to the abbey of Eynſham, and was granted to Roger Mannors, eſq; 18 Eliz. and now belongs to the honourable Mr. Noel, who has all the great tithes; and the vicar hath all the vicarial tithes. Tithes in Mickleton and Hedecot belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

Twenty-eight acres belong to the glebe.

The church is very handſomely pewed. It conſiſts of a nave and two ſide ailes, with a large chancel, and a gallery at the weſt end, and a ſpire ſteeple in the middle, with ſix bells.

In the window of the north aile, are ſeveral ſcutcheons with the family arms of Graves, impaling thoſe of Bates and Swan; alſo France and England quarterly. In two compartments, it is thus written in the Saxon character:

Benefactions.

In the year 1513, Richard Porter of Campden, gent. gave a meſſuage and yard-land in Mickleton, and a cloſe in Overton, now worth 60*l.* a year; which income, by a decree in chancery, is firſt to repair the church, then 20*l.* a year to be paid to the maſter of a free-ſchool, and the remainder, if there ſhould be any, to go to the poor.

In 1612, at the incloſing of the fields, thirty-three acres of land, called Horeſtone, were laid out by the land-owners, for the poor.

In 1623, Mr. Thomas Perks of this place, charged his four meadows next Long Marſton-way, with 20*s.* a year to the poor.

In 1678, Mrs. Dorothy Swan charged Tyms's cloſe with the payment of 40*s.* a year, 10*s.* of which to the miniſter for a ſermon on Chriſtmas-day, the reſt to be given in bread to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 83 houſes in this pariſh, and about 375 inhabitants, whereof 54 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 8. Atkyns. But by the pariſh regiſter it appears that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 73, and the burials 63; which is widely different from ſir Robert's account. Alſo in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 106, and the burials 97. And in the year 1773, there were 68 houſholders, and only 231 inhabitants. This account is more unfavourable to population than any I have found throughout the county, yet I have great reaſon to think think the numbers are accurately taken, as I counted the names upon the regiſter myſelf; and the miniſter gave me the number of ſouls in his pariſh. The whole pariſh is in dairy and grazing, in which fewer hands are employ'd than in tillage.

MINETY.

THE church lies ſix miles diſtant weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, ſix eaſtward from Malmeſbury, and twenty-five ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The pariſh church, the parſonage, the vicarage houſe, and a very ſmall hamlet, called Wiltſhire-row, lie in the hundred of Malmeſbury in Wiltſhire; the reſt, and far the greater part of the pariſh, lies in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety in Glouceſterſhire. But the whole pariſh is detached from the body of this county, and totally invironed by Wiltſhire.

This place in part gives name to the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety. What Crowthorne, the other part, ſignifies, will be the ſubject of immediate inquiry. When king Henry the Fourth came to the crown, all thoſe places now lying in this hundred were compriſed in that of Cirenceſter, there being then no ſuch hundred as Crowthorne and Minety, which was erected ſoon afterwards upon the following occaſion. The townſmen of Cirenceſter having ſuppreſſed a dangerous rebellion in the firſt year of that reign, the king, at their requeſt, granted them a Statute-Merchant, and other privileges, particularly that the town ſhould from thence-forward be a ſeparate hundred, and hold a diſtinct torn, or court. And all thoſe villages which 'till then belonged to the hundred of Cirenceſter, together with Minety, which was part of the manor of Cirenceſter, and the precincts of the abbey, were erected into a new hundred, and a diſtinct torn, or court, was held for them. The court held within the town was called the hundred of Cirenceſter, and ſo for ſome time was the other, but it was neceſſary to diſtinguiſh them. The In-torn, or hundred within the town, retained the old name, whilſt the new torn, or court, held without it, received the appellation of Th' Out-torn and Minety; and in proceſs of time has been corrupted, by vulgar ſpeakers and ignorant writers, to the unmeaning name of Crowthorne and Minety. Thus, the proper and ſignificant name being loſt, the new one was ſuppoſed to be taken from a place within the diſtrict, and ſome very ſagacious perſon fixing on a thorn-buſh in Stratton field, declared it to be the place in queſtion. The ſolution was eaſy, and ſuited the vulgar. The notion was inconſiderately adopted upon the credit of tradition, and it has for ſome time appeared in hiſtory.

The names of ſeveral other hundreds are as ſtrangely corrupted as this. I ſhall inſtance one only. It was antiently and properly written Grimboldeſtow, i.e. Grimbold's-place; but at length the original ſignification was loſt, and, for a courſe of five hundred years, it has been written nearly as we now write it, Grumbald's Aſh; and I have no doubt but there are many perſons who pretend to know the very tree which gave name to that hundred. But I return from this digreſſion to the pariſh of Minety.

Some part of it was full of wood in its antient ſtate, as appears by king John's confirmation of former grants to the abbey of Cirenceſter, wherein he reſerves his foreſt of Minchey, which I apprehend to be what we now call Bredon.

Minety is ſituated in a vale, and conſiſts chiefly of rich paſture land, ſome wood land, and very little arable. Here they make very good cheeſe, as they do alſo in moſt parts of North Wiltſhire, with which this pariſh is intermixt. But the moſt uncommon and remarkable of its natural productions is a kind of fibrous talky ſubſtance, white, opake, and laminated, called by ſome the Silver Mica, by others the Fibrous Plaiſter-ſtone. It is found in many parts of the pariſh, at the depth of nine or ten feet from the ſurface. There is alſo a ſpring of purging water, formerly much recommended by phyſicians, and drank by great numbers of people; but ſince ſo many ſprings at other places have been frequented, it has ſunk into neglect, and is at preſent very little regarded.

Should buſineſs or curioſity lead a ſtranger into this country, I adviſe him to make his viſit in the ſummer, leaſt he be either drowned, or ſtifled in the mire; for here Swill-brook overflows its banks, and fills the road (through which travellers muſt paſs) with water from three to eight feet in depth, and notwithſtanding ſome have loſt their lives, and many others are endangered every year, there is no order taken to carry off the water, nor to raiſe the road; ſo inſenſible, from habit, are theſe people to inconvenience and danger.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the reign of king Richard the Firſt, the town of Cirenceſter, and the town of Minchey or Minety, with the appurtenances, made and were the manor of Cirenceſter, as it is expreſſly mentioned in an inquiſition taken 1 H. 4. in order to diſcover the particulars of that manor. And it is very probable, that at the time of the general ſurvey, Minety was included in the account of the manor of Cirenceſter, wherefore we find no mention of this place in Domeſday.

King Richard the Firſt, in the ninth year of his reign, granted the manor of Cirenceſter to the abbey of that place, including ſo much of the town of Minchey as lay in Glouceſterſhire, and which was a member and barton of that manor; but he reſerved his foreſt of Minchey, as already taken notice of. Another part of Minchey or Mynety, which lay in Wiltſhire, belonged then to the abbey of Malmeſbury. John de Canning held Minety of the abbey of Cirenceſter, 20 E. 3.

Aſh

After the diſſolution of abbies, this manor was granted to Edward Bridges and Dorothy Praye 36 H. 8. Sir Edmond Bridges, lord Chandos, knight of the garter, died ſeized of Minety 15 Eliz. and livery of it was granted to Giles lord Chandos, his ſon and heir, the ſame year. Grey lord Chandos was lord of this manor in the year 1608. The reverſion of the manor of Minety was granted to ſir William Sandys, and Thomas Spencer, 3 Jac. Lord Rivers is the preſent lord of the manor, and keeps a court leet here. See Sudely.

Adam de Periton purchaſed lands in Minety of Hugh de Peverell 33 H. 3. Other lands in Minety, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to William earl of Southampton, and to his heirs male, 31 H. 8. The ſame were afterwards granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, in the thirty-fifth year of that reign, and were again granted to John Pope 36 H. 8. Lands in Minety, and the tithes of the demeans which belonged to the ſame priory, were granted to William Fitz-Williams and Arthur Hilton 7 E. 6.

There are ſeveral eſtates of inheritance in this pariſh, held of the lord by copy of court-roll, after the cuſtom of the manor, which can neither be alienated nor incumbered but by ſurrender in court.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the dioceſe of Gloceſter, worth about 90*l.* a year. The archdeacon of North Wiltſhire is patron, and Mr. Bricken-den is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation belongs to the ſame archdeacon.

The church ſtands in Wiltſhire, and therefore does not properly fall under conſideration; yet as the greater part of the pariſh lies in Glouceſterſhire, I ſhall give ſome account of it. It is dedicated to St. Leonard, and conſiſts of the nave, and an aile on the north ſide, and has a low embattled tower, with pinnacles, and a ring of ſix bells at the weſt end. Round the canopy over the pulpit is written in capitals, FIDES EX AVDITV, AVDITVS AVTEM PER VERBVM DEI. ROM. 10, 17.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

The moſt antient monument is a braſs plate fixed in the wall of the aile, and divided into two compartments by a pillar engraved in the middle. On the dexter ſide of it, are engraven the effigies and names of Nicholas Powlett, and Ames Powlett, his ſon, kneeling; and over the father's head are the arms, Sable, three ſwords in pile, the points in chief argent, pomels and hilts Or. The creſt ſtands ſeparate on one ſide of the arms, A dexter arm embowed, brandiſhing a broad ſword, all proper; and the motto on a label on the other ſide, GARDES LA FOY. On the ſiniſter ſide of the pillar, facing them, are the figures of Mary Powlett, his wife, and Elizabeth, Mary, and Edith, their daughters, kneeling, with the wife's family arms, Sable, two bars ermine, in chief three plates, a creſcent for difference, for Hungerford; with the creſt on one ſide, A garb erected between two ſickles proper. And on the other ſide, Three ſickles braced in a triangle. I take this Nicholas Powlett to be the ſecond ſon of ſir Hugh Poulett, who died in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and was anceſtor to the preſent earl Poulet.

Upon a marble table in the chancel, it is thus written:

Near this place lyeth the body of CHARLES PLEYDELL of Minty, the youngeſt Son of Sr CHARLES PLEYDELL of Midg-Hall, Kt. in the County of Wilts, who died the 15th Day of June 1704, Aged 76.

Lyeth alſo near this place the body of ARABELLA his Wife, the youngeſt daughter of Sr ROBERT LOVET of Lyſcomb in the County of Bucks, who died the 24th day of June, 1704, Aged 72.

This Marble was erected to their Memories by Wm PLEYDELL, Vicar of Wotton-Baſſet in the County of Wilts, their Son and Heir.——Arms, at the top of the monument, Per pale, baron and femme, 1. Argent, a bend gules gutty d'Or, between two Corniſh choughs proper, a chief counter compony Or and ſable. 2. Argent, three wolves paſſant in pale ſable, langued gules.

There is alſo a monument and memorial for ſome of the deſcendants from Charles Pleydell; a memorial for Joſeph Not, who died in 1705; and another, upon a flat ſtone, for Godfrey Jenkinſon, vicar of this place, who died the ſame year.

William Penn, anceſtor to ſir William Penn, the admiral, and to the preſent proprietor of Penſylvania, died in the year 1591, and was buried in this chancel. Atkyns. But I could find no memorial for him.

At the beginning of this century, there were 96 houſes, and about 480 inhabitants in the Glouceſterſhire part, whereof 32 were freeholders. In Wiltſhire-row were 9 houſes, and about 40 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 12, and burials 10. Atkyns. There are only 5 houſes at preſent in Wiltſhire-row, yet the inhabitants in general are computed to be about the ſame number as above. The freeholders, however, fall ſhort of the number mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns. It is ſuppoſed he included the copyholders of inheritance.

MINSTERWORTH.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, in the Foreſt diviſion, ſix miles north-eaſt from Newnham, ſeven eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, and three ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter. It extends near three miles in length, and conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture, with ſome arable land, and has a very large common lying on the ſouth ſide of it next the Severn.

The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Newnham runs through it, by the ſide of the river, which has a bold ſhore, finely wooded, and breaks upon the view in a very agreeable manner, in the courſe of the road between thoſe places.

It is almoſt ſingularly circumſtanced, in not being limitted by the Severn, as other pariſhes are that lie on the banks of that large river, but ſtretching over it, has ſome of its lands intermixed with Elmore pariſh, on the oppoſite ſide, at a place called Elmore's Back. How a diviſion ſo unnatural and extraordinary could originally take place, is difficult to conceive, unleſs the abbey of Glouceſter having lands in Elmore, by its influence procured them to be allotted to the pariſh of Minſterworth, where they had larger poſſeſſions.

Part of this pariſh lay formerly in the hundred of Weſtbury, and part in that of Langebrige, now included in Dudſton and King's-barton; but when the Dutchy hundred was firſt erected, this pariſh and Bully were taken out of the hundred of Weſtbury, which at that time had ſome other places added to it by way of compenſation, as appears by comparing thoſe which lay in that hundred when Domeſday was compiled, with thoſe of which it conſiſted ſome ages afterwards.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Peter of Glowec' holds 'Hamme and Mortune in Weſberies hundred. 'There are five hides in wood and in plain, and 'two plow-tillages in demean, and ſeven villeins, 'and two bordars, with ſix plow-tillages; a wood 'one mile long, and one broad. The church had 'veniſon in three parks in the time of king 'Edward, and ſo ſhe hath in the time of king 'William. It was worth 20*s.* now 40*s.*' D.B. p. 71.

The reader may poſſible be ſurprized, that in the above abſtract from the record, Minſterworth is not ſo much as mentioned. The reaſon is, that there was then no place ſo called. Its original name was Mortune, which ſignifies the town or place upon the great water, from Mor, Britiſh, the ſea, or ſome very large river. This is perfectly deſcriptive of the ſituation of Minſterworth. And that Mortune could be no other, I am induced to believe for the following reaſons.

All the other places in Weſtbury hundred are expreſſly mentioned in that record by their preſent names, or by ſuch as, varying but little from the preſent, cannot be miſtaken, viz. Neunham, Staure, Hope, Bicanofre, Dene, Bulelege, and Rodele. Beſide theſe, the manor of Hamme and Mortune lay in the ſame hundred. Now Hamme muſt be either Hampton, a place at preſent ſo called in this pariſh, or elſe Churcham, the next adjoining pariſh. And as Hamme and Mortune were originally joined in one manor, where is the latter ſo likely to be ſituated as adjoining to the former? Beſides, we find the very name ſtill ſubſiſting in that of the hamlet of Morcote, in Minſterworth; for what is Morcote but a contraction of Mortune-cote. Here the Severn frequently overflows its banks, and makes a kind of ſea, by laying the ham or common under water, which corroborates the foregoing arguments that the antient name of Minſterworth was Mortune; for the names of places are moſtly deſcriptive of their ſituations, or expreſſive of ſome accidents attending them.

This Mortune was afterwards called Minſterworth, becauſe it belonged to the minſter or abbey of Glouceſter; which alteration in the name took place ſometime before the reign of king John, for the records mention, that Henry de Bohun was created earl of Hereford in the firſt year of that king's reign, and had the Tertium Denarium Comitatûs granted to him, in conſideration that he had releaſed all his right in his lands in Dimmock, Minſterworth, and Rodley, to the king, the ſame year.

The records, and other evidences of the following dates, ſhew to whom this manor deſcended down to the preſent time. Simon de Montfort, earl of Leiceſter, was ſeized of Minſterworth 43 H. 3.

Walter de Stukeley, the ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, being commanded by the king's writ to return into the exchequer the names of all the cities, boroughs, and vills in every hundred in his ſaid county, certified that Henry de Lancaſter was lord of Mynſterworth and Rodley, in the hundred of Weſtbury, 9 E. 1. Edmond earl of Lancaſter, the king's brother, was ſeized of the ſame, and his right to court-leet and free warren therein was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. He gave this manor and that of Rodley, or Rodele, to William Grandiſon, brother and heir to Otho de Grandiſon, who was ſummoned as a peer to parliament 27 E. 1. This William had been a domeſtic ſervant to the earl, and theſe manors were given to him and his heirs male in reward for his ſervices.

On default of the male heirs of William Grandiſon, this manor reverted to the houſe of Lancaſter, and accordingly we find that Henry duke of Lancaſter died ſeized of it 35 E. 3. He left two daughters, of whom Maud, the eldeſt, was married to William duke of Bavaria, and ſurviving her huſband, died ſeized of this manor 36 E. 3. John de Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter, married Blanch, the younger daughter, who together levied a fine of Minſterworth, Rodley, and Tiberton, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille 39 E. 3.

Sir Fulk Bourcher, lord Fitz-Warren, died ſeized of it 19 E. 4.

The manor of Minſterworth, late belonging to the dutchy of Lancaſter, was granted to the archbiſhop of York, and ſeveral other great perſons, in truſt, 3 H. 5. and was afterwards held by ſeveral leaſes granted from the crown to various perſons at yearly rents, 'till the ſame was granted in fee to Salter and Williams, 7 Jac. 1. under an annual rent of 20*l.* 6*s.* 11¾*d.* Mr. Pury was lord of it about the middle of the laſt century, whoſe heir about the year 1704, ſold it to Mr. Thomas Burgeſſe. From his heir it paſſed by purchaſe to Mr. Cook of Highnam, whoſe only daughter and heir ſold it to Charles Barrow, eſq; who is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a hand-ſome ſome ſeat here, called Hygrove, commanding an extenſive proſpect over the vale on the eaſt ſide of the river Severn. He is the heir male of the Barrows, otherwiſe Berrows, of Field-Court and Awre in this county, and one of the repreſentatives of the city of Glouceſter, for which he has ſat in five ſucceſſive parliaments. His arms are, Argent, three bears heads erazed ſable, muzzled Or, a chief azure, as I find them on a monument in Quedgley church.

There are ſome copyhold eſtates of inheritance in this pariſh, held according to the cuſtom of the manor, which cuſtom is, that if a tenant die without male heir, and leave more daughters than one, ſuch eſtate goes to the eldeſt of them, as at Cheltenham, and ſome other places.

In this manor, and at Rodley in the pariſh of Weſtbury, acknowledgments are paid to the lord for fiſhing in the river Severn, ſome of which were antiently called Prid-gavel, from the old word Gavel, a rent, and Pride, the name of a kind of wicker'd putt, or pouchin, which is laid in the water to catch the fiſh. So that Prid-gavel ſeems not to have the leaſt relation to Lampreys, as ſir Robert Atkyns, and ſome others, after him, have fancied.

There is a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh called Hatheways, from Ralph Hatheway, who was ſeized thereof by the title of a manor 5 E. 2. The records 14 E. 2. mention Henry Caſy, and 15 E. 2. Walter Helvin, as being each of them ſeized of a manor in this pariſh; but they were not diſtinct manors. The fact is, that here, as in many other places, the owners of eſtates having little tenements erected on ſeveral detached parcels of their lands, granted ſome on leaſes for lives, and ſold others abſolutely, reſerving ſmall chief-rents, and thereby dignified their eſtates with the titles of manors, or reputed manors, tho' they had no copyhold tenants, which are neceſſarily incident to courts baron.

Bogo Goſeline was ſeized of a rent of 7*l.* 9*s.* in Minſterworth 13 E. 2.

Thomas Sayvill and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Minſterworth to John Wordrof and others 16 R. 2. John Elis de Fiſhley and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Minſterworth to the uſe of themſelves in fee taille, the remainder to Alice their daughter, 7 H. 4. Roger Gregg and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Minſterworth to the uſe of John Daberon, and to the right heirs of Alice 7 H. 6.

Lands formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to Thomas Reeves and Chriſtopher Bullet 5 Mariæ. But the meſſuage called Leedſwood Houſe, which ſir Robert Atkyns, by miſtake, repreſented as lying in this pariſh, is in Yorkſhire, tho' inſerted in the forementioned grant to Reeves and Bullet.

HAMLETS. 1. Morcote, or Boyfield, is a hamlet and manor, or at leaſt a reputed manor, in this pariſh. The names are nearly ſynonimous. The Britons called it by the former, from Coed, Br. a wood, becauſe it was a woody place, which, after the conqueſt, the Normans tranſlated by Bois, a word of the ſame ſignification in their language; and thence came Boiville, and Boyfield as it was afterwards written. At the time of the general ſurvey, Morcote lay in a different hundred from Minſterworth, as appears by the following extract:

'William the ſon of Norman holds Morcote 'in Langebrige hundred. Ulfegh held it in the 'time of king Edward. There is one hide, and 'in demean one plow-tillage, with two bordars. 'It was worth 8*s.* now 10*s.* This eſtate doth 'not pay tax.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

If by Langebrige in the record, which gave name to the hundred, is meant the long bridge at Glouceſter, of which I think there can be no doubt, then Nicholas Walred, clerk, was not the firſt builder of a bridge there, as it is ſaid, in the reign of king Henry the Second, but only built that bridge anew.

Richard Veel was ſeized of Morcot 16 E. 3. John Boteler of the Park held the manors of the Park and of Morecot 36 E. 3. John Kenn was ſeized of both manors 6 H. 4. and another John Kenn died ſeized of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Morecot 16 H. 6. which deſcended to his ſon Robert Kenn, eſq; who was poſſeſſed of them 31 H. 6.

This eſtate was afterwards purchaſed by Thomas Elmbridge, who died 27 H. 7. and was ſucceeded by John his ſon and heir, and he dying without iſſue 17 H. 8. ſir John Danet, who had married Anne his ſiſter and heir, had livery of Morecot the ſame year. John Danet, ſon of ſir John, ſold this manor to Thomas Atkyns, of Tufleigh, eſq; and Thomas Hoard, eſq; who married a coheireſs of that family, and the reverend Mr. John Chamberlayne of Maugerſbury, deſcended from the other coheireſs, are the preſent proprietors, and have a good eſtate in this place.

2. Hampton, lies in the middle part of the pariſh, adjoining to the great ham or common. It is not a manor, but having antiently a diſtinct name, intitles it to our notice. Roger Boyfield was ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Hampton, parcel of the manor of Minſterworth, 15 E. 2. It is probable that this Roger Boyfield, or de Boyfield, took his name from the place of his reſidence in the hamlet of Boyfield, according to the cuſtom of early times.

3. Dunny, lies in the lower part of the pariſh. It is not called by any particular name in Domeſday; but the following abſtract ſeems to relate to it:

'William Goizenboded holds half a hide of 'land, and half a fiſhery in Weſtberie hundred. 'Alwin the ſheriff held this eſtate, and gave it to 'his wife. It belonged to the king's farm in 'Weſtberie.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

Roger de Staunton gave a yard-land called Duni, in Minſterworth, and a huſbandman with his his land, to Glouceſter abbey, when Hameline was abbat. Roger earl of Hereford gave half the fiſhery of Duny to the ſame church, which king Henry the Second confirmed; and king Edward the Third granted to the monks of that church the other half of that fiſhery, with the fiſhery in the ſtanding pools within Minſterworth, at a fee farm rent, in exchange for the church of Wyrardſbury, when Adam Staunton was abbat, 18 E. 3. as appears by an Inſpeximus and confirmation of thoſe grants 1 R. 2. And theſe fiſheries were afterwards granted with the manor 7 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, to which the king's auditor pays 10*l.* a year, and the impropriator four loads of hay. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty, and is now worth 30*l.* a year. The biſhop of Briſtol is patron, and Mr. Draper the preſent incumbent.

Thomas Foliot was poſſeſſed of the church of Minſterworth 45 H. 3. and Nicholas le Bath was ſeized of the advowſon 5 E. 2. The rectory was appropriated to St. Oſwald's priory in Glouceſter 22 R. 2. and the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage belonged afterwards to the monaſtery of Boileau in Hampſhire, and were granted to the biſhoprick of Briſtol 34 H. 8. and the impropriation is now in leaſe from the biſhop of Briſtol to Mr. Joſeph Brown, for three lives.

The parſon was to have tithe of all the fiſh in the pools on the Severn within this pariſh, and he enjoy'd the ſame in Dunny and Minſterworth 15 E. 2.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a double building, ſupported by pillars in the middle. It had a ſpire, which was deſtroy'd, and the bells melted by lighting in the year 1702, and now it has a low tower at the weſt end.

Benefactions.

Mr. John Hyett, citizen of London, who had been a poor boy of this pariſh, has given by his laſt will, dated Sep. 5, 1719, 20*l.* to 'prentice out a poor boy here every ſecond year, in the choice of whom a preference is to be given to the names of Hyett and Phelps.

In the year 1763, Suſanna Crump, widow, in her life time, ſettled an annuity of 4*l.* a year for a ſchool-miſtreſs, to teach ten poor children of this pariſh to read. Joſeph Wintle of Glouceſter, gave 20*l.* to be laid out in land, which hath been done in this pariſh, the rent whereof is to be expended in bread, and given yearly to twenty poor houſekeepers in this pariſh, on Chriſtmas Eve.

At the beginning of this century, there were 60 houſes, and about 300 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 7. Atkyns. The houſes are now between 60 and 70, and the inhabitants about 300; but the pariſh was formerly more populous, and had upwards of 100 houſes in it, as appears by a yearly payment to the lord of 2*d.* for every houſe, and for every meeſe-place where a houſe formerly ſtood, which payment is called Smoak-ſilver.

MISERDEN, or MUSARDEN.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Biſley, diſtant about two miles and a half north-eaſt from the town of that name, ſeven and a half north-weſt from Cirenceſter, and nine ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the ſouth-eaſt by Winſtone and Dunteſbourne, from which it is ſeparated by the brook Froome; on the ſouth by Edgworth, with Biſley on the weſt, Painſwick and Cranham on the north-weſt, and Brimpsfield and Side on the north and north-eaſt of it.

The village lies two miles ſouth-weſtward of the Irminſtreet, one of the Roman conſular ways. It is ſituated on the declivity of a hill, fronting northward, which makes it extremely bleak in the winter; but the cold, clear air braces the muſcles, and contributes to the health and longevity of the inhabitants. It is nevertheleſs better ſuited to hypochondriacal than conſumptive habits.

Here is a park about ſeven miles in circumference, full of fine beech-wood. It is watered by the Froome, which receives a ſupply at this place, from a confluence of little ſtreams running from Brimpsfield and Winſtone, that abound with ſmall trout and cray fiſh. The unincloſed part of the park reſembles a foreſt. It is a fine receſs for game, wild fowl, and many ſorts of ſinging birds; particularly here are ſeen two birds which are rare in this country, the French pye, and a water-fowl of a fierce nature, whoſe name I am not acquainted with. The enthuſiaſtic lover of nature, walking in the flowery glades of this retreat, might fancy himſelf in the primeval groves of our firſt progenitors.

Seated in a valley in this park is a mount of a circular form, now overgrown with trees. It is the ſcite of an antient caſtle, built in the reign of king John, by Ralph Muſard, one of the great barons of the realm, and lord of this manor. It is called Caſtle-hill, and the piece of ground below it, Caſtle-meadow. Part of the moat which incompaſſed the building is ſtill to be ſeen, and large hewn ſtones were dug up, and an apartment diſcovered beneath the rubbiſh, on this mount, a few years ago, but of no great extent; for the materials of the caſtle had been removed, according to tradition, and appropriated to the building of the preſent manor-houſe. The ſcite of the caſtle is moſt moſt romanticly encompaſſed with adjacent woods and hills; and upon that ſpot a little hermitage might be erected, which would have the accompanyments of bubbling waters, impenetrable ſhade, and the various notes of the feathered tribes to heighten the idea of ſolitude and retirement.

The latter part of the name of the village was ſuggeſted by the ſituation of the caſtle, for den, ſignifies a dale, a glyn, a deep valley, or woody place. The former part of the name is that of a family who held the manor, from the conqueſt 'till the reign of king Edward the Firſt; but the village was not called Muſarden, but Grenhamſtede, 'till ſome time after it was the reſidence of that family, as appears by Domeſday-book.

Hazlebouſe is the ſeat of William Mills, eſq; who ſerved the office of high ſheriff of this county in the year 1756. At Hazlebouſe-yate, now called the Camp, are ſeveral barrows, one of which was opened about forty years ago, and the ſkulls and ſkeletons of eight bodies found lying in order in a vault beneath, which was then decently cloſed up again. There is another of thoſe barrows in the weſt field, near the Glouceſter road, which a few years ſince was found to contain human bones, and an urn, ſuppoſed to be Roman.

The face of this country is very uneven. The lands are moſtly arable, and bear good crops. About 300 acres lie in downs and common-fields. Wild thyme grows in great plenty, and the various ſpecies of the Orchis are found here. Much of the beech-wood in this pariſh and neighbourhood, of which there is great abundance, is converted into gun-ſtocks for Birmingham market, and of ſome they make charcoal. Here is a very good and durable ſort of tiles for covering houſes, which are ſold at 5*s*. a thouſand; but the difficulty of the roads is a great obſtacle to the ſale of them.

The clothing buſineſs is carried on very extenſively in the adjoining places to the ſouthward and weſtward, but there are only two clothiers in this pariſh, by whom the women and children are chiefly employ'd in ſpinning woollen yarn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following is a tranſlation of the antient record reſpecting the manor:

'The ſame Haſcoit [Muſard] holds Grenhamſtede in Biſelege hundred. There is one hide taxed. Erneſi held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and five bordars, and a prieſt, and one radcheniſter. They have between them nine plow-tillages. There are ten ſervi, and eight acres of meadow, a wood a mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth 100*s*. and is now worth 7*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

This Haſcoit Muſard attended the conqueror in his expedition againſt England, as appears by Scriven's liſt, and was rewarded with great eſtates in the counties of Berks, Oxford, Derby, Warwick, and Glouceſter; but the principal ſeat being at Muſarden, thoſe eſtates were in that reſpect all comprehended in the expreſſion Baronia de Muſarden, as appears by ſeveral records in after ages. Sir William Dugdage ſpeaks of him as being eminent for his piety and virtue, and ſays he at length became a monk in the monaſtery of Ely. His arms were to be ſeen in the windows of the pariſh church of Tamworth, Gules, a lion rampant argent, crowned Or.

Richard Muſard was ſon and heir of Haſcoit, and Haſcoit the ſecond was ſon and heir of Richard, and had fifteen knights's fees 12 H. 2. He died 33 H. 2. and was ſucceeded by Ralph his ſon and heir, who was ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire from the 17 Joh. to 9 H. 3. He married Iſabel the widow of John de Nevill, without the king's licence, and paid a hundred marks for his tranſgreſſion. He was a baron, and built the caſtle as before obſerved, and dying 14 H. 3. was ſucceeded by Robert his ſon, who entering upon his lands without ſueing forth livery, his caſtle of Muſarden and all his lands were ſeized into the king's hands, but were ſhortly after reſtored upon compoſition. He died without iſſue, when Ralph Muſard, his brother, was a minor, in ward to Jeffrey Deſpencer, who paid 500 marks to the crown for his wardſhip. Ralph had livery of his lands 31 H. 3. and died 49 H. 3. Ralph, ſon of the laſt Ralph, died 1 E. 1. and was ſucceeded by John Muſard, who had livery of the manor of Muſarden 15 E. 1. and died two years afterwards. Nicholas Muſard, uncle to John, and youngeſt brother of Ralph, had livery of this manor 17 E. 1. and died without iſſue 29 E. 1. whereby ſir Ralph Freſcheville, ſon of Amicia, his elder ſiſter, then dead, and Margaret his ſiſter then living, and Joan, (wife of William de Chelardiſton) the daughter and heireſs of Iſabel, his third ſiſter, then dead, were his heirs, and had livery of the manor of Muſarden granted to them 29 E. 1.

This manor ſoon after came to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, who being attainted in the turbulent reign of king Edward the Second, it was granted to Edmond of Woodſtock, earl of Kent, youngeſt ſon of king Edward the Firſt, who being alſo attainted, and beheaded at Wincheſter in the beginning of the reign of Edward the Third, it was granted to Geoffry Mortimer, ſon of Roger Mortimer, earl of March. This earl was alſo executed at Smithfield the ſame year, his ſons attainted by parliament, and the ſons of Edmond of Woodſtock reſtored in blood. John, ſon of Edmond of Woodſtock, died ſeized of Muſarden 26 E. 3. which Elizabeth, his widow, held in dower 'till her death, 12 H. 4.

Joan, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, was ſiſter and heir to John. She was married to ſir Thomas Holland, who in her right was created earl of Kent. Elianor, ſiſter and coheireſs of the Hollands, was married to Roger earl of March, in the reign of king Edward the Third, and Edmond Mortimer was their ſon and heir; but he dying without iſſue, the manor of Muſarden, or Miſerden, deſcended to Anne, ſiſter and coheireſs of Edmond, who was married to Richard duke of York, heir to the crown of England; whereby this manor deſcended to his ſon, king Edward the Fourth, and continued in the crown 'till the latter end of the reign of king Henry the Eighth.

The manor and park of Miſerden were granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton[n] 38 H. 8. in whoſe family they continued down to William Kingſton, eſq; who was lord of the manor in the year 1608. He ſold it to Henry Jernegan the younger, ſon and heir of Henry Jernegan the elder, of Coſſey in the county of Norfolk, eſq; of whom it was purchaſed by ſir William Sandys[o], of Fladbury in Worceſterſhire, and hath deſcended thro' ſeveral collateral branches, down to Samuel Sandys, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor.

The manor-houſe ſtands upon an eminence in the park, which is a collection of hills. The beſt front is on the ſide next the garden to the ſouth-eaſt. The court and offices ſtand to the north-weſt. It is ſeen for many miles round, except to the ſouth-weſt, where the hills are a little above it. There are many handſome apartments in it, particularly the dining-room, with a large chimney-piece ornamented with the Sandys's arms. The ſtory of Jephthah is well executed in tapeſtry, and the old furniture, remaining in the drawing room, beſpeaks the taſte and grandeur of its former inhabitants. In the hall was a compleat ſuit of armour. In the garden are many yew-trees of an extraordinary ſize and ſhape.

[n] Sir William Kingſton, ſon of ſir Anthony, was provoſt-marſhal in the reign of king Edward the Sixth. He ſeems to have been a man diveſted of common humanity, and his name is preſerved in hiſtory to be execrated for his infamous, ſportive cruelty. He ordered the mayor of Bodmin to erect a ſtrong and lofty gallows in the market-place, and after feaſting with him in a familiar manner, cauſed him to be truſs'd up on it to experience its ſtrength and firmneſs. A miller who had been concerned in ſome inſurrection in the ſame country, flying from his houſe, his man pretended to be the maſter, wherefore ſir William cauſed him to be executed, ſaying, he could do his maſter no better ſervice than to be hanged for him. This was the behaviour of him to whom the king had intruſted the adminiſtration of juſtice, and who for the ſake of a joke, condemned and executed the innocent for the guilty.

[o] This antient family is deſcended from William Sandes of Rottenby-caſtle in the pariſh of St. Bees in Cumberland, whoſe ſon William married the daughter of ——— Bonham; and had iſſue William Sandes, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Rawſon, of the county of York, and couſin and heir to ——— Rawlinſon, abbat of Furnes in Lancaſhire; and a daughter Margaret, married to Richard Bray, a privy counſellor to king Henry the Sixth.

Which laſt William Sandys had iſſue three ſons, George, who married the daughter of ——— Curwin; William, and Oliver.

George had iſſue William Sandys, who married Margaret, daughter of John Dixon, by which marriage the antient houſes of Roos and Sandys were united. They had iſſue ſix ſons, and two daughters; George, ſlain at Muſſelborough field, in 1547; William, who married the daughter of ——— Strickland, of Weſtmoreland; Edwin, who was arch-biſhop of York; from whom the preſent lord Sandys of Omberſley in the county of Worceſter is deſcended; Chriſtopher; Miles, from whom the laſt lord Sandys was deſcended; and Anthony. Archbiſhop Sandys was an excellent man, and ſuffered a years impriſonment on account of his attachment to the reformed religion, in the reign of queen Mary. He was vice-chancellor of Cambridge, where, in the time of trouble, moſt of his former acquaintance deſerted him. After his enlargement from priſon, he went abroad, whence he returned at the death of queen Mary, and was made ſucceſſively biſhop of Worceſter, of London, and archbiſhop of York, by queen Elizabeth. His ſon, ſir Edwin Sandys, was a perſon of great learning and abilities; and George Sandys, the biſhop's youngeſt ſon, was a moſt ingenious gentleman, whoſe book of travels and poetical writings are well known and much eſteemed.

Myles Sandys, the fifth ſon of the ſaid William and Margaret, was of Lattimer's, alias Iſlehamſtead, in the county of Bucks. He married Heſter, the daughter of William Clifton, of Barrington in Somerſetſhire, and had four ſons, George, who was knighted, but died without iſſue; Edwin, who was alſo knighted; William, who was alſo knighted; and Henry. He had alſo three daughters.

Sir Edwin Sandys, the ſecond ſon, married Elizabeth, ſiſter and heir of William lord Sandys, by whom he had three ſons and ſix daughters. William, who for his prodigality was called Golden Sandys. He was lord of the manor of Brimpsfield, which he ſold to his uncle, ſir William Sandys, hereafter mentioned, and died without iſſue; Myles, who died unmarried; Henry, afterwards lord Sandys of the Vine, in the county of Southampton. The daughters were Bridget, Mary, Dorothy, Amy, Jane, and Heſter.

Sir William Sandys, third ſon of the ſaid Myles Sandys, married Margaret, daughter and heir of Walter Culpepper, of Hanburrough in the county of Oxford, eſq; by whom he had iſſue 1. ſir Myles Sandys, who had Brimpsfield park and eſtate ſettled on him on his marriage with Mary, the daughter of ſir John Hanbury, of Kelmarſh in the county of Southampton. He died before his father, and was buried at Miſerden. 2. William, who ſettled in Kent, and was called Water-work Sandys, from his taſte in improvements of that kind. 3. Thomas, who died unmarried. They had alſo five daughters.

Sir Myles Sandys of Brimpsfield had iſſue three ſons, 1. William Sandys of Miſerden, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Stephen Soames, of Haydon in the county of Eſſex. 2. Edward Sandys of Brimpsfield, eſq; of whom hereafter; 3. Myles Sandys, who died unmarried. And one daughter Mary.

William Sandys, the eldeſt ſon of ſir Myles, died in 1643, leaving iſſue two ſons, Myles Sandys, who married Mary, daughter of Stephen Soames, of Thurloe in the county of Suffolk, eſq; William, who took to wife Philadelphica Uphill, of Hanwell-Rumford in the county of Eſſex. And one daughter Mary, who died a nun in France.

Myles Sandys, ſon of William, had iſſue by his ſaid wife Mary, two ſons, William Sandys of Miſerden, and Myles, who died unmarried in 1706.

Which William Sandys married Barbara, the daughter of ſir William Kerle, of Herefordſhire, and dying without iſſue, was buried at Miſerden in 1712. He ſold the manors of Brimpsfield and Cranham to his couſin Windſor Sandys the elder, as alſo Cranham and Winſton woods. He left the reverſion of Miſerden and Winſton, ſubject to his mother's and wife's jointures, to his couſin and heir at law, Windſor Sandys the elder, and his heirs.

I return now to Edward Sandys, the ſecond ſon of ſir Myles Sandys of Brimpsfield. He married Heſter, the daughter of Fulke Walwin, of Much Marcle in the county of Hereford, by whom he had iſſue, 1. Myles Sandys, who left two daughters, who died unmarried; 2. Edward Sandys, who died without iſſue. 3. Windſor Sandys of Brimpsfield park. 4. Robert Sandys, who died unmarried; 5. Hanbury Sandys; and ſix daughters, Mary, Anne, Heſter, Frances, Dorothy, and Martha.

Windſor Sandys, the third ſon, married firſt, miſs Aubery, by whom he had iſſue Aubery Sandys, who died an infant: Secondly, Alice, the daughter of Matthew Lock, of Boddington in the county of Glouceſter, eſq; by whom he had iſſue three ſons, 1. Windſor Sandys. 2. William Sandys, afterwards a captain. 3. Myles Sandys, of the Middle Temple, eſq; who married and died without iſſue. Windſor Sandys, the father, died and was buried at Miſerden in 1729, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir.

Windſor Sandys, who was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in 1725, and ſerved that office with great ſplendor again in 1745. He married Elizabeth, the only ſurviving daughter and at length heir of Richard Browne, of Gonthrop in the county of Nottingham, and of Iſlington in the county of Middleſex, eſq; and became poſſeſſed of the manors of Miſerden park and Winſton, and dying in 1754, was buried in the family vault at Miſerden. He left iſſue five children, i. e. 1. Browne Sandys, who died unmarried in 1761; 2. Samuel Sandys, the preſent proprietor of Miſerden and Winſton; 3. Catherine, married to William Bayntun, of Gray's Inn, eſq; F. A. S. 4. Anne; and 5. Mary.

Mr. Sandys's arms are, Or, a feſs dancetty between three croſslets fitchy gules; a creſcent within an annulet for difference.

And notwithſtanding the whole now wears the melancholy aſpect of deſertion and decay, yet few gentlemen's ſeats have more natural advantages.

In the hamlet of Miſerden there are 39 houſes, and 166 inhabitants.

HAMLETS. 1. Wiſhanger. This hamlet is ſituated a mile north-weſt of Miſerden. Aſculf Muſard, of Muſarden, gave Wiſhanger, then called Riſeanger, to the knights-templers, from whom it went to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem; after whoſe diſſolution, it was granted to ſir Thomas Palmer, 6 E. 6. and upon his attainder, it was granted to William lord Howard, 1 Mar. Chriſtopher Bumpſted levied a fine of the manor of Wiſhanger to John Brown 4 Mar. very ſoon after which it came into the family of the Partridges. The principal houſe in this hamlet is the manſion and uſual reſidence of that family, who have enjoy'd this eſtate ever ſince, and have poſſeſſed many large eſtates in this county. Mr. John Partridge is the preſent owner thereof. His arms are, Checky, argent and ſable, on a bend gules three eſcallops Or. Honeycombe is the name of a good houſe in this hamlet, belonging to the reverend Mr. Mills, the preſent rector. There is a ſmall valley in this hamlet, called the City, where are ſeveral cottages. On the oppoſite ſide of the valley is the Camp, where are ten houſes. The whole number of houſes in this hamlet is 22, and of inhabitants 91.

2. Sudgrove, i.e. Southgrove, is ſituated on the ſouth-weſt of the village. There are two good houſes built of hewn ſtone; one of them was the ſeat of the Warnefords, a knightly family, of which the reverend F. Warneford, LLD. now living at Sevenhampton in the county of Wilts, is the repreſentative. This houſe, with the remaining lands belonging to it, was lately purchaſed by Mr. John Mills. The other is a more modern building, firſt erected by the reverend Mr. Durſton, then rector of Miſerden; and afterwards purchaſed and augmented by Mr. Temple, who ſold it to the late William Trye, eſq; of the family of the Tryes of Hardwick. His ſon, Mr. Thomas Trye, diſpoſed of this laſt patrimony of a once reſpectable, tho' now declined houſe, to John Selfe, late of Cirenceſter, eſq; who, from its pleaſant ſituation for proſpect, agreeable gardens, and plantations, has made it the place of his reſidence. Milo conſtable of Glouceſter, gave the tithes of Sutgrove-Reſtald to the church of Lanthony. In this hamlet are 24 houſes, and 103 inhabitants.

3. The Slad, or Slade, from the Saxon word Slade, a ſlip of ground. There are ſeveral places of this name in Glouceſterſhire, all ſituated on the ſlopes of hills. The ſprings collecting on the ſides of ſuch hills looſen the earth, and frequently by their force drive whole acres of ground into the vallies beneath, a remarkable inſtance of which happened lately at the Throp in the pariſh of Stroud. Hence the name Slade. This hamlet lies three miles north-weſt of the village of Miſerden, towards Painſwick. It contains 26 houſes, and 117 inhabitants.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth 140*l.* a year. Samuel Sandys, eſq; is patron, the reverend Mr. Giles Mills is the preſent incumbent. There are ninety acres of glebe, of which forty-four lie in common field.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew, on whoſe anniverſary the feaſt is kept. It hath a tower at the weſt end, with one large bell. There are two croſs ailes; that on the ſouth ſide, with its vault, was built by the late Mr. Temple, and now belongs to Mr. Selfe. The north aile was erected by William Mills, of Hazlehouſe, eſq; and the preſent rector.

The parſonage-houſe was repaired, if not wholly built, by William Wolley, a former rector, the initial letters of whoſe name are on a ſun-dial thus (W 1665 W).

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On the ſouth ſide of the chancel, ſeparated by a wire lattice, is a fine monument of alabaſter, whereon lie the effigies of ſir William Sandys and his lady, moſt curiouſly wrought, with their creſts at their feet. Sir William is in compleat armour, finely gilt; and his lady very richly dreſſed with point and bracelets, according to the high taſte of thoſe times; with their ten children kneeling round the ſeveral ſides of the tomb, which is decorated with ſcutcheons of arms. At the head of the tomb againſt the wall, upon a black marble, is the following inſcription in gold letters:

Here Lyeth the Bodie of S^r^ Will^m^ Sandys of Muſarden in the Countie of Glouc' Knight. He departed this Life Mar 2. 1640 Aged 77. This monument was made for ſir William in his life time. The whole is exquiſitely finiſhed and finely preſerved. It was executed in Italy, at the expence of 1000*l. from two paintings of him and his lady, done by ſir Cornelius Johnſon, which are now in the manor-houſe.*

Within the rails of the communion table, is a raiſed tomb decorated with arms, and the effigy in ſtone of a man in armour, with this memorial:

Here lyeth the Body of William Kingſton of Miſarden Eſquier, Sonne & Heire to Anthony Kingſton Eſquier who married Mary Daughter to John Waſhborne of Wichenford in the County of Worceſter, Eſquier, the which William Kingſton was Faithful to his Prince, and Loving to his Country, departed this Life the 12th day of December 1614 Ætatis 39.——The arms are, 1. Azure, a croſs Or, between four leopards faces argent, for Kingſton; impaling 2. Argent, on a feſs gules three roſes of the firſt, between ſix martlets of the ſecond, for Waſhbourne.

Near the above, on the north ſide, a ſtone monument with the effigies of a man and woman kneeling,

Mr. John Durston, Interred here, was born at Ripple, Worcestershire, educated at Winchester, elected into New Coll: Oxon, presented by that Coll: to the Rectory of Alton, Wilts. Rector likewise of this Church above 40 years, died 29^th Feb: 1727 Æ. 82.

All words are vain

At the foot of the steps of the altar is a flat stone, with a patriarchal cross, within a bordure of alabaster. It has no inscription, but was probably intended for one of the Musards.

In the church-yard is a memorial for Anthony Ockhold and Tacy his wife, 1605. The Ockholds were once freeholders of note in this parish, as were the Clements, and many others, who are now melancholy tho' common instances of the fluctuation of property. The event however, is an incitement to frugality and industry; for generally, property flies from the indolent and profligate, to be cherished and improved by the diligence of the industrious. The Ockholds arms are, Vaire, argent and sable, on a pale gules three leopards faces Or.

Thomas Muggleton, who lies buried in the church-yard 1659, gave by his will to the poor of this parish, (with others) 15*s* yearly, charged on lands in Duntisbourn Abbats.

Land-tax at 3*s*. in 1770, £ 50 4 0

About the year 1712, the poor-tax amounted to 2*s*. in the pound, and at this time (1773) it is advanced to 5*s*. in the pound.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 54 houses, and about 250 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 6. But in seven years, from 1766 to 1772, both inclusive, it appears that there have been entered in the parish register 80 baptisms, and 68 burials. And the people having been numbered in 1762, they were found to be 112 families, and 460 inhabitants, who occupied 105 houses. Also by an account taken in 1767, the number of souls was 451; and by the last account taken in 1773, there were 111 houses, and 477 inhabitants, of whom 16 were freeholders.

From these data it appears, that the average of annual baptisms is 11.3, and of burials 9.7; that the average of persons to each house is 4.3; and that the proportion of annual burials to the whole number of inhabitants is nearly as 1 to 49, which shews the place to be healthy.

MORTON-HENMARSH.

THIS small parish lies in the upper division of Westminster hundred, four miles distant north from Stow, five south-east from Campden, and twenty-nine north-east from Gloucester.

It lies in the vale, with a ridge of hills on the west of it, whence the water flows down upon the low lands in a wet season, and cannot readily pass off again; wherefore it was called Mortune, from Moor, a marsh, or tract of low ground. Henmarsh, i.e. the old marsh, is almost of the same signification, but of much later standing than the former name. Indeed some persons write Morton in the Marsh, and for aught I know, with equal propriety. But Henmarsh may be, as sir Robert Atkyns seems to think, from Hen, old, and mean, a limit, or boundary, for there is one corner of this parish, about two miles east of the village, which borders on three other counties; and on that spot stands a handsome stone pedestal, about twelve feet high, with a dial at top, and an inscription to inform travellers that This is the four Shires Stone. Oxfordshire lies on the east, Gloucestershire on the west, Warwickshire on the north, and Worcestershire on the south, which happens by Evenlode, a detached part of the last mentioned county, running up to this point.

The Roman Foss leads from Cirencester thro' this place northwards, and the great road from Worcester to London crosses it here, where are two pretty good inns to accommodate travellers. The greater part of the houses are arranged on the sides of the Foss, and about the middle of the village stands a public building upon pillars, which gives gives it ſomething of the air of a market-town. Indeed it had formerly a charter for a market and fair, which it enjoy'd with other privileges a long time; and not more that two centuries back, when many parts of the country were viſited with the plague, a market was kept here, and was at that time pretty much frequented.

The abbats of Weſtminſter, who were lords of this manor, have ſeveral times endeavoured, by various ways, to encourage the increaſe of inhabitants, and to raiſe this place into greater eminence. In the reign of king Henry the Fourth, the abbat procured a charter to exempt the burgeſſes, as they were then called, from paying toll in the ſeveral counties of Glouceſter, Oxford, Warwick, and Worceſter; and granted them their burgages in fee, paying a ſmall fine upon alienation. They had alſo a grant of courts for pleas of debt, and for the trial of ſome criminal actions.

What immediate effect theſe privileges had, does not appear, but as large plants require room for a vigorous growth, ſo it is probable that this place lay too near the neighbouring market-towns to become anywiſe conſiderable; for Morton, in its preſent ſtate, is no more than a pretty little village, where the women and children are employ'd in ſpinning of linen yarn for coarſe ſewing threads, cheeſe cloth, and linſeys.

As the place lies upon the Foſs, it was natural, on my viſit, to inquire after Roman antiquities, when the account in Dr. Parſons's manuſcript was confirmed by the inhabitants, that about a mile further northwards, in the fields, at a place called Dorn, great quantities of Roman coins have been formerly found. And not far from thence, but in this pariſh, are two conſiderable barrows; whence it ſeems probable, that there has been a ſmall poſt or ſtation at or near that place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Notwithſtanding ſir Robert Atkyns has appropriated to this place a large extract from Domeſday, concerning Moreton, (as he has it) in Celfledeſtern hundred, yet thoſe particulars have not the leaſt relation to any Morton whatever, but really belong to Nortune, or Norton, in the pariſh of Weſton-Subedge, as may be ſeen by referring to the printed copy of the record, at p. 78. And what the ſame learned author aſſerts, of this manor belonging to the family of the Cormeiles, is equally erroneous. Indeed this place does not appear to have been a diſtinct manor at the time of the general ſurvey, but as it was antiently part of the pariſh of Bourton on the Hill, ſo it ſeems to belong to the eight hides which the church of Weſtminſter had there, dependent on the large manor of Derhurſt.

Domeſday ſpecifies the number of hides in each place, belonging to that extenſive manor, and declares that, 'Certain radcheniſters held part of 'thoſe lands of the church of Weſtminſter, in the 'time of king Edward, and tho' they were free 'men, yet they plowed, harrowed, reaped, and 'mowed at the lord's work;' and that 'Elfrid held 'half a hide at Montune, and holds the ſame;' i.e. he held it when the inquiſition was taken. This Montune is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the pariſh of Morton, for the Saxon ꝑ may have been miſtaken for the letter n, to which it bears ſome reſemblance.

The abbey of Weſtminſter purchaſed a charter for a market in this place in the eleventh year, and another charter for a fair, in the fifty-third year of the reign of king Henry the Third.

The learned author to whoſe labours I am ſo greatly indebted, obſerves, that William de Barking, the thirtieth abbat of Weſtminſter, new built the village of Moreton, of which the profits were aſſigned to obſerve an anniverſary for him, and the overplus to the benefit of the convent. And further, that he purchaſed the manor-houſe, and half the foreſt of Moreton, and two plow-tillages of aſſart land, and the caſtle of Moreton Foliot, with a moiety of that manor, and gave them to the convent of Weſtminſter. But he undoubtedly meant Richard de Barking, who was the twenty-ſecond abbat of Weſtminſter, according to Mr. Willis's liſt, in whoſe epitaph mention is made of ſome of theſe particulars.

At the diſſolution of the abbey, the manor was granted to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter 34 H. 8. Queen Mary regranted it to the abbey, which ſhe had reſtored, 4 Mariæ, but it was again confirmed to the dean and chapter 2 Eliz.

William Bateſon, eſq; is leſſee of the manor, under the dean and chapter, and holds a court-leet here.

Richard Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Moreton-Henmarſh 9 H. 7. Mr. Creſſwick has a large eſtate in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Campden. It is a chapel of eaſe to Bourton on the Hill, and has the ſame incumbent.

There is no glebe-land. Bourton-farm is tithe free, but the reſt of the pariſh is tithable, and pays 53*l.* 11*s.* yearly for compoſition.

The church is dedicated to St. David. In the year 1512, pope Julius granted right of ſepulture to this pariſh, the inhabitants of which formerly buried at Blockley in Worceſterſhire.

Benefactions.

A cloſe called Greenhill was given towards the repair of the church. Mr. Cook, a rector of Bourton, gave 40*s.* yearly to put out an apprentice, as the money ſhould grow ſufficient. Several perſons have alſo given ſmall ſums, amounting in the whole to 60*l.* to be a ſtock for the poor.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £ 42 9 0

At the beginning of this century, there were 120 houſes, and about 526 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. Atkyns. But this was not the true average ſtate of the regiſter, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptiſms were 157, and the burials 120. And in a like period, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 212, and the burials 131; and the preſent number of inhabitants is 579; ſo that they are to the average of annual burials nearly as 44 to 1.

MORETON VALENCE.

THIS pariſh lies in the vale, in the hundred of Whitſtone, eight miles north from Durſley, four weſt from Painſwick, and ſix ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is laid out in dairy-farms, with ſome orcharding, and produces good cheeſe and ſtout cyder; but it is ſubject to inundations from its flat and low ſituation.

Mortune was the antient name of the village, and ſignifies the town upon the water, as already explained under Minſterworth, and might very properly be given to this place which is waſhed on the ſouth by the river Froome, and on the weſt by the Severn. It received the addition of Valence from a family of that name, who were earls of Pembroke, and lords of this manor in the reigns of Edward the Firſt and Edward the Second.

Antient foundations of hewn ſtones have been found in a piece of ground near the church, which appears to have been moated round, and is ſuppoſed to have been the ſcite of the manſion-houſe of the Valences, or ſome of their ſucceſſors, lords of this manor.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Mortune in Witeſtan 'hundred. There are three hides taxed. Auti 'held it. In demean is one plow-tillage, and 'four villeins, and ſix bordars, with three plow-'tillages and a half. There are four ſervi, and 'twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 4*l.* now '40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

Robert de Pont de Larch, or Pont de l' Arch, was ſeized of this manor 30 H. 3. and gave it, together with ſeveral others, to William de Valencia, afterwards created earl of Pembroke, who was ſon of Hugh le Brun, by Iſabel widow of king John, and uterine brother to king Henry the Third, by whom this grant was confirmed 36 regni. He married Joan, daughter of Gwarine de Monte Canſio, or Montchenſy, a great baron, (in that age eſteemed the Craſſus of England, the bequeſts in his will amounting to above 200,000 marks) and afterwards heireſs to William her brother. He was ſlain by the French at Bayonne, ſeized of Moreton and Whaddon 23 E. 1. and was ſucceeded in honour and eſtate by Audomar de Valencia, his ſecond and ſurviving ſon, who was killed in France 17 E. 2. on account of the part he had taken in the death of the earl of Lancaſter, and left no iſſue, whereby his three ſiſters became his coheireſſes. Joan, the youngeſt, was married to John Comyn of Badenagh, ſon of John Comyn, one of the competitors for the crown of Scotland. They left only daughters, of whom Elizabeth was married to Richard Talbot of Goderick Caſtle, anceſtor to the earls of Shrewſbury, who, in her right, was ſeized of a third part of this manor 20 E. 2. and died 30 E. 3.

John earl of Shrewſbury, and Thomas viſcount Liſle, joined in levying a fine of the manor of Moreton to ſir Richard Bingham, and others, 9 E. 4.

Elizabeth counteſs of Shrewſbury died ſeized of Moreton Valence 11 H. 8. and Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife had livery granted them the ſame year.

The manor ſoon after came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Eſſex, and after his attainder, to ſir William Kingſton 32 H. 8. who dying the ſame year, livery was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton his ſon and heir.

The manor was afterwards purchaſed by the Jerninghams of Norfolk. Henry Jerningham, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Sir Ralph Dutton was proprietor of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. James Lenox Dutton, eſq; died in the year 1776, and James Dutton, eſq; his eldeſt ſurviving ſon and heir, is the preſent lord of the manor of Moreton Valence, and has a good houſe on Gab's-hill, which commands an extenſive proſpect. For his arms, ſee Sherborne.

Audomar de Valencia granted two acres and a half in Moreton to the abbey of Glouceſter 10 E. 2. Lands in Moreton Valence, lately belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet 1 E. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Horſe-Marley, in the upper part of the pariſh.

2. Little Moreton.

3. Epney, which extends down to the Severn. Lands in this place were granted to ſir William Kingſton.

4. Part of Framilode.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 50*l.* a year. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty. The impropriation, worth 75*l.* a year, belongs to one of the prebendaries of Hereford, whoſe leſſee is patron, and pays the curate 15*l.* a year; Mr. Jones is the preſent incumbent. Twenty-four acres of meadow and paſture, and eight acres of arable, belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, has a large aile on the ſouth ſide, and a high embattled tower at the weſt end. Over the church door is a repreſentation of St. Michael fighting with the dragon, very rudely carved in ſtone.

NAUNTON

LIES partly in the hundred of Slaughter, and partly in that of Bradley. It is ſituated ſix miles ſouth-weſtward from Stow, ſeven ſouth-eaſt from Winchcombe, and nineteen eaſt from Glouceſter, and the turnpike-road from Stow to Glouceſter runs through the pariſh near four miles in length. The greater part of the pariſh is arable land. It has a little brook running thro' it from Guiting, which empties itſelf into the Windruſh, and ſerves as a nurſery to ſupply that river with trout, for which it is ſo deſervedly famous.

The preſent name of the village is ſo corrupted and altered from its original purity, by vulgar uſe, as not to bear the leaſt reſemblance to the antient and ſignificant appellation. It was written Niwetone in Domeſday-book, and was ſo called, becauſe ſomething later cultivated or inhabited than the other villages in the neighbourhood, in compariſon with which it was a New town. It was afterwards written Niuenton, Newinton, and ſometimes Newinton in Cottſwold, probably to diſtinguiſh it from Newinton (now called Naunton) in the pariſh of Winchcombe, and Newinton, or Newton in Aſhchurch.

The pariſh is of a middling ſize, ſituated in a fine open country, but has neither curious foſſils, rare plants, nor other uncommon natural productions to diſtinguiſh it; and the only cuſtom proper to the place ſeems to be, that of breaking a common called Naunton-downs, on the fourteenth day of May, for depaſturing milch-cows, young heifers, and cow-calves only. Antiquities are matters of accident and curioſity, and tho' Naunton has none of them to boaſt of, yet it enjoys one bleſſing in a very eminent degree, which may well compenſate for all its deficiencies. Whether from its open ſituation among the downs, free from woods, and far diſtant from marſhy lands and large waters; or occaſioned by what other cauſe I know not, but certain it is, that it enjoys a fine healthy air, ſcarcely to be equalled, not to be exceeded, by any ſpot in the kingdom.

Dr. Percival, in his curious inquiries concerning population, and the healthineſs of many places in and about Lancaſhire, finds, that at a village called Eſtham, one in thirty-five of the inhabitants dies in a year; at Cokey, one in forty-four; at Royſton, one in fifty-two; at Edale, one in fifty-nine; and at Hale, which is the healthieſt place of all the examples he produces, one dies annually out of ſixty-nine: And the reſult of my own inquiries through this county is nearly the ſame. But how much more healthy than any of thoſe is the pariſh of Naunton, where, from the moſt authentic particulars given at the cloſe of this account, it appears, that not one in a hundred dies in a year! The inhabitants are farmers and huſbandmen, living remote from any market-town, and there is not a public houſe in the village.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There were antiently three manors in this pariſh, reckoning Ayleworth for one.

'Roger de Olgi holds Niwetone in Salemaneſ-'berie hundred of Oſbern the ſon of Richard. 'There are five hides taxed. Turſtan held it. In 'demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, 'with four plow-tillages and a half. It is worth '3*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

'Cvenild the monk holds nine hides in Niwe-'tone in Salemaneſberie hundred of the king, four 'of which pay tax. Eſlmer held them for a manor. 'In demean are four plow-tillages, and ſeven vil-'leins, with five plow-tillages: And he has now 'one plow-tillage, and a mill of 5*s.* and thirteen 'among the ſervi and ancillæ. It was worth 8*l.* 'now 5*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

In tracing the deſcent of the manor, ſir Robert Atkyns has fallen into the groſſeſt errors, by mingling and confounding the records, and appropriating to this pariſh the particulars which relate to Naunton in Winchcombe. He applies the ſame abſtract from Domeſday-book to both places, which ſerves to ſhew that this manor, or one of theſe manors, was held by the abbey of Winchcombe; and then aſſerts, that this manor continued in the abbey of Winchcombe until its final diſſolution; that a leaſe of lands in Naunton, lately belonging to Winchcombe abbey, was granted to Henry Tracy 36 H. 8. that another grant was made to Henry Tracy and Elizabeth his wife 7 E. 6. and laſtly, that the tithes in Naunton did formerly belong to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas

Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. Whereas it does not appear that the abbey of Winchcombe ever had any property in this pariſh, nor had the Tracies any 'till by purchaſe within a few years paſt. In ſhort, the above particulars ſhould have been applied to the hamlet of Naunton in Winchcombe.

King Edward the Firſt commanded his ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire to make a return of all the vills, &c. in the ſaid county, with the ſeveral proprietors of them; and the ſheriff returned, that the prior of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and the prior of the Leſſer Malvern were lords of Newenton in the hundred of Salmoneſburye, 9 E. 1.

Giles Venfield and John Collet were joint lords of the manor in the year 1608, ſince which it has been divided between ſeveral freeholders. The late William Moore, eſq; by his marriage with the heireſs of Mr. Collet, claimed this manor; Powell Snell, eſq; alſo claims it, who now pays a fee-farm rent for it to the crown; and Thomas Stone has ſome pretentions to it; but no court has been held within memory.

John lord Clinton, John Smith, and William Warburton, levied a fine of lands in Naunton to John Twineho and John Underhill 1 R. 3. The capital meſſuage of Naunton was granted to John Baile who died 1 E. 6. and Thomas Baile, ſon of John, had livery thereof the ſame year. Robert Aſhton levied a fine of the manor of Naunton to Henry Moody 2 Mar.

HAMLETS. 1. Ayleworth, ſituated about a mile from the church. It lies in the hundred of Bradley, and gave name to a family who reſided here from the time of the conqueſt 'till the beginning of the preſent century. In Domeſday-book it is thus recorded:

'William Goizenboded holds Ailewrde in Sale-'maneſberie hundred. Aluuin held it in the time 'of king Edward. There is one hide taxed, and 'one plow-tillage in demean, and two ſervi. It 'was worth 6*s.* now 3*s.*' p. 74.

'Giſlebert the ſon of Turold holds Elewrde in 'Salemaneſberie hundred, and Walter holds it of 'him. Aluuin held it. There are four hides 'taxed, and two plow-tillages in demean, and 'three villeins with two plow-tillages, and ſix 'between the ſervi and ancillæ. It is and was 'worth 40*s.*' p. 76.

The ſubſequent records ſhew, that Petronella de la Mere died ſeized of Elworth 47 E. 3. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, proved his right to court leet and other privileges in this manor, and in Harford, in a Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1. At the diſſolution of religious houſes, this manor belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8. But there was a farm in Ayleworth which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and was granted to Vincent Calmudee and Richard Calmudee, 6 Eliz. Other lands in Ayleworth, and a grove, belonged formerly to the chantry of St. Mary in Weſtbury, and were granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

Richard Ayleworth had livery of the manor and capital meſſuage of Ayleworth, with lands lately belonging to St. Oſwald's priory; and of a farm called De Lantone, 9 Eliz. But John Ayleworth was ſeized of lands in Naunton, Calcut, and Ayleworth, as early as 16 E. 4. Joſhua Ayleworth, the laſt of this family, died in 1718, as did his widow the following year, aged ninety, as appears by the pariſh regiſter, and both were buried in the church, without any memorial. The manor and eſtate of Ayleworth were purchaſed by ——Herring, eſq; but Henry Blagg, of the county of Nottingham, is the preſent lord of the manor.

2. Harford. 'Giſlebert the ſon of Turold 'holds Hurford in Salemaneſberie hundred. Alfer 'held it. There is one hide taxed, and two plow-'tillages in demean, and four villeins, and one 'bordar, with two plow-tillages, and two ſervi, 'and a mill of 5*s.* It is worth and was worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, was ſeized of the manor of Harford 28 E. 3. as was Richard the ſon of John Browning 2 H. 4. and the priory of Lanthony had lands in Harford and Ayleworth 13 H. 4. William Moore, eſq; died ſeized of Harford, in right of his wife, about the year 1771.

Lower Harford is an eſtate belonging to Corpus Chriſti College in Oxford, now in leaſe to Mrs. Tracy, relict of Thomas Tracy, eſq; deceaſed, and heireſs of the late ſir William Dodwell.

Bayle-farm is unworthily diſtinguiſhed by ſir Robert Atkyns as a hamlet. It was ſo called from a family of that name, to whom it belonged, and from whom it went afterwards to the Ayleworths, and is now called Round-hill farm.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 250*l.* a year. The biſhop of Worceſter is patron; Mr. Anſelm Jones the preſent incumbent. The whole pariſh is ſubject to tithes, and two yard-lands belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. It is a handſome building, with a neat tower adorned with pinnacles and battlements. It has a ſmall aile on the north ſide, which belonged to the Ayleworths, ſeveral of whom are buried there, but without any memorials. The whole church was formerly ornamented with painted glaſs, but time and miſchievous hands have in a great meaſure deſtroy'd it. In the ſouth window, near the pulpit, is a large figure of a ſaint, [Scs Philippus] and in a ſcroll round his head,

Inde venturus ut iudicaret vivos & mortuos;

at his feet a man and woman praying, and under,

Orate p' bono ſtatu ..... bayle .....

On the next pane, round a ſaint's head, is written,

Credo in ſpiritū ſanctū ſanctam eccleſiā catholicā;

at

at his feet a man and woman praying, and under,

Orate p' bono ..... ayleworth et elſabeth .....

then at the bottom of the next pane, where are ſeveral figures in a praying poſture, it follows, eius et ōniū fidelū defunctor'

In the ſouth window of the chancel is the figure of Chriſt, round whoſe head it is written, aſcēdit ad celos ſedit ad dexteram dei patris ōipotentis; and near it, St. John Baptiſt, with this mutilated legend in a ſcroll round his head,

..... eſt de ſpiritu ſancto in eremam.

In the north window are the figures of St. Catherine, with her wheel, and St. Stephen, in very good preſervation.

On a marble table, within the communion rails,

Near this Place lieth the Body of Ambroſe Oldys, Son of William Oldys, D. D. formerly V. of Adderbury in the County of Oxford, who for his Loyalty to his King, and Zeal for the Eſtabliſhed Church (tho' a Clergyman) was barbarouſly murthered by the Rebels in the year 1645; whoſe unſhaken Loyalty to the Crown and conſtant Adherance to the eſtabliſhed Religion was nevertheleſs perfectly imitated by his Son: But with better Fortune, for after he had eſcaped many and eminent Dangers, as well by Sea, as in Battles fought for the Honour and Service of the King and Country, (to which he frequently with undaunted Courage expoſed himſelf) he ended his Days in Peace and Quiet, in his Houſe called Harford in this pariſh, which at his Death he left to his Siſter Cecilia Goad, who out of Gratitude to the Memory of ſo good a Man, and ſo kind a Brother, cauſed this Monument to be erected. Benefactions.

An acre of hay-ground, and an acre of tillage-land in the eaſt upper-end field, and one acre of tillage in the weſt common field, in the lower end of this pariſh; and one acre of meadow-ground in the Brook-furlong, in the pariſh of Upper Slaughter; together with the yearly rent of 8*s.* charged on an eſtate at Harford in this pariſh, are given for the repair of the church. And Thomas Freeman, of this pariſh, yeoman, in the year 1746, gave 30*s.* yearly to teach poor children to read.

At the beginning of this century, there were 34 houſes, and about 140 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 16 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. The old pariſh regiſter being loſt, I could not collect the numbers of the baptiſms and burials for ten years beginning with 1700, in my uſual manner; but in ten years, commencing with 1760, the baptiſms were 51, the burials 22; and in the year 1767, there were 52 houſes, and 257 inhabitants, who were increaſed to 288 in the year 1776.

NEWENT.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Botloe, eight miles north-eaſtward from Mitchel-Dean, thirteen weſtward from Tewkeſbury, and ten north-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the north-weſt part of the county, upon the borders of Herefordſhire. It is a large pariſh, extending full ſeven miles from eaſt to weſt, and about ſix from north to ſouth. By much the greater part of it lies in paſturage and orcharding, for the ſoil is very deep and good, and better ſuited to paſture than corn. The roads in this part of the country are ſo intolerable, that the writer of this account found it neceſſary to deſert his horſe, and to travel with a guide on foot from one village to another.

A rill, or brook, called the Ell, runs through the north part of it, and after driving ſeveral mills, empties itſelf into the Leden.

Leland and others ſay, the name of this place ſignifies the New Inn, and that it was given it becauſe very antiently an inn was erected here for the convenience of travellers paſſing between England and Wales, which was then the only houſe in the place, but others being afterwards added, it increaſed gradually to the ſize of a town.

The town once conſiſted of nine ſtreets and lanes, which are thus enumerated in a ſmall manuſcript, intitled Fragmenta Newentenſia, kindly communicated to me by Mr. Foley, the reſident miniſter of the place.

1. New Street, or Upper Town, or Altus Vicus, ſo called in the time of king Henry the Fifth, extending from Ellbridge to Peacock's brook.

2. Lewall-ſtreet, from Peacock's brook to the market-place.

3. Church-ſtreet, from the market-houſe, along by the church, to the turnings where the right hand way leading towards Glouceſter is called Old Church-ſtreet, or the Bartholomew's, and the left hand way, Curryar's-lane.

4. Lux-lane, from Lewall-ſtreet ſouthward, as far as the houſes are contiguous.

5. Colford-ſtreet, from Lux-lane ſouthward, to the croſs way that leads from Glouceſter to Bowlſdon, comprehending the green leading towards Colford, in the foreſt of Dean. This is ſaid to be within the perambulation of the foreſt.

6. Lift-bridge-lane, leading from the ſouth end of Lux-lane weſtward, over the bridge towards Bridge-field.

7. Berry-Bar.

8. The Horſe-fair.

9. Park-lane, leading from the rock, by the crown, eaſtward to the parks. But ſeveral of theſe lanes have at this time no houſes in them.

It appears that iron has been made in or near the town, before large bellows were driven by water, ſo as more perfectly to extract the metal from the ore, for here vaſt quantities of rich iron cinders have been dug, and ſmelted over again at a furnace in this pariſh, not many years ago, tho' the furnace has been for ſome time out of blaſt. In digging for thoſe cinders, the workmen found ſeveral coins of Julius Cæſar, Nerva, Veſpaſian, &c. and ſome pieces of fine Roman pottery, now all diſperſed or deſtroy'd.

The town had a charter for a market, and two fairs, as early as the reign of king Henry the Third, which was renewed in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. And king James the Firſt granted it a new one, to hold two additional fairs, ſo that it has now four in the year, viz. on the Wedneſday before Eaſter, the Wedneſday before Whitſunday, on the firſt day of Auguſt, and on the Friday next after the 8th day of September. The market was originally on Tueſday, but it is now held on Friday.

The town had formerly a bailiff for its chief officer, mentioned in an antient deed concerning half a yard-land, called Totteland in Newent, granted by Nicholas ſon of John de Camma, to the abbey of Cormeille and to the ſaid bailiff, to which Reginald de Acle, then ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, was one of the witneſſes, in the reign of king Henry the Third. William White, who lived towards the end of the ſeventeenth century, was the laſt bailiff.

There was a ſmall priory here, for ſome time dependent on the abbey of Cormeille in Normandy, and the court-houſe adjoining to the church-yard, ſtands on the ſcite of the priory-houſe.

As the priory muſt have contributed to the growth and increaſe of the town, by procuring grants of a market, fairs, and other privileges for it, and by the company it drew thither, ſo the loſs of that houſe was very probably felt by it, at the diſſolution of alien priories. But this country, formerly ſo remarkable for old Engliſh hoſpitality, has ſuſtained a greater loſs in the courſe of the preſent century, by the general and too faſhionable deſertion of the manor and other houſes by their owners.

Newent, at preſent, is a ſmall market town, very irregularly built, and tho' there are a few pretty good houſes, the greater part are mean buildings, and ſome covered with thatch at the entrance into the town. It has no manufacture, except a little frame-knitting, nor trade, but with the neighbouring villages for common neceſſaries. The market, which is held on Fridays, is of neceſſity ſmall; for the bad condition of the roads makes it almoſt impoſſible for carriages to reach it, except on the ſide next Glouceſter, where there is a turnpike-road very ill repaired. Here was formerly a little clothing, and the place where a cloth-mill ſtood is ſtill called the Tuck-mill pool, but the trade is intirely loſt.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday it is thus recorded:

'The church of St. Mary of Cormelies holds 'Noent in Boteſlau hundred. King Edward held 'it. There are ſix hides which did not pay tax. 'Earl Roger gave it to this church for the good of 'his father's ſoul by the conſent of king William. 'In demean are three plow-tillages, and nine 'villeins, and nine bordars, with twelve plow-'tillages. There is a ſteward having one villein 'and a half, and five bordars. They have amongſt 'them all five plow-tillages, and a mill of 20*d.* '[rent.] There are two ſervi, and two mills of '6*s.* and 8*d.* [rent,] and in wood 30*d.* Durand 'holds one hide of this land of the abbat, and he 'has there one plow-tillage, and five bordars, and 'two ſervi, with two plow-tillages. There are 'two parks, [or incloſures] which the king hath 'ſeized. All the manor was worth 4*l.* in the 'time of king Edward, it is now worth 100*s.* 'Durand's hide is worth 12*s.* William the ſon 'of Baderon holds one yard-land by force.' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

This manor was afterwards confirmed to the abbey of Cormeille, by king Henry the Firſt, by pope Alexander the Third, and by king Henry the Second. See Appendix, N°. 22, & 23.

The ſame abbey purchaſed two ſeveral grants of fairs and markets, with other privileges, in Newent, 10 & 37 H. 3. which were allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

King Edward the Third, during his wars with France, ſeized this manor into his hands; and king Richard the Second, in the 5th year of his reign, granted it to ſir John Devereux, and Margaret his wife, and to John and Joan his children, to hold during the war, at the rent of 126*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* which rent was remitted 9 R. 2. But when the college of Fotheringhay, in Northamptonſhire, was founded by king Henry the Fourth and Edward duke of York, that king, by virtue of an act of parliament, granted to the ſaid college the manors, with their appurtenances, that belonged to the priory of Newent, which was ſubject to the abbey of Cormeille; and at the ſuppreſſion of alien priories, this grant was confirmed by a ſtatute 2 H. 5. After

After the general diſſolution of religious foundations, the manor of Newent, and a wood called Yarkledon, were granted to ſir Richard Lee 1 E. 6. Sir Nicholas Arnold was afterwards lord of it, and ſold it to ſir William Wintour, upon which occaſion he punningly ſaid, There had been fair weather for ſome time, but now Winter was come. Sir Edward Wintour ſucceeded his father in this manor, and from him it deſcended to his ſon ſir John Wintour.

Mr. Thomas Foley purchaſed it of ſir John Wintour, and was ſucceeded therein by his ſon Paul Foley, eſq; whoſe ſon Thomas Foley was the next poſſeſſor; and Thomas lord Foley, grandſon of the laſt mentioned Thomas, is the preſent lord of this manor. He was created a baron by patent, May 20, 1776, and took his ſeat in the houſe of peers, on the 22d day of the ſame month. His lordſhip's arms are, Argent, a feſs within a bordure ingrailed between three cinquefoils ſable.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

Beſides the town, this large pariſh contains five tithings, diviſions, or holy waters.

1. Compton. Compton-houſe was formerly called Walden's Court. This houſe, with a good eſtate belonging to it, was the property of Reginald Bray, eſq; out of whoſe family it was ſold to Mr. Edward Rogers, who left two daughters coheireſſes, one married to Edward Bearcroft, eſq; an eminent barriſter; the other to Mr. Charles Jones, who, in right of their wives, are proprietors thereof.

Carſwell is an antient manor in this tithing, thus deſcribed in Domeſday: 'Roger de Laci holds 'Craſowel in Botelau hundred, and Odo holds it 'of him. Ulfel held it in the time of king 'Edward, and could go wherever he would. There 'is one hide and one yard-land, and in demean 'one plow-tillage, and three villeins, and one 'bordar, with three plow-tillages. It is worth 'and was worth 20*s.*' p. 75. This eſtate, which was formerly the Pauncefoots, now belongs to Mr. Bromley and Mr. Smith.

The Waters End, or the Scarre, formerly called Atherlord's Place, which was Mr. Dobyns's, is now the property of Mr. Sergeant.

The Hays is an antient place in this tithing. 'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds one hide [in] Hege, 'which [with other lands] he had of Walter de 'Laci, as a portion with his niece.' Dom. B. p. 78. This formerly belonged to the Walls, and is now the eſtate of Mr. Pritchard.

2. Maulſwick, in which are comprehended Okely-Clifford, Okely-Pritchard, and Okely-Grandiſon. Theſe are not always diſtinguiſhed in the records. Philippa the widow of Henry Maſham died ſeized of Okely 8 H. 4. Elizabeth the widow of Robert Lovell died ſeized of Okely-Grandiſon 16 H. 6. Sir James Ormond (ſon of James earl of Ormond) and Amice his wife levied a fine of it 23 H. 6. and the latter died ſeized of this eſtate in the 35th year of that reign. James earl of Wiltſhire was ſeized of it 1 E. 4. John Roberts and his wife levied a fine of the manor of Okely-court 23 H. 7. The manor of Okely-Grandiſon belonged to Thomas duke of Norfolk, who being attainted, it was granted to Paul Withepool and others, as a ſecurity for money borrowed, 36 H. 8. Thomas Brook, eſq; died ſeized of Okely-Grandiſon, without iſſue, 38 H. 8. and Joan Arrowſmith, his ſiſter and heir, had livery thereof 1 E. 6. Mr. Rogers was lord of the manor of Okely, and proprietor of a good eſtate in this place, at the beginning of the preſent century, which are now come to Mr. Bearcroft and Mr. Jones, in right of their wives, who were the daughters and coheirs of the late Mr. Rogers. There was formerly a chapel in the manor-houſe.

Okely-Pritchard is the eſtate of George Smith, eſq.

3. Cugley. William Gerand of Matiſden, and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cugley 8 E. 2.

Mr. Chin has a good houſe and eſtate in this tithing, called the Moat, formerly belonging to the Woodwards.

In the common, at the foot of Yartleton-hill, part of which lies in this tithing, there was formerly a glaſs-houſe, and the place where it ſtood it is ſtill called the Glaſs-houſe. Near the top of the ſame hill is Crocket's Hole, ſo called, becauſe one Crocket and his companion Horne uſed to hide themſelves there, in the perſecuting reign of queen Mary. Horne was taken, and burnt in the yard belonging to the priory-houſe in Newent, which is not mentioned in Fox's Acts and Monuments. His ſtory is briefly thus, as related by Horne's ſon, who had it from his mother. Horne was a papiſt and a man of parts, and meeting with ſeveral proteſtants who had aſſembled near the ſide of Yartleton-wood to diſcourſe on religious ſubjects, at length became a proſelyte, and refuſed to go to maſs; for which he was taken before the biſhop, in his conſiſtory court at Glouceſter, and committed to ſome priſon within the verge of the college. But eſcaping from it in the night, he returned home, and lay concealed in various manners; at laſt, his wife being with child was delivered, and an entertainment made at the baptizing of the child, when the mother deſired a cutting of ſome meat, (probably what ſhe knew her huſband loved) which having received, ſhe laid it by: This being obſerved by the midwife, created a ſuſpicion, whereupon ſhe procured an officer to ſearch for poor Horne, whom they found concealed under a veſſel with the head out. He was immediately carried to his trial, condemned, and led to the place of execution, ſinging the 146th pſalm, where he ſuffered with great Chriſtian fortitude. Horne was ſo well beloved by his neighbours, and his execution ſo much execrated, that when the news was but whiſper'd of queen Mary's

Mary's death, the women, (men not daring to appear) took the prieſt that ſupply'd the church upon a horſe, with his face towards the tail, and leading him thro' the town, ſent him away. Fragment. Newentenſia.

About the year 1665, one Fairfax, a diſbanded ſoldier, adviſed by Lilly the aſtrologer, came down from London, and opened this hole, in hopes of diſcovering great riches therein, which drew many people thither. Some of them went into the hole, and told incredible things concerning it; at laſt, one Witcombe going in drunk, and dying there, put an end to all further examination.

4. Bouleſdon, or Boldeſdon. John Atwood had one meſſuage and ſix acres of land in Bouleſdon, and being attainted of felony, his lands were ſeized by the king 29 E. 1. Thomas Boulſdon died ſeized of this manor 14 E. 4. whoſe family took their name from this place, where they enjoy'd a conſiderable eſtate for ſeveral generations. Thomas Porter, eſq; had livery of this manor 1 Eliz. Walter Nourſe was lord of it at the beginning of this century; but it is now the property of lord Foley. The manor houſe is down. From a place called the Caſtle-mount, there is a good proſpect over the vale. Woeful-hill in this tithing, is a place where it is ſaid criminals were formerly executed.

5. Kilcot, perhaps from the Britiſh Cyll Coed, a hazle-wood. This place is taken notice of in Domeſday. 'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds one hide '[in] Chilcot, which he had of Walter de Laci, 'in marriage with his niece.' p. 78.

Robert de Muſgroſe died ſeized of Kilecot 38 H. 3. Bogo de Knovil had a grant of free warren in Kilcot 13 E. 1. and Bogo his ſon died ſeized of this manor 12 E. 3. Sir John de Verdune levied a fine of it to ſir Richard Pembrooke, who granted the ſame to Thomas Moine 37 E. 3. and Beatreaux the wife of Richard Burly died ſeized of it 16 R. 2. This manor lately belonged to Walter Nourſe, eſq; and is now the property of Mr. Lewis, who holds a court leet here.

There was formerly a chapel in this tithing, ſuppoſed to have been dedicated to St. Hillary, becauſe the ground where it ſtood lying high, is ſtill called St. Tilly's Nap, near Ghoſtly or Gorſtly common.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the Foreſt deanery. It is a vicarage endowed. Lord Foley is patron, and Doctor Foley is the preſent incumbent.

The rectory belonged to the college of Fotheringhay, and after the general diſſolution of religious foundations, was granted to ſir Richard Lee, 1 E. 6. It afterwards came to ſir John Wintour, who ſold it to Edward Warcup, eſq; who, in the year 1665, ſold it to Paul Foley, eſq. His grandſon, Thomas Foley, eſq; endowed the vicarage, which makes it a very valuable living, worth about 350*l.* a year. The rectory pays 10*s.* a year to the crown.

Dr. John Craiſter, who died vicar of this church in the year 1737, by his will, gave his library to the ſucceeding vicars.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is large, and neatly pewed, and the roof is ſupported without pillars. It has a ſpire ſteeple over the porch, with ſix bells and a ſet of chimes in it, and a ſmall chancel on the ſide of the great one. The ſteeple is 153 feet high from the ground, the top of which was blown down in 1662; and the whole roof of the body of the church fell down on Sunday after evening ſervice, Jan. 18, 1673, but no perſon was hurt by the fall. The inhabitants did for ſome time commemorate this accident, by obſerving that day with thankſgiving for their deliverance. Under one of the pillars was found a tomb ſtone, with this inſcription: Hic jacet W^s de capella monac. Corder. cuj' aie p'pic' D^s; and a gilt altar-piece was taken out of the wall. Theſe circumſtances ſhew that the church has been thrice built.

There were two chantries in this church, one dedicated to St. James and St. Anne, whereof Philip Wyat was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 4*l.* The other was dedicated to St. Mary, of which William Brook was the laſt incumbent.

Lands in Newent, formerly belonging to theſe chantries, were granted to Ralph Dobbins and others, 3 Jac. And a tenement called the Porch-houſe, and Culford in Newent, late belonging to St. Mary's chantry, were granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter, and John Morley, 24 Eliz.

All Yartleton-wood, except Jordan's grove, and a few other lands are tithe free.

In the year 1676, there were in the town and pariſh 943 inhabitants, of ſixteen years old and upwards, and about 1570 ſouls in the whole. About the beginning of the preſent century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 270 houſes, and about 1100 inhabitants, whereof 93 were freeholders; yearly births 38, burials 37. But ſir Robert's numbers were probably too low. On an average of ſeven years, beginning with 1761, the annual baptiſms were 58, and the burials 39; and the inhabitants are at preſent about 1560.

There is the following entry in the pariſh regiſter. A. D. 1602, Feb. 24, Anne Wilſon, widow, mother of John Wilſon, buried, aged 115.

NEWINGTON BAGPATH

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, four miles eaſtward from Wotton-underedge, ſix weſt from Tetbury, and ſeventeen ſouth from Glouceſter. It is full of little hills and ſteep acclivities, and the lands are moſtly employ'd in tillage. The houſes ſtand at the head of a very narrow comb, or valley, which extends weſtward to Ozleworth, Alderley, and Kingſwood, gradually opening itſelf 'till it joins the great vale a little below the laſt mentioned place. It has Simondſhall, (a tithing in the large pariſh of Wotton) to the north, Kingſcot to the eaſt, and Boxwell and Laſborough to the ſouth and ſouth-eaſtward of it. The church ſtands at a diſtance from the houſes, which is ſaid to have been occaſioned by a diſpute between the joint patrons; and becauſe neither of them would ſuffer it to be built near to the other's manſion houſe, they agreed that it ſhould ſtand about the midway between them.

The antient name of this place is Neuetone, which was given it from its being later inhabited or cultivated than ſome of the neighbouring villages. In order to diſtinguiſh it from ſeveral other places of the ſame name, the addition of Bagpath was afterwards made, and taken probably from a family of the name of Bagpaze, who might have property here ſometime between the Norman conqueſt and the reign of king Edward the Firſt; but as this is a matter unſupported by poſitive proof, it muſt reſt ſolely on conjecture.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

When Domeſday-book was compiled, this manor was a member of the great lordſhip of Berkeley; for under the particulars of that manor, it is there ſaid, 'Roger has ſeven hides at Neuetone of the 'land of this manor.'

What ſir Robert Atkyns ſays of its being held of the honour of Hereford, is moſt probably a miſtake. It was a member of the lordſhip of Berkeley before the conqueſt, and it has continued to be ſo ever ſince.

John, ſon of William de Berkeley, was lord of Newenton in Berkeley hundred (as appears by the ſheriff's return of all the vills in the county, with their ſeveral proprietors) 9 E. 1. John de Berkeley, of Durſley, and Hawiſe his wife, levied a fine of this manor 5 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley was ſeized of Newington 2 R. 2. and was living 6 R. 2.

The manor ſoon after paſſed to the Wekys's, deſcended from an heireſs of the Berkeley family, as may be ſeen under Dodington. John Wekys died ſeized of Newington, leaving Edward his ſon and heir, who likewiſe died ſeized of this manor 6 H. 8. and livery was granted to Nicholas Wekys, ſon of Edward, the ſame year. He died 5 Mariæ, and was ſucceeded by Robert Wekys, his grandſon and heir, who was likewiſe lord of the manors of Dodington and Durſley, both which he ſold in the reign of queen Elizabeth; and it is probable that he ſold this about the ſame time, for ſir Thomas Low was lord of the manor in the year 1608. Edward Webb was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. It ſoon after paſſed to Nigel Kingſcot, eſq; whoſe nephew —— Kingſcot, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor.

HAMLET. Bagpath, lying half a mile from the church. Sir Robert Pointz, died ſeized of this eſtate 12 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by ſir Anthony his ſon and heir, whoſe ſon, ſir Nicholas, died ſeized thereof 4 Mariæ, and livery was then granted to Nicholas Pointz, ſon of ſir Nicholas. Mr. Edward Webb was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and it is now veſted in Mr. Kingſcot.

Calcot, or Caldecot, is a farm in this pariſh, formerly the demeans of the abbey of Kingſwood. It was granted to ſir Nicholas Pointz 31 H. 8. and from his family paſſed to the Eſtcourts. Thomas Eſtcourt, of Shipton Moyne, eſq; is the preſent proprietor.

A moiety of lands in Bagpath, and in Bemerton and Sedworth near Bagpath, formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted to ſir Walter Rawleigh, and upon his attainder, to Peter Vanlore, merchant, and William Blake, ſcrivener, 3 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth 120*l.* a year. Mr. Cliffold is the preſent incumbent. In 1503, the rector of this church was diſcharged from keeping a curate at Olepen, which is a chapel annexed to this church. The abbey of Glouceſter had the patronage of the rectory, in the year 1512.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and has a large tower at the weſt end.

NEWLAND.

THIS pariſh is ſituated within the perambulation of the foreſt of Dean, and is bounded on the weſt by the river Wye. It is the largeſt pariſh in the county, with great variety of ſoil and of produce. It abounds with iron ore and ochre, and with a kind of coal that burns freely, and and makes a ſtronger fire than the Kingſwood coal, but is not ſo laſting.

Newland was originally taken out of the foreſt, and granted away by the crown. When it became private property, it was then firſt aſſarted and cultivated, which gave occaſion to the name of Nova Terra, as it is called in antient records, and to that by which it is at preſent known. But this event had not taken place when Domeſday was compiled, as there is no mention of Newland in that record, but the name occurs in others as early as the reign of king Henry the Third.

The face of this country is full of little hills and vallies, intermixt with ſwells and ſlopes that form an infinite and pleaſing variety. The village of Newland lies on the ſide of one of thoſe vallies, not to be ſeen at any great diſtance, and conſequently has not the advantage of extenſive proſpect, but is nevertheleſs one of the handſomeſt villages in the county. It is the reſidence of ſeveral perſons of conſiderable fortune, whoſe houſes are ſuitable to their condition in life. They are not arranged in a ſtraight line, but form part of a ſquare, with the church and church-yard, which are both very large and handſome, ſituated where the area would be, if the ſquare were compleat. This may ſerve to give a general notion of the place, but the deſcription is not exact and perfect, as it may be ſuppoſed that many houſes are out of this order, in a country village, where the figure of the whole could not to be attended to when the houſes were erected.

Highmeadow, the ſeat of lord viſcount Gage, lies about half a mile eaſtward from the village. The houſe is large and handſome, built in the form of the letter H, and from its elevated ſituation, commands a bird's-eye view of the village, and of the beautiful lawns and groves on the other ſide of the valley, at a very agreeable diſtance. Were his lordſhip poſſeſſed of the whole landſcape, he could not wiſh to diſplace a ſingle object; yet the proſpect might be improved by the addition of water, which it wants to make it compleat. Part of this ſeat is ſaid to ſtand in this pariſh, and part in that of Staunton.

There are ſeveral good houſes and pleaſant gardens in the village of Newland, of which the ſeat of Edmund Probyn, eſq; is the principal. He has a large eſtate in this pariſh, and in ſeveral other parts of the county.

The reverend Mr. Ball, the preſent incumbent of Newland, is poſſeſſed of a curioſity that deſerves to be mentioned. It is the cradle of king Henry V. who was born at Monmouth. The whole is made of oak, and the part where the infant lay is an oblong cheſt, open at top, with an iron ring at the head, and another at the feet, by which it hangs upon hooks fixt in two upright pieces, ſtrongly mortiſed in a frame which lies upon the floor. Thus ſuſpended, the cradle is eaſily put in motion. Each of the upright pieces is ornamented at top with the figure of a dove, gilt, and tolerably executed.

There is an iron-furnace in this pariſh, and two copper-works at a place called Red-Brook, but they have the copper ore from Cornwall, and other parts.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The records ſhew, that John de Kinerdſley died ſeized of Newland in the foreſt of Dean 39 H. 3. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Hugh, who was attainted of treaſon, and his lands ſeized into the king's hands. The manor of Nova Terra was found to be in the crown by an inquiſition 4 E. 1. but it was granted to Richard Harine and his heirs the following year.

Sir John ap Howel was afterwards ſeized of the manor, which he forfeited by rebellion againſt king Edward the Second, but it was reſtored to him 15 E. 3. William Baynham levied a fine of it 6 E. 6. after which it eſcheated to the king, and the manor is now veſted in the crown.

But there was a reputed manor, or ſome eſtate dignified with the title of a manor, in this pariſh, formerly belonging to the abbey of Flaxley, which was granted, with the manor of Ruredean, to ſir Anthony Kingſton 36 H. 8.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that ſir John de Wyſham and Joan his wife levied two fines of lands in Newland and St. Briavel's 20 & 30 E. 3. Joan the widow of Robert Grinder was ſeized of the patronage of a chantry in the church of Newland, and of one meſſuage, three tofts, and 200 acres of land 24 H. 6. James Bell died ſeized of two meſſuages, and three parcels of meadow, a piece of paſture called Tyllo's Hill, and twenty-four acres of arable land in Hymeade, in Newland, and of a cloſe in Aſhrydge, in the pariſh of Staunton, 43 Eliz. Eſch.

Wye-Seal is an eſtate in Newland, belonging to the dean and chapter of Hereford, and is exempt from tithes.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Clowerwall, antiently called Wellington, and afterwards Clowerwall, and Clearwell, from a fine tranſparent ſpring of water riſing in this tithing. It antiently belonged to the Joyces, from whom it went to the family of the Grinders or Grendours. Robert Grendour died ſeized of Clowerwall 22 H. 6. and was ſucceeded by his ſon John. Alice Grendour, daughter and heireſs of John, was married to William Walwyn of Herefordſhire.

William Walwyn, ſon of William and Alice, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Lanks, by whom he had an only daughter and heireſs Alice, who, by her marriage, carried this eſtate to Thomas ap Enion, alias Baynham, who was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 18 E. 4. But he had a former wife, Margaret, daughter of Richard Hoddy, a judge in one of his majeſty's courts.

Sir Chriſtopher Baynham, of Clowerwall, ſon of Thomas by the ſaid Alice, married Joan, daughter of Thomas Morgan of Monmouthſhire, and and was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 3 & 9 H. 8. He was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir George Baynham, who married to his firſt wife a daughter of ſir William Kingſton, whom he ſurvived; ſecondly, Cicely, daughter of ſir John Gage. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 36 H. 8. and dying 38 H. 8. his ſon Chriſtopher had livery of this manor 3 E. 6. Thomas Baynham, ſon of Chriſtopher, married Mary, daughter of ſir Wilſiam Wintour, of Lidney. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 25 Eliz. and again in the laſt year of the ſame reign.

Sir William Throckmorton of Tortworth, baronet, married Cicely, daughter and coheireſs of Thomas Baynham, with whom he had Clowerwall.

This eſtate was afterwards veſted in Francis Wyndham, eſq; deſcended from the antient family of that name in Somerſetſhire, and paſſed from him to Thomas Wyndham, eſq; whoſe ſon, Charles Wyndham, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of Clowerwall, where he has a very handſome houſe, built by his father in the Gothic ſtile, and a park, with a large eſtate, and fine plantations. In the year 1762, he married Eleanor, the ſecond daughter of James Rooke, of Bickſwear, eſq; by Jane his wife, daughter of Tracy Catchmay, eſq; of the ſame place, and by her hath iſſue one ſon. His arms are, Azure, a chevron between three lions heads erazed Or.

2. Colford. This is a tithing, and a ſmall market town, on the turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Monmouth, about four miles diſtant eaſtward from the latter. King James the Firſt granted it a market to be held on Friday, and two fairs annually, one on the 9th, now held on the 20th of June, for wool; the other on the 24th of November, for cheeſe, &c. The market houſe was built by contribution, in the year 1679, towards which king Charles the Second gave forty pounds.

King Offa's dyke paſſes thro', and I am inclined to think gave name to this tithing, which from Claudh Offa, by a ſtrange and unaccountable corruption, is now pronounced Covert, but written as at the beginning of this account.

Corbet, in his Military Government, relates, that before the ſiege of Glouceſter happened, the forces raiſed by the earl of Worceſter, and his ſon, lord Herbert, attacked a regiment of the parliament's party under colonel Berrowe, at this place, which had been made a kind of looſe garriſon for the defence of the foreſt. 'Here the Welch fell on,' ſays he, 'but their officers, with ſtrange fury, 'drove our party before them, which was borne 'down by their multitudes, yet with a greater loſs 'on their part. Divers officers were ſlain, and 'with the reſt their commander in chief, ſir 'Richard Lawdy, major-general of South Wales. 'Of ours few were ſlain, but lieutenant-colonel 'Winter, and ſome inferior officers, with about 'forty private ſoldiers taken priſoners.' p. 26.

There is a chapel of eaſe in this town, of which the biſhop of Glouceſter is patron. The chapel was deſtroy'd in the civil wars, and remained in ruins 'till it was repaired about the year 1704, and queen Anne gave 300*l.* out of the ſale of wood in the foreſt of Dean, to endow it, which ſum hath purchaſed a houſe and lands in Whitchurch and Ganerew, in Herefordſhire, now let at 18*l.* a year. And the truſtees of the queen's bounty have given a further ſum of 200*l.* to augment the curacy, which is not yet laid out on land. There is no houſe for the curate.

3. Bream. This tithing lies four miles diſtant from the church. The name ſignifies ſharp, ſevere, (from bremma, Sax. to rage or fume,) and it is uſed in that ſenſe by Spencer in the following line, Comes the breme winter with chamfred brows.

And perhaps the name was given to this place from its expoſed ſituation. Here is a chapel of eaſe.

Bream's-Lodge, is a large handſome houſe, late belonging to Mr. Barrow Lawrence, deceaſed. It ſtands part in this tithing, and part in that of Ailberton. He died about the year 1773, ſeized of a good eſtate here, and in the adjoining pariſh of St. Briavel's, as well as in Ailberton, with an extenſive warren in the laſt mentioned place, called Prior's Meen, (becauſe it formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony) whence there is a very extenſive view of the vale of Glouceſterſhire, from Frampton downwards, to the extremity of the county at Kingroad; and a diſtant proſpect of the counties of Worceſter, Wilts, Somerſet, Monmouth, Brecon, Radnor, and Hereford. He was ſon of Anthony Lawrence, gent. of the Shurdington family, by Mary his wife, the only daughter of James Barrow, gent. (whoſe family long reſided at the ſame place) by Beata his wife, only ſiſter and heireſs of Mr. ſerjeant Powlet, once recorder of the city of Briſtol, and one of the juſtices of South Wales, who reſided at Bream's-Lodge many years, 'till the time of his death in 1703.

Paſtors-Hill in this tithing, is the houſe and eſtate of Mr. William Gough the younger, great grandſon of the late William Gough of Willſbury, by Mary his laſt wife; which eſtate was given to him by James Gough, gent. younger ſon of Warren Gough of Willſbury. Which James Gough, by his laſt will, dated Sep. 7, 1676, deviſed to truſtees an eſtate at Stroate, in the pariſh of Tiddenham, to pay five ſhillings to an able divine, for every Sunday that he ſhall read prayers and preach once in the day in the chapel of Bream. On every default, the five ſhillings to be laid out in repairing the chapel, or given to the poor. And if the ſaid eſtate ſhould exceed 13*l.* yearly, the overplus to be given to the poor of this tithing. Mr. ſerjeant Powlet added 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly to this donation, and ſubjected his lands in Ailberton to the payment thereof.

Mary the widow of the above James Gough, by her will, gave 50*l.* the intereſt to be paid for ever to a poor woman, to teach the children of this tithing to read.

4. Le

4. Le Baily, formerly the eſtate of John Tiptot, or Tiptoft, earl of Worceſter, and afterwards of the Talbots, earls of Shrewſbury. There is nothing worthy notice in this tithing.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 90*l.* a year. The biſhop of Landaff is patron, and Mr. Peregrine Ball is the preſent incumbent. The tithes of all the aſſart lands in the foreſt were granted to the church of Newland 34 E. 1. and the great tithes of this church were appropriated to the biſhoprick of Landaff in the year 1399. The glebe and great tithes of this pariſh are worth about 200*l.* a year.

The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is very large for a country village, with a gallery, and a handſome tower at the weſt end, adorned with pinnacles, and furniſh'd with a clock. The church-yard is alſo large, with handſome walks croſs, gravelled and kept in good order.

There was a chantry erected in this church, and endowed with 12*l.* a year by Robert Grendour and Joan his wife 24 H. 6. There were alſo ſeveral other chantries, one dedicated to St. Mary, whereof George Wadham was the laſt incumbent, and enjoy'd a penſion of 4*l.* a year in 1553. The lands belonging to it were granted to ſir Oliver Cromwell 5 Jac. and to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 6 Jac. Another was called king Edward's chantry, whereof Edward Brior was the laſt incumbent, and received a penſion of 4*l.* a year. There was alſo Newland chantry, ſome of the lands belonging to which were granted to Lewis Williams 1 E. 6. and others were granted the ſame year to Robert Lea. At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 480 houſes, and about 2200 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 150 were freeholders; yearly births 48, burials 47. But the people are pretty much increaſed ſince that time, ſo that the preſent number of ſouls is about 2997. At the raiſing of the militia in the year 1760, one man was taken out of every 29 upon the liſts throughout the county, and this pariſh then found fifteen men for its proportion.

NEWNHAM.

THIS is a market town, in the hundred of Weſtbury, in the Foreſt diviſion, ſixteen miles diſtant north from Chepſtow, ten eaſt from Colford, five ſouth-eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, and ten ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It lies fourteen miles from the mouth of the river Wye, and ſixteen from Kingroad, where the Briſtol Avon empties itſelf into the Severn.

It is pleaſantly ſituated on an eminence along the weſt ſide of the Severn, which is here ſomething leſs than a mile over at high water; and, by means of that river, has a conſtant communication with London by ſhips of about 160 tons burthen. Here is a very ſafe paſſage or ferry over the river for horſes and carriages, and a ford paſſable at low water, the reſort to which, before ferries were eſtabliſhed, was moſt probably the original occaſion of the building of the town.

At this place was the firſt fortification erected on the weſt ſide of the Severn againſt the Welch. And Strongbow earl of Chepſtow, after having made very conſiderable conqueſts in Ireland, being commanded by king Henry the Second to appear before him, obeyed the royal mandate, and met the king at this town; wherefore we may ſuppoſe it to have been a place of good ſecurity at that time. Indeed here was antiently a caſtle, as appears by ſeveral grants of lands in Newnham to the prior and brethren of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital at Glouceſter, wherein the lands are deſcribed as lying next the caſtle and caſtle-ditch, on the one part, and extending to Staure's-mill on the other.

This town had ſome ſhare in the military tranſactions in the reign of king Charles the Firſt. Corbet, who wrote of thoſe affairs, profeſſedly favoured the parliament's intereſt, and gives an account that the royaliſts garriſoned Newnham, where colonel Congreve was governor, who was taken and killed at Little Dean, as I have related under that head. And that immediately afterwards, colonel Maſſie, governor of Glouceſter, came to this place, where ſir John Winter's forces kept garriſon in the church, and had a pretty ſtrong fortification adjoining. Maſſie poſſeſſed himſelf of the town without oppoſition, and drew up two pieces of cannon within piſtol-ſhot of the works, under cover of a blind of faggots; and having made every thing ready for a ſtorm, the king's party deſired a parley, but Maſſie inſiſted on their immediate ſurrender. In the interim, the king's troops deſerting the works, fled into the church, and were ſo cloſely purſued that the aſſailants entered along with them. 'Then' ſays Corbet, 'they cry'd for quarter, when in the very 'point of victory, a diſaſter had like to befall us; 'a barrel of gunpowder was fired in the church, 'undoubtedly for the purpoſe, and was conceived 'to be done by one Tipper, a moſt virulent papiſt, 'and ſir John Winter's ſervant, deſpairing of his 'redemption, being a priſoner before, and having 'falſified his engagements. This powder-blaſt 'blew many out of the church, and ſorely ſinged 'a great number, but killed none. The ſoldiers 'enraged, fell upon them, and in the heat of 'blood ſlew near twenty, amongſt others this 'Tipper. All the reſt had quarter for their lives, '(ſave one Butler, an Iriſh rebel, who was knock'd 'down by a common ſoldier) and an hundred 'priſoners taken. The ſervice was performed 'without the loſs of a man on our ſide.' Corbet's Military Government of Glouceſter.

Mention is made of High-ſtreet, Horman-lane, and Shop-row, as the names of places in grants of land in the borough, 15 E. 3. But the town at preſent conſiſts chiefly of one ſtreet, and is diſtant about a mile from the foreſt of Dean, to which there is an immediate aſcent, and a ſpacious road from the river: The lands are perfectly dry and healthy, and the inhabitants are not ſubject to agues and other diſorders, from noxious vapours and exhalations, as thoſe commonly are who live in low countries, near great rivers. It was an antient borough, of which, in the time of king Edward the Firſt, the ſheriff returned only five in the county, Briſtol, Glouceſter, Berkeley, Durſley, and Newnham; and it was governed by a mayor and burgeſſes. The ſword of ſtate, given to them with their charter by king John, and ſtill preſerved to be ſhewn in teſtimony of their former greatneſs and better condition, is of ſteel, finely poliſhed, and ornamented with curious workmanſhip. Its whole length is ſix feet, and the length of the blade four feet four inches, on which is this inſcription: John Morſe being Maier, this Sord did repaier, 1584. Having loſt their charter, they ſtill continue, by preſcriptive right, to elect a mayor annually on the Monday after St. Hillary; but neither the mayor nor aldermen, of whom there are ſix, have any authority over the town, which is governed by two beams, or conſtables.

There are two fairs in the year, on the 11th of June, and the 18th of October, for cattle, horſes, and ſheep; and the market is held on Friday, but it is not much uſed, for the town is daily well ſupply'd, at an eaſy rate, with variety of the beſt proviſions of every kind from the neighbouring villages in the foreſt.

Tho' the town is extremely well ſituated upon a fine river, where ſhips of burthen may ſafely come to anchor, yet its trade has been very inconſiderable, and almoſt wholly confined to the exportation of oak bark to Ireland, 'till a few years ago, when Mr. Robert Pyrke, merchant there, built a commodious quay on the ſide of the river, with cranes and ſtore-houſes, for the convenience of ſhipping and landing all ſorts of goods; and from that time the manufacturers at Birmingham and other places have brought great quantities in barges down the river to this town, where they are ſhipped in veſſels from one to two hundred tons burthen, and carried to London.

And

And of late, many ſhips of large burthen have been built here. This ſeems to be an auſpicious beginning, which time and induſtry may improve to the great advantage of the town, eſpecially as it lies in a country full of an excellent kind of coal, which is brought hither on horſes backs, from the pits two or three miles off in the foreſt of Dean, to be ſent to other places by water, and may prove an inexhauſtible fund of wealth. Beſides, the foreſt and all the country hereabout is famous for fine ſtyre, and other prime ſorts of cyder, which liquor finds a ready market here, and is become a very conſiderable article of commerce to London and Ireland.

Sir Edward Manſell, in the reign of king Charles the Firſt, erected here the firſt glaſs-houſe in England, which was work'd with ſtone-coal, the foundation of which ſtill remains. The glaſs manufacture has been diſcontinued a long time, but there is lately a very conſiderable verdigris-work ſet up in its room, and carried on with a laudable ſpirit, and the trade of ſhip-building is much incouraged; from all which circumſtances, Newnham bids fair to be a flouriſhing little town, and is already much improved in its buildings. Roynon Jones, eſq; and Mr. Robert Pyrke, merchant, reſide in two of the principal houſes, very pleaſantly ſituated upon the river. A turnpike-road from Glouceſter leads through the town, and ſo to Chepſtow and South Wales.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The town of Newnham was diſtinct from the manor, but they are both called Newnham in the records, which is the reaſon that ſo many different families ſeem to have been poſſeſſed of the manor; whereas the fact is, that the records ſometimes ſpeak of the town, and ſometimes of the manor, in the ſame terms, tho' they were different and diſtinct eſtates. The manor was given by king Canute, in the year 1018, to the Benedictine abbey of Perſhore in Worceſterſhire; and the town was given, with twenty-four other vills, by Leofric earl of Mercia, to an abbey of black monks which he had founded in Coventry, in the year 1050. How long they continued in poſſeſſion of theſe eſtates, I cannot preciſely tell, but the manor was in lay hands in the reign of the Conqueror, as appears by the following extract:

'William the ſon of Baderon holds Neuneham. 'There is one hide, and three villeins, and three 'bordars paying 20 ſol. This land pays no tax. 'There is a wood two furlongs long, and one 'broad.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

This manor was afterwards enjoy'd by the Bohuns earls of Hereford and Eſſex, together with the manors of Haresfield and Whitenhurſt, by the tenure of which they held the great office of Conſtable of England, by grand ſerjeanty, as of inheritance. And that office was afterwards of right in the line of the Staffords, and dukes of Buckingham, as heirs general to them, and deſcended to Edward duke of Buckingham, who was attainted of treaſon 13 H. 8. whereby it was forfeited to the crown; and ſince that time, both in reſpect of the amplitude of the authority, in war and in peace, and of the charge, it hath never been granted to any ſubject, but now of late hac vice. Coke's Inſtitutes, part 4.

Henry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, releaſed all his right in Newnham to king John, in the firſt year of his reign. The manor was granted to William earl of Saliſbury 2 H. 3. who died ſeized of it the 10th, as did Thomas Foliot 45 H. 3. It was in the crown 4 E. 1. and yielded 10*l.* a year, as appears by an inquiſition of that date. Walter de Stukeley was ſheriff of the county of Glouceſter 9 E. 1. in which year he returned into the king's exchequer, that the king was then lord of the borough of Newnham.

Roger de Mortimer held this manor 11 E. 1. and Walter le Marſhal was ſeized of it in the 21ſt year of that reign, when he was convicted and attainted of felony, whereby the manor eſcheated to the crown. It was afterwards granted to Thomas earl of Norfolk and the heirs of his body 4 E. 3. and was again granted to William Bohun and the heirs of his body 6 E. 3. in which grant it was mentioned to have lately belonged to Thomas earl of Norfolk. William de Bohun, earl of Northampton, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Newnham to the archbiſhop of Canterbury and others, to the uſe of themſelves in taille ſpecial, the remainder to the king and his heirs, 20 E. 3. Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and Joan his wife, were ſeized of the manor of Newnham 46 E. 3.

Thomas duke of Glouceſter, the youngeſt ſon of king Edward the Third, marrying Eleanor, the daughter and coheireſs of Humphry de Bohun, became poſſeſſed of the earldoms of Hereford, Eſſex, and Northampton, and was conſtable of England. He, in right of Eleanor his wife, was ſeized of the manor of Newnham, of Calcot-caſtle and Newton 21 R. 2.

Upon the diſſolution of the abbey of Flaxley, an eſtate called the manor of Newnham, late belonging to that abbey, was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton 36 H. 8.

The manor of Newnham was afterwards granted to Henry lord Stafford and Urſula his wife 2 Mar. Edward lord Stafford, ſon of Henry, died ſeized thereof 2 Jac. and left Edward lord Stafford his ſon and heir, thirty years old at his father's death. This laſt Edward had a ſon of his own name, who died before him, and left one ſon Henry, and a daughter Mary. Henry died unmarried in 1637, whereby his ſiſter Mary became ſole heireſs. She was married to ſir William Howard, younger ſon to Thomas earl of Arundel and Surrey, who, in her right, was ſeized of the manor of Newnham. He aſſumed the name of Stafford, on account of his wife's being heir to ſo great a family, and was created viſcount Stafford by king Charles the the Firſt, but was attainted upon account of the popiſh plot, and beheaded in 1678. Henry, their ſon, was created earl of Stafford 4 Jac. and ſucceeded to this manor. The earl of Effingham is the preſent lord of the manor of Newnham, and holds a court leet for the manor and borough once a year. His lordſhip's arms are, Quarterly, 1. Gules, in the middle of a bend between ſix croſs croſlets fitchy argent, a ſhield Or, therein a demi lion rampant (pierced through the mouth with an arrow) within a double treſſure counterflory gules, being an augmentation for the victory at Flodden, for Howard. 2. Gules, three lions paſſant paleways Or, a label in chief of three points argent, for Brotherton. 3. Checky Or and azure, for Warren, earl of Surry. 4. Gules, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued azure, for Moubray, duke of Norfolk.

The records ſhew, that William Bleith and Joan his wife were ſeized of one meſſuage and ſix acres of land in Newnham 34 E. 1. William Marſhal levied a fine of a fiſhery in Newnham and Rudle 16 H. 7. and Jeffry Griffith and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Newnham 21 H. 7.

HAMLETS. 1. Ruddle. Ralph Bluet, ſoon after the conqueſt, gave this manor of Rodele, and a fiſhery, to the abbey of Glouceſter, which king William the Second confirmed in the year 1096, at the petition of abbat Serlo, and ſome of his nobles. And king Henry the Firſt gave and confirmed the manor of Rudele to the abbey, to find lights to burn continually before the high altar of St. Peter's, for the ſoul of duke Robert Curthoiſe, his brother. He alſo granted and confirmed to them a fiſhery in the Severn as far as their lands extended, and a grove or wood there, called Sudrug, to do as they pleaſed with it; and to the ſacriſt of the abbey, common for all his cattle through the whole foreſt of Dean. And Henry the Third, by his charter dated at Newnham, confirmed this fiſhery to the abbey, as fully as Henry the Firſt gave it.

The manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey of Glouceſter 'till the diſſolution, and was then granted to William earl of Pembroke 7 E. 6. who ſold it to ſir Giles Pool 4 Mar. It is now the property of Roynon Jones, of Naſs in the pariſh of Lidney, eſq; who hath lately built a handſome houſe, very pleaſantly ſituated at Haywell in this hamlet, and annually holds a court leet for this manor.

2. Stairs, antiently written Staure, of which Domeſday makes the following mention: 'William the ſon of Baderon holds Staure in Weſtberie hundred. Ulfeg held it in the time of king Edward. It was worth 10*s.* now 5*s.* There is one hide which doth not pay tax.' p. 74. William de Staure died ſeized of one meſſuage, forty-ſeven acres of arable, three acres of meadow, and 3*s.* rent at Staure, in the manor of Rodley, of the fee of Henry de Lancaſter, by the ſervice of paying 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, and doing ſuit at the court of the ſaid Henry, 2 E. 2. Eſch. William Morwent, eſq; had formerly a good houſe here, now fallen to decay.

Cockſhoot, Bleythe's Court, and Hill-houſe, are unworthily diſtinguiſh'd by ſir Robert Atkyns as ſeparate hamlets.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation belonging to the corporation of Glouceſter, as truſtees of Bartholomew's hoſpital, who let the impropriation to the curate on leaſe for 8*l.* a year, and a ſalmon to the mayor, tho' it is of much greater value; and this and Little Dean are in the ſame preſentation. Mr. John Webb is the preſent incumbent.

William de Bohun gave the advowſon and impropriation of this church to the prior and brethren of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital 25 July, 17 E. 3.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The piece of ground where the church ſtands was given to the mayor and burgeſſes of Newnham, by Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, paying 4*d.* yearly to the ſee of Rome, to pray for his ſoul. The church-yard is bounded by the Severn; but the old church ſtood at a place called Nab's End, and being undermined by the river, was obliged to be taken down.

Mr. James Jocham, late of the city of Briſtol, deceaſed, by his will, in 1764, gave 1000*l.* after the deceaſe of his ſon James, the intereſt of which to be applied to the clothing of fifteen poor boys of the pariſh of Newnham yearly for ever; and if any thing ſhould remain, he directs it to be given to poor lying-in women of the ſame pariſh. James, the ſon, is ſince dead, and the charity is applied according to the donor's will.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 90 houſes, and about 400 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 18. But by the pariſh regiſter it appears, that in ten years, beginning with 1701, the average of annual baptiſms was 15.6, and that of the annual burials 12.1. And in a like ſeries, beginning with 1761, the average of annual baptiſms is 17.7, and of burials 10.5; which ſhews that the place continued nearly in the ſame ſtate as to population for the laſt ſixty years; but I am informed that the inhabitants now amount to the number of a thouſand at leaſt.

NIBLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Berkeley, two miles diſtant north-weſtward from Wotton-underedge, three ſouth-weſtward from Durſley, and eighteen ſouth from Glouceſter.

It is ſometimes called North-Nibley, to diſtinguiſh it from Nibley, a hamlet in Weſterleigh. Some part of it ſhoots up eaſtward over the hills between Wotton-underedge and Durſley, to the diſtance of near three miles from the church; and between thoſe hills there is a long and narrow dingle, gradually opening towards the weſt, called Waterley-Bottom, from a rivulet running down it. The ſteep ſides of the hills in this part of the country are covered with beautiful hanging woods, in which the beech predominates; and the little combs between them, of which there are many, are richly cultivated in ſmall incloſures of paſture grounds, interſperſed with here and there a cottage or a little dairy farm. This variety of objects and of ſituation is very picturesque, and the different lights and ſhades they produce have a moſt agreeable effect.

The other part of the pariſh lies in the vale, and conſiſts of rich paſture ground, with very little arable. The lands are in dairy farms, and produce excellent cheeſe. The dairy buſineſs is unfavourable to population, yet the inhabitants are pretty numerous, and are chiefly employ'd in rug-making, and in the clothing buſineſs.

Leland ſpeaks of a camp here, but I apprehend that which he meant lies in the pariſh of Wotton-underedge.

But what more particularly diſtinguiſhes this village in hiſtory, is the engagement that happened between William lord Berkeley and Thomas viſcount Liſle. The quarrel aroſe in the following manner: Thomas fourth lord Berkeley, left Elizabeth, an only daughter and heireſs, married to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick; but by a ſpecial entail and fine, ſettled the caſtle and lordſhip of Berkeley, with its appurtenances, on his nephew James, the next heir male of his family. This ſettlement produced a law-ſuit between James fifth lord Berkeley, and Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who, in right of his wife, claimed the Berkeley eſtate, and violently ſeized Nibley and ſeveral other manors into his own hands. He and his poſterity kept poſſeſſion of this manor one hundred and ninety-two years, for which ſpace of time the law-ſuit was carried on with unprecedented violence. During the continuance of this ſuit, Thomas Talbot, viſcount Liſle, deſcended from the before mentioned Elizabeth, ſent a letter with a chalenge[p] to William ſixth lord Berkeley, wherein he deſired him to fix a time and place for deciding their title by the ſword. The lord Berkeley, by his anſwer[q], appointed the next morning for the time, and Nibley-green for the place

[p] Lord Liſle's challenge was as follows:

'William, called Lord Berkeley, I marveill ye come not forth 'with all your Carts of Gunnes, Bowes, with oder Ordinance, 'that ye ſet forward to come to my Mannor of Wotton, to bete it 'down upon my Head. I let you witt, ye ſhall not nede to come 'ſo nye, for I truſt to God to mete you nere home, with Engliſh 'Men of my own Nation, and Neighbours. Whereas ye by ſubtle 'Craft have blowin about in divers Places of England, That I 'ſhould entend to bring in Welchmen for to deſtroy and hurt my own 'Nation and Cuntry. I lete the wit, I never was ſo diſpoſed, 'nere never will be. And to the Proof hereof I requyre thee of 'Knighthood and of Manhood, to appoint a Day to mete me 'half way, there to try between God and our two Hands, all our 'Quarrel and Title of Right, for to eſchew the ſheddinge of 'Chriſtian Mannis Bloud, or elſe at the ſame Day bring the 'uttermoſt of thy Power, and I ſhall mete thee. An Anſwer of 'this by Writing, as ye will abide by, according to the Honor 'and Ordre of Knighthood.

'Thomas Talbot the Vicount Liſle.'

[q] To this challenge, Lord Berkeley returned the following anſwer:

'Thomas Talbot, otherwiſe called Vicount Liſle, not long 'contenued in that Name, but a new found thing brought out of 'ſtrang Countrys; I marveil greatly of thy ſtrange and lewd 'Wrytinge, made I ſuppoſe by thy falſe untrue Counſel, that 'thou haſt with thee, Hugh Mull and Holt; as for Hugh Mull, 'it is not unknown to all the worſhipful learned Men of this 'Realm how he is attaynt of falſenes, and raiſinge of the King's 'Records; and as for the falſe miſchevous Holt, what his Rull 'hath be to the Diſtruction of the King's lege Pepull in my 'Lordſhip of Berkeley, as well to the Hurt of their Bodies as the 'Loſs of their Goods, againſt God's Law, Conſcience and all 'Reaſon; it is openly known, ſo that every worſhipful Man 'ſhould refuſe to have them in his Fellowſhip. And alſo of his 'own free Will, undeſired of me, before worſhipful and 'ſufficient Witnes, was ſworne on a Maſſe-Booke, that he ſhould 'never be againſt me in no matter that I had adoe, and eſpecially 'in that untrue Title that ye clayme, which ye hold my Lyve-'lode with wrong. And where thou requireſt me of Knighthood 'that I ſhould appoint a Day, and mete thee in the myd way 'betwene my Mannor of Wooton and my Caſtle of Berkeley, there 'to try betwixt God and our two Hands all our Quarrels and 'Title of Right, for to eſchew the ſhedings of Chriſten Mens 'Blood, or els the ſame Day to bring the utermoſt of my Powere, 'and thou would mete mee. As for the determining betwixt 'our two Hands, of thy untrue Claime, and my Title and Right 'of my Land and true Inheritance, thou wotteſt right well there 'is no ſuch Determination of Land in this Relme uſed. And I 'aſcertayne thee, that my Lyvelode, as well my Mannor of 'Wotton, as my Caſtle of Berkeley, be entayled to me by Fyne 'of Record in the King's Courts, by the Adviſe of all the Judges 'of this Lond in that Days beinge. And if it were ſo, that the 'matter might be determined by thy Hands and myne, the King 'our Soveraigne Lord and his Laws not offended, thou ſhouldeſt 'not ſoe ſoone deſire, but I would as ſoon anſwere thee in every 'Point that belongeth to a Knight: For thou art, God I take to 'record, in a falſe Quarrel, and I in a true Defience and Title. place of action, and both parties meeting on the 20th of March, 1470, 10 E. 4. with their reſpective followers, amounting in the whole to about 1000 men, a furious engagement enſued, wherein about 150 men were ſlain, in which number was lord Liſle himſelf, being ſhot in the mouth with an arrow by one James Hiatte, of the foreſt of Dean. Lord Berkeley, after his victory, haſtened to Wotton, where the lady Liſle reſided, who being then big with her firſt child, miſcarried through the fright. His lordſhip rifled the houſe, and carried away ſome of the furniture, and many deeds and evidences which concerned the lord Liſle's own eſtate, and they remain to this day preſerved in Berkeley caſtle. Government was at that time prevented from taking cognizance of this violent outrage, by the civil wars which raged in the kingdom during great part of the turbulent reign of Edward the Fourth.

Nicholas Smyth, eſq; has a large eſtate here, and a very handſome ſeat, built about the year 1763, by his father, George Smyth, eſq; upon the ſcite of an old manſion houſe, which had been long in his family. His arms are, Sable, on a chevron engrailed between ſix croſſes patty fitchy Or, three fleurs de lis argent, each charged on the top with a plate.

John Smyth of Nibley, anceſtor to the preſent proprietor, was very eminent for his great aſſiduity in collecting every kind of information reſpecting this county and its inhabitants. He wrote the genealogical hiſtory of the Berkeley family, in three folio manuſcripts, which ſir William Dugdale abridged, and publiſhed in his Baronage of England. In three other folio manuſcripts, he has regiſtered, with great exactneſs, the names of the lords of manors in the county, in the year 1608, the number of men in each pariſh able to bear arms, with their names, age, ſtature, profeſſions, armour, and weapons. The ſums each land-holder paid to ſubſidies granted in a certain year are ſet down in another manuſcript. He likewiſe committed to writing a very particular account of the cuſtoms of the ſeveral manors in the hundred of Berkeley, and the pedigrees of their reſpective lords. Theſe, and ſome other manuſcripts which coſt him forty years in compiling, are now in the poſſeſſion of Nicholas Smyth, eſq; the fifth from him in lineal deſcent.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

As this place is not mentioned by name in Domeſday-book, it was probably included, at the time of the general ſurvey, in the accounts of the manors of Wotton and Durſley; and part of the pariſh is now within the manor of Woodmancot, in the pariſh of Durſley.

King Henry the Second gave this manor to Robert Fitz-Harding, anceſtor of the earls of Berkeley, in whoſe family it continued 'till they were violently diſpoſſeſſed of it, as before related. Lord Liſle was lord of this manor in 1608. But the great law-ſuit concerning the Berkeley eſtate being determined 7 Jac. after 192 years continuance, the earl of Berkeley obtained poſſeſſion, and the preſent earl of Berkeley is lord of the manor.

The prior of Lanthony's claim to free warren in Nebele was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Roger Bavent was ſeized of lands in Nebele 47 E. 3. William lord Berkeley, earl marſhal and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Nibley 3 H. 7. John Stanſhaw and Humphry his brother joined in levying a fine of lands in North Nibley 12 H. 7. Lands in Nibley, formerly belonging to the abbey of Kingſwood, were granted to Drew Drewry and Edward Downing 16 Eliz. and Edward Downing and John Walker had a grant of lands belonging to the ſame abbey 21 Eliz. The knights hoſpitallers had formerly lands in Nibley, which were granted to Edward Sallus and William Blake, ſcrivener, 3 Jac.

The vicar receives 20 l. a year out of the impropriation, and the living has been augmented with the queen's bounty. This was formerly a chapel united to Wotton-underedge, and belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury.

The church, dedicated to St. Martin, or as ſome ſay, to St. Andrew, has an aile on the ſouth ſide, a low embattled tower at the weſt end, with five bells, and a ſmall ſpire for a ſaint's bell, between the chancel and the body of the church. Here was formerly a chantry, dedicated to the virgin Mary.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 200 houses, and about 1000 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 34 were freeholders; yearly births 26, burials 24. The people are now increased to upwards of 1700.

NIMPSFIELD.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Berkeley, four miles north-east from Dursley, four south-west from Minchin-Hampton, and about fourteen south from Gloucester.

The greater part of the parish is uneven ground, with a considerable proportion of woodland. The turnpike-road from Bath to Gloucester leads down Nimpsfield-hill, which is very steep and woody. Colonel Massie, famous for his memorable defence of Gloucester against king Charles the First, being disgusted at some of the parliament's proceedings, deserted their party, and about the year 1659, formed a design of seizing on Gloucester, in which however he was disappointed, and forced to take refuge in a little house near Simonshall. There he was seized by a party of horse, who mounted him before one of the troopers, and carried him towards Gloucester; but in going down the steep part of Nimpsfield-hill, Massie tumbled himself and the trooper from the horse, and being a stout man, and his guards a little intoxicated, made his escape under favour of a dark tempestuous night.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, this was a berewic or member of the extensive lordship of Berkeley, belonging to which there were then 'In Nimdesfelle three hides.' Dom. Book, p. 68.

This estate, like Berkeley, descended from Roger de Berkeley, who held it temp. W. 1. to his nephew Roger, whom king Henry the Second dispossessed of his whole estate, for joining with his competitor Stephen. The castle and lordship of Berkeley, of which this was a member, were granted to Robert Fitz-Harding, who therefore assumed the name of Berkeley. He gave Nimpsfield to Nicholas his fourth son, whose posterity took the name of Fitz-Nichols. Nicholas Berkeley, or Fitz-Nichols, son of Ralph, held tenements in Hull and Nyndesfeld of the king in capite, by the service of half a knight's fee: At Nyndesfeld he had 100 acres of arable land, at 2*d. per* acre; 3 acres of pasture, at 1*s. per* acre; and a wood worth 2*s. per ann.* as appears by the escheator's inquisition after his death. His claim to free warren was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. and he died seized of the above particulars 6 E. 2. leaving John, his son and heir, twenty-two years old. John Fitz-Nichols, son of Nicholas, died seized of this manor 15 E. 2. and John his son died seized of Nimdesfield, and of the advowson of the chantry of Kinley 29 E. 3. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, son of the last John, was lord of this manor at the time of his death, 7 R. 2. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, son of sir Thomas, died seized of the manor of Nimpsfield, and of the advowson of the chantry at Kinley 6 H. 5. leaving two daughters coheiresses; Catherine, married to Robert Pointz, esq; and Elianor, married to John Browning, esq. The same John Browning, son of John, was seized of a moiety of the manor of Nimpsfield, and of the advowson of the chantry at Kinley 8 H. 5. which he soon after conveyed to Robert Pointz, esq.

Sir Edmond Tame of Fairford purchased this manor, and dying 26 H. 8. was succeeded by Edmond his son and heir, who died without issue 36 H. 8. leaving three 'sisters coheiresses. Margaret, the eldest, was married to Humphry Stafford; Alice to Thomas Verney; and Isabel, the youngest, was the wife of Lewis Watkin, who all had livery 37 H. 8.

In the partition of the estates between the sisters, this monor was settled on sir Thomas Verney, 1 E. 6. Richard Verney, son of sir Thomas, had livery 1 Eliz. as had George Verney, son of Richard, in the 14th, and died in the 16th year of the same reign, leaving sir Richard Verney his son and heir, who was lord of this manor in 1608.

The manor soon after passed to the Bridgmans, and John Bridgman, of Prinknash, esq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Lord Ducie is the present lord of the manor.

HAMLETS. 1. Kynley. Here was an antient priory, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, and incorporated by the name of warden and brethren, to which the manor of Kynley belonged. This manor was seized by William the First, and restored to the priory by William the Second, 1093. Here was also a chantry chapel, dedicated to St. Anthony, whose figure was painted at the east end of the chapel, with a great boar by his side. And

' Sir Robert Atkyns, in some places, calls them daughters of Edmond Tame, in others, his sisters, and in one place his coheiresses, without further explanation. That they were his sisters, not his daughters, will appear from what Leland says, who, after taking frequent occasion to speak handsomely of the family, observes, that 'Syr Edmunde Tame of Fairford up by 'Crekelade cam oute of the house of Tame of Stowel. Tame 'that is now at Fairford hath be maried a XII yere and hath no 'childe. Wherefore belikelihod Syr Humfre Stafford, Sun to 'old Staford of Northamptonshire, is like to have the landes of 'Tame of Fairforde, for he maried his Sister, and so the name 'of the Tames is like sore to decay.' Leland's Itin. V. 6. p. 16.

hither,

hither, it is ſaid, the Weſt Britons uſually came once a year to offer oblations for their ſins. In the year 1542, Edmond Tame preſented to this chantry James Ruthbone, or Ratterbone, who was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 6*l.* The priory, tho' converted to a dwelling houſe, is ſtill charged with the payment of Tenths.

After the diſſolution of religious foundations, the manor of Kynley was granted to William Stump, eſq; who died ſeized thereof 6 E. 6. and livery was granted to ſir James Stump, his ſon and heir, the following year.

The chantry lands of this place have been the ſubject of long contentious law-ſuits between ſir Thomas Throckmorton of Tortworth, and ſir Henry Winſton of Standiſh.

2. Tinkley is another hamlet, of which there is nothing remarkable.

Aldred, governor of Glouceſterſhire, gave three tenements in Nimpsfield to the abbey of Glouceſter. King William the Firſt gave lands in Nindesfelle to the ſame abbey, to be held as freely as in the reign of king Edward his kinſman, with the privilege of hearing and determining judicial cauſes.

John Gifford de Nymdesfeld died 7 E. 2. ſeized of lands and tenements in Nymdesfeld, which he held of the king in capite by the ſervice of two pounds of pepper. Eſch. ſub anno.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 60*l.* a year. Lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Hayward is the preſent incumbent. Froceſter is the mother church, where the inhabitants baptized and buried in 1185. The chapel of Nympsfield, and the advowſon of the church of Froceſter, were given to the abbey of Glouceſter, by William de Blois, biſhop of Worceſter, at the requeſt of John de Columna, cardinal of Rome, in the year 1225.

The church is dedicated to St. Margaret, and has a tower at the weſt end, adorned with pinnacles and battlements, in which are two bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 56 houſes in this pariſh, and about 250 inhabitants, whereof 18 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 112 baptiſms, and 57 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 137, burials 107, and the inhabitants are now about 497.

NORTH HAMLETS.

THESE hamlets, conſiſting of very rich meadow and paſture lands, lie in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, and join to the north ſide of the city of Glouceſter.

1. The Vineyard. It lies in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode, on a fine elevation, upon the ſide of the Severn, beyond Over's bridge from Glouceſter, and commands a very agreeable proſpect of the city, the river, and the rich meadows adjoining. Induced by ſo fine a ſituation, abbat Staunton built a large houſe here, and moated it round, which was afterwards one of the country houſes belonging to the abbats of St. Peter's at Glouceſter. This excited an emulation in the prior of Lanthony, who ſoon after built a rival houſe, and called it Newark, on a little hill on the other ſide of the Severn. The Vineyard and park were given to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter, by its charter of foundation, and were confirmed 6 E. 6. And here the biſhops frequently reſided, 'till the houſe was demoliſhed in the great civil war.

2. Walham-Mead, Portham-Mead, and many other rich meadows lying between the Weſtgate-bridge at Glouceſter, and Over-bridge, make another diviſion of the North Hamlets. The river Severn dividing its waters, incloſes many of thoſe meadows, and forms the iſland which our Saxon anceſtors called Olanize, and we Alney, famous for the ſingle combat fought in the year 1016, between Edmund Ironſide, king of England, and Canute the Dane, to decide the fate of the kingdom. The ſtory is told in all our hiſtories of thoſe times, that having fought for ſome time without much advantage on either ſide, the combatants made peace, and agreed to divide the kingdom between them; but Edmund dying ſoon after, the Dane ſeized the whole. Some of theſe meadows are extraparochial, others are in the pariſhes of St. Mary de Lode and St. Catherine, and belong to various proprietors. The prior of Lanthony held the meadow of Preſtenham, containing 40 acres, (lying under the caſtle of Glouceſter) in exchange for Southmead. He likewiſe held the meadow of Walham without Glouceſter, and Madley's-land, 49 H. 3. The town of Glouceſter held Preſtenham and Southmead 54 H. 3. Portham-Mead belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and was granted, after the diſſolution of that houſe, to John Arnold, 33 H. 8.

3. The Caſtle of Glouceſter, and divers adjoining meſſuages and lands, are extraparochial, and lie cloſe to the city of Glouceſter. Theſe three hamlets are jointly rated to the public taxes.

4. Longford, lies in the parishes of St. Catherine and St. Mary de Lode. John Musgros was seized of Longford 3 E. 1. as was Cecilia de Musgros 29 E. 1. John Read had livery of the manor of Longford 9 Eliz. and Oliver St. John had livery thereof 18 Eliz.

Lands in Longford belonged to the Augustin nunnery of Dartford in Kent, founded by king Edward the Third, in 1373. After the dissolution, these lands were granted to Thomas Babington 35 H. 8. Tithes in Longford belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8. A messuage in Longford, formerly belonging to the same priory, was granted to John Fernham and John Doddington 17 Eliz. Other tithes in this hamlet, which belonged to the same house, were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. Tithes in Longford and Wotton, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to sir William Rider 7 Jac. 1. Longford is now divided among several freeholders.

5. Twigworth, which lies in the parish of St. Catherine in Gloucester. This hamlet was granted to Cuthbert de Rivers 18 Joh. Robert le Savage held one yard-land in Twigworth at the yearly rent of 5s. and by the service of carrying the king's writs to the sheriff at his own charges 5 H. 3. Robert le Savage and Maud his wife were seized of one yard-land in Twigworth 35 & 44 H. 3. John de Akerly was seized of twenty acres of arable, and six acres of meadow in Twigworth 2 E. 2. This manor afterwards belonged to the Beauchamps, and by marriage came to the Grevils. Fulk Grevil had livery thereof 4 Eliz. It is now divided among several proprietors, but the greatest part belongs to Samuel Hayward, esq. The chapel of Twigworth was seized into the king's hands 4 E. 3. The tithes of Twigworth belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, and were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. This hamlet has its proper officers.

William de Alba Mara was seized of two plow-tillages in Kingsholm in the reign of king Henry the Third; which king granted Kingsholm, then valued at 8*l.* a year, to Robert le Savage, to be held by the service of door keeper of the king's pantry. From him it descended to his son Robert le Savage, who granted it to John d'Aubeny 32 E. 1. John d'Aubeny, son of John, was seized of it 6 E. 3. and dying 19 E. 3. Cicely his widow continued in possession. John Boteler of the Park held the manor of Kingsholm 36 E. 3. John son and heir of Elizabeth Giffard held it 16 R. 2. John d'Aubeny and Cicely his wife and Elias de Godeley held it 18 R. 2. Nicholas Maddesdon, esq; was seized of the manor of Kingsholm, and of three acres in Twigworth and Walham, 14 H. 6. This manor came afterwards to the Beauchamps. Sir Richard Beauchamp died seized thereof, and left Elizabeth his daughter and heiress married to sir Robert Willoughby, lord Brooke. They had three grand-daughters their coheiresses. Anne Willoughby, one of the sisters, died seized of a third part 25 H. 8. whereupon Francis Daughtry and Blanch his wife, another of the coheiresses, had livery of a moiety of her third part the same year. Thomas Thorp died seized of part of this manor 17 H. 8. and Thomas his son had livery thereof 29 H. 8. Rowland Arnold, esq; died seized of the manor of Kingsholm, and left Dorothy, his only daughter and heiress, married to Thomas Luci, who, in her right, had livery of the manor 15 Eliz. The hamlet is now divided among several proprietors.

John Dingbull was seized of lands in Kingsholm and Twigworth 15 H. 6. Christopher Throckmorton, and Richard Buckland and Elianor his wife levied a fine of lands in Kingsholm to William Henshaw and Alice his wife 21 H. 7. Tithes of corn and hay in Kingsholm belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, and were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. This division has its proper officers.

NORTHLEACH.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Bradley, in the Coteſwold country, ten miles diſtant northward from Cirenceſter, nine weſtward from Burford in Oxfordſhire, and twenty eaſt from Glouceſter.

The ſoil is generally light and ſtony, but produces pretty good crops of corn. Plenty of petrifications, particularly of the cockle and ſtar fiſh, are found here, and in ſome parts there is very good free-ſtone.

The little river Lech, which riſes in the neighbouring pariſh of Hamnet, runs through and gives name to this place, as well as to ſome others lying in its courſe. In Domeſday there are four manors of the name of Lecce, or Lece, which in ſubſequent records are thus diſtinguiſhed. The moſt ſoutherly of them dropped the name of Lece, and was called Southrop. This place, from its ſituation, was called Northleach; and the two remaining villages, which lie eaſtward, received the apellation of Eaſtleach.

There is a ſmall market town within this pariſh, of the ſame name. It lies about half a mile on the eaſt ſide of the Roman Foſs-way, in a little valley, and was formerly a thriving place, where ſeveral clothiers and merchants of the ſtaple reſided, about two centuries ago. King Henry the Third, in the year 1220, granted to the monks of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, two yearly fairs, on the feaſts of St. Peter and St. Paul; and the abbey had a confirmation of markets and fairs in Northleach 5 H. 3. Here was a public market for wool and cloth, and ſome of the buildings for ſtowing of thoſe commodities are now ſtanding, with a ſpacious area in the middle, and galleries round for a communication. One part of thoſe buildings is now the Lamb inn. The other parts, no longer employ'd according to the original intention, ſerve for barns and receptacles of lumber.

From the remains of thoſe buildings, and from ſeveral memorials in the church for clothiers, and for reſpectable perſons, denominated wool-men, and merchants of the ſtaple, who died about 300 years ago, it appears that this was formerly one of the principal clothing towns in the county. It was conveniently ſituated for buying the raw materials, in a country abounding with ſheep; but on the other hand, it is deſtitute of water ſufficient for driving the machinery uſed in that trade, and this natural diſadvantage is alone ſufficient to account for the loſs of the manufacture. The town ſoon felt that loſs, and ſeems to have been declining ever ſince. Many houſes are fallen down, many uninhabited, and the greater part of the reſt are going faſt to decay. And there are not quite ſeven hundred inhabitants in the whole pariſh.

There is a free grammar-ſchool in this town, nobly endowed by Hugh Weſtwood, eſq; who, by his will, gave the impropriation of Chedworth for its maintenance. By a decree in chancery 4 Jac. the patronage of the ſchool is veſted in Queen's college, Oxford. The maſter has 80*l.* a year, and a houſe, and the uſher 40*l.* a year. It has been commonly reported, that Mr. Weſtwood being reduced in the latter part of his life, requeſted of his truſtees to be appointed maſter of his own ſchool, but was refuſed. From a regard to truth, and to prevent the further propagation of this groundleſs ſtory, I aſſure the public, that this eſtabliſhment did not take place 'till three years after Mr. Weſtwood's death; and it is wonderful how ſuch a tale could be firſt ſet a going.

There are two conſtables for the town, and an officer called a bailiff, annually appointed at the lord's court, whoſe office is only to collect the tolls which belong to the town, and to let and receive the rents of the town eſtate. The market is held on Wedneſday, and here are three fairs in the year, viz. on the Wedneſday before the 23d of April, on the third Wedneſday in May, and on the Wedneſday before the 29th of September.

The turnpike-road from South Wales, through Glouceſter and Oxford to London, paſſes through this town, and is pretty much frequented.

There is a very large camp, with a double agger, called Norbury, in the hamlet of Eaſtington in this pariſh, which ſome have ſuppoſed to be Roman, from its lying near the Foſs-way, but I have never heard that any Roman coins have been found there. It incloſes an area of about eighty acres; but is not every where perfect, having been levelled and deſtroy'd in ſome parts by the huſbandman.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Before the conqueſt, the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter held divers lands in this place, by the gift of Athelred, king of England.

In Domeſday-book, under the title Terra Thome Archie'pi, it is thus recorded:

'St. Peter of Glouuec' held Lecce in Bradelege 'hundred, and Eldred archbiſhop [of York] held 'it with the abbey. There were twenty-four 'hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and 'thirty-three villeins, and ſixteen bordars, with 'thirty plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, and 'two mills of 7*s.* 4*d.* [rent.]

'Stanuuelle adjoins to this manor. There are 'two plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, 'with five plow-tillages, and a mill of 40*d.* and 'four ſervi, and two ancillæ; and in Culberlege 'is one hide belonging to this manor.

'Of the land of this manor, Walter the ſon of 'Pontz holds one manor of twelve hides, which 'lay in the ſame manor in the time of king 'Edward. There are two plow-tillages in demean 'at Tormentone, and twenty-five villeins, with 'twelve plow-tillages, and four ſervi.

'The whole manor in the time of king Edward 'was worth 18*l.* Thomas archbiſhop [of York] 'put it to farm for twenty-ſeven hides. The hide 'at Culberlege is worth 20*s.*

'That

'That which Walter [the ſon of Pontz] holds 'is worth 14 l. Archbiſhop Thomas claims it.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

To make the above extract more intelligible, the reader will obſerve, that the monaſtery of St. Peter at Glouceſter had run greatly to ruin, when Aldred, biſhop of Worceſter, afterwards archbiſhop of York, taking it in hand, pulled down the old church, and built a new one at his own expence. And to reimburſe him, the abbat gave him poſſeſſion of the manors of Lecce, Otintune, Stanedis, and Bertune, which were appropriated to the archbiſhoprick of York. This is what is meant in the record by Eldred holding this manor with the abbey. Archbiſhop Thomas ſucceeded Aldred, and claimed all thoſe manors at the time of the general ſurvey, yet he afterwards reſtored them to the abbey, expreſſing contrition for having detained them ſo long; however the ſucceeding archbiſhops renewed their claim, and the diſpute between the ſee of York and the abbey was not finally determined 'till the year 1157, as particularly ſet forth at p. 133. From that time the manor of Northleach, and the rectory and the advowſon of the vicarage, continued in the abbey of Glouceſter 'till its diſſolution, when the manor was granted to lay hands. Sir Ralph Dutton was lord of the manor of Northleach at the beginning of this century, and it continued in his family 'till it was given, about the year 1769, by the will of John Dutton, eldeſt ſon of James-Lenox Dutton, of Sherbourn, eſq; to the reverend Mr. Rice, who is the preſent lord of the manor.

The abbey of Winchcombe granted a fiſhery in the Severn, near Framilode, to the abbey of Glouceſter, in exchange for 4 l. yearly rent iſſuing out of the manor of Northleach 14 E. 2. The prior of Lanthony was ſeized of lands in Northleach 13 H. 4. John Purlewyn and Anne his wife, daughter and heir of John Doding, levied a fine of lands in Northleach to William Midwinter 2 R. 3. Richard Hercourt and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in this pariſh to Simon Hercourt 23 H. 7. Lands in Northleach, and the inn called the Crown, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to ſir Baptiſt Hickes 7 Jac.

TITHING. Eaſtington lies on the eaſt ſide of the town, agreeable to its name. It comprehends the greater part of the land in the pariſh, maintains its own poor, and pays taxes independently of Northleach. Here was formerly a chapel dedicated to Mary Magdalen, now demoliſhed; but the chapel yard belongs to the vicar.

John Balue was ſeized of the manor of Eaſtenton 3 E. 1.

Pinſwell, in Cubberly, is the hide of land mentioned in Domeſday as belonging to the manor of Lecce. It is now charged to the land-tax jointly with Eaſtington, and has paid to the relief of the poor of this tithing.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 70 l. a year. The biſhop of Glouceſter is patron; the rev. Thomas Hodſon is the preſent incumbent, and maſter of the free-ſchool. The rectory and advowſon were granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and the grant was confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church lies in the tithing of Eaſtington. It is a large, handſome building, dedicated to St. Peter, and conſiſts of the nave and two ailes, with a chapel on each ſide of the chancel, and a ſtrong well built tower, with ſix bells, at the weſt end. The porch at the ſouth entrance is remarkably handſome. The chancel belongs to the impropriator, the north chapel to the pariſh, and the ſouth chapel to the lord of the manor. There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. Mary, whereof Henry Bridge was the laſt incumbent, and enjoy'd a penſion of 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. in the year 1553. Willis.

The roof of the nave was conſiderably raiſed at the expence of John Forty, a wealthy clothier of this town, who died in 1458, and lies buried in the middle aile. William Bicknell built the ſouth chapel, in the year 1489, and he and his wife lie buried there.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There are ſeveral antient grey marble ſtones, with effigies and memorials engraven on braſs, now moſtly imperfect; but I thought proper to give ſome account of the remains of them. Upon one in the chancel, is the figure of a man kneeling, with uplifted hands. Over him was another figure, now torn off. Proceeding from his mouth, it is thus written in old characters:

O regina Poli mediatrix eſto Lawnder Willi.
O numen celi Lawnder miſerere Willi.

On plates round the margin of the ſtone,

Man In what ſtate that euer thou be * Timor mortis ſhoulde truble the * For when thou leeſt wenyſt veniet te * Mors ſuperare . . . . . * So thy graue grauis . . . . . * Ergo mortis memorare.

In the ſouth chapel, a man and his wife, with eight ſons and ſeven daughters, and beneath, the repreſentation of a wool-pack, and a ſheep couchant. Round the verge,

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 200 houſes, and about 900 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 34 were freeholders; yearly births 23, burials 21. The preſent number of families in the whole pariſh is 149, of inhabitants 683, by actual numeration; which ſhews the declining ſtate of the town.

NORTON

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, ſix miles diſtant ſouth from Tewkeſbury, ſeven weſt from Cheltenham, and four north from Glouceſter, from whence the turnpike-road leads through this pariſh to Tewkeſbury.

It is ſituated on the eaſt bank of the Severn, and conſiſts chiefly of rich meadow and paſture, with a ſmall portion of arable land. Wainload-hill ſtretches along the river, and lies part of it in this pariſh, from the top of which there is an extenſive and very agreeable proſpect of the rich circumjacent country.

Norton, i. e. North Town, was ſo called from its relative ſituation to Glouceſter.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

'Stigand [archbiſhop of Canterbury] held Nortune. There were five hides and a half. In demean were two plow-tillages, and fifteen villeins, with fifteen plow-tillages, and four ſervi, and a mill of 22*d*. It was then and is now worth 4*l*. Thomas archbiſhop [of York] now holds theſe three manors [i.e. Circeſdune, Hochilicote, and Nortune]. Walchelin the nephew of the biſhop of Winton holds Nortune of him.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

This manor was afterwards divided into two, which were held of the honour of Glouceſter, and were diſtinguiſhed from each other by the names of Biſhop's Norton, and Prior's Norton. Biſhop's Norton was ſo called becauſe it was the eſtate of the archbiſhop of York. Jeffery Giffard, archbiſhop of York, held the manor of Biſhop's Norton 7 E. 1. It continued in the archbiſhoprick of York 'till the Reformation, and was granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. William Whitmore, of Lower Slaughter, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and —— Whitmore, eſq; ſon of the late general Whitmore, is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Vert, fretty Or.

The other manor was called Prior's Norton, becauſe it belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and continued in that houſe 'till the general diſſolution of religious foundations. It was granted, with the chapel called St. John's, and a portion of tithes, to John Bloxholm, 36 H. 8. John Read had livery of the manor granted to him 9 Eliz. as had Oliver St. John in the eighteenth year of the ſame reign. The manor came afterwards to Mrs. Prince, daughter to lord viſcount Scudamore, who was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. It is now veſted in the honourable Charles Howard the younger, in right of his wife Frances-Fitz-Roy Scudamore, daughter and heireſs of colonel Fitz-Roy Scudamore.

William Britton gave five virgates of land in Norton to the abbey of Glouceſter, and the grant was confirmed by king Henry the Firſt. Nicholas Chamberlain and Agnes his wife were ſeized of lands in Norton 29 E. 1. John le Brun was ſeized of lands in Norton 31 E. 1. and a ſeat and eſtate here continued in the family of the Browns down to the beginning of the preſent century, when they were ſold to Daniel Lyſons, of Hempſted, eſq; of whoſe family they were purchaſed, and William Singleton, eſq; is the preſent proprietor.

A wood in Norton, called Prior's Wood, was granted to Thomas Bell, 36 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Glouceſter, but belonging to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, who have the patronage of the curacy, and pay the incumbent 20*l*. a year.

Elmelina gave the advowſon of Norton to the abbey of Glouceſter, and the grant was confirmed by her grandſon Robert, ſon of Walter, and by Avelin his wife, in the year 1126.

The rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Norton belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8.

The church is ſmall, but has a handſome embattled tower at the weſt end.

NOTGROVE

IS a pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, about ſeven miles ſouth-weſtward from Stow, four north-weſtward from Northleach, and ſeventeen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It lies high in the Coteſwold, in a fine open country for the chaſe, with many bold acclivities without hills, and little bottoms between them that cannot be called vallies. It enjoys a fine healthy air, and the ſoil, tho' light and ſtony, produces pretty good crops of corn, from the late improved method of huſbandry, and feeding large flocks of ſheep, to the breed and management of which the farmers hereabout give great attention. Here are ſome downs, and a little paſture beſide, but no meadow lands.

The name of the place was antiently written Nategraue, from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave; ſo it may either ſignify a grove of nut-trees, agreeable to ſir Robert Atkyns's opinion; or it may be reſolved into Nate's Grove, upon the ſuppoſition that Nate was the name of the antient proprietor of the place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Sir Robert Atkyns repreſents this place as lying in the old hundred of Witelai, and as dependent on the manor of Condicote, but he was certainly miſtaken in both particulars; and was probably led into thoſe errors by the account of Condicote being intermixt with the particulars of the manor of Withington, in that copy of Domeſday which he uſed; and this I believe to have been the caſe, as I have myſelf ſeen the very ſame interpollation in another copy of that record.

Domeſday recites, that 'the church of Wireceſtre 'holds Widindune in Wacreſcumbe hundred, con-'ſiſting of thirty hides.' And after ennumerating many other particulars, it is ſaid, 'Schelinus holds 'five hides of the land of this manor in Nategraue.' p. 70. So that Schelinus was under-tenant to the biſhop of Worceſter; and the manor continued in the biſhoprick of Worceſter 'till the Reformation; but had been held ſucceſſively by the Rodboroughs, Brownings, and Whitingtons, as meſne lords under the biſhop, from the time of Edward the Third down to the Reformation.

John Browning, who is ſometimes ſtiled lord of Natgrove, married Agnes, ſiſter and heir of William de Rodborough, lord of the manor of Rodborough. Richard Browning, their ſon, was ſeized of lands in Notgrove 2 H. 4. and died 21 H. 4. Richard Tame and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Notgrove to John Tame and others, 9 E. 4. Richard Pole and Elizabeth his wife and Thomas Kepel levied a fine of lands in Notgrove 14 H. 7.

After the Reformation, this manor was granted to the Whitingtons. John Whitington, deſcended from the family of that name at Pauntley, was lord of it in the year 1608. It came afterwards to ſir Clement Clerk, and was purchaſed by Nathaniel Pyrke, of Mitchel-Dean, eſq; about the beginning of this century. He died in 1715, and Thomas Pyrke, of Little-Dean, eſq; his eldeſt ſon and heir, was lord of the manor in the year 1750. He married Dorothy, daughter of Richard Yate, of Arlingham, eſq; by whom he had iſſue two ſons and a daughter, who all dying before him, he bequeathed this manor, and the houſe and eſtate at Little-Dean, to Joſeph Watkyns, (deſcended by his mother's ſide from a brother of Thomas Pyrke) who now aſſumes the name of Pyrke, and is the preſent lord of the manor of Notgrove.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 200*l.* a year. Lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Gough is the preſent incumbent.

Four yard-lands belong to the glebe.

Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was ſeized of the advowſon of Notgrove 9 E. 2. Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, levied a fine of the advowſon, to the uſe of himſelf for life, with ſeveral remainders, 35 E. 3. Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of the fourth part of the advowſon to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 6 E. 4. Anne counteſs of Warwick afterwards levied a fine of this advowſon to the uſe of king Henry the Seventh, and it has continued in the crown ever ſince.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and has a low ſpire, with three bells, at the weſt end, and a croſs aile on the north ſide.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Againſt the ſouth wall of the chancel, is the effigy in ſtone of a man in armour, lying along, intended, as ſuppoſed, for John Whitington, of Pauntley, eſq; and beneath him another figure in a long robe, ſuppoſed to be for William Whitington, his ſon by a ſecond wife. There are three ſcutcheons over them, of which that on the dexter ſide is, Per pale, 1. A feſs checky, in chief a mullet, for John Whitington. 2. Quarterly 1 & 4. A lion rampant, for Pool. 2. A feſs dancetty, for Solers. 3. On a bend four roundlets.—The middle ſcutcheon bears, 1. Whitington. 2. Argent, a chevron ermine between three eſcallops, for Milbourne. The ſiniſter ſcutcheon bears Whitington, with a mullet for difference.

Under a niche, on the north ſide of the chancel, is the figure of a lady, ſuppoſed to be for one of the Whitingtons, lying along, in the faſhionable dreſs of her time, with no other memorial than the date, 1630.

In the north croſs aile is a very antient free-ſtone figure, in a long robe, and in the church-yard are two other ſuch antient figures in ſtone, lying along in full proportion, concerning which I find the following ſtrange ſtory in Dr. Parſons's MS. About the year 1650, ſome of the pariſhioners removed one of thoſe ſtones, which was hollow, to make a trough for the cattle to drink out of; but there was ſuch a lowing and diſturbance amongſt them the day and night following, as ſtruck the people with terror and amazement, and cauſed them to bring back the ſtone to its former place, and then all was quiet again. This was atteſted by the miniſter of the pariſh, and ſeveral of his neighbours of good credit, in the year 1680.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 33 houſes, and about 150 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. But ſince that time population is very much increaſed, and the preſent number of ſouls is exactly 218.

ODDINGTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Slaughter, two miles diſtant eaſt from Stow, ſix ſouth-weſtward from Chipping-Norton in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-ſeven north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Otintune

Otintune is the antient manner of writing the name, which ſeems eaſily and naturally reſolvable into Otin-tune i.e. the Town of Otin, or Odin, ſome very antient proprietor, long before the conqueſt.

Part of the village lies on the ſlope of a hill, and part in a fine valley, on the eaſt bank of the river Evenlode, which ſeparates it from Oxfordſhire. It conſiſts of about nine hundred acres of land, pretty equally divided into paſture and tillage. The air is remarkably healthy, as appears by the account of burials in the pariſh regiſter. In the year 1734, there was not one perſon buried, tho' the pariſh conſiſted of about eighty families; and only three very antient people died in the year 1773.

The herb Colchicum, or Meadow Saffron, grows plentifully in the meadows; and the Juncus Floridus, or Flowering Ruſh, is found on the weſt ſide of the river Evenlode, near Addleſtrop-bridge. Alſo between that place and the pariſh of Dailſford, grows a great quantity of the Nymphæa Major Lutea, or the Greater Water Lilly, bearing a yellow flower.

Crayle Crayle, eſq; has an eſtate, and a handſome ſeat in this pariſh, (formerly belonging to the late judge Talbot) where, in the ſummer months, he uſually reſides.

Of the Manor, and other Eſtates.

'Eldred archbiſhop [of York] held Otintune 'in Salmanſberie hundred, with its hamlet Con-'dicote. There were ten hides, and two plow-'tillages in demean, and ſixteen villeins, and two 'radecheniſters, and four bordars, with fourteen 'plow-tillages. This eſtate never paid tax. It 'was worth 6*l.* in the time of king Edward, and 'is now worth 10*l.* Thomas archbiſhop [of 'York] holds it. St. Peter of Glouueceſtre had 'it in demean 'till king William came into Eng-'land.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

For the better underſtanding the Domeſday account, it is neceſſary to obſerve, that archbiſhop Eldred, or Aldred, had been at great expence in repairing the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter, and this manor, and thoſe of Lecce, Stanedis, and Bertune, were mortgaged to him, and put into his poſſeſſion, to ſecure the payment of his money.

Archbiſhop Thomas, ſucceſſor to Aldred, reſtored the mortgaged manors to the abbey, and expreſſed great penitence that he had ſo long and ſo unjuſtly detained them, from which it may be ſuppoſed that the mortgage had been then paid; yet notwithſtanding, the ſucceeding archbiſhop claimed all thoſe manors, and abbat Hameline found himſelf obliged to compromiſe matters with the archbiſhop, by making him an abſolute grant of Oddington, in the year 1157, from which time this manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the ſee of York 'till the general Reformation. Ottington was then taken from the archbiſhoprick, and given to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6.

Thomas Chamberlain, eſq; a deſcendant from ſir Thomas Chamberlain of Preſbury, by Anne his third wife, was lord of this manor in the year 1608; and another Thomas Chamberlain, eſq; poſſeſſed it at the beginning of this century.

The manor came afterwards to Charles Coxe, eſq; deſcended, by his mother, from this family of the Chamberlaynes; from whom it paſſed by purchaſe to Nathaniel Piggot, eſq; who is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a large eſtate in the pariſh; but he uſually reſides in Yorkſhire.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 190*l.* a year. The precentor of York cathedral is patron, and Mr. Joſeph Mellar is the preſent incumbent.

The parſonage houſe was built by Dr. Parſons, arch-deacon of the dioceſe, and ſometime rector of this church. One yard-land belongs to the glebe, and a meadow called Fowl-moor, which is inſtead of tithe of the meadow grounds.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and ſtands at a conſiderable diſtance from the houſes. It has two ailes, a large chancel, and a handſome embattled tower on the ſouth ſide. The windows of the church and chancel were formerly ornamented with painted glaſs, which the rigid anti-papal principles, prevailing in the latter part of the reign of king Charles the Firſt, would not ſuffer to remain undemoliſhed.

OLDBURY on the HILL,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh. It lies on the north ſide of the turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Briſtol, in an open champaign country, about ſix miles ſouth-weſtward from Tetbury, twenty north-eaſtward from Briſtol, and twenty-three ſouth from Glouceſter. The air is eſteemed to be very healthy, and the lands are moſtly in tillage.

Some barrows remain to ſhew that this place has formerly been the ſcene of war and bloodſhed; but I find no camp, intrenchment, or fortification in the pariſh, nor can I learn that any thing of the kind is remembered here. Aldeberie, however, the old name, ſeems to indicate that here was antiently ſome place of defence, tho' the work itſelf is now totally demoliſhed, and there is not ſo much as a tradition of its former exiſtence.

The pariſh is generally called Oldbury on the Hill, to diſtinguiſh it from Oldbury on the Severn, a tithing in Thornbury.

The Biſtort, or Snake Weed, is a curious plant found in this pariſh, in a ground belonging to Mr. Watts.

In demean are three plow-tillages, and four villeins, with four plow-tillages; and there are nine ſervi, and one francigena, having one plow-tillage. There are ſix acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 10*l*.' Dom. Book, p. 77.

Nicholas Burdon died ſeized of this manor, with free warren, 36 H. 3. leaving Nicholas his ſon, who died ſeized of Aldebury 29 E. 1. and another Nicholas Burdon died ſeized thereof 17 E. 3. Edward Burdon, ſon of the laſt Nicholas, was ſeized of Oldbury at the time of his death 36 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by John his ſon and heir, whoſe widow, Joan, died ſeized of the manor of Oldbury 7 H. 4.

From the Burdons the manor paſſed to the Thorps. Henry Thorp, eſq; was ſeized of it, and left it in jointure to Cecilia his widow, who died ſeized thereof 10 H. 5. Ralph Thorp, ſon and heir of Henry, and Amice his wife, levied a fine of the manor and advowſon of Oldbury, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 2 H. 6. William Thorp, ſon and heir of Ralph, died ſeized thereof 5 H. 6. Ralph Thorp, ſon of William, died ſeized of this manor 2 E. 4. and John Thorp had livery thereof 4 E. 4. whoſe ſon, William Thorp, ſucceeded him, and was found by inquiſition to be an ideot. Thomaſin Thorp, ſiſter to William, was married to Thomas Clifford, who left Thomas Clifford, their ſon and heir. He was twenty-eight years old at the time of the death of his uncle, William Thorp, whoſe heir he was in right of his mother Thomaſin. He had livery of the manor of Oldbury 1 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by William his ſon, who died ſeized of this manor 26 H. 8. Henry Clifford, ſon and heir of William and Elizabeth Clifford, had livery 28 H. 8. and he and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowſon of Oldbury to Hugh Dennis 4 Mar. Livery of the manor and advowſon was granted to Henry Dennis 4 Eliz. after whoſe death it was granted to another Henry Dennis 14 Eliz. John Dennis, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and the two coheireſſes of William Dennis, of Pucklechurch, eſq; were proprietors of the manor, and patrons of the rectory, at the beginning of this century. His grace the duke of Beaufort is the preſent lord of the manor.

Amice le Walſh was ſeized of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Oldbury and Dodington 18 E. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 90*l*. a year. His grace the duke of Beaufort is patron, and Mr. Cook is the preſent incumbent. This church was united in one preſentation with that of Didmarton, in the year 1735.

OLEPEN, vulgarly OLDPEN,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, three miles diſtant eaſt from Durſley, five ſouth-weſtward from Minchin Hampton, and about fifteen ſouth from Glouceſter.

It is a kind of gloomy retreat. The church and houſes lie diſperſedly at the top of a deep and narrow combe, almoſt environed by ſteep hills, covered with hanging beech woods, and forming a kind of amphitheatre, except to the weſt, where there is an opening towards the adjoining pariſh of Uley.

This ſituation undoubtedley gave riſe to the name, which I find variouſly written, as Olepenne, and Ullepenne, (and latterly, tho' very corruptly, Oldpen) which ſignifies the Top of Uley, from the Britiſh word Pen, the head or top of any thing.

Sir Robert Atkyns was miſtaken in ſaying, This place is ſo called from the family of the Oldpens, who antiently lived here, and whoſe coat of arms were owls; for the fact was the reverſe, as will appear from the ſlighteſt attention to the family name, which was more antiently written De Olepenne, and not as he produces it. The herald gave the arms for a rebus on the name, but he was ignorant perhaps, that Ole, or Ulle, did not mean the bird of night, but was really a word of two ſyllables, and only a different manner of writing Uley, of which this place was probably once a part; for there is no mention of Olepenne in Domeſday, nor in any other record that I have ſeen earlier than the reign of king Edward the Firſt.

The pariſh conſiſts almoſt wholly of paſture land, and ſeveral ſprings riſing here, form a brook, which runs down to Uley and Durſley, and ſo, with the waters of thoſe places, into the Severn. There is no manufacture carried on here, but the inhabitants are employ'd by the clothiers at Uley, in the different branches of their manufacture.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It is recited in the eſcheator's inquiſition, taken 4 E. 2. that John de Olepenne granted one meſſuage and half a yard-land in Olepenne to Edmond Baſſet; and the ſame John de Olepenne occurs as a benefactor to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital in Glouceſter 18 E. 2. Bartholomew de Ullepenne occurs about the ſame time in the liſt of benefactors to the abbey of Glouceſter. Theſe were then lords of the manor of Olepenne, which continued in the family of the ſame name 'till it came to John Daunt, by his marriage with Margery, the daughter and heireſs of Robert Oulepen. He died 13 H. 8. and Thomas Daunt,* eſq; a deſcendant from him, is the preſent lord of this manor, and

* The family of Daunt is very antient, and formerly of conſiderable eminence both in England and Ireland. The following pedigree is authenticated by Peers Mauduit, Windſor herald of arms, and by William Hawkins, Ulſter king at arms of all Ireland.

Nicholas Daunt, ſon of Simon, married Alice, daughter of ——— Tracy, by whom he had a ſon Nicholas, who was living 24 H. 6. He married Alice, daughter and heir of Walter Jurden of Camme, and left two ſons, Nicholas and John. John married Anne, daughter of ſir Robert Stowell, of Somerſetſhire, by whom he had three ſons, John, Thomas, and Stephen; and three daughters, Margaret, Maud, and Alice. He was a perſon attached to the Lancaſtrian family, and of conſiderable power, as may be gathered from the following letter, written in the year 1471, by Edward prince of Wales, ſon to king Henry the Sixth.

By the Prince.

To our truſty and welbeloued John Daunt.

John Daunt, ſon and heir of John, married Margery, the daughter and heireſs of Robert Oulepen, eſq; in whoſe right he became ſeized of this manor. They had iſſue five ſons, Chriſtopher, John, George, Robert, and William; and two daughters, Jane, and Alice.

Chriſtopher Daunt, ſon of John, married Anne, daughter of Giles Baſſet, of Yewley, eſq; by whom he had three ſons, Thomas, William, and Giles; and one daughter, Faith.

Thomas Daunt, the eldeſt ſon, married Alice, daughter of William Throgmorton, of Tortworth, eſq; and had iſſue five ſons, Henry, Thomas, Giles, William, and John; and four daughters, Mary, Elizabeth, Joyce, and Florence.

Henry, the eldeſt ſon, married Dorothy, daughter of Giles Huſſey, of Motcombe in Somerſetſhire, and left Frances, his only daughter and heireſs, married to John Bridgman, of Nimpsfield, eſq.

Thomas Daunt, ſecond ſon of Thomas, upon the death of Henry his elder brother without male iſſue, ſucceeded to this manor and eſtate. He married Mary, daughter of Brian Jones of Glamorganſhire, by whom he had Thomas, his only ſon and heir, and one daughter, Margaret.

Thomas Daunt, ſon of Thomas, married Katherine, daughter of John Clayton, of the county of Cheſter, and had iſſue four ſons, Thomas, John, Achilles, and George, who continued the family; and four daughters, Frances, Katherine, Mary, and Elizabeth.

Thomas Daunt, the eldeſt ſon and heir, married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Gabriel Lowe, of Newark in the pariſh of Orlworth, and left Anne, his only daughter and heireſs, who was married to Thomas Webb of Stone, in this county, and died in childbed, without iſſue; whereupon

George Daunt, youngeſt brother of the laſt Thomas, and next male heir of the family, ſucceeded to this manor and eſtate. He married Martha, daughter of major Henry Turner, of Bandon Bridge, in the county of Corke, in Ireland, by whom he left iſſue two ſons, Thomas, his ſucceſſor, and Henry, who ſettled in Ireland, and married Anne, daughter of Thomas Knolles of Killehegh, in the county of Cork, and by her had iſſue five ſons, Thomas, George, Henry, Achilles, and John, and one daughter Martha.

Thomas Daunt, eldeſt ſon of George, ſucceeded to the manor of Olepen, and married Elizabeth, daughter of George Singe, alias Millington, of Bandon Bridge, clerk. They had iſſue two ſons, twins, Thomas and Achilles, born in 1702; and four daughters, Martha, Hannah, Elizabeth, and Mildred.

Thomas Daunt, eſq; eldeſt ſon and heir of Thomas and Elizabeth, is the preſent lord of the manor of Olepen.

In the roll of the above pedigree are depicted the arms of the families with whom the Daunts have inter-married, viz. Gules, a croſs lozengy argent, for Stowell. — Olepenne, as afterwards. — Ermine, on a canton gules a mullet pierced Or, for Baſſet. — Gules, a chevron argent three bars gemels ſable, for Throgmorton. — Barry of ſix, ermine and gules, for Huſſey. — Sable, ten bezants 4, 3, 2, 1, a chief argent a lion paſſant of the firſt, for Bridgman. — Gules, three lions rampant gardant argent, on a canton Or, a fret ſable, for Jones. — Argent, a ſaltire between four martlets gules, for Clayton. — Per ſ... on a bend ingrailed azure three cinquefoils Or, for Lowe. — Per ſ... ſable and ermine, a pale counterchanged; on the ſable parts three ... inks Or, for Turner. — Ermine, on a chief ſable two boars ... caboſhed Or, for Knolles. — Quarterly 1ſt and 4th, Azure, three mill-ſtones argent, each charged with a mill ink ſable. 2d and ... Argent, an eagle with two heads diſplay'd ſable, for Singe, ... reſides here. His arms are, Argent, a chevron ſable between three Corniſh choughs heads erazed proper. But he quarters the arms of the family of de Olepenne, viz. Sable, a chevron between three owls argent.

Edmond Baſſet of Uley died 4 E. 2. ſeized of one meſſuage and half a yard-land in Olepenne, which he held of John Olepenne by the ſervice of 6*d.* a year.

There was a place called Scheſcombe in this pariſh, as appears by a deed of ſale of lands there, from Henry de Olepenne to the brethren of St. Bartholomew's in Glouceſter, in the reign of king Henry the Third. And the mayor and corporation of Glouceſter have thoſe lands, as patrons of the Bartholomew's.

OLVESTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, ten miles diſtant north from Briſtol, three ſouth-weſt from Thornbury, and twenty-ſeven ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated in the vale, and conſiſts of rich meadow, paſture, and marſhy land, with ſome orcharding, and a ſmall proportion of arable.

The Vervain, or Herba Sacra, grows ſpontaneouſly and plentifully in the upper part of this pariſh, which herb has been very much celebrated of late, in the writings of John Morley, eſq; as a ſpecific for that dreadful diſorder the King's Evil.

This and the adjoining pariſh of Alveſton are not diſtinguiſhable by their names in Domeſday, which made ſir Robert Atkyns place the extracts from that record, relating to both, under Alveſton, and I have been led into the ſame miſtake in following him. They were, without doubt, originally one pariſh, but in proceſs of time became two diſtinct manors, whoſe common name Alweſton, or Alveſton, (i. e. Alwy's-town) ſhews whoſe property they were. When property was divided, and they were afterwards enjoy'd by different perſons, future ages thought proper to diſtinguiſh theſe places by a ſmall diverſity, which affects only the firſt letter of their names, and this was then called Olveſton.

There is a very high ſtrong wall in this village, incloſing ſeveral acres of ground, which is the ſcite of the antient ſeat of the Denniſes, who had conſiderable property here, and ſome ruins of that ſeat are ſtill remaining.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday it is thus recorded:

'Saint Peter of Bath held Alveſtone in Langelei 'hundred. There are five hides, of which three 'pay tax, and two do not pay, by the grant of 'king Edward and king William. There are two 'plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and 'ſix bordars, and a prieſt, and one radcheniſter, 'with ten plow-tillages. There are ſeven ſervi, 'and meadow and wood ſufficient for the manor. 'It was worth 100*s.* now 4*l.* The ſame church 'holds it ſtill.' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The prieſt, mentioned in the record, ſhews that the above particulars belong to this pariſh, and not to that now called Alveſton, becauſe here was the mother church, to which that of Alveſton is only a chapel of eaſe. And conſequently ſir Robert Atkyns was miſtaken in ſaying that William the Conqueror gave the manor of Aleſton (meaning this manor) to Guarine de Meez, whereas it was moſt probably Alliſton in Lidney, for reaſons aſſigned under that head.

The manor of Olveſton, and the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, were part of the poſſeſſions of the abbey of Bath 'till the diſſolution. The manor was then granted to ſir Ralph Sadleyr 1 E. 6.

But there was an eſtate dignified with the title of a manor, called Alveſton and Berwick, of which Roger Crook was ſeized 1 E. 3. and Robert Green de Briſtol was ſeized of Olveſton and of Berwick's tenement 27 E. 3.

Edward lord Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was ſeized of a manor here, which by his attainder came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Henage and Catherine his wife, for life, 23 H. 8. Sir John Walſh died ſeized of Olveſton 38 H. 8. and left Maurice his ſon, thirty years old, who had livery granted to him the ſame year. Nicholas Walſh, ſon of Maurice, died ſeized thereof 20 Eliz. whoſe ſon Henry had livery granted to him the ſame year.

The manor of Olveſton came by purchaſe to ſir Robert Cann, who was ſucceeded by his younger ſon ſir Thomas Cann.

Sir Thomas left two ſons, of whom Robert, the elder, came to the title of baronet, on the death of his couſin ſir William Cann. William, the ſecond ſon, was town clerk of Briſtol, and ſucceeded to the title and eſtate of his brother, who died unmarried. Which ſir William Cann had iſſue one ſon Robert; and one daughter Elizabeth, married to Mr. Jefferies of Briſtol, by whom ſhe had one ſon Cann Jefferies, and one daughter.

Sir

Sir Robert Cann ſucceeded his father, and having married the daughter of —— Churchman, eſq; died without iſſue in the year 1765, whereby the title is extinct. The eſtate deſcended to his nephew Cann Jefferies, eſq; who dying unmarried, it came to his ſiſter, married to Henry Lyppingcott, eſq; who, in her right, is lord of this manor.

Roger Crook was ſeized of ſix librats of land in Olveſton, for the uſe of the biſhop of Bath, 16 E. 2. Sir Hugh Stafford was ſeized of thirty-ſix acres of land in Olveſton 1 H. 6. John Parmiter and Richard Forſter levied a fine each of lands in Olveſton 12 H. 7.

HAMLETS. Tockington is a very conſiderable hamlet, of which it is thus recorded:

'Wlgar, one of king Edward's thanes, held 'Tochintune in Langenei hundred. There were 'eight hides, and five plow-tillages in demean, and 'twenty villeins, and twelve bordars, and ten 'ſervi, with twenty plow-tillages. This manor 'did not pay farm in the time of king Edward, 'but he lived upon it whoſe property it was. 'Earl William held it in demean, and the ſteward 'added one plow-tillage, and a mill of 8*d.* It 'now pays 24*lib.* of white money, of which 20*lib.* 'are in Ora.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Sir Nicholas Ponz, or Pointz, lord of Corey Mallet in Somerſetſhire, was lord of this manor in the reign of king Henry the Third, as appears by a grant from him of a yard-land in Tockinton, to Clement Parmiter and his heirs, whoſe poſterity enjoy'd that eſtate, with a handſome ſeat in this place, down to the preſent century, but it is now the property of Mr. Caſmajor.

Nicholas Pointz died ſeized of Tockinton 5 E. 2. which he held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, for one knight's fee, and left Hugh Pointz his ſon, eighteen years old. Eſch. This manor continued in the Pointz's for many generations, 'till Alice, the heireſs of the family, carried it by her marriage, to ſir Edward Berkeley, and dying 1 H. 8. it paſſed into that name and family. John Lawford, eſq; was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century. A daughter of the Lawfords married Mr. Goodyer, and afterwards Mr. Rayner, who ſurvived her, and ſold the manor to the reverend Mr. Degge, whoſe ſiſter, Mrs. Wilmott, is the preſent lady of the manor.

Hugh de Kilpeck was ſeized of one plow-tillage in Tockington, and left two daughters coheireſſes; Iſabel, married to William Walter, and Joan, married to Philip Marmion; and thoſe lands were aſſigned to Iſabel for her ſhare 42 H. 3. John Newton, burgeſs of Briſtol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Tockington, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 8 H. 5. There was a free chapel in this place, belonging to the abbey of St. Auguſtin's in Briſtol, whereof Richard Berry was the laſt incumbent, and enjoyed a penſion of 2*l.* 17*s.* in the year 1553. It was in the tenure of —— Partridge, at the diſſolution of that abbey, and was granted to ſir Arthur Darcy 7 E. 6.

There are two fairs held annually at Tockington, one on the 9th of May, the other on the 6th of December, for cattle, &c.

Ingſt is another hamlet. There are alſo places of the following names in this pariſh, viz. Hazel, Freeze-wood, Shipcombe, Old Down, Haw, the Holm, Walning, Gredige, Pilnend, Akely, Woodhouſe, Ridgeway, and Cote, which laſt not having been rated to the land-tax, ſometime after the eſtabliſhment thereof, the commiſſioners ordered it to be aſſeſſed in aid of Thornbury, and it ſtill pays that tax in conformity with ſuch order.

Elizabeth Harriſon, widow, late wife of Thomas Stanſhaw, and daughter and heir of Alice, daughter of James lord Berkeley, levied a fine of lands in Coat, to the uſe of John Walſh, 13 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Briſtol, to which Alveſton is annexed, worth together about 200*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Briſtol are patrons, and John Camplin, M. A. præcentor of the church of Briſtol, is the preſent incumbent.

Walter the ſheriff gave the church of St. Helen's in Alveſton to the monaſtery of St. Peter of Glouceſter 7 H. 1. The church of Olveſton was appropriated to the priory of Bath 8 E. 2.

The rectories of Hampton, Alweſton and Forde, late belonging to the monaſtery of Bath, and the patronage of the vicarages, were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8. And the impropriation ſtill belongs to the church of Briſtol, and is now in leaſe to — Willoughby, eſq.

A portion of tithes in Tockington, formerly belonging to the college of Fotheringhay in Northamptonſhire, was granted to Francis Barnham and Martin Barnham 11 Eliz.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has a low pinnacled tower in the middle, with ſix large bells. The ſpire which ſtood upon it was thrown down by lightning, in the year 1603. The chancel is handſomely wainſcotted with Dutch oak, and the altar-piece and communion table are incloſed with circular paliſadoes, all in a very pretty taſte.

There was a chantry in this church, and a ſchool, of which ſir John Berkeley had the advowſon 6 H. 6.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a grey marble ſtone againſt the wall of one of the arches which ſupport the tower, with plates of braſs, on which are engraven the figures of two men kneeling, upon whoſe ſurcoats are the arms of Dennis, with thoſe of Gorges, Ruſſel, and Milborn, in quarterings. From the mouth

Benefactions.

A meſſuage, garden, and orchard; two cloſes called the Hayes, one cloſe called the Hilland, as alſo a ſmith's ſhop, houſe, and garden, and another houſe; alſo a paddock in Tockington, and another in Woodhouſe, together with other lands in this pariſh, in all worth 17*l.* a year, were left to feoffees by Jenkin Kite, to repair the church.

George Moſs gave a rent-charge of 10*s.* on the New Leaſes, for a ſermon; as did another perſon the like rent-charge on Gayner's Leaſe for another ſermon.

John Hancock, of Ingſt, gave 20*s.* a year by will to the poor, charged on a tenement in Bedminſter. In 1717, Martha Baker, of Auſt, gave a rent-charge of 40*s.* a year; and in 1719, John Clapſon, of Tockington, charged his lands in Tockington with 40*s.* a year, each for the uſe of the poor; and in 1722, Edward Wade, of Woodhouſe, gave 15*s.* a year out of a ground, to be diſtributed to the poor in bread on Good Friday.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 50 houſes, and about 250 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 8. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the average of annual baptiſms was 19.9, of burials 15.3, and the preſent number of ſouls is 593; ſo that about one in thirty-eight dies in a year. In 1742, the inhabitants were 588; and it is remarkable that only one perſon, (a woman upwards of eighty years old) was buried from Feb. 20, 1751, to March 21, 1753.

OXENHALL.

THIS pariſh lies in the vale, in the hundred of Botloe, one mile north-weſt from Newent, eight north from Dean, and eleven north-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is by no means a flat country. The lands lie dry and healthy, in very beautiful ſlopes and ſwells; and the ſoil, which is a rich, ſandy loam, inclining in ſome places to clay, produces the great neceſſaries of life in perfection and abundance. This pariſh, and thoſe of Dimmock, Kempley, Preſton, and Pauntly, make as fine a diſtrict of country as any in the county of Glouceſter, but it is not, perhaps, equally well cultivated. The roads cannot be commended at any time, but in the winter they are almoſt impaſſible.

The arable lands, which conſtitute the greater part of the pariſh, are interſected with rows of fruit-trees, whoſe bloſſoms, in the ſpring, are captivating to the ſenſes, and from whoſe fruit, in the autumn, the farmer derives no inconſiderable profit.

The church and tower are chiefly built with a red kind of ſand ſtone, very hard and durable, if kept dry. This ſtone lies in one intire ſtratum, and may be dug on the ſpot, of any ſize or ſhape at pleaſure. It is ponderous, and full of ſhining particles, which I take to be iron: About fifty years ago, upwards of twenty tons of that metal were caſt weekly at a furnace here, which has been out of blaſt for ſome time.

Among other vegetable productions, the following plants, viz. Hoarhound, Wood-Wax, Wild Sorrel, Fox-Glove, and Daffodil, grow plentifully here.

A ſtream called Ellbrook riſes in Herefordſhire, and after running through this pariſh, and Newent, falls into the Leden, near Leden-court.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Laci holds Horſenehal in Botelau 'hundred. Turchil held it of earl Herald, and 'could go where he would. There are three hides. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and five villeins, 'and three bordars, with five plow-tillages. There 'are two ſervi, and in Glouceſter three burgages 'of 15*d.* It is worth and was worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, pp. 74, 75.

William de Ebroecis, or de Evers, obtained a charter of free warren in Oxenhall 36 H. 3. His ſon, William de Evers, ſucceeded him, and Maud, widow of the laſt mentioned William, held lands within this manor in dower, and her right to free warren was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

William de Grandiſon was lord of the manors of Oxenhall and Dimmock 9 E. 1. as appears by the ſheriff's return of all the vills in the county, with their reſpective lords, the ſame year. He was ſummoned as a baron to parliament, and married Sybil, younger daughter and coheireſs of John de Tregoz, with whom he had the manor of Lydiard-Tregoz in Wiltſhire.

The manor came afterwards by marriage to the earls of Ormond. Sir James Ormond, ſon of James earl of Ormond, and Amice the wife of ſir James, levied a fine of this manor, and of Okely Grandiſon in Newent, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to the right heirs of Amice, 23 H. 6.

James earl of Wiltſhire was ſeized of the manor at the time of his attainder 1 E. 4. and the manor and advowſon were granted to ſir Walter Devereux and his heirs male the ſame year.

The manor afterwards reverted to the crown, and was granted to the duke of Northumberland, upon whoſe attainder it came again to the crown, and was mortgaged, as ſecurity for money borrowed, to Paul Withepole, and other citizens of London, 36 H. 8.

Thomas Brook, eſq; died ſeized of the manor 38 H. 8 whereby Joan his ſiſter, the widow of — Arrowſmith, became his heir, and had livery granted to her 1 E. 6. William Pigot, eſq; died ſeized of Oxenhall and Kempley 7 E. 6. leaving Edward his ſon, forty years old, who had livery of thoſe manors the ſame year. Henry Pigot, ſon of Edward, left Anne, his only daughter and heireſs, married to Henry Finch, eſq; who, in her right, was ſeized of this manor in the year 1608, and died in 1631. Francis Finch, only ſon and heir of Henry, married Jane, daughter of Dr. Thornborough, biſhop of Worceſter, and left John Finch his ſon and heir; but Mr. Foley was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and it is now the property of lord Foley.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 15*l.* a year. The patronage was formerly in the impropriator, but the living has been held by licence from the biſhop ever ſince the year 1636. Mr. Serjeant is the preſent incumbent. An acre of land, and twenty marks yearly, were decreed to the curate by the court of exchequer 15 C. 1. and the impropriator ſtill continues to pay him 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a year.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the preceptory of Dinmore in Herefordſhire, which was a cell to the priory of St. John of Jeruſalem. It is now the property of Maynard Colcheſter, of Weſtbury, eſq.

The church is ſmall, with a ſpire at the weſt end.

At the beginning of this century, there were 46 houſes in this pariſh, and about 200 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 6. Atkyns. The preſent number of families is 46, of inhabitants exactly 202.

OXINTON

IS a ſmall pariſh in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, about four miles diſtant eaſtward from the town of that name, five weſtward from Winchcombe, and twelve northward from Glouceſter.

Part of it lies in the vale, and part ſtretches over one of thoſe hills that bound the Coteſwolds. The ſoil is good in general, but ſheep depaſturing on any part of the pariſh are very ſubject to the rot. The village conſiſts only of one or two ordinary farm houſes, and a few mean cottages.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'In the time of king Edward there were five 'hides and a country-ſeat [aula] at Oxendone 'belonging to Teodekeſberie. There are five 'plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, and 'two radcheniſters, having ſeven plow-tillages, 'and twelve among the ſervi and ancillæ. There 'are twenty-four acres of meadow. At Winc'combe three burgages pay 40*d.* The whole is 'worth and was worth 8*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 68.

John de la Hay held the manor very antiently. Sir Ralph de la Hay and Euſtachia his wife held the manor early in the reign of king Henry the Third, as appears by an agreement made between them and Peter the abbat of Tewkeſbury concerning tithes, and other things; which agreement is inſerted in Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon, Vol. 2. Appendix, p. 205. He was ſeized of this manor 30 H. 3.

William Totchett was lord of the manor of Oxendon 9 E. 1. as appears by the ſheriff's return made the ſame year; and a fine of the manor of Oxindon was levied to his uſe by Roger de Moreton and Iſabel his wife 27 E. 1. He had a confirmation of free warren in this and other manors granted him in the 28th, and was ſummoned as a baron to parliament in the 34th year of the ſame reign, and died ſoon after, without iſſue. William Tuchet, ſon of Nicholas, was his heir. In the eſcheator's inquiſition, taken after the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, it is ſaid that William Tuchet held half a knight's fee in Oxindon and Aſton (upon Carant) of the ſaid Gilbert, worth 15*l.* a year, 8 E. 2. Taking part with the earl of Lancaſter, in his endeavours to expel the Spencers, he was made priſoner at the battle of Burrowbridge, and hanged at York as a rebel rebel 15 E. 2. The manor thereupon was ſeized into the king's hands, and granted to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, the ſame year.

This Hugh being afterwards attainted, the manor was granted to Bartholomew Badleſmere, (heir to the former Touchets) who was hanged at Canterbury for rebellion 2 E. 3. notwithſtanding which, Giles Badleſmere, ſon of Bartholomew, ſucceeded in this manor. He was ſummoned as a peer to parliament 9 E. 3. and died ſeized of Oxinton 12 E. 3. leaving four ſiſters, his coheireſſes; Maud, was married to John de Vere, earl of Oxford; Elizabeth, to William de Bohun, earl of Northampton; Margaret, to Sir John Tibitot; and Margery, to Willial lord Roos.

In the partition of the eſtates, this manor was aſſigned to ſir John Tibitot, who was ſummoned as a baron to parliament 9 E. 3. and died 41 E. 3. Robert lord Tibitot, ſon of John, ſucceeded him in the manor of Oxindon. He married Margaret, daughter of William Deincourt, and died 46 E. 3. leaving three daughters, his coheireſſes, who were granted in ward to Richard le Scroop, lord treaſurer of England. Margaret, the eldeſt daughter, was married to Roger le Scroop, eldeſt ſon of Richard le Scroop, whereby the manor of Oxenton came into that name and family, in which it continued down to the beginning of the preſent century.

Sir Stephen le Scroop and Milleſent his wife levied a fine of the manor of Oxenton 3 R. 2. Sir John Scroop died ſeized of this manor 8 H. 8. and Richard Scroop, his ſon, had livery thereof 17 H. 8. George Scroop had livery of this manor granted to him 15 Eliz. John Scroop, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608, as was Charles Scroop, eſq; at the beginning of this century. Edmund Lechmere, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and holds a court here.

There was another eſtate in this pariſh, entered in Domeſday-book among the lands belonging to the church of St. Dennis at Paris. 'Five hides in Olſendone belong to the ſame manor [Derheſt].' p. 72. Accordingly it appears by the terrier of the priory of Derhurſt, that the prior had twelve ox-tillages of land in Oxendon, and 4*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* rents of aſſize, and 4*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* from his villeins.

It does not appear to whom the above eſtate was granted at the general diſſolution, but it is probable that it became the property of the lay lord of the manor of Oxinton.

John de la Hay purchaſed lands in Oxendon of Ralph de la Hay and Euſtachia his wife 30 H. 3. and his claim to free warren was allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. A houſe and lands in Oxendon were granted to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton 24 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Winchcombe. The earl of Coventry is patron and impropriator; Mr. Roberts is the preſent incumbent. The living was augmented with the queen's bounty, in the year 1746, and the curate receives 6*l.* a year out of the impropriation.

The rectory of Oxenton, and lands called Parſon's, with the tithes of Kemp, lately belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to James Gunter and Walter Lewis, in truſt, 37 H. 8. Other tithes in Oxenton, lately belonging to the ſame abbey, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8.

There is no glebe, nor houſe for the curate.

The church is ſmall, and has a ſmall tower at the weſt end.

OZLEWORTH

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, about two miles eaſtward from Wotton-underedge, three ſouth-eaſtward from Durſley, and about eighteen ſouth from Glouceſter.

It is ſituated on the verge of the hill country, with large woods adjoining, and is moſt remarkable for the number of foxes killed in one year, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, which amounted to two hundred and thirty-one.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Ozleworth was a berewic, or member, belonging to the manor of Berkeley, at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears by Domeſday-book, where it is ſaid, that 'half a hide in Oſleuuorde belongs 'to Berchelai.' p. 68.

The manor was afterwards granted by the Berkeley family to St. Auguſtin's abbey in Briſtol, whoſe claim to a court leet was allowed 15 E. 1. The abbey of Kingſwood in Wiltſhire was ſeized of Ozleworth 12 H. 4. and continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the general diſſolution of religious foundations, when it was granted to ſir Nicholas Pointz 31 H. 8. whoſe family were before ſeized of it as tenants under the abbey of Kingſwood, for ſir Robert Pointz, grandfather of Nicholas, died ſeized of the manor of Ozleworth 12 H. 8. Sir Nicholas Pointz, above mentioned, died 4 Mar. Nicholas Pointz, ſon of ſir Nicholas, had livery of the manor granted to him the ſame year, and ſold it to ſir Thomas Rivet, alderman of London, of whom it was purchaſed by ſir Gabriel Low, likewiſe alderman of London.

Sir Thomas Low, ſon of ſir Gabriel, was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and ſir Gabriel Low, Low, ſon of ſir Thomas, died ſeized thereof in 1704. Timothy Low, eſq; ſon of ſir Gabriel, was lord of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory. The late James Clutterbuck, eſq; who died in the latter part of the year 1776, was lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate in the pariſh, where he had a handſome ſeat called Newark, originally built by ſir Nicholas Pointz, out of the ruins of Kingſwood abbey, but repaired and greatly improved by its ſeveral ſucceſſive proprietors. The houſe ſtands on high ground, and commands an extenſive and very agreeable proſpect. The arms of Clutterbuck are, Azure, a lion rampant argent, in chief three eſcallops of the laſt.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 60*l.* a year, of which the late James Clutterbuck, eſq; was patron.

Roger lord Berkeley gave this church to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard, which was a cell to the abbey of Glouceſter, and the patronage was veſted in that abbey 2 H. 8.

The rectory pays 6*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and has a round tower, with a wooden ſpire in the middle.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 17 houſes, and about 70 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. The people are increaſed ſince that time, and are now about 80 in number.

PAINSWICK.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Biſley, four miles north-weſt from the town of that name, four north from Stroud, and ſix ſouth from Glouceſter.

At the time of the general ſurvey, the name of it was ſimply Wiche. About the reign of king John, it received the addition of Pain, from Pain Fitz-John, who was then lord of the manor; but ſir Robert Atkyns ſays, it had been called Michaelſwick before that time, of which, however, I have found no inſtance in the records.

The pariſh produces no very curious or uncommon plants or foſſils, except a very fine kind of white freeſtone may be ſo eſteemed. The ſoils are ſuch as are moſt commonly found in a country full of hills and uneven ground, with little bourns and meadows between them, and well cultivated paſture grounds and arable fields on the higher ſituations. Here is alſo a very large proportion of woodland, conſiſting almoſt intirely of beech.

There is a ſmall market town, about the middle of the pariſh, of the ſame name, very irregularly built, with ſhort ſtreets and frequent turnings, but pleaſantly ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the acclivity of the great hill Sponebed. It has two fairs in the year, one held on Whit-Tueſday, the other on the 19th of September, for ſheep and horned cattle; beſides a very large fair, or great market, for ſheep, on the Tueſday before All-Saints-day, according to the old ſtyle. The market is held on Tueſday, by a royal charter firſt granted 17 E. 2. and afterwards renewed in 1627. But the town is ſo environed with hills on every ſide, as not to be eaſily acceſſible to loaded carriages, and it is ſo nearly ſituated to Glouceſter and Stroud, that the market is very little frequented.

There is an antient fortification of double intrenchments upon the top of Sponebed-hill, about a mile above the town, called Caſtle-Godwin, and Kimſbery-Caſtle; of which it is obſervable, that the word caſtle, in the latter name, is redundant, as being fully expreſſed by bery, (from the Saxon beopʒ) a camp, or fortification. It is a ſquare camp, incloſing about three acres of ground, and has ſome advanced works belonging to it. Several Roman coins have been found there at different times, and not above thirty years ago, a ſword, and ſome heads of ſpears were taken up, but ſo corroded with ruſt as hardly to hold together. It commands an extenſive proſpect over the vale and the Severn, from Newnham, below Glouceſter, as far as the city of Worceſter, which the eye can eaſily diſtinguiſh in a fair day. Theſe circumſtances put the matter out of doubt that this was one of the Caſtra Exploratoria of the Romans. I ſuppoſe it to have been occupied by earl Godwin, (from its bearing his name, and from other circumſtances related under Beverſtone) in that inſurrection, in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor, to expel all foreigners out of the kingdom, of whom the nation was very jealous, and whom the king, who then lay at Glouceſter, was thought to favour too much.

King Charles's army occupied this poſt after quitting the ſiege of Glouceſter; and there is a tradition, that the king, ſitting on a ſtone near the camp, was aſked by one of the young princes, When they ſhould go home? To which his majeſty anſwered, a little diſconſolately, that He had no home to go to.

The clothing manufacture has been long eſtabliſhed in theſe parts, by which many have acquired large fortunes. It is ſtill conſidered as a lucrative and genteel employment, capable of any extenſion; and it certainly deſerves the greateſt encouragement, becauſe it furniſhes labour for the poor of both ſexes, and all ages, who derive from it the neceſſaries and comforts of life; and the air air of this pariſh, which is remarkably ſalubrious, gives them a great ſhare of health to enjoy them.

The principal houſes in the pariſh are,

1. The Lodge, or manor-houſe, which is a large and handſome ſeat belonging to ſir James Jerningham, baronet, who keeps it in repair; but it has not been the reſidence of any of his family for many years.

2. The ſeat of Benjamin Hyett, eſq; ſituate a little above the town. It is an elegant houſe, with offices, finiſhed by his late uncle, who called it Buenos Ayres.

3. Paradiſe, a handſome ſeat, the property and reſidence of Charles Sheppard, eſq.

4. A very handſome, new-built houſe in the town, the reſidence of John Gardner, eſq.

The turnpike-road leads through the town from Stroud to Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following record was over-looked by ſir Robert Atkyns:

'Roger de Laci holds Wiche in Biſelege hundred. One hide there pays tax. Erneſi held it. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and twenty-five villeins, and ſixteen bordars, and a prieſt, and three radcheniſters, having amongſt them all fifty-two plow-tillages. There are eleven ſervi, and four mills of 24*ſol.* and a wood five miles long, and two broad. It was worth 20*l.* now 24*l.* The thane himſelf could go where he would. St. Mary of Cireceſtre holds one vill [or the land of one villein] and part of a wood, which king William granted to her, worth 10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

The above Roger de Laci, taking part with Robert Curthoiſe, had his poſſeſſions taken from him by king William the Second, who gave them to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother. Hugh left no ſurviving iſſue, whereby his inheritance deſcended to Gilbert, ſon of Emme, his ſiſter and ſurviving heireſs, which Gilbert aſſumed the name of Laci. Hugh de Laci was ſon and heir of Gilbert, and died 31 H. 2. about which time this eſtate went out of the name of Lacy.

Robert and Ivo, or John, were two potent Normans, who came into England with king William the Conqueror. John married the daughter and ſole heireſs of William Tyſon, lord of Alnwicke in Northumberland. His ſon was Euſtace Fitz-John, who married Beatrix, a great inheritrix, and by her had iſſue William Fitz-John, who took the name of Veſci, one of his mother's titles. Pain Fitz-John, ſays ſir Robert Atkyns, younger brother of Euſtace Fitz-John, and ſecond ſon of Ivo, was ſlain by the Welch 1 Joh. But ſir Robert was probably miſtaken, for it was 133 years from the conqueſt to 1 Joh. and it is not likely that the ſon of that Ivo, who came into England with the Conqueror, ſhould ſurvive 'till that time. It is ſufficient, however, for our preſent purpoſe, that ſome Pain Fitz-John then died ſeized of the manor of Painſwick, which from him took its name.

Pain Fitz-John left two daughters, Cicely, married to Roger the ſon of Milo of Glouceſter; and Agnes, married to William de Monte Caniſio, or Monchenſy, who was ſeized of this manor in right of his wife; and William Fitz-Warine de Monchenſy pleaded his right of privileges in Painſwick, in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1.

Dioniſia de Monchenſy, daughter of William Fitz-Warine, and widow of Hugh de Vere, died ſeized of this manor 7 E. 2. and was ſucceeded by Joan the ſiſter, and at length heireſs of the aforeſaid William Fitz-Warine de Monchenſy; which Joan was married to William de Valentia, of the family of Luſignia, in Poictiers in France, and half brother, by the mother, to king Henry the Third.

Audomar de Valentia, earl of Pembroke, third ſon of William, after the death of his brothers, became heir to his father, and purchaſed a charter for a weekly market in Painſwick, to be held on Tueſday, and a yearly fair on the eve of the nativity of the virgin Mary, 17 E. 2. and dying the ſame year, his three ſiſters were his coheireſſes. Joan, the youngeſt, was married to John Comyn, of Badenagh in Scotland, ſon of John Comyn, one of the competitors for that kingdom. They left only daughters coheireſſes.

Elizabeth, one of thoſe daughters, was married to Richard Talbot, of Goderick-caſtle in Herefordſhire, whereby the Talbots were poſſeſſed of the manor of Painſwick, which continued a long time in that family. This Elizabeth was taken by the two De Spencers,[t] and confined by them near a twelve-month, during which ſhe was compelled by threats to paſs this manor to the eldeſt of them, and his heirs. But on the change of affairs, the ſame Richard Talbot and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor of Painſwick, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 12 E. 3.

John Talbot, earl of Shrewſbury, was lord of this manor, and held a court on the 21ſt of April 1 H. 4. to which he came, and by the advice and conſent of his homage, made ſeveral alterations in the cuſtoms of the manor, very much to the advantage of the tenants.

From the proceedings of this court,[*] we learn the original of the widows free bench in copy-hold [t] Dugdale's Baronage.

[*] The following proceedings at this court contain ſeveral curious particulars, and ſhew the nature of ſome things which length of time has made obſcure.

Sir John Talbot and Margaret his wife levied a fine of this manor to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, the remainder to the right heirs of ſir John, 20 H. 6. John Talbot, the great earl of Shrewſbury, died ſeized thereof, and of a tenement called Damſels-land, 31 H. 6. It was afterwards ſettled on John viſcount Liſle, a younger branch of the earl of Shrewſbury, by Margaret, eldeſt daughter of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and of Elizabeth, the great heireſs of Thomas lord Berkeley. John earl of Shrewſbury and Thomas viſcount Liſle levied a fine of this manor 9 E. 4. After the death of the ſaid Thomas viſcount Liſle, it was granted to Margaret his widow for life, 11 E. 4. Elizabeth Courtney, counteſs of Devonſhire, died ſeized of this manor 21 H. 7. Sir Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife, couſin and heir of the counteſs of Devonſhire, had livery thereof granted them 11 H. 8.

The manor afterwards came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Eſſex, upon whoſe attainder it was granted to George earl of Shrewſbury 30 H. 8. And it was again granted by the crown, with Sponebed, and lands in Theſcomb, Stroud-end, and Horſwarly near Painſwick, to ſir William Kingſton 32 H. 8. who died ſeized thereof the ſame year, and ſir Anthony Kingſton, his ſon and heir, had livery upon his father's death, and levied a fine of this manor to ſir Nicholas Pointz 5 E. 6.

The manor afterwards paſſed to the Jerninghams, of Coſſey in Norfolk. Henry Jerningham had livery of it 15 Eliz. and conveyed this manor to his ſon Henry Jerningham, eſq; who was lord of it in the year 1608. John Jerningham was ſon and heir of Henry. Sir Francis Jerningham was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, from whom it has deſcended, through ſeveral generations, to ſir James Jerningham, baronet, who is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of a large eſtate in this pariſh. His arms are, Argent, three buckles gules. But in the laſt herald's ſurvey, I find them, Argent, three bucks trippant gules.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. The tithing of Edge, alias Rudge.
2. Tithing of Sponebed.
3. Tithing of Shepſcombe. In the reign of king Edward the Sixth, there were ſeveral inſurrections in the weſt, and other parts of the kingdom. At that time ſir Anthony Kingſton was knight-marſhal, and lord of the manor of Painſwick. He cauſed a gallows for the inſurgents to be erected upon Shepſcombe-green, and made a priſon in Painſwick to ſecure all ſorts of offenders: And ſuppoſing they might be uſeful to poſterity, he alſo gave three eſtates in his lordſhip, ſince called Gallows-lands, one always to maintain the gallows, a ſecond to keep two ladders in readineſs, and the third to provide halters; and that nothing in ſo neceſſary a buſineſs might be wanting, provided that the tithingman of Shepſcombe ſhould be hangman, and that he ſhould enjoy an acre of land in that tithing for his ſervice. I find this account in Mr. Wantner's Collections, in the Bodleian library. There are many people now living who remember the gallows, and the tithingman for the time being ſtill enjoys a piece of ground there called Hangman's Acre; but in this reſpect his office is a fine-cure.

4. Stroud-end tithing.

Beſide theſe, there are places in the pariſh of the following names, the Slad, Steanbridge, Wick-ſtreet, Halcomb, and many others.

Many cuſtomary tenants hold of the manor of Painſwick, whoſe cuſtoms, as ſettled by the court of chancery 11 Jac. are as follow:

1. The tenants hold by copy of court-roll, ſibi & ſuis; whereby they have an eſtate of inheritance, which may be alienated by ſurrender to the ſteward in court, in the preſence of two cuſtomary tenants. Upon every deſcent, the lord to have one year's rent, and an heriot, if the lands are heriotable; but upon ſurrenders, the fine to be ſeven years rent.

2. After the death of a tenant, his wife, if he had any, ſhall be admitted to her free bench during her life, paying one penny.

3. If a tenant has ſeveral ſons, and the eldeſt die leaving iſſue, ſuch iſſue ſhall inherit as next heir to the grandfather. And if a tenant die, leaving ſeveral daughters only, and as many yards or half yards of land as daughters, then every daughter ſhall have a yard or half yard land; and the like order is obſerved with tenements.

4. No ſheriff, &c. to ſerve any proceſs upon any perſon within this liberty, unleſs it be with a commandment, or ſubpæna. There are many other articles of leſs conſequence, which are here omitted.

The records ſhew, that the prior of Lanthony had an eſtate in this pariſh, which has been called a manor. After the diſſolution of the priory, it was ſold to Arthur Porter, eſq; and has been ſince ſold and divided amongſt ſeveral freeholders.

Walter Wilton and Iſabel his wife recovered lands in Painſwicke againſt Oſbert Giffard 28 E. 1. John Mandevil was ſeized of lands in Paineſwick and Edgworth 34 E. 3. And Robert Hill and his wife levied a fine of lands in Painſwick and Edgworth 1 H 7. A meſſuage and lands in Painſwick, called Combe-houſe, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8.

Ebworth is a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh. Walter le Bret was ſeized of lands and tenements in Ebworth, worth 40*s.* yearly, in truſt for the abbat of Glouceſter 31 E. 1. The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Ebworth 17 E. 3. Ebworth-farm is now the property of

Of

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 200*l.* a year. The vicar is elective by all the payers in the pariſh. Mr. Moſely is the preſent incumbent.

The rectory of Wyche was given by Hugh de Laci, and confirmed by earl Roger to the priory of Lanthony, as appears by king John's confirmation of grants to that priory, in the Appendix N°. 19. But ſir Robert Atkyns mentions it to have been annexed to that priory 21 R. 2. The impropriation is now veſted in ſeveral proprietors.

A rent of 21*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* reſerved out of the rectory, and divers lands in Painſwick, were granted to Francis Maurice and Francis Philips 9 Jac.

The advowſon of the vicarage of Painſwicke, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, was granted, at the diſſolution, to Thomas lord Seimour, and upon his attainder, it was again granted to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton 21 Eliz. William Newport, nephew and heir to the lord keeper Hatton, ſold it to ſir Henry Winſton, of whom it was purchaſed, in the names of truſtees, for the inhabitants of the pariſh.

There is a large glebe belonging to the vicarage, worth 60*l.* a year. The demeans of the manor pay no tithes, becauſe the vicar hath Bangrove-mead in lieu of them.

The church conſiſts of a nave, with two ailes, and three galleries; and there are three chancels, of which, that next the communion rails, extending to the altar-piece, belongs to the vicar; another, between the vicar's and the nave, is appendant to one portion of the rectory; and a third, on the north ſide, was formerly a chantry chapel, of which William Corbuſt was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 5*l.* 10*s.* This belongs to the lord of the manor.

The ſouth aile is built in the modern taſte, ſupported by Doric pillars, with capitals. The grand entrance into the church is at a portico on the ſouth ſide, of the Ionic order. The north aile is a Gothic building, decorated with battlements, under which iſſue four antique water-ſpouts, repreſenting ſo many evil demons flying away from the ſound of the bells, according to ſome received notions in former days, when it was cuſtomary to ſprinkle them with holy water at their being firſt placed in the tower, to give them a power of repelling evil ſpirits by their ſound. And if agreeable and muſical tones have any effect on a diſtempered mind, the ten bells in this tower have as much merit as any peal in the kingdom.

The altar-piece is of freeſtone, of the Ionic order, given by the late Benjamin Hyett, eſq; and executed by John Bryan, of this place, in the year 1743.

The tower ſtands at the weſt end, with a handſome ſteeple on it, fifty-eight yards high from the ground.

The church-yard is laid out in handſome gravel walks, with yew-trees on each ſide, cut into the form of cones, and is the place of reſort for the ladies and the polite inhabitants of the town in fair weather.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There are no very antient monuments in this church. The moſt antient was a grey marble tomb, againſt the wall of the north chancel, for ſir William Kingſton, with his effigy and an inſcription on braſs fixt in the wall; but his figure is intirely gone, and the braſſes are ſtolen away. And to mingle and confuſe one thing with another, there are now the effigies of doctor Seaman and his lady, placed on ſir William's tomb. They are in a praying poſture, with a deſk between them; he in a doctor of laws gown, and a ſhield, with their arms lying by, viz. Baron and femme, 1. Gules, three bears heads couped argent. 2. Argent, on a bend between two lions rampant ſable, three aſcallops of the field, for Norton. The doctor's monument, with a memorial, was placed in the chancel, and taken down to make room for the new altar-piece, ſee p. 163.

There are ſeveral memorials on flat ſtones for the Jerninghams, in this chancel, containing very little more than their names.

In the vicar's chancel,

To the irreparable Loſs of her Huſband and Family;
To the great affliction of her Neighbours and Acquaintance, to whom her amiable Virtues and excellent Goodneſs rendered her ever dear;
And to the ſorrowful ſighing of the Poor, to whom Her liberal Hand was ever open;
She exchanged this mortal Life for an eternal and heavenly one, Sept. 1ſt 1729, aged 31 Years.

Margaret her infant Daughter lieth here buried with her. She left behind her two Sons, William and Robert, and four Daughters, Anne, Elizabeth, Eleanor and Margaret.

In ten years, beginning with 1652, I counted from the pariſh regiſter 309 baptiſms, and 180 burials. At the beginning of the preſent century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, the annual baptiſms were 50, burials 47; and in ten years, beginning with 1760, I find, by actual numeration, that the baptiſms were 629, and the burials 583, which numbers, at diſtant periods, ſhew the gradual increaſe of population. When the militia was firſt raiſed by the new law, in the year 1758, there were 16 men choſen by ballot out of this pariſh, which was the twenty-ninth part of the whole number upon the liſt; and the preſent number of ſouls is about 3300.

PAUNTLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the Foreſt diviſion, four miles diſtant northward from Newent, and ten north-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded by Upleden and Oxenhall on the ſouth, by Kempley and Dimmock on the weſt, and the river Leden ſeparates it, on the north and eaſt quarters, from Worceſterſhire.

The face of the country, throughout the whole pariſh, is full of ſwells, and ſlopes, and little vallies; whence it obtained the name of Pantelie, from Pant, Britiſh, a valley.

The upper part of the pariſh is a ſandy ſoil, which the antient inhabitants conſtantly planted with Rye, from a ſuppoſition that it was not capable of producing any other ſort of grain, and ſo called it the Ryelands, which name it ſtill retains. The other part is inclined to clay, and has obtained the name of the Wheatlands, for a ſimilar reaſon.

The Ryelands have uſually been depaſtured by a ſmall ſpecies of ſheep, with fine wool, and fleſh of a ſweet and delicious flavour, much ſought after by perſons of taſte and fortune. The common weight of a leg of one of thoſe animals, well fatted, is about four pounds.

Theſe lands now produce pretty good crops of wheat, and other grain, but they ſeem to require a better cultivation; for in ſome fine pieces of land I have ſeen as much fern as corn. The farmers plant a few turnips, which they pull for the ſheep and horned cattle. Near to theſe ſandy fields, are beds of clay and marle, but they never uſe either of them for manure. They neither water their meadows, nor drain their wet lands as they ought: In ſhort, nature is bountiful, but judgment and induſtry are wanting.

A ſpring of water, of a brackiſh taſte, and very ſtrong purging quality, riſes out of a ſwampy place by the ſide of the Leden; and flocks of pidgeons reſort thither to eat the ſalt made by evaporation from the water.

As cyder is a principal object with the farmer, the apple-tree is cultivated here, and in the neighbouring pariſhes, with an attention which ſeldom fails of being amply rewarded.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds one hide and a 'half in Pantelie, and one hide in Chilcot, and 'one hide in Chitiford, and one hide in Hege; 'in the whole four hides and a half. Ulfel, and 'Eluuard, and Wiga, held them for four manors. 'One hide and a half is free from tax. There 'are two plow-tillages in demean, and ſeven 'villeins, and three bordars, with ſeven plow-'tillages. There are two ſervi, and a mill of '7*s.* 6*d.* It was worth 3*l.* 10*s.* now 4*l.* They 'who held theſe lands could go where they would.

'Ansfrid had the above written eſtates, and 'Wineſtan, and Tanteſborne, of Walter de Laci, 'when he married his niece. But he holds his 'other lands of the king.' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

Walter de Pauntelye died ſeized of an eſtate called Pauntelye, leaving Margery, his daughter and heireſs, married to John de Solers. Walter de Solers, ſon of Margery, was ſeized of Pauntelye 32 H. 3. in which year his mother, then the wife of Richard de Sutton, releaſed to him all her right. Thomas de Solers, ſon of Walter, was ſucceeded by his ſon, John de Solers, who died ſeized of Paunteleye, which he held of the heir of the counteſs of Lincoln, as of the honour of Clifford, by the ſervice of one knight's fee 4 E. 2. as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition of that year. Maud de Solers, daughter and heir of John de Solers-Hope, in Herefordſhire, was married to William de Witinton, or de Vyteinton, and brought this eſtate into his family.

But tho' the above was a large eſtate, it ſeems not to have been the manor, for the ſheriff returned, that William de Whytington was lord of the vill of Paunteley 9 E. 1. He died 12 E. 1. and another William Witinton, ſon of William, by the before-mentioned inquiſition taken 4 E. 2. was found to be the next heir of John, ſon of Thomas de Solers, being then twenty-four years old; and in him the manor and eſtates ſeem to have been united. Sir William de Whitington, ſon of William, married Joan, daughter and heireſs of Robert Linet. He levied a fine of the manor of Pauntley to the uſe of himſelf for life, the remainder to William his ſon, and Joan the wife of William, and daughter of William Manſel, and their heirs, 4 E. 3. and died ſeized of Pauntley in the fifth year of that reign. Sir William Whitington, ſon of ſir William, died ſeized of Pauntley 33 E. 3.

Another William de Whitington, ſon of ſir William, married Catherine, ſiſter and heir of John de Staunton, and died ſeized of Pauntley 22 R. 2. which he held of Roger de Mortimer earl of March, as of the honour of Clifford-Caſtle. Robert de Whitington, ſon and heir of William, was high ſheriff of the county 3 & 8 H. 4. Richard de Whitington, younger brother of Robert, was thrice lord mayor of London, and a great benefactor to that city.

Sir Guy de Whitington, ſon and heir of Robert, married Cicely, ſiſter and heireſs of Richard Browning, meſne lord of Notgrove, and lord of Lye and Rodborough. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 6 & 12 H. 6. and died ſeized of the manors of Notgrove, Lye, Rodborough, and Pauntley, 20 H. 6.

Robert Whitington, ſon of ſir Guy, died before his father, 15 H. 6. leaving Robert his ſon, who was heir to his grandfather ſir Guy; but he died under age, in ward to the king, and was ſucceeded by his brother and heir William Whitington, who married Elizabeth, the aunt and coheireſs of ſir Edmond Arundel, and died ſeized of Pauntley 11 E. 4. John Whitington, ſon and heir of William, married firſt, the daughter of Richard le Croft; ſecondly, Elizabeth, daughter and coheireſs of Simon Milbourn, and by her had William Whitington, on whom he ſettled the manor of Notgrove. Thomas Whitington, ſon and heir of John by his firſt wife, married Margery, daughter of ſir William Needham, and died ſeized of the manor of Pauntley in the year 1546, 38 H. 8. leaving ſix daughters his coheireſſes; Blanch, married to John St. Aubin; Anne, to Brice Berkeley; Jane, to Roger Bodenham; Margaret, to Thomas Throgmorton; Alice, to —— Nanfan; and Elizabeth, married to ſir Giles Pool of Saperton, who, in right of his wife, died ſeized of this manor in the year 1588. Sir Henry Pool, ſon of ſir Giles, was lord of it in the year 1608, and died in 1616.

The manor came afterwards to Henry Somerſet, eſq; whoſe ſon, Edward-Maria Somerſet, was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Henry Scudamore, of Canons-bridge, near Hereford, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor, by purchaſe from lady Somerſet.

The large manor houſe at Pauntley-court is taken down, having been long ſince deſerted by its owners.

The houſe and eſtate called Holend, formerly belonging to Henry Cruys, and the White Houſe eſtate, which belonged to the Atwoods, are now the property of Mr. Scudamore.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from the impropriator, beſide the privy tithes. The impropriator was patron, but there has been no preſentation for many years, and the vicarage is now held by licence from the biſhop.

The impropriation belongs to the lord of the manor, who pays 2*s.* 6*d.* out of it to the crown. The rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Pauntley, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Cormeile in Normandy, and afterwards to the college of Fotheringhay, were granted to ſir Richard Lee 1 E. 6.

The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt, and has a low tower at the weſt end, with three bells. There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. George, of which Hugh Dowſlins was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Willis.

On an old raiſed tomb in the church-yard,

To the Memory of Poole Pauncefoote, of Carſwalls, Eſqr. Juſtice of the Peace of the Quorum, who married Elianor, the Daughter to William Rogers of Dodſwell Gent. by whom he had 1 Son & 3 daughters, William, Elianor, Mary, & Elizabeth; he was born at Newent upon St. Thomas day 1612, & died full of honour, wiſdom, and virtue, 13 April, 1687, leaving to his family the benefit of his providence and good example.

The old man's miſſing, whither is he gone ?
Sure on no law ſuit of his own ;
His leaſe is out, not ſhort'ned by the prayers
Of injur'd neighbours, or expecting heirs.
We wept his loſſe half blind, to whom we owe
The good we ſay, the goodneſs that we ſhow.
Take friendſhip, learning, prudence, piety,
Wealth, beauty, kindneſs, equanimity,
You have a looking glaſs made of his duſt,
And aſhes, for to dreſs the great & juſt.

On another,

Here lyeth in aſſurance of a glorious reſurrection the body of William Pauncefoote, of Carſewells, Eſqr. who lived a true Chriſtian, a good Subject, a loving Huſband, a kind Parent, a faithful friend, & a good example; he was born April 5, 1645, & having the comfortable memory of a well led life, he beheld Death without dread, & the grave without fear, & embrac'd both as neceſſary guides to endleſs glory, March 28, 1691. He left William, Henry, Grimbald, John, Elianor, Elizabeth, & Anne, All of probity, beauty, and hopes.

Dear Children all I pray take ſome
Advices from your Father's tomb :
Still pray to God, & give him praiſe
For all you have; walk in his ways,
Be humble, juſt, to ev'ry one,
Give to the poor, ſave for your own,
And do your beſt one for the other,
Then ev'ry Child's an elder Brother.

PEBWORTH

LIES in a fine vale, in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſeven miles diſtant north-eaſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, five northward from Campden, and thirty north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Who that Pebe was, whoſe name is tranſmitted down to us in that of this village, and what age he lived in, are matters of which hiſtory is totally ſilent, and perhaps it little concerns us to know.

The whole pariſh conſiſts of 2960 acres, pretty equally divided into paſture and arable, and a good part lies in common fields. It is deſtitute of antiquities, and yields nothing remarkable either in the foſſil or vegetable kingdoms. The moſt curious of its natural productions conſiſt of fine graſs and corn, which the rich ſoil produces very plentifully.

It lies on the northern limits of the county, and on the verge of the pariſh, in the hamlet of Ullington, ſtands an elm-tree, where Glouceſterſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Warwickſhire meet in a point. The little brook Noleham runs from Mickleton, through Pebworth, in its courſe to the Avon. The houſes are built chiefly of wattling, ſome of brick, and fewer of ſtone; but there is not a good houſe in the village, nor any thing elſe, that I could either ſee or hear of, to diſtinguiſh it.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

'William Goizenboded holds Pebeworde, in 'Ceolflede hundred, of the king. Vluiet and 'Uluuard held it in the time of king Edward for 'two manors. There are ſix hides, and one yard-'land. In demean is one plow-tillage, and one 'bordar, and one ſervus. It was worth 7*l.* now '4*l.* 10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

'Hugo de Grentemaiſnil holds Pebeworde, in 'Ceolflede hundred. There are two hides, and 'one yard-land. Two thanes held it for two 'manors. There are three plow-tillages, and one 'villein, and one bordar, and ſeven ſervi.' p. 77.

The manor of Pebworth was held of Roger de Quincy, earl of Wincheſter, 55 H. 3. It ſometime belonged to the Grevills of Campden. William Grevil was ſeized of Pebworth, and died in 1401. Sir Richard Vernham died ſeized of the manor, and left Elizabeth, his only daughter, married to John Vampage the elder. They joined in levying a fine of the manor to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 26 H. 6.

The manor came afterwards to the Forteſcues, heirs of lord chancellor Forteſcue. Hugh Forteſcue, eſq; was lord of it in 1608, as was another Hugh Forteſcue, at the beginning of this century. Matthew lord Forteſcue is the preſent lord of this manor, whoſe pedigree and arms are inſerted under Ebberton.

John Rouſe, ſon and heir of John Rouſe de Rageley, was ſeized of a yearly rent of 100s. in Pebworth, 20 R. 2. Chriſtian Rouſe, widow of John, and William Rouſe, ſon of Robert, and grandſon of the ſaid Chriſtian, were ſeized of ſeven yard-lands, and of Marſton-wood in Pebworth, 8 H. 6. Thomas Saunders and Elizabeth his wife, ſiſter and heir of Edward Ipewell, levied a fine of lands in Pebworth and Broad Marſton 15 H. 7.

Another

Another manor in Pebworth belonged to the abbey of Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, and after the diſſolution of that houſe, was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Eſſex, upon whoſe attainder it was again granted to Richard Farmer, 36 H. 8. Thomas Andrews obtained from the crown a reverſionary grant of this manor, after the death of ſir Thomas Andrews, 4 Eliz. It was again granted to John Fernham in the 18th year of the ſame reign. Robert Martyn, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and reſides here.

This eſtate pays an audit to the crown, and acknowledges a dependance on the Dutchy of Lancaſter, and therefore the inhabitants claim to be toll-free throughout the kingdom.

HAMLETS. 1. Broad Marſton, about a mile eaſtward from the church. This hamlet lies very flat and low, and is commonly overflowed in the winter, for which reaſon it was called Mereſtune, i.e. Marſh-town. The prenomen Broad is of later date, and was probably given it in contradiſtinction to the adjoining pariſh of Long Marſton.

Domeſday mentions this manor, and ſays 'Hugo 'de Grentemaiſnil holds Mereſtune in Ceolflede 'hundred. There are two hides.' p. 77.

Sir Alan Buſhel was lord of this manor, and dying in the year 1245, was buried in Pebworth church. Richard Buſhel, ſon of ſir Alan, married Idonea, daughter of ſir John Cantilupe, of Smithfield in Warwickſhire, and was ſucceeded by Richard his ſon and heir, who married Elianor, daughter and heireſs of Clement Muſard. Roger Buſhel, ſon of Richard, married Eve, daughter of Jeffery d'Abitot, of Redmarley in Worceſterſhire. Richard Buſhel, ſon of Roger, married Emme, daughter of Hugh Ernold, of Glouceſterſhire, and had a ſon Richard, who married Katherine, daughter and coheireſs of ſir William Saltmarſh. Robert Buſhel, ſon of the laſt Richard, married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Hugford, of Edmedſcot in Warwickſhire, and had a ſon Edmond, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Blount, of Granden. Thomas Buſhel, ſon of Edmond, married Anne, daughter of John Normid, of Broadway, and had a ſon Edward, who married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Andrews, of Winwick in Northamptonſhire, and died before his father; but left a ſon Thomas, who ſucceeded his grandfather in the manor of Broad Marſton, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Winter, of Ardington in Warwickſhire. Thomas Buſhel, ſon and heir of the laſt Thomas, married Margaret, ſiſter of Edward Grent, of Milcot in Warwickſhire; and the manor of Broad Marſton continued in his deſcendants, 'till it paſſed to the earl of Saliſbury. James earl of Saliſbury is the preſent lord of this manor.

Lands in Broad Marſton belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, and were granted to William Sheldon and Francis Sheldon 35 H. 8.

2. Ullington lies weſtward from the church, and conſiſts of three families. Here was formerly a chapel, the remains of which are ſtill to be ſeen.

3. Winekton. 'William Goizenboded holds 'Wenitone in Ceolflede hundred. A thane held 'it in the time of king Edward. There are five 'hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'two villeins; and one francigena holds one hide 'and a half, with one plow-tillage. Earl Algar 'joined this manor to Pebeuuorde. It was worth '10*s.* now 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

The preſent inhabitants of the pariſh know nothing of the hamlet of Winekton, or Wenitone. Indeed it might not have been within the pariſh, tho' a member of the manor of Pebworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth 24*l.* a year. The earl of Saliſbury is patron and impropriator; and Mr. Mould is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation is worth 131*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* a year, and is ſubject to the annual payment of 14*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* to the vicar.

Richard, the ſon of Roger de Fredvill gave the church of Pebworth to the Benedictine priory of Alceſter in Warwickſhire, founded by Ralph Butler, in the year 1140, and valued at the diſſolution at 101*l.* 14*s.* He alſo gave a water mill in this place to the Ciſtercian abbey of St. Mary, at Combe in Warwickſhire, which was founded by Richard de Camville, in the year 1150, and valued at the diſſolution at 343*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* a year. The rectory and church of Pebworth were granted to Lawrence Baſkervill, and William Blake, ſcrivener, 3 Jac.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and conſiſts of two ailes, with a tower, and five bells at the weſt end.

At the beginning of this century, there were 95 houſes in this pariſh, and about 400 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 9. Atkyns. But ſir Robert Atkyns's numbers were not accurately taken, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, there are entered in the regiſter 133 baptiſms, and 58 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 143, burials 96. The preſent number of families is 104, of inhabitants exactly 436; and the average of annual burials is to the whole number of ſouls, nearly as 1 to 45.4.

St. PHILIP

St. PHILIP's and St. JACOB's.

THE diſtrict of which I am to give ſome account, is only ſo much of this pariſh as lies in the hundred of King's-barton near Briſtol, moſt commonly called Barton Regis, to diſtinguiſh it from the hundred of King's-barton, near Glouceſter.

This diſtrict is bounded on the eaſt by St. George's, lately taken out of this pariſh; and on the weſt by Laford's gate, and the city of Briſtol. It extends about three quarters of a mile eaſtward of that gate, a great part of it conſiſting of ſeveral ſtreets of good houſes, like the city; which were moſt of them built in the laſt century, occaſioned by the reſort of conſiderable numbers of French and Flemings, who came over to carry on a manufacture of woollen-ſtuffs. Not being allowed to ſettle within the city, they took up their reſidence as near to it as poſſible, at a place juſt without Laford's gate, where they continued many years; but at length the ſtuff trade declining, this part of the pariſh is now occupied by tradeſmen of every denomination.

Kingſwood foreſt antiently extended weſtward very near to Laford's gate, and was much larger than the chaſe deſcribed in the perambulation under the account of the pariſh of St. George's. At the diſtance of a few yards from this gate, there is now a houſe of public reſort, known by the ſign of the Foreſter, or Green Man; which, it is ſaid, was either itſelf a lodge, or ſtands on the ſite of the lodge where a keeper reſided, who had an adjacent gate of the foreſt under his care, and received a penny a piece from travellers paſſing through it, at two ſeaſons of the year, to the fairs at Briſtol. One of thoſe keepers was buried in St. Philip's church; and round the verge of his grave-ſtone, placed within the rails which incloſe the communion-table, is this inſcription, THOMAS WYTLEY SVMTIMS KEPER OF THE QVEANNE FOREST DEPARTED THE LAST DAY OF OCTOR ANO DOMIN. 1596. And upon the ſame ſtone, are very rudely ſketched the outlines of a bow and arrow, or rather croſs-bow, and of the keeper's faithful dog.

The city of Briſtol following the laudable example of the metropolis, pulled down Laford's gate in the year 1767, to give a free current to the air, ſo neceſſary to health, and to prevent ſuch accidents as had frequently happened there by the continual interruption of paſſengers, and the unavoidable intermixture of carriages, horſes, and foot travellers, in ſo long and narrow an entrance. At that time the curious antient carved figures with which the gate was ornamented, were taken away, and Mr. Reeve placed them at his country-ſeat a little without the city, at Briſlington in Somerſetſhire. They formerly belonged to the caſtle of Briſtol, as appears by a paſſage extracted from the annals of that caſtle, lately found among a collection of antient papers, records, and other curious particulars, diſcovered in a room belonging to the pariſh church of St. Mary Redcliff in Briſtol, and ſuppoſed to have been there depoſited by the order of the great Mr. Canning, who was ſix times mayor of that city, viz. in the years 1372, 1373, 1375, 1381, 1385, and 1389. The paſſage alluded to is as follows:

'Allwarde, a Saxon ſkyll'd Carveller in Stone 'and Woude. He lyved in the reygne of Eldred: 'He carvelled the worke of y^e^ Caſtle & y^e^ Imageries 'whyen they ſtoude yn ſaid Chapel of Alle [and] 'Coernicus, wardens of the Caſtle yn daies of 'Yore. Rob^t^ of Gloweſter removed them to y^e^ 'Walle of the Inwarde Tower, from whence the 'preſent Lorde Warden has tane them: Maſter 'Canynge fayne wowlde have the ſame to be in 'his Cabynette, but my Lords entente is to place 'them at y^e^ Gate of y^e^ Caſtle or owtſide of y^e^ 'Walls as a goodlie Specktalle for Menne to bee-'houlde and in ſothe goodelie Specktalle thei have 'beeing ſeated & couronued in Roabes of Eſtate '& paramented. Ne are enfayrer [inferior] 'Carvel then thoſe of our Daies, of durable Stone 'and y^e^ Depicture of the Faces ſtill remayneynge 'bie means of theyre beeinge Keepen from the 'Wnwer [weather].'

The above ſeems not to have been written by Mr. Canning, as it ſpeaks of him in the third perſon. I cannot anſwer for its being correctly copied, as I never had acceſs to the original, but I give it exactly as I received it from my friend at Briſtol. Alle is ſaid to have been warden of the caſtle in the year 915, and Coernicus was his ſucceſſor.

In this diſtrict there are ſeveral large works carried on by the wealthy citizens, ſuch as iron-founderies, glaſs-houſes for making crown glaſs, and glaſs bottles; a work for making of white lead, one for ſmelting lead ore, and particularly a very large one at Baptiſt-mills for tranſmuting of copper into braſs. Formerly braſs kettles and other utenſils have been made there, chiefly, in its firſt inſtitution, by Germans; but that part of the buſineſs is now performed at the battery mills in the pariſhes of Siſton, Bitton, and elſewhere.

The veſtiges of an old chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, are to be ſeen adjacent to the high road on Lawrence-hill, and there is a field contiguous to it, with which it had been endowed, and is now exempt from tithes. I have taken notice of this piece of ground, and of the hoſpital of St. Lawrence, under St. George's pariſh, and am not abſolutely certain to which head theſe particulars belong; but they lay in the out-part of this pariſh, before St. George's was taken from it.

The records, alſo, relating to this diſtrict, are inſerted under the head of St. George's, becauſe both were called the out-pariſh of St. Philip's and Jacob's 'till the year 1756, when St. George's was erected into a diſtinct pariſh, and the records could not be properly ſeparated.

This diſtrict is very populous; but the account of baptiſms and burials is neceſſarily omitted, as they are intermixt in the regiſter with thoſe belonging to the inner part of the pariſh.

The pariſh church lies within the city of Briſtol, and not in Glouceſterſhire, wherefore an account of it is not to be expected in this work; but an office copy of the endowment of the vicarage falling into my hands, I have ſubjoined it as follows:

PINNOCK.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of Kiftſgate hundred, at the foot of that range of hills which divides the vale from the Coteſwold, about two miles north-eaſtward from Winchcombe, ten eaſt from Tewkeſbury, and ſeventeen north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

The name is written Pignocſire in Domeſday. It ſeems to carry in it that of ſome Saxon proprietor, and to ſignify nothing more than Pignoc's Portion, or Eſtate; from the Saxon word Scipe, a Portion or Diviſion.

Whether Pinnockſhire enjoyed any particular privileges and immunities, is now difficult to determine. But it is thus taken notice of among the counties of England, in ſome verſes concerning their properties, inſerted in Leland's Itinerary, Vol. 5, p. 26.

—— Pynnokſhire is not to prayſe:
A man may go it in to dayes.

Pinnock, Ford, and Hyde, in Guiting-Temple, make one conſtablewick, and ſeem to have conſtituted the diſtrict of Pinnockſhire; but the poet, on the ſuppoſition that he meant to make the perambulation of the circumference two days journey, has greatly magnified its dimenſions, for the ſake of his rhime, ſince it is no more than a man could walk in three hours.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Alwold holds Pignocſire, in Holeford hundred, 'of the king. He held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are four hides, one of which 'did not pay tax. In demean are four plow-'tillages, and eleven villeins, and five bordars, 'with

'with four plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, 'and a mill of 30*d*. In Wicelcumbe is one bur-'gage yielding 8*d*. A wood half a mile long, and 'one furlong broad. It is worth and was worth '4*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

The abbey of St. Averel held Pinnockſhire 56 H. 3. And the abbey of Hayles was ſeized of court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Pinnockſhire 15 E. 1.

After the diſſolution, it is probable that this manor deſcended like that of Hayles, 'till it was purchaſed by lord Tracy, whoſe deſcendant, Thomas-Charles viſcount Tracy, is the preſent lord of it, and reſides at Todington.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 30*l*. a year. Pinnock, Didbrook, and Hayles, were conſolidated into one preſentation, in the year 1738. Lord Tracy is patron, and the honourable Dr. John Tracy is the preſent incumbent.

The advowſon formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and was granted to ſir Thomas Seymour, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6.

There is no houſe for the rector, and the church has been demoliſhed many years.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 2 houſes, and about 24 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 2 were freeholders; yearly births 1, burials 1. There are now 25 inhabitants. The baptiſms and burials are intermixed with thoſe of Hayles and Didbrook, without diſtinction, and are given together under the account of Hayles.

PITCHCOMBE

IS a very ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, two miles ſouth-weſtward from Painſwick, five northward from Stroud, and five ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The village is ſituate in a combe, or valley, agreeable to the ſignification of its name, with a pleaſant aſpect towards the ſouth, and has a ſmall ſtream running through it from Painſwick, which empties itſelf into the Froome below Stroud. It conſiſts of rich paſture, but is not diſtinguiſhed by any curious productions of nature or art.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This place is not mentioned in Domeſday, wherefore it could not be a diſtinct manor at the time when that record was compiled; but was probably included in the account of Haresfield and Haſcomb.

Oſbern Giffard and Alice Mordack held Pitchcombe 31 H. 3.

In the extract out of the pipe office, formerly ſent to the ſheriffs of the city of Glouceſter, for levying certain ſums due to the crown, it is ſaid, De Oſberto Gifford de firma de Pinchcomb 5*s*. and in Mr. Pury's account, drawn up about the year 1653, it is ſaid, Feoda firma de Pikeleſcumb conceſs. Oſberto Gifford anno 15 H. 3. ſub annuali redditu 5*s*.

Walter de Bruht releaſed to Glouceſter abbey, and to the almoner of Standiſh, a meſſuage, lands, and one hundred acres of wood in Pychenecomb, 31 E. 1. and Gilbert de Mayſinton gave two meſſuages and lands in Pynchenecombe to Glouceſter abbey, the ſame year.

The abbey of Glouceſter had free warren in all their demean lands in Pychenecombe 28 E. 3. and the manor continued in the abbey 'till the diſſolution; but was held from time to time by various perſons, either as tenants or truſtees for the abbey. Thus we find that Robert de Mandevil died 22 E. 3. and Iſabel his widow 30 E. 3. ſeized of this manor. Joan the widow of William Bokeland held it at the time of her death, 35 E. 3. and Robert de Wolverton died ſeized thereof, 44 E. 3.

After the general diſſolution of religious houſes, this manor, a meſſuage and lands in this pariſh, and a wood called Pitchcombe-wood, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8. Thomas Porter, knight, died July 2, 40 Eliz. ſeized of the ſcite and capital meſſuage of the manor of Pitchcombe, which (with many other lands) he had ſettled in jointure on Anne his daughter in law, to be enjoy'd after his deceaſe. This eſtate was then held of the queen, by the 20th part of a knight's fee, and was of the clear yearly value of 3*l*. 10*s*. 8*d*.

John Throckmorton, eſq; was lord of the manor in 1608, as was Thomas Stephens, of Lypiat, eſq; at the beginning of the preſent century, and John Stephens, of Lypiat, eſq; is the preſent lord of it.

Walter de Wilton and Iſabel his wife recovered lands againſt Oſbert Giffard 28 E. 1. Walter ſurvived his wife, and died ſeized of one plow-tillage, and of a yearly rent of 22*s*. iſſuing out of Pitchencombe, 17 E. 2. Another Walter de Wilton died ſeized of the ſame plow-tillage and rent 1 R. 2. Richard More of Picket, and Elizabeth his wife, were ſeized of ſeven meſſuages, 180 acres of land, eight acres of meadow, and ten acres of wood, and of the advowſon of the church of Pychencombe, 11 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, united with Hareſcombe, and together worth about 60*l*. a year. Mr. Purnel is patron, and Mr. Rice Jones is the preſent incumbent. The parſonage houſe is at Hareſcombe.

PRESBURY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Derhurſt, about two miles northward from Cheltenham, ſeven ſouthward from Tewkeſbury, and about eleven north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Part of it is in the vale, and conſiſts of rich paſturage, with a ſmall proportion of tillage; and part ſtretches up the weſtern ſide of that range of hills which ſeparates the Vale from the Coteſwold. The river Swilyate riſes out of Preſbury-hill, and paſſing by Swindon, Elmſtone, and Tredington, empties itſelf into the Upper Avon, a little below Tewkeſbury.

This was formerly a market town; for king Henry the Third, at the inſtance of Peter, biſhop of Hereford, who was lord of the manor, granted it a charter of a weekly market on Tueſday, and a yearly fair, to begin on the eve of the feaſt of St. Peter ad vincula, and to continue for three days. And theſe privileges were confirmed in the 14th and 19th years of the reign of king Richard the Second. It may be ſuppoſed that the market was not very large, but ſuch as it was, it muſt have ſuffered greatly by a conflagration which happened in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and reduced the town to aſhes. Some efforts were made to recover the market in the ſucceeding reign, according to Leland, who then viſited this place, and ſays, It is now made a Market Toune againe a 20 Yeres ſyns. How long it continued to be conſidered as ſuch, does not appear, but I apprehend not a great while afterwards. It was too near to Winchcombe and Cheltenham to flouriſh together, and loſing the patronage of the biſhop of Hereford, from whom the manor was taken at the Reformation, the town ſoon fell into the condition of a country village, and has continued ſo ever ſince.

A fine, clear ſpring of ſaline purging water riſes at a place called Hyde, in this pariſh, on an eſtate belonging to lord Craven; and about the year 1750, when the Cheltenham Spaw was in the meridian of its reputation, doctor Linden analyzed the Hyde water, and wrote an Experimental Diſſertation on its nature, contents, and virtues; wherein he compares it with, and gives it the preference to, the Cheltenham waters, 'which 'have undoubtedly' ſays he, 'manifeſted them-'ſelves to be of excellent virtues; but as the Hyde 'Spaw is of the very ſame nature, (and perhaps 'the mother-ſpring) and contains at leaſt four 'grains of ſalt more in each quart, (which is a 'conſiderable increaſe) it is but juſt to prefer 'them before the Cheltenham waters, &c.' The pamphlet was intended to bring Hyde waters into general uſe; ſalts were extracted from them, and advertiſed to be ſold at the Spaw warehouſes, and ſhops; and ſome conveniencies for bathing were made at the place, and lodgings provided for the reception of patients; but the doctor was miſtaken in ſome particulars, his treatiſe was ill written, and failed in the deſign.

This place hath had ſome ſhare in antient military tranſactions. Preſbury ſignifies the Prieſts camp, not that the camp here was made by religious men, but the manor in which it lay took its preſent name from its becoming the property of the church of Hereford. Whether the camp is Saxon or Roman is uncertain.

But to come nearer to our own time. In the laſt century, during the great civil war, colonel Maſſie, governor of Glouceſter, placed a garriſon of one hundred and fifty foot in a ſtrong houſe in this village, to protect the market of that city. It ſerved alſo to preſerve a communication between the parliament's garriſons at Glouceſter and Warwick, and to check the king's in Sudely-caſtle. Corbet.

Hewlets is an antient ſeat, lying one part in this pariſh, the other in Cheltenham. It commands an extenſive proſpect over the vale towards the river Severn, and is the property of Thomas Baghott, eſq; whoſe family has reſided in this village upwards of four hundred years.

Sebaſtian Benefield, Margaret profeſſor in Oxford, was a native of this place, and rector of Meyſey Hampton, where he died in the year 1630.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Under the title Terra Eccle de Hereford, in Domeſday, it is thus recorded:

'The biſhop of Hereford holds Preſteberie in 'Chilteham hundred. There are thirty hides. 'In demean are three plow-tillages, and eighteen 'villeins, and five bordars, with nine plow-tillages. 'There is a prieſt, and one radcheniſter with two 'plow-tillages, and one burgage in Wicelcumbe 'paying 18*d.* and eleven [plow-tillages] among 'the ſervi and ancillæ. There are twenty acres 'of meadow, and a wood one mile long, and 'half a mile broad.

'Sevenhantone is a vill adjoining to this manor, '[but] without the hundred. And twenty hides 'out of the thirty abovementioned, are in that 'place; and there are two plow-tillages, and 'twenty-one villeins, with eleven plow-tillages. 'There are three free men having ſeven plow-'tillages with their men.

'Durand holds three of thoſe twenty hides of 'the biſhop.

'The

'The whole manor, in the time of king Edward, 'was worth 12*l.* now 16*l.*

'Robert biſhop of the ſame city [Hereford] 'holds this manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

Soon after the Norman conqueſt, the earls of Glouceſter, by uſurpation, poſſeſſed themſelves of this manor; but Gilbert de Clare reſtored it again to the biſhoprick of Hereford. Peter, biſhop of that ſee, purchaſed a charter of free warren, court leet, and a yearly fair in Preſbury 25 H. 3. and the claim to thoſe privileges was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The biſhoprick had a further confirmation of thoſe privileges 14 R. 2. and had an additional grant of fairs and markets in the 19th year of the ſame reign.

This manor continued in the biſhoprick of Hereford 'till the reformation, after which, ſir Thomas Chamberlain, anceſtor to the family of that name at Maugerſbury, and eminent for his many embaſſies in four ſucceeding reigns, obtained a long leaſe of this manor, and reſided here.

The ſcite of the manor, and lands called Middle Breach, were granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter, 16 Eliz. The ſcite was again granted by the crown to Henry Chilman and Robert Knight, 3 Jac.

Reginald Nicholas, a ſervant to ſir John Chamberlayne, ſon of ſir Thomas, purchaſed a grant of the reverſion of this manor, and ſupplanting his maſter, was lord of it in 1608. Lord Craven is the preſent lord of the manor, and holds a court leet.

The priory of Lanthony had lands in Preſbury, and free warren in them, 15 E. 1. and the tithes were appropriated to that monaſtery 21 R. 2. This eſtate was reputed a manor, and was granted, with the advowſon of the vicarage, to Thomas Gatwick and Anſelme Lamb 5 Mar. The ſame rectory, church, and tithes, then in the tenure of George Badget, alias Badger, were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor, 6 Jac. William Baghott, eſq; was lord of this manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate here, at the beginning of this century, which are now the property of Thomas-Baghott De-la-Bere, of Southam, in the pariſh of Cleeve, eſq.

Robert Preſbury was ſeized of lands in Preſbury 18 E. 2. Thomas Rawlins and his wife levied a fine of lands in Preſbury, Gineton, Charleton, and Cheltenham 9 H. 7. Lands called le Brook, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Cicely Pickerel 4 Eliz. Other lands called Haywood's Plots were granted to ſir Edward Warner the ſame year. Lands in Preſbury, belonging to the biſhop of Hereford, were granted to Chriſtopher Hatton 18 Eliz.

Mr. Caple has a good eſtate in this pariſh, and elſewhere, and a good houſe near the church.

HAMLET. Overton is a ſmall hamlet, lying a little eaſtward of the church, on a riſing ground towards the bottom of the hill. The name is deſcriptive of its ſituation.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 80*l.* a year. Thomas-Baghott De-la-Bere, eſq; is patron and impropriator, and the reverend Kinard Baghott is the preſent incumbent.

There are certain lands called the Barton Demeans, once the property of the biſhop of Hereford, two thirds of the great tithes of which belong to the dean and chapter of Hereford, the remainder to the impropriator. There are alſo other lands called Farm Lands, originally belonging to the priory of Lanthony, of which the impropriator has the tithes. All other tithes of the pariſh, great and ſmall, are equally divided between the impropriator and the vicar.

Mortuaries are due to the impropriator and vicar, according to the worth of the pariſhioners, at the time of their death.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a large aile on the north ſide, and a ſmaller one on the ſouth, with a ſtrong embattled tower at the weſt end. The windows were formerly ornamented with variety of paintings and inſcriptions on the glaſs, all which are now defaced except the letters I. W. which ſtill remain in ſeveral places, and are the initial letters of the name of John Wich, prior of Lanthony.

PRESCOT

IS an extraparochial place, in the upper part of Tewkeſbury hundred, ſix miles eaſtward from Tewkeſbury, two weſtward from Winchcombe, five north from Cheltenham, and ſixteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The little river Tirle waſhes the north part of Preſcot, and after dividing Cleeve from Woolſton, falls into the Carrant.

This place was covered with wood in its antient ſtate, and belonged to the monks of Tewkeſbury, wherefore it was called Prieſt Coed, and by contraction Preſcot, that is, the Prieſt's wood. In the progreſs of cultivation, thoſe woods were aſſarted, and the greater part of the place now lies in paſture lands.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday has not taken notice of it by its preſent name, which very probably it had not obtained when that record was compiled; but the abbey of Tewkeſbury had a grant of courts leet, waifs, and felons goods in Preſcot, from king William the Second, which was proved, and allowed, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt the abbat, 15 E. 1.

It was the conſtant practice of the monks every where to ſeparate and diſtinguiſh their property from that of the laity, and to hold their eſtates as unconnectedly as poſſible. Hence we ſee that where they held lands in fee, they commonly obtained the privileges of courts leet, and free warren; and in many inſtances, eſpecially where they had no concern in the church affairs of the pariſh to which their eſtates belonged, they procured a total ſeparation, and ſo their lands became extraparochial, as in the preſent caſe.

This manor continued in the abbey of Tewkeſbury 'till the diſſolution, when it was granted, together with a wood called Preſcot Coppice, and the tithes, to Walter Compton, 36 H. 8. John Tracy, of Stanway, eſq; was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and John Tracy, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 12 houſes, and about 50 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders. There are now 9 houſes, of which only 6 are inhabited; and the people are decreaſed to 31.

PRESTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, about a mile and a half ſouth-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, ſix north-weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and about nineteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Preſton is evidently Prieſt's town, for the manor antiently belonged to Reinbald the prieſt, who was chancellor to king Edward the Confeſſor.

The lands are chiefly arable, with ſome paſture, and very rich meadows on the ſide of the river Churn, which are occaſionally covered with water, by means of trenches cut from that river, and drained again at pleaſure, whereby vegetation is ſurprizingly ſtrong and early; and theſe works may very well ſerve for a pattern to ſuch as are unacquainted with this branch of huſbandry. A large meadow, (upwards of a hundred acres) called Kingſmead, lies one part of it in this pariſh, the other, and by far the greater, in the pariſh of Cirenceſter, and is in common to both places after the firſt veſture is taken off.

This pariſh is bounded to the weſtward by the Irminſtreet, one of the Roman ways paſſing thro' Cirenceſter; and at the diſtance of two miles from the town, but in this pariſh, there ſtands an antient, rude ſtone, about four feet high, lately painted and mark'd as a mile ſtone. This is vulgarly called Hangman's Stone, becauſe, it is ſaid, a fellow reſting a ſheep thereon, (which he had ſtolen, and tied its legs together for the convenience of carrying it) was there ſtrangled, by the animal's getting its legs round his neck in ſtruggling. But this does not account for the ſtone's being placed there, and conſidering the common propenſity of inventing ſtories to obviate names and things not generally underſtood, I have ſometimes been of opinion that all this is fiction, and that the right name of the ſtone is Hereman-ſtone, ſo called, like the Roman way upon which it ſtands, from Hereman, a ſoldier; and that the ſtone is an antient monument for ſome military perſon.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Under the title Terra Renbaldi Pr'b'i in Domeſday-book, it is thus recorded:

'The ſame Rainbald holds Preſtetune in Cire-

'Edward. There are eight hides taxed beſide
'the demean. In demean are four plow-tillages,
'and ſeven villeins, and ſix bordars, with ſix plow-

'and two ſervi, and three bordars, with one plow-

King

King Henry the Firſt having built the abbey of Cirenceſter, endowed it, among other things, with the eſtates that had before belonged to Reinbald the prieſt, dean of the collegiate church of Cirenceſter; by which means this manor came into the poſſeſſion of the abbey, and ſo continued 'till the diſſolution of religious foundations.

The manor of Preſton, with the advowſon of the vicarage, and the tithes in Northcote, were granted to John Pope 37 H. 8. All which came afterwards to the family of the Maſters of Cirenceſter. William Maſter, eſq; was lord of Preſton in the year 1608, and Thomas Maſter, eſq; deſcended from him, is the preſent lord of the manor.

One meſſuage, and half a yard-land in Preſton and Northcote, belonged to the hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt in Cirenceſter 33 E. 1.

HAMLET. Northcote is a hamlet and an antient manor, thus deſcribed in Domeſday-book:

'The ſame Rainbald holds one hide in Nortcote 'in Cireceſtre hundred. Godric held it in the 'time of king Edward. In demean is one plow-'tillage, and two villeins, and two bordars, with 'two plow-tillages. There are ſix ſervi. It is 'worth 40*s*. This thane could go where he 'would.' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

'Hunfridus the chamberlain holds one hide in 'Norcote in Cireceſtre hundred. Eluuard held it 'for a manor. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and two bordars, with half a plow-tillage. It 'is worth and was worth 40*s*. William held 'theſe two eſtates [Preſtitune and Norcote] of 'Humphry. They who held them could go where 'they pleaſed.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, had his right to court leet in Northcote, allowed in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1.

Anſelm de Gournay held two knights fees in Sodinton and Northcote, value 63*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* of Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter 8 E. 2. as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition taken after the death of the ſaid Gilbert.

Hugh le Diſpencer and Elizabeth his wife, the widow of Giles de Badleſmere, were ſeized of Churncote and Northcote 23 E. 3.

John Coaffe, or Cove, who was found by inquiſition to be an ideot 32 E. 3. died ſeized of this manor and Laſſington 36 E. 3.

Thomas Raleigh died ſeized of Northcote 21 R. 2. and was ſucceeded by Thomas his ſon, who died ſeized of it 6 H. 4. Walter Raleigh, ſon and heir of the laſt Thomas, had livery of the manor, and died 8 H. 5. Edward Rawleigh died ſeized thereof 5 H. 8. George Rawleigh, eſq; died 37 H. 8. ſeized of Northcote and of lands in Preſton, leaving Simon his ſon twenty-two years old, and Leonard a brother, who had a ſon Thomas.

Henry Willoughby had livery of the manor granted to him 4 Eliz. The eſtate was afterwards divided, and part of it belonged to Thomas Maſter, of Cirenceſter, eſq; about the beginning of this century, whoſe deſcendant, Thomas Maſter, eſq; is the preſent proprietor. The other part was veſted in William George, of Cirenceſter, eſq; whoſe widow, the late Mrs. Rebecca Powell, gave it, with other lands, for the ſupport of the yellow ſchool in Cirenceſter, and it now lets for 152*l.* a year.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 150*l.* a year. Thomas Maſter, eſq; is patron and impropriator; and the reverend Mr. Daubeny is the preſent incumbent.

Seventeen acres of meadow and paſture, and fifty of arable, belonged to the glebe, before the common fields were incloſed by act of parliament about the year 1771, when lands were laid out for the impropriator and vicar, in lieu of tithe.

Two ſmall parcels of land, and a rent charge of 3*s.* are given for the uſe of the communion.

The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is ſmall, with a chapel on the north and another on the ſouth ſide, and a low ſtone tower at the weſt end, in which are four bells.

PRESTON

IS a ſmall pariſh, belonging to the hundred of Dudſton and King's-Barton, but ſeparated from it by the intervention of Botloe hundred. It lies upon the river Leden, at the north-weſtern extremity of the county, towards Herefordſhire, about three miles ſouthward from Ledbury, fourteen weſt from Tewkeſbury, and ſeventeen north-weſt from Glouceſter.

This manor antiently belonged to the monks of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, which accounts for the name.

The Herefordſhire method of planting orchards pervails in this and the neighbouring pariſhes, where they make excellent cyder, already obſerved in the accounts of Dimmock, Kempley, Oxenhall, and Pauntley.

At the beginning of this century, there were 13 houſes in the pariſh, and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 2 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. Atkyns. At preſent there are only 10 houſes, and about 40 inhabitants.

PRESTON upon STOUR.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper part of Derhurſt hundred, at the northern extremity of the county towards Warwickſhire, about two miles diſtant ſouthward from Stratford upon Avon, nine north from Campden, and twenty-nine north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The village is ſituated upon the river Stour, and the manor antiently belonged to the monks of Derhurſt, wherefore it was called Preſton [i.e. Prieſt-town] upon Stour, to diſtinguiſh it from two other pariſhes of the name of Preſton in this county.

The pariſh is about two miles long, and one broad. It is divided into two hamlets (Preſton and Alſcot) by the river Stour, which runs thro' it, and falls into the upper Avon about two miles below.

There is a handſome ſeat at Alſcot, which belonged to the late James Weſt, eſq. The houſe is of freeſtone, in the Gothic taſte, and ſtands about half a mile to the left of the road leading from Oxford to Stratford, in the midſt of a park of excellent paſturage. The river Stour meanders before it, through a ſerpentine channel,

—— boaſting as he flows of growing fame,
And wond'rous beauties on his banks diſplay'd —
Of Alſcot's ſwelling lawns, and fretted ſpires,
Of faireſt model, Gothic or Chineſe. *

At this place I ſaw a natural curioſity. It was the ſkulls of two ſtags, with their horns ſo entangled by the animals fighting in the park when alive, that they could never diſengage themſelves, and ſo periſhed with hunger. They now remain not to be ſeparated by human force, without cutting or breaking ſome part of them.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Dennis at Paris holds ten 'hides in Preſton in Derheſt hundred.' D. B. p. 72.

It appears by the terrier of the lands of the priory of Derhurſt, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis, that the prior had the patronage of the church of Preſton, and two plow-tillages, worth 18*s*. a year, and 4*l*. 13*s*. 6*d*. from his plowmen and rents of aſſize, and 17*s*. from his villeins. At the diſſolution of alien priories, this eſtate was given to the abbey of Tewkeſbury by king Henry the Sixth, and confirmed to that abbey 7 E. 4.

After the diſſolution of the abbey of Tewkeſbury, the manor of Preſton, two mills, a meſſuage called the Miller's-houſe, and the fiſhery, were granted to the viſcount Liſle 37 H. 8. The manor was afterwards purchaſed by —— Hunks, who died ſeized thereof 1 Eliz. when livery was granted to Robert Hunks, his ſon and heir. Thomas Hunckes, ſon of Robert, had livery of the manor, rectory, and advowſon, granted to him in the latter part of the reign of queen Elizabeth. Sir Hugh Brawne was lord of the manor in the year 1608. From him it deſcended to his ſon ſir Richard Brawne, who died ſeized of it in 1650.

Thomas Marriot, eſq; married one of the daughters and coheireſſes of ſir Richard Brawne, and in her right, became lord of the manors of Preſton and Alſcot, which, at his death, deſcended to John Marriot, his ſon and heir, who was lord of them when ſir Robert Atkyns wrote his Hiſtory, about the year 1710. The late James Weſt, of Alſcot, eſq; was lord of this manor at the time of his death, in the year 1772.

William Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Preſton upon Stour and Alſcot 11 H. 7.

HAMLET. Alſcot is a hamlet ſeparated from the reſt of the pariſh and county by the river Stour. Here was an antient chapel, now wholly demoliſhed, out of the ruins of which Alſcot houſe is ſaid to have riſen.

William Fravileſworth died ſeized of Little Wormington and Alveſcot 33 E. 3. William Wilicotes held the manor of Alveſcot upon Stour, and had a grant of free warren, 2 H. 4. Sir William Biſhopſhort was ſeized of it in the reign of king Henry the Fifth, and reſided there. It is probable that he left Joan and Margaret his daughters and coheireſſes; for William Wickham and Joan his wife, and ſir William Fennes and Margaret his wife, levied ſeparate fines of the manor of Wilecot, and of lands in Alveſcot, to the uſe of themſelves for life, 31 H. 6.

Thomas Conyers, eſq; levied a fine of the manor of Alveſcot, to William Broom and William Cobcot, 37 H. 6. William Cateſby had livery of this this manor 9 Eliz. It ſoon after paſſed to ſir Hugh Brawne, and deſcended, like Preſton, to the late James Weſt, eſq; who was lord of the manor at the time of his death, in the year 1772.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 8*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron and impropriator; Mr. Green is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation pays 8*l.* a year to Chriſt-church college, Oxford.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, ſtands on a riſing ground. It is ſmall, but neatly fitted up within. The windows are of painted glaſs, put up, at a great expence, by the late Mr. Weſt; but the ſubjects are uncommon for a church. The eaſt window conſiſts of two compartments. One ſeems to repreſent the univerſal dominion of Death, who is the chief figure in front, with Des Dæts B. written at his feet; a young man lies proſtrate behind him; and a military perſon appears on the right, juſt falling backwards, and cloſe by him a female figure leaning on the point of a ſword. On the left, another figure of death driving a carriage, as coachman, attended by three women on foot, and the devil appears behind. In the other compartment, the principal figure is a young man, with an olive-branch in his hand, and behind him ſits a young woman aſleep. Two figures, with each a ſtandard, one inſcribed Ermoet, the other Arbeit, walk before a carriage drawn by unicorns, and a woman ſits on the fore-part of it, holding an olive-branch, whilſt three other female figures attend on foot.

PRINKNASH

IS a ſmall extraparochial place, adjoining to Upton St. Leonard's, in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, diſtant about three miles eaſt from the city of Glouceſter.

The whole eſtate conſiſts of one hundred and ninety acres of meadow and paſture land, and thirty-ſeven of arable. It belonged antiently to the abbats of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, who had a handſome country ſeat, and a park there.

King Edward the Third granted to the abbey of Glouceſter free warren in all their demean lands in this place, in the 28th year of his reign, which privilege was confirmed 1 R. 2. and by the intereſt of the abbat, the place became extraparochial.

This eſtate continued in the abbey of Glouceſter 'till the general diſſolution of monaſteries, and was granted, under limitations, to Edward Bridges and Dorothy Praye, 36 H. 8. and the reverſion of the houſe and park was granted to ſir William Sandys and Thomas Spencer 3 Jac.

The eſtate was ſoon afterwards purchaſed by ſir John Bridgman, chief juſtice of Cheſter, deſcended from an antient family who reſided at Little Dean in this county. John Bridgman, eſq; was lord of the manor of Prinknaſh, when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Antient and preſent State of Glouceſterſhire, and it deſcended to Henry-Toy Bridgman, eſq; of whom it was purchaſed, about the year 1770, by —— Howell, eſq; the preſent proprietor, who reſides there.

This ſeat has lately been very much improved by the preſent proprietor. It is ſituated on an eminence, from whence there is an agreeable proſpect of the city of Glouceſter, and a more extenſive one of the fine country round about it. There was a room in the houſe conſecrated for a chapel, in the year 1629, and dedicated to St. Peter.

PUCKLECHURCH.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of its own name, ſeven miles weſt from Marſhfield, ſeven eaſt from Briſtol, five ſouth from Chipping-Sodbury, and thirty-four ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is about three miles in length, and two in breadth; bounded by Durham on the eaſt, Siſton on the weſt, by Weſterleigh on the north, and by Abſton and Wick on the ſouth. It enjoys a fine healthy air, being pleaſantly ſituated on an eaſy elevation in the vale. The brook Filtham divides it from Durham, but the Boyd does not touch on its borders, as ſome topographers have affirmed.

The name of the village was antiently written Pulcrecerce, and ſignifies the ſtately and magnificent church, which was given it, moſt probably, from its agreeable ſituation, and the beauty of that building. Camden calls it Villa Regia, becauſe it had been the reſidence of ſome of the Saxon kings; and there is a houſe now ſtanding on a riſing ground, in the way to Durham, ſaid to be built on the very ſcite of the palace of Edmund king of the Weſt Saxons, which by the ruins in hillocks ſtill remaining, ſeems to have been of large extent.

It was cuſtomary, in early ages, to celebrate yearly the feaſt of St. Auguſtin, who firſt preached the goſpel to the Anglo-Saxons; and as the above king Edmund was ſolemnizing this feaſt at his palace here, in the year 946, he took notice of one Leolf, a notorious robber, who, notwithſtanding he had been baniſhed for his villainies, had the aſſurance to ſeat himſelf at one of the tables in the hall, where the king was at dinner. This villain attacked Leon, the king's ſewer, (who endeavoured to apprehend him) with a naked dagger, which the king ſeeing, flew upon Leolf himſelf, and in the ſcuffle was ſtabbed in the breaſt, ſo that he expired upon the body of his murderer; but the villain made his eſcape in the confuſion, as the gueſts were drunk when the fray happened. And it is ſaid, the king's remains were depoſited in the abbey of Glaſtonbury.

There was formerly a weekly market held here on Wedneſday, now long ſince diſuſed, and perhaps never much uſed; but it appears by the antient court papers, that the tenants have been amerced for not coming to the mercat here, for buying and ſelling elſewhere, for uſury, for taking the firſt tonſure to the prejudice of the lord, for ſueing a tenant of the lord's court by the king's writ, for converſing with thoſe who had the leproſy, for marrying without the lord's licence, &c. all which ſerve to ſhew the great power which the lords of ſome manors exerciſed over their tenants, under the feudal ſyſtem.

The antient roads from London and Oxford to Briſtol paſſed through this place, and a turnpike-road from Chriſtian Malford in Wiltſhire, has lately been carried through it to Mangotsfield near Briſtol.

There are alſo ſome veſtiges remaining of an antient road leading from Bath, the Aqua Solis of the Romans, to the Trajectus at Oldbury; but it has been long ſince diſuſed, and ſtopt up in many places, ſince that over the hills has been opened.

This pariſh conſiſts chiefly of paſture ground, but, below the ſurface, it is full of a very bituminous kind of coal, which all the country abounds with, from Toghill and Lanſdown weſtward, as far as the city of Briſtol; and moſt of the poor inhabitants are employ'd in the coal-mines, and in a ſmall manufacture of felt-hats carried on here, and in ſome of the neighbouring villages. Here are quarries alſo of a coarſe kind of black marble, uſed for chimney-pieces and grave-ſtones; and plenty of marle, which in ſome places would be highly valued, but the uſe of it is here intirely neglected. The waters of Holy-well and St. Bridget's-well in this pariſh, were formerly in repute for curing ſore eyes, and for their virtues in diet-drinks; but they really poſſeſs no others than are common to pure ſpring water in general.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

King Edmund coming to an untimely end at this place, as already related, was buried in the abbey of Glaſtonbury, wherefore this manor was afterwards beſtowed on that houſe, to ſing maſſes for the repoſe of his ſoul; and accordingly in the book of the general ſurvey, I find it thus recorded:

'Saint Mary of Glaſtingeberie holds Pulcrecerce 'in Pulcrecerce hundred. There are twenty hides. 'In demean are ſix plow-tillages, and twenty-'three villeins, and eight bordars, with eighteen 'plow-tillages. There are ten ſervi, and ſix men 'pay ninety bars of iron, and in Glouceſter is 'one burgage paying 5 d. and two free men [coli-'berti] paying 34 d. and there are three foreigners '[fracig.] and two mills of 100 d. [rent]. There 'are ſixty acres of meadow, and a wood half a 'mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth '20 l. and is now worth 30 l.' Dom. Book, p. 71.

At that time the manor was much more extenſive than it is at preſent, and included Weſterleigh, and Abſton and Wick. Under the latter of theſe pariſhes, it has been ſhewn, that the monks of Glaſtonbury quitted their right to this large manor, and to the advowſon of the church, to Joceline the biſhop of Bath and Wells, 7 Joh. on condition that he would reſtore to them the election of their own abbat.

A good part of this pariſh, when it was ſo extenſive, (probably the hamlet of Wick) was within the foreſt of Kingſwood, and the biſhop of Bath procured it to be diſaforeſted 12 H. 3. The biſhop alſo purchaſed a charter of free warren in Pucklechurch, 41 H. 3.

The hundred and manor of Pucklechurch remained annexed to the ſee of Bath and Wells, 'till king Edward the Sixth, in the ſecond year of his reign, took them, with the manor of Weſterleigh, and others, by exchange, and granted the management of the former to ſir Nicholas Pointz; but as they produced no profits, the king's commiſſioners recommended the letting of them on a ſmall annual rent. They were, however, by letters patent, bearing date the 25th of June, in the ſeventh year of his reign, granted to William earl of Pembroke, to hold to the ſaid earl, his heirs and aſſigns, of the king in capite, with an exception only of the lands called Pucklechurch park; from whom they paſſed by ſale to ſir Maurice Dennys, knight; and from him to the family of Codrington, who ſold them to another branch of the Denniſes. From them Mr. William Hallidaie purchaſed them, and with his daughter they went in marriage to Edward Hungerford, of Corſham in Wilts, eſq. From this family they paſſed with an heireſs, to Robert Sutton, lord Lexington, whoſe only daughter carried them to John Manners, duke of Rutland; from whom, in 1717, they were transferred by purchaſe to ſir Edward Bouverie, of Longford-caſtle in Wilts, baronet; and from him, by deviſe, to his brother Jacob viſcount Folkſtone, grandfather of the earl of of Radnor,[x] the preſent poſſeſſor of the hundred and manor of Pucklechurch.

William de Cheltenham was ſeized of lands in Pucclechurch, 16, 33, & 40 E. 3. William Gatelin died ſeized of lands in Pucclechurch 20 E. 3. Sir John Bar died ſeized of lands in Pucclechurch 22 E. 4. Richard Forſter, and Thomas Moor and his wife levied a fine of lands in Pucclechurch 1 & 6 H. 7. Giles Cotherington died ſeized of the capital meſſuage and other lands in Pucclechurch 20 Eliz. of which meſſuage livery was granted, the ſame year, to his ſon Richard; and of the lands to Francis, another of his ſons.

A capital houſe and eſtate at Pucclechurch, formerly belonging to William Dennis, eſq; is now the property of John-Hugh Smyth, eſq; (eldeſt ſon of ſir Jarrit Smyth, bart.) in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and ſole heireſs of Henry Woolnough, eſq; who purchaſed them of Mrs. Mary Butler, eldeſt daughter and coheir of William Dennis, eſq. There is a large ſcutcheon, in the front of this houſe, with the following arms carved in ſtone: Quarterly of eight. 1. Gules, a bend ingrailed azure, between three leopards faces Or, jeſſant fleurs de lis of the ſecond, for Dennis. —2. Or, within a bordure . . . . . a raven proper, for Corbet.—3. Argent, on a chief gules three beſants, for Ruſſel.—4. Or, five fuſils in feſs azure, for Pennington.—5. Lozengy Or and azure, a chevron gules, for Gorges.—6. Argent, on a bend gules three martlets Or, winged vert, for Danvers.—7. Two bars, on a chief three ſtags heads caboſhed.—8. Ermine, three roſes gules, 2 & 1, for Still.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year, including the churches of Weſterleigh and Abſton. Ralph Ergam, biſhop of Bath, gave the advowſon and impropriation to the chapter of Wells, in the year 1388; and the dean and chapter of that church are patrons and impropriators, and the reverend Walter Swayne is the preſent incumbent.

Fifty acres belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the martyr, is ſituate on an eminence, and ſeen at a great diſtance, It has an aile on the north ſide, and a tower at the weſt end, with pinnacles.

In Memoriam Iohanis Dennis Armigeri, primogeniti et heredis Henrici Dennis Armigeri, qui 26 die Junij, Anno Domini 1638, ex hac vita deceſſit, poſtquam ex uxore ſua Margaretâ, Dni. Georgij Speake, de Whightackington in comitatu Somerſet.

[x] This family (whoſe name has been variouſly written, De la Bouverie, Des Bouveries, Des Bouverie, but now eſtabliſhed by act of parliament Bouverie) is of antient and honourable extraction in the Low Countries, and quartered, with their own original arms, thoſe of Melun and Wallincourt, more of which may be ſeen in Collins's Peerage, V. 6, p. 413. Ed. 1768. whence the following ſhort account is extracted.

The firſt of this name who appears to be ſettled in England was Lawrence Des Bouveries, a younger ſon of Le Sieur Des Bouveries, of the Chateau de Bouverie, near Liſle in Flanders. He fled on account of religion to Franckfort on the Maine, where he married his wife Barbara, and coming with her to England, ſettled at Canterbury. By her he had five ſons, Edward, John, Jacob, Valentine, and Samuel; and three daughters, Leah, Elizabeth, and Jane.

Edward Des Bouveries married Mary, daughter of Jaſper de Fourneſtraux, by Mary Tiberkin, whoſe father was burnt in Germany for the proteſtant religion. He had by her one ſon, Edward Des Bouverie, and three daughters.

This Edward Des Bouverie was born in Nov. 1621, and being an eminent Turkey merchant, acquired a very ample fortune. He was knighted by king James II. and died in 1694. He married Anne, daughter of Jacob Forterye of London, merchant, by whom he had ſeven ſons, and four daughters.

William, the eldeſt ſon, was created a baronet Feb. 19, 1713-14. He married firſt, Mary, daughter of James Edwards, of London, eſq; and by her had a ſon Edward, who died young. His ſecond wife was Anne, daughter and ſole heir of David Urry, of London, eſq; by whom he had ſeveral children, whereof only the following ſurvived him, viz. ſir Edward, his ſucceſſor; Jacob, ſucceſſor to his brother; Chriſtopher, who died unmarried; Jane, wedded to John-Allen Puſey, of Puſey, in Berks, eſq; and Anne, who died unmarried.

Sir Edward Des Bouverie, baronet, ſucceeded his father. He married Mary, daughter of John Smith, of Beaufort-buildings in London, eſq; and died without iſſue.

He was ſucceeded in dignity and eſtate by his only ſurviving brother, ſir Jacob Bouverie, baronet, who by letters patent, dated June 29, 1747, was created lord Longford, baron of Longford, in the county of Wilts, and viſcount Folkſtone, of Folkſtone in the county of Kent. His lordſhip was twice married; firſt to Mary, daughter and ſole heir of Bartholomew Clarke, of Hardingſtone, in the county of Northampton, eſq; and ſecondly, to the honourable Elizabeth Marſham, eldeſt daughter of Robert lord Romney. By the firſt lady he had ſeveral children, who died young, beſides two ſons, and four daughters, who ſurvived him, viz. William, (the late earl of Radnor) the honourable Edward Bouverie, married (1764) to Harriot, only daughter of the late ſir Everard Fawkener, kn^{t}. Anne, married (1761) to the honourable and reverend George Talbot, third ſurviving ſon to William lord Talbot, lord high chancellor of Great Britain; Mary, wedded to Anthony Aſhley, earl of Shafteſbury; Charlotte, and Harriot. His lordſhip, (who by his ſecond lady had two ſons, Jacob, who died an infant; and Philip, born Oct. 8, 1746) departed this life Feb. 17, 1761; and was ſucceeded in honours and eſtate by his eldeſt ſon

William, then viſcount Folkſtone. His lordſhip married firſt, Harriot, only child of ſir Mark-Stuart Pleydell, of Coleſhill, baronet, by whom he had iſſue one ſon named Jacob; ſecondly, Rebecca, daughter of John Alleyne, of Barbadoes, eſq; by whom he had iſſue four ſons, viz. William-Henry, Bartholomew, Younge, who died an infant, and Edward; and two daughters, who alſo died infants. He married thirdly, Anne, relict of Anthony Duncombe, lord Feverſham. By letters patent, dated Sept. 25, 1765, his lordſhip was advanced to the higher dignity of earl of the county of Radnor, with the additional honour of baron Pleydell-Bouverie, of Coleſhill in the county of Berks; and dying in the year 1776, was ſucceeded in honour and eſtate by his eldeſt ſon Jacob, now earl of Radnor.

The arms of this noble earl are, Quarterly, firſt and fourth, Party per feſs Or and argent, an eagle diſplay'd with two heads ſable, being the arms of Bouverie by Engliſh grant; ſecond and third, Gules, a bend vaire; the original arms of Des Bouverie, as certified from the herald's office at Bruſſels. — The Creſt. On a wreath, a demi-eagle diſplay'd with two heads, ſable; beaked and ducally gorged Or, and charged on the breaſt with a croſs croſlet argent.— Supporters. On each ſide, an eagle regardant ſable; gorged with a ducal coronet Or, and charged on the breaſt with a croſs croſlet argent. —Motto. PATRIA CARA, CARIOR LIBERTAS. Chief Seat, At Longford-caſtle in Wiltſhire, three miles from Saliſbury.

Benefactions.

Mr. Prig gave 20*l.* to buy communion plate.

Mr. William Hart, clerk, gave 20*s.* yearly for two ſermons.

Henry Berrow, vicar of this church, gave 500*l.* to truſtees for teaching twenty poor children to read and write. With this money the truſtees purchaſed land in the pariſh of Rangeworthy, which lets at 24*l.* a year; a fifth part whereof having been ſettled by the donor, under the ſame truſt, for the better ſupport of the charity ſchool in the pariſh of Abſton and Wick.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 60 houſes, and about 250 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 8. But upon examination of the pariſh regiſter, I find that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709, incluſive, there were 118 baptiſms, and 76 burials. In a like ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769, incluſive, there were 129 baptiſms, and 84 burials. And by a careful reckoning of a gentleman in the pariſh, in the year 1772, there appear'd to be 72 houſes, 92 families, and about 460 inhabitants. The proportion between the annual burials and the inhabitants, is nearly as 1 to 55, which ſhews that the place is remarkably healthy.

QUEDGLEY

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Whitſtone, ſeven miles north-weſt from Stroud, ſix north-eaſtward from Newnham, and about three ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts principally of rich meadow and paſture land, with orcharding. The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Briſtol leads through it, and it is bounded on the weſt by the river Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

No ſuch name as Quedgley occurs in Domeſday-book; it may therefore be ſuppoſed, that it was included in the account of ſome neighbouring and more conſiderable pariſh, at the time when that record was compiled.

Margaret de Bohun gave twenty quarter acres in Quedgley to the priory of Lanthony, and the grant was confirmed 1 Joh. The prior proved his right to court leet and waifs in Quedgley, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him 15 E. 1. and he purchaſed a charter of free warren there, in the 21ſt year of the ſame reign. The manor continued in that houſe 'till the diſſolution, after which it was granted to Arthur Porter, 32 H. 8.

Sir William Dodington purchaſed it, and had a grant of common of paſture, and of lands in Quedgley, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, 7 Eliz. He was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and built the parſonage houſe. He was ſucceeded by William Dodington, eſq; his ſon and heir, who murdered his mother by running her through the body with his ſword; wherefore the manor came to his two nieces, coheireſſes, one of whom was married to Thomas Hobbey, eſq; the other to lord Brooke, who, in her right, was lord of the manor and patron of the church. The manor belonged to Mrs. Anne Chapman about the beginning of this century; and it came, not long after, to Thomas Whorwood, eſq; who was proprietor of it about the year 1738, from whom it was purchaſed, and Robert-Gorges-Dobyns Yate, of Bromſborow, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate in the pariſh. His arms are given under Bromſborow.

The knights templers were ſeized of lands in Quedgley 2 E. 3.

John Hanborow, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of the third part of lands in Quedgley, 2 E. 4. and John Garrine and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Quedgley the ſame year. Another fine of lands in Quedgley was levied by William Bruges and Alice his wife, 21 H. 7. Lands called Rogers, in Quedgley, were granted to John Arnold 33 H. 8.

Netheruge, was a conſiderable place in this pariſh; for John the prior, and the convent of Lanthony, on the 8th of June, 8 H. 5. granted to James le Walſſhe, or Waleys, ſon and heir of Giles le Walſſhe, their lands in Netheruge in Quedgley, to be held by the ſervice of one knight's fee, paying 100*s*. for a relief, and ſubject to the yearly payment of one pound of pepper at Michaelmas, and doing ſuit twice in the year at the priory court at Lanthony. William le Walſſhe, ſon and heir of another James le Walſſhe, on the eve of St. Matthew, 1511, after having done homage to Edmond Foreſt, the prior, and paid 100*s*. for a relief, was admitted a free tenant of the land called Netheruge, by the ſervice of one knight's fee.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 60*l*. a year. The duke of Mancheſter is patron, and Mr. Palmer is the preſent incumbent.

Earl Milo gave all the tithes of this church to the priory of Lanthony, in the year 1137, and the priory continued poſſeſſed of them 'till the diſſolution. Lord Brooke, anceſtor to the preſent patron, created a truſt to certain perſons for leaſing the great tithes to the curate, and they accordingly granted him a leaſe for 70 years. Before this grant, the incumbent had only the privy tithes, and a ſmall piece of glebe. The great tithes are ſubject to the payment of a fee farm rent of 12*l*. a year to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. James, and has a handſome ſpire on the ſouth ſide, in which are five bells, and a clock.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 34 houſes in the pariſh, and about 170 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. The preſent number of families is 33, and of inhabitants exactly 166.

QUEINTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the Vale, in the upper part of Kiftſgate hundred, about ſix miles diſtant ſouth from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickſhire, five north from Campden, and twenty eight north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is about three miles long, and two broad, conſiſting of good paſture and rich arable land; and the common fields have lately been incloſed by act of parliament.

The etymology of Queinton, as applied to this place, is very doubtful. Sir Robert Atkyns aſſerts, that this town is ſo called from belonging to a nunnery; for Queen (he ſhould have ſaid Lpen) in the Saxon language ſignifies a woman. But he has not ſhewn when it was that the manor belonged to a nunnery. If that was ever the caſe, it muſt have been prior to the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor, for then, as well as in the Conqueror's reign, the manor of Quenintune, in Ceolflede hundred, was in lay hands.

Meen-hill ſtands particularly conſpicuous, in the midſt of the vale, one part in this pariſh, the other in Mickleton. Upon the top of this hill is a very large camp, of double intrenchments, ſuppoſed to have been thrown up and occupied by the Weſt Saxons, about the time when the engagement happened between them and the Mercians, at Barrington, near Campden. And the hill itſelf is thought to derive its name from that army, the greater part of which was compoſed of the Iceni Magni, a people that inhabited Hampſhire, and were deſcended from the Gauls who dwelt on the river Mayne, and were there called Cenæ Manni. Theſe people left their name to many places in Hampſhire, as Meanſborow, Meanſtoke, Eaſt-Mean, Weſt-Mean; and ſo in like manner to this hill.

There were two ſtones lately found within the camp, about a foot each in diameter, one convex, the other concave, and a hole through the center of both; whence I conclude they were uſed for grinding corn, and left there perhaps by the army that occupied the camp; but the iron that ſerved to turn the upper ſtone could not be found, as in all probability the ruſt had totally conſumed it in the long ſeries of time of its lying there.

Mr. Drayton has celebrated this hill in his well-known Poly-Olbion, where, to check the inſolence and pride of Breedon-hill, he makes the vale addreſs him in the following antiquated alexandrines:

Of all the hills I know, let Mein thy pattern bee,
Who though his ſite bee ſuch as ſeems to equal thee,
And deſtitute of nought that Arden him can yeeld,
Nor of the 'ſpecial grace of many a goodly field;
Nor of deer Clifford's ſeat, (the place of health and ſport)
Which many a time hath been the muſe's quiet port:
Yet brags not he of that, nor of himſelf eſteems
The more for his faire ſite; but richer than he ſeemes,
Clad in a gown of graſſe, ſo ſoft and wondrous warm
As him the ſummer's heat, nor winter's cold can harme.

And the poet does no more than juſtice to this diſtinguiſhed ſpot, which is exceedingly fertile and beautiful. By Clifford's ſeat, he meant a handſome ſeat at Clifford Chambers, an adjoining village, then the reſidence of the Rainsfords.

There is no kind of manufacture carried on at Queinton, but the women and children are chiefly employ'd in ſpinning linen-yarn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following is a literal tranſlation from Domeſday-book, under the title of the lands of Hugh de Grentemaiſnil:

'The ſame Hugh holds Quenintune in Ceol-'flede hundred. There are two hides. A thane 'held them. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and five villeins, and one bordar, with three 'plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, and one 'ancilla. They [i. e. Pebeworde, Mereſtune, and 'this Quenintune] were worth 7*l.* now 4*l.*'

'The ſame Hugh holds Quenintune, and Roger 'holds it of him. There are twelve hides. Bald-'win held it in the time of king Edward. In 'demean are three plow-tillages, and ſeventeen 'villeins, and two bordars, with nine plow-tillages. 'There are ſix ſervi. It was worth 7*l.* now 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

Thus it appears that there were two manors in Queinton at the time of the ſurvey. Robert Marmion attended the duke of Normandy in his conqueſt of England, and was well rewarded by him with the caſtle of Tamworth in Staffordſhire, in which place the nuns of the abbey of Poleſworth had great poſſeſſions. He had alſo the manor of Queinton given to him. This Robert was ſucceeded by Robert his ſon. Another Robert, ſon of the laſt, was the next heir; he was juſtice itinerant in Warwickſhire, and died 2 H. 3. He had two ſons by different wives, both named Robert; the youngeſt ſucceeded him in the manor of Queinton. He married Amice, the daughter of Jernegan Fitz-Hugh, and joined with the rebellious barons againſt king Henry the Third.

This

This Robert Marmion took away the abbey of Polesworth from the nuns of that place, and drove them to Oldbury. But when Marmion was in bed at Tamworth, says the legendary story about that matter, Saint Edyth, to whom the abbey was dedicated, appeared to him with her crosier, and told him, that unless he restored the abbey to the nuns, he should have an evil death, and go to hell; and then striking him on the side with the crosier, she vanished. Upon which, under great anxiety, he confessed to a priest, restored the abbey immediately, and was well.

He left issue William, who married Lora, the daughter and heir of Roese de Dover. John Marmion was son and heir of William. He obtained a charter of free warren in Over Queinton and Nether Queinton, 20 E. 1. and died 16 E. 2. but he gave this manor to his son John, and his wife Elizabeth, ten years before his death, and so, says the record, Nichil tenet in balliva mea. Esch. He married Maud, the daughter of the lord Furnival, and left John his son and heir, who held Queinton of the earl of Lancaster by one knight's fee, and died 9 E. 3.

Robert, son and heir of the last John, died without issue, leaving two sisters; Joan, married to sir John Burnack, and Avice, married to sir John Grey of Rotherfield. Robert settled the manor of Queinton on the said sir John Grey and his wife Avice, and the heirs of their bodies, on condition that their issue should take the name of Marmion.

Maud the widow of John Marmion levied a fine of the manor of Queinton to the use of herself for life, the remainder to John de Grey of Roderfield and Avice his wife in special taille, the remainder to John de Burnack and Jean his wife in special taille, 14 E. 3.

Sir John Grey died seized of Queinton 33 E. 3. and was succeeded by John his son, who in observance of the marriage settlement, assumed the name of Marmion. But he dying without issue, it went to Robert Marmion his brother; who married Lora, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Herbert de St. Quintine, and left Elizabeth, an only daughter and heiress, married to sir Henry Fitz-Hugh, whom she survived, and died seized of the manor of Queinton 6 H. 6.

Sir William Fitz-Hugh, son of sir Henry, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Queinton 8 H. 6. Sir John Burg died seized thereof 11 E. 4. and some time afterwards the manor was vested in Magdalen college, Oxford, to which it still belongs.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Thomas Andrews and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Queinton to Edmond Dalby 1 E. 6.

The editor of the Magna Britannia says, Here was once a preceptory of the knights templers; but that is a mistake, which was occasioned by confounding this parish with that of Quenington, near Fairford, where the knights hospitallers had a preceptory.

HAMLETS. There are six hamlets in this parish.

1. Upper Queinton. There was formerly a considerable family in this hamlet, of the name of Rutter, which have severely felt the vicissitudes of fortune, and are now reduced. Michael Rutter of Queinton paid 300*l.* composition for his estate, on account of the part he took with the king in the great civil wars. Some part of this hamlet claims to be toll free, as belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster.

2. Lower Queinton, of which there is nothing further observable, except that the church stands in this hamlet.

3. Adminton, or Adderminton, or more antiently Edelminton. Among the lands belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, in Domesday-book, are the following particulars, which sir Robert Atkyns overlook'd:

'The same church [of Wincelcumbe] holds 'Edelmintone in Celsiede hundred. There are 'three hides and a half. In demean are two 'plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, with six plow-'tillages. There are four servi, and two ancillæ. 'It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The abbey purchased a charter of free warren in Adelminton 35 H. 3. which privilege was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The abbat of Winchcombe assigned this manor to the abbey of St. Ebrulf in Normandy 12 E. 2. but it reverted to the monks of Winchcombe, who were the proprietors of this manor 'till their house was dissolved. Tithes in Adelminton, which belonged to that abbey, were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. The manor and chapel of Adminton, and lands called Wind-Cerney, &c. formerly belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to William Brent, alias Burston, 7 E. 6. Earl Brooke is the present lord of this manor, and has a large house here.

John Whitchurch granted ten librats of land in Adelminton to the abbey of Evesham, 6 E. 2.

4. Radbrook. John de Hirford died seized of Radbrook, and of lands in Over Queinton and Nether Queinton, 15 E. 3. Sir William Clopton died seized of Radbrook 7 H. 5. Roger Lingen, esq; was seized of an estate in Radbrook, which was sequestered in the great rebellion, and restored for a composition of 283*l.* Robert Burton, esq; whose family name was Lingen, is the proprietor of this estate, and has a good house here. He assumed the name of Burton from his mother, who was sole heiress of a family of that name in Shropshire, as appears by a memorial for her in Queinton church. His arms are blazoned under Monuments and Inscriptions.

John Riland, son of Richard Riland of Radbrook, was fellow of Magdalen college Oxford, archdeacon of Coventry, and rector of Birmingham in Warwickshire. He was an orthodox divine, and and publiſhed ſeveral religious diſcourſes; and was buried in Birmingham church 1672.

5. Wincot, ſo called becauſe Wenric was lord of it. Part of this hamlet is in Clifford Chambers, and part in this pariſh. The latter lay in the old hundred of Witelai, now comprized in that of Kiftſgate, as appears by the following extract:

'William the chamberlain holds Wenecote in 'Witelai hundred. Wenric held it in the time 'king Edward. There are three hides. In demean 'are three plow-tillages, and two villeins, and two 'bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are four 'ſervi. It is worth and was worth 4*l*. This 'manor is taxed.' Domeſday-book, p. 74.

Richard Wincote levied a fine of this manor 9 H. 7. George Throgmorton died ſeized of it 6 E. 6. and Robert his ſon had livery thereof the following year. Livery of one part of Wincot, but of which it is not ſaid in the record, was granted to William Barnes 9 Eliz. This manor and eſtate belonged afterwards to Mr. Robert Loggin, late chancellor of the dioceſe of Sarum; but they are now, by purchaſe, the property of Robert Burton, eſq; of Radbrook, abovementioned. There is only one houſe in this hamlet, which, as well as the land, is in two pariſhes; one part in Clifford, the other in Queinton.

6. Mæon, or Meen, whoſe etymology is given in the former part of this pariſh. This was antiently a member of the manor of Longborough, as appears by the Domeſday account of that manor. King John granted this manor to William de Gamaſh. John de Pembroke held two parts of the manor of Meen, and Walter de Pedwardine held the third part, and their claim was allow'd in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. This manor afterwards came to the Grevills. William Grevill of Campden was ſeized thereof, as a member of the manor of Milecot in Warwickſhire, 3 H. 4. John Grevill died ſeized thereof 1 E. 6. and livery was granted to Edward Grevill, ſon of John, 2 E. 6. Lewis Grevill, of Weſton upon Avon and Milcot, had livery of this manor granted to him 1 Eliz. It is now the eſtate of Mr. Noel.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 90*l*. a year, before the pariſh was incloſed by parliamentary authority in 1772; but it is conſiderably improved by incloſing. Robert Marmion gave the advowſon of the church of Queinton to the nuns of Poleſworth 4 Steph. to whom the tithes were appropriated 12 R. 2. At the diſſolution of religious foundations, the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Queinton, late belonging to the nunnery of Poleſworth, were granted to the dean and chapter of Worceſter 33 H. 8. and were again confirmed to the church of Worceſter 6 Jac. The dean and chapter of Worceſter are patrons, and Mr. Taylor is the preſent incumbent.

Ninety-eight acres of arable land, and five of meadow, belonged to the glebe before the incloſing; but the vicar hath other lands ſet out by the commiſſioners in lieu of tithe; and he receives beſides, from the impropriator, four quarters of wheat, four of barley, and 45*l*. in money.

The church is large, with an aile on each ſide of the nave, and a handſome ſpire at the weſt end, with ſix bells; and according to biſhop Benſon's book, it is dedicated to Saint Swithin. There is a gallery at the weſt end of the church.

On

On a ſmall marble monument in the chancel,

To the pious Memory of the Rev. Robert Loggin Chancellor of Sarum, and Vicar of Adderbury, who departed this Life Nov. 22, 1728, in the 66th Year of his Age. Mrs Joyce Loggin cauſed this Stone to be erected.

In the chancel,

In Memory of the worthy, pious, and benevolent Mr. Michael Corbett, of Upper Queinton, who departed this Life March the 27th, 1763, Aged 70 Years. Who did, by his Will and Teſtament, give to three Truſtees the Sum of 100*l.* to be by them laid out in Land, or ſet out on good Security, and the Rents, Intereſt, and Profits thereof to be by the Truſtees diſtributed amongſt the Poor of Upper and Lower Queinton, yearly and every Year for ever.

Sir Thomas Overbury, of Bourton on the Hill, was buried in this church in 1680. And there is a raiſed tomb in the church, with the figure of a man in armour, for Thomas le Rous, who was buried here in 1499. He was a deſcendant of the le Rouſes, an eminent family, who reſided at Ragley in Warwickſhire.

Benefactions.

There is a donation to the church of 3*l.* a year in land; but the donor is careleſſly forgotten.

Mrs. Davis gave 100*l.* to the poor. And Mr. Michael Corbet gave 100*l.* to the ſame uſe, in 1763.

There were 120 houſes, and about 500 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 32 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 13. Atkyns. But having examined the regiſter, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 129 baptiſms, and 98 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 221, the burials 103; and the inhabitants are now about 547.

The vicinity of Lark Stoke to this pariſh occaſioned ſir Robert Atkyns to ſubjoin an account of it to Queinton; and as it eſcaped my notice 'till it was too late to inſert it under the proper letter, I muſt place it here in like manner.

LARK STOKE.

THIS place is a hamlet in the pariſh of Illmington, or Illmingdon, in Warwickſhire, but the hamlet itſelf lies in Glouceſterſhire.

It is mentioned as a diſtinct manor in the antient ſurvey, of which the following is a tranſlation:

'The ſame church [St. Mary of Eveſham] holds 'Stoch in Widelei hundred. There are two hides, 'and one plow-tillage in demean, and ſeven 'villeins, and two bordars, with two plow-tillages. 'There is one ſervus. It is and was worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The manor antiently belonged to the family of the Biſhopſtones. John de Biſhopſdon died ſeized of Lark Stoke, with free warren therein, 13 E. 2. Sir William Biſhopſtone levied a fine of this manor to the uſe of divers perſons for life, the remainder to himſelf, and the heirs of his body by Philippa his wife, 11 H. 7. John de Vall was ſeized of lands in Larkſtoke and Queinton 36 E. 3.

This eſtate was afterwards in the poſſeſſion of the Brents, who were ſeized of it when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of Glouceſterſhire, in which he has fallen into ſeveral miſtakes concerning it, and has placed the abſtract from Domeſday under Stoke Archer, in the pariſh of Cleeve.

Lark Stoke has been lately purchaſed by John Hart, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate there.

QUENINGTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, about two miles northward from Fairford, five north-weſtward from Leachlade, eight north-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, and twenty-ſix, through the laſt mentioned town, from Glouceſter.

The greater part of the pariſh conſiſts of arable land, but there is a conſiderable proportion of good meadow and paſture on the banks of the Coln, which bounds it on the eaſt and ſouth-eaſt ſides next to Hatherop and Fairford.

Quenington ſeems to be nothing more than a different manner of writing Coln-ing-ton, or Conington, for the letter l is dropt in pronunciation. It is deſcriptive of the ſituation of the village, and ſignifies the town upon the river Coln.

The knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem had a preceptory here, ſurrounded with a moat, now in a good meaſure filled up; but part of the antient building, with a croſs at the top of it, and an old gateway on the eaſt ſide, which belonged to it, are yet remaining, and conſtitute the Court, or manor houſe, occupied by the tenant of the principal farm.

The church and the principal houſes are ſituated on the bourn, where is a mill for making of writing paper, which furniſhes employment for a few hands; but the bulk of the people are engaged in huſbandry buſineſs.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Laci holds Quenintone in Brict-'woldeſberg hundred. There are eight hides. 'Three free men, Dodo, and another Dodo, and 'Aluuold held it for three manors, and could go 'where they pleaſed, and paid tax. There are 'three plow-tillages in demean, and twenty villeins, 'and ſeven bordars, and a prieſt, and a bailiff. 'They have among them all twelve plow-tillages; 'and two radcheniſters, with one plow-tillage. 'There are twelve ſervi, and two mills of 20*s*. '[rent,] and ten acres of meadow. There is a 'burgage in Glouceſter which pays four ſhoes, '[ſoccos,] and a ſmith [faber] paying 2*s*. It was 'worth 8*l*. now 10*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Walter de Laci came into England with William the Firſt, and by him was rewarded with this and many other manors in Glouceſterſhire. His ſon Roger de Laci ſucceeding him, was lord of this manor, and of nineteen others in Glouceſterſhire, when Domeſday was compiled.

Agnes Laci, William de Poictou, and the counteſs Cecilia, founded a preceptory for the knights-hoſpitallers in this place, and endowed it with their lands here. And Mabilia, the wife of William de Mara, and Robert de Mara,[y] gave them their demeans in Camſden, belonging to Quenington. And William de Lega[r] alſo gave many lands and tenements belonging to Quenington, to the knights of the ſame preceptory.

The prior of the hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem, reſiding in England, was ſeized of the manor of Quenington 9 E. 1. as appears by the ſheriff's liſt of all the vills in the county, with their reſpective lords, returned into the exchequer in that year.

The preceptory at Quenington, lately belonging to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John at Jeruſalem, was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton, 37 H. 8.

William Kingſton, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, from whom it paſſed, thro' ſeveral hands, 'till it came into the poſſeſſion of Henry Powle, eſq; whoſe only daughter and heireſs Catherine, carried it by marriage to Henry Ireton, eſq; who, in her right, was lord of the manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. Brooke Forreſter, eſq; was afterwards lord of it, from whom it paſſed to Humphry-Mackworth Praed, eſq; who ſold it to Samuel Blackwell, of Williamſtrip, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor.

Court-farm belonged to the preceptory of St. John at Jeruſalem, and is therefore tithe free. It is now the property of the lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 140*l*. a year. Samuel Blackwell, eſq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Rice is the preſent incumbent. The rector pays 13*s*. 4*d*. a year to the patron.

Walter de Lacy, (or according to ſome, Hugh de Lacy) gave the church of Quenington, a yard land, and the tithes of the vill, to the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter, and the grant was confirmed by king Stephen, at the requeſt of Walter de Lacy, abbat of Glouceſter, in the year 1138.

Ninety-two acres of arable, and twenty-ſix acres of paſture, belong to the glebe.

The church is an antient, low building. It had formerly a ſpire between the nave and chancel, as appears by a part ſtill remaining. There is a rude carving in ſtone, over the north door, of Chriſt treading the devil under his feet, with the figures of three perſons in a praying poſture. Over the ſouth door is the repreſentation of God the father, God the ſon, and the beaſts mentioned in the Revelations, executed in the ſame groſs, unworthy manner.

RANDWICK

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Whitſton, about three miles diſtant north-weſtward from Stroud, three ſouth-weſtward from Painſwick, and about eight ſouthward from Glouceſter.

Randwick, from the Saxon penban, to divide, and pic, a ſtreet, hamlet, or ſmall village, ſignifies a hamlet ſeparated from the mother pariſh. And the ſilence of the antient ſurvey concerning this place, is a ſufficient indication that it was formerly included in the account of ſome neighbouring manor, and I think none ſo likely as Standiſh, whoſe church is even at this time the mother church to Randwick.

The village lies on the ſouth-eaſt acclivity of a hill, that riſes with a pretty ſteep aſcent above the church, to a moderate height. The hill is lined with freeſtone, and ſeveral ſprings iſſue from the ſides of it. The ſituation, for air, water, and expoſure, is extremely advantageous and pleaſant.

Randwick-aſh, on the ridge or ſummit of the hill, is a noted land-mark, from which there is an extenſive proſpect to the ſouth-weſt, of the lower part of the vale of Glouceſterſhire, and the river Severn, with part of the Briſtol-channel and Somerſetſhire; and a view, directly weſt, of the foreſt of Dean, and of the Welch mountains in the back ground. To the eaſt is ſeen the country called the Bottoms, that is, the narrow vallies of Painſwick, Stroud, Woodcheſter, or Nailſworth; and the towns of Stroud and Painſwick, with the neighbouring hills.

At this place an annual revel is kept on the Monday after Low Sunday, probably the wake of the church, attended with much irregularity and intemperance, and many ridiculous circumſtances in the choice of a Mayor, who is yearly elected on that day, from amongſt the meaneſt of the people. They plead the preſcriptive right of antient cuſtom for the licence of the day, and the authority of the magiſtrate is not able to ſuppreſs it.

The whole pariſh is not eſtimated at more than 600 l. per ann. but is very populous, chiefly inhabited by poor people employ'd in the woollen manufacture, and the rates for the relief of the poor have amounted, of late years, to 80 l. communibus annis.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Little can be ſaid of a place of which ſcarce any thing is recorded; but it appears that William ap Adam died ſeized of Randwick 18 H. 6. Thomas Whiſton and Anne his wife levied a fine of the manor to Thomas Mills 4 Mariæ. And Mr. Mitchel was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Glouceſter, to which the vicar of Standiſh preſents, and pays the curate 8 l. 8 s. a year. The living has been augmented by the queen's bounty, in the year 1719, and by another benefaction of 200 l. in the year 1733.

The church is dedicated to St. John. It was very ſmall, but a new aile was added to it about fifty years ago, and the profits of the ſeat-places were intended, by the contributors to the building, to be applied to the ſupport of an afternoon lecturer on Sundays; which, with the augmentation, a ſubſcription for the lecture, an allowance from the vicar of Standiſh in lieu of ſmall tithes, and the ſurplice-fees, make up 60 l. a year, or upwards.

John Cook, Thomas Framilode, and John Cugley, lords of one moiety of the manor of Randwick, by their deed dated 37 H. 6. granted to Thomas Hort, Thomas Holder, and fourteen other perſons, a piece of ground, ſixty-five feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth, in truſt for them, to build a houſe to the honour of God, the bleſſed Virgin Mother, and All Saints, in the church of Randwick. How it was endowed I cannot find. There remains now only a decay'd old houſe, called the Church-houſe, inhabited by poor people.

The tithes and ſome glebe land belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and were granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The pariſh pays 3 s. 4 d. a year to be exempt from contributing to the repair of the mother church of Standiſh, which pariſh pays 10 d. a year to be exempt from relieving the poor of Randwick.

Benefactions.

Here is a charity ſchool, in which forty children of the pooreſt of the inhabitants are taught to read, and have bibles when they quit the ſchool. It has been well inſpected and conducted, and is of great uſe in this poor place, where numbers of children would otherwiſe be deprived of all inſtruction. It is endowed with lands worth 11 l. a year, and a houſe has been built for the maſter; but the ſchool has been chiefly ſupported by ſmall donations and legacies, and for many years by the benefactions of the truly honourable lady Betty Germaine, and for ſome years paſt by the generoſity of John Elliot, eſq; late of London, now of Binfield, Berks, and of Bridgend in the pariſh of Stonehouſe, in this county.

Mr. Chandler left 150 l. to purchaſe land, the produce of which is given one third to the miniſter, and the reſt to the poor. A paſture ground in Hayward's

Hayward's field in Stonehouſe, is charged with the payment of 30*s.* yearly to the miniſter, and 30*s.* to the poor; and another eſtate in the ſame pariſh is charged with the payment of 2*s.* 6*d.* yearly to the miniſter, and the like ſum to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 80 houſes, and about 400 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 16. Atkyns. The average of baptiſms, for five years preceding 1767, was 30, of which 9 belonged to neighbouring pariſhes; of burials 14, of which 3 were not inhabitants of this pariſh. For ſome time ſubſequent to 1766, the proportion of the burials to the baptiſms has been greater, from the ſmall pox being epidemical, and other cauſes; but in 1776 the births were 37, the burials 18. And according to an exact account taken a few years ſince, there were 140 houſes, and 650 inhabitants. From theſe particulars it appears to be a healthy and prolific place, ſtill increaſing in population.

RANGEWORTHY

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Thornbury, about five miles ſouth-eaſt from the town of that name, three ſouth-weſt from Wickwar, and about twenty-five ſouthward from Glouceſter.

The name of this pariſh took its origin from circumſtances ſimilar to thoſe of Randwick, and was moſt probably derived from the Saxon ȝenban, to divide, and ȝeoꝛȝ, a habitation, or village; and was ſo called becauſe it was ſeparated from ſome larger place, of which it had been antiently a member. Domeſday taking no notice of it, ſhews that it was not a diſtinct manor when that record was compiled, but was probably taken out of Thornbury, tho' it has ſince acquired manerial rights, and is now become a diſtinct pariſh.

Rangeworthy is reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the honour of Glouceſter. It conſiſts almoſt wholly of paſture land, with a pretty large common of a ſtrong ſoil, overgrown with fern, where a coal-pit has lately been opened. This part of the vale is ſuſceptible of very conſiderable improvement.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor was held of Hugh de Audley, earl of Glouceſter, and Margaret his wife, 21 E. 3. John Talbot, viſcount Liſle, in right of Margaret his mother, deſcended from Warine Gerard lord Liſle, was ſeized of this manor; and Joan, his widow, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas Chedder, of Chedder in Somerſetſhire, held it in dower, and died ſeized thereof 7 E. 4.

Elizabeth Courteney, counteſs of Devonſhire, died ſeized of Raingworthy, Nethercot, and Kingſton Liſle, 11 H. 8. Sir Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife, heireſs to the counteſs of Devonſhire, had livery of the above mentioned manors the ſame year.

The manor of Rangeworthy was veſted in Robert Hale, eſq; in the year 1608, and Matthew Hale, eſq; was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. John de la Field Phelps, eſq; was lord of the manor at the time of his death, in the year 1771. His ſon and heir, John de la Field Phelps, is a minor. The arms of Phelps are, Argent, a lion rampant ſable between ſix croſſe croſlets fitchy gules.

Sir Thomas Brook died ſeized of lands in Raingworth 5 H. 5. and Joan his widow held them in dower, and died ſeized of one meſſuage, one plow-tillage, ten acres of meadow, and twenty acres of wood in Raingworthy, 15 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 16*l.* a year; and in the gift of the vicar of Thornbury. Chriſt Church college in Oxford has the impropriation.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to the holy Trinity, and has a low tower at the weſt end.

Benefactions.

The curate receives 6*s.* 8*d.* for a ſermon on Trinity Monday; and an eſtate worth 27*l.* a year has been given by an unknown benefactor, the rent of which is received by the overſeers of Rangeworthy, who pays 7*l.* to the curate, and the remainder is appropriated to the uſe of the poor. A cottage, worth about 18*s.* a year, has been given half to the curate, and the other half to the poor.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £. 29 10 3

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this place, there were 30 houſes, and about 150 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 7. The people are now decreaſed to 120.

RENDCOMBE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, ſix miles northward from Cirencester, ſix ſouth-weſtward from Northleach, and about fourteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts chiefly of arable land, with [illegible] woodland and paſturage. The river Churn [illegible] through it, and abounds with ſmall trout [illegible] minnows.

Rendcombe, more antiently Rindecome, is [illegible] culiar ſituation. It is moated almoſt round [illegible] nature, with a very narrow combe, or [illegible] agre[illegible] agreeable to the ſignification of the name; for ppunz, in the Saxon language, is a circle. Within this ring or circle, which does not encompaſs the whole, but only a large portion of the pariſh, the ground lies high and lofty, and at the ſouth-weſt extremity ſtands the village of Rendcombe.

Here ſir William Guiſe has a noble ſeat, with a park, ſheltered on the north and eaſt quarters by a fine grove of lofty trees, and open for proſpect to the ſouth and weſt; where the river Churn glides along reluctantly, at the foot of a fine ſlope, not two hundred yards from the houſe. It is only of late that this antient family has reſided here; and there cannot be a more healthy ſituation, with an open country round about, for the rational and gentleman-like exerciſes of riding and hunting. They formerly reſided at Elmore and Brockworth, in the vale part of the county.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There were two diſtinct manors in Rendcombe, as appears by the antient ſurvey.

'Giſlebert the ſon of Turold holds Rindecome 'in Reſpiget hundred. There are five hides taxed. 'Aluric held it. In demean is one plow-tillage, 'and three villeins, and ſeven bordars, with three 'plow-tillages. There are ſeven ſervi, and one 'foreigner [francigena] holds the land of two 'villeins, and a mill of 8*s.* and four acres of 'meadow. It was worth 7*l.* now 100*s.*

'The ſame Giſlebert holds Rindecumbe in 'Reſpiget hundred, and Walter [holds it] of him. 'There are three hides taxed. In demean are 'two plow-tillages, and four villeins, and three 'bordars, with two plow-tillages. There are ſix 'ſervi, and a mill of 5*s.* and three acres of meadow. 'It is worth and was worth 6*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 76.

This Giſlebert, the ſon of Turold, taking part with Robert Curthoiſe, againſt king William the Second, in their conteſt for the crown, his eſtates in England were ſeized, and this manor, with the honour of Glouceſter, and many other great eſtates belonging to the crown, were granted to Robert Fitz-Haman, or Hayman, of whom, and of many others herein after-mentioned, I have treated more largely in the accounts of the Honour, and of the Earls of Glouceſter, p. 91, & ſeq.

Mabel, or Sibil, eldeſt daughter of Robert Fitz-Haman, carried this manor, by her marriage, to Robert Melhent, or Fitz-Roy, natural ſon of king Henry the Firſt, who was created earl of Glouceſter by his father, and dying in the year 1147, left William, his eldeſt ſon and heir. William had a daughter Amice, married to Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford, who, in her right, died ſeized of this manor 8 Joh.

Gilbert de Clare, ſon of Richard and Amice, was the firſt earl of Glouceſter and Hertford jointly, and died at Penros in Brittany, ſeized of the manor of Rendcombe, 14 H. 3. Richard de Clare, eldeſt ſon and heir of Gilbert, ſucceeded to this manor, and died 46 H. 3. Gilbert de Clare was ſon and heir of Richard. His right to court leet in Rendcombe and Rendcombe Over, was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, brought againſt him 15 E. 1. and he died in the 24th year of the ſame reign, leaving this manor in jointure to Joan de Acres, his ſecond wife, daughter to king Edward the firſt, who died ſeized of it in 1307, the 35th and laſt year of her father's reign. Gilbert de Clare, ſon of Gilbert and Joan his wife, was the next poſſeſſor. He was ſlain at the battle of Bannockſburne, in Scotland; 7 E. 2. having no iſſue, and was found by the eſcheator's inquiſition taken the next year, to have been ſeized of the manor of Ryndecombe, which he held of John de la Mare by the ſervice of 2*s.* a year; of the advowſon of the church, worth 100*s.* of 100 acres of arable land, worth 12*s.* 6*d.* per ann. of four acres and a half of meadow, worth 18*d.* per acre; of paſture worth 2*s.* and his free tenants paid him 41*s.* 10*d.*

Upon the partition of his eſtates between his three ſiſters and coheireſſes, this manor fell to Margaret, then the wife of Piers Gaveſton, but married afterwards to Hugh de Audley, who was created earl of Glouceſter, and died 21 E. 3. Margaret, his only daughter and heireſs, was married to Ralph lord Stafford, who, in her right, died ſeized of this manor 46 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, Hugh earl of Stafford, who died at Rhodes 9 R. 2. in his return from a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition taken the following year. Thomas earl of Stafford, ſon of Hugh, married Anne, daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock, duke of Glouceſter, by Eleanor his wife, eldeſt daughter and coheireſs of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford; but died before the marriage was conſummated, 16 R. 2. ſeized of the manors of Rendcombe, North Cerney, and Thornbury, and was ſucceeded by his brother William, who died unmarried 18 R. 2. Edmond earl of Stafford was heir to his two brothers, Thomas, and William, and by ſpecial licence from the king, married Anne, widow of the former, with whom he had the manor of Wheatenhurſt, alias Whitminſter. He was killed at the battle of Shrewſbury, July 12, 1403, 4 H. 4. Humphry earl of Stafford, ſon and heir of Edmond, married Anne, daughter of Ralph Nevil, earl of Weſtmoreland, and was created duke of Buckingham 23 H. 6. He was ſlain at the battle of Northampton, in the 38th year of the ſame reign, at which time he was ſeized of the manors of Eaſtington, North Cerney, Rendcombe, Wheatenhurſt, and Thornbury. He was attainted by parliament, after his death, whereby Rendcombe came to the crown, when it had continued near 400 years in the ſame family, from the grant of king William the Second to Robert Fitz-Haman, down to the death of Humphry duke of Buckingham.

King Edward the Fourth, after the duke of Buckingham's attainder, granted this manor to Richard Nevil, the great earl of Warwick, commonly called the Make King, who fell a victim to his own ambitious deſigns, for he was ſlain at the battle of Barnet, April 14, 1471, in attempting to depoſe king Edward the Fourth, whom he had before advanced to the throne, and was attainted in his turn; ſo that this manor came again to the crown.

John Tame, a wealthy merchant, obtained a grant of it, and purchaſed the manor of Fairford of king Henry the Seventh. He was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Edmond Tame, whoſe ſon Edmond dying without iſſue 36 H. 8. his eſtates came to his three ſiſters, of whom Margaret, the eldeſt, was married to ſir Humphry Stafford, and they had livery of this manor the ſame year. See other particulars under Fairford.

The manor of Rendcombe, formerly the duke of Buckingham's, was granted to Henry lord Stafford, and to the lady Urſula his wife, 2 Mar. and Edward lord Stafford had livery thereof 13 Eliz.

From the Staffords this manor paſſed by purchaſe to ſir Richard Berkeley, whoſe widow, Elianor, was ſeized of it in the year 1608, and dying in 1629, it deſcended to ſir Maurice Berkeley, ſon and heir of ſir Richard. His eſtate was ſequeſtered by the parliament in the great civil wars, for which he paid 1372 l. compoſition. Sir Chriſtopher Gyſe ſoon afterwards purchaſed Rendcombe from the Berkeley family, and ſir William Guiſe,* baronet, is the preſent lord of this manor. His arms are, Gules, ſeven lozenges vair, 3, 3, 1; on a canton Or, a mullet pierced ſable.

Robert de Mara purchaſed lands in Rendcombe of Jordan his brother 1 Joh. Lands in Rendcombe and Calmſden belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget 36 H. 8.

Thomas Rich died ſeized of Green's and Upner's farms in Rendcombe, and was ſucceeded by William his ſon, who likewiſe died ſeized of them 15 Car. leaving Thomas his ſon ſeven years old.

Mariſden, in this pariſh, has been eſteemed a diſtinct manor, and is ſo called in the records. The manor of Mariſden, in Rendcombe, belonged to the Ciſtercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, and was granted to ſir John Berkeley 28 H. 8. who dying ſeized thereof 37 H. 8. Richard Berkeley, his ſon, had livery of it 6 E. 6. It now belongs to ſir William Guiſe.

Eycot, (from the Britiſh Ycoed, the wood) is a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh; but it was formerly a member of the manor of Bibury, as appears by the following tranſlation from Domeſday:

'The church of St. Mary of Worceſter holds 'Aicote in Reſpigete hundred, and Ailric holds it 'of her. It lies in Begeberie. There is one hide. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins, 'and four bordars, with two plow-tillages. There 'are two ſervi, and eight acres of meadow, and 'a mill of 64*d*. It was worth 20*s*. now 30*s*. 'Ordric holds it of the biſhop.' Dom. Book, p. 70.

Thomas de Berton died ſeized of the manor of Eycot, held of the manor of Bibury 49 E. 3. John Penger died ſeized thereof 7 H. 4. Catherine War 6 H. 6. granted the manor of Eycot, lying in Rendcombe, North Cerney, and Woodmancot in North Cerney, to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and others; and they, two years afterwards, granted the ſame to the abbey of Winchcombe. Sir William Guiſe is the preſent proprietor of this eſtate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 130 l. a year; Mr. Warner is patron, and the reverend Mr. Shellard is the preſent incumbent.

The lords of the manor were patrons of the church until the attainder of Humphry duke of Buckingham, after which the advowſon was granted to ſir Richard Cornwall, and his heirs males, 1 H. 7.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a handſome ſtructure, conſiſting of the nave, and an aile on the ſouth ſide, with two chancels, and has a ſquare tower at the weſt end. Whether it was built

* This antient family has been poſſeſſed of eſtates in Glouceſterſhire ever ſince about the year 1262, when Nicholas de Gyſe, ſon of Robert, of the family of Gyſe of Aſple-Gyſe, or Gowiz, in Bedfordſhire, married a near relation of John de Burgh, ſon of Hubert de Burgh, earl of Kent, and with her had the manor of Elmore in this county, by the gift of her relation John de Burgh, out of reſpect to whom, Nicholas aſſumed the arms of de Burgh, which have ever ſince been born by this family.

Sir Aunſelme de Gyſe, ſon of Nicholas, died 23 E. 1. John de Gyſe, was ſon and heir of ſir Aunſelme, and had a ſon John de Gyſe, who was living 32 E. 3. Sir Anſelme Gyſe, ſon of the laſt John, died 13 H. 4. and Reginald Gyſe, his ſon, died 8 H. 5.

John Gyſe, ſon of Reginald, married the daughter and heir of —— Wiſtam, and reſided at Aſple-Gyſe in Bedfordſhire, which place took the latter part of its name from his family. Sir John Gyſe, of Aſple-Gyſe, ſon of John, married Agnes, or Alice, daughter of —— Berkeley, and dying in the year 1479, was ſucceeded by John Gyſe, of Elmore, eſq; who had a grant of the manor of Brockworth in this county from king Henry the Eighth, 32 regni, in exchange for the manors of Widdington in Oxfordſhire, and Aſple-Gyſe in Bedfordſhire. He married the daughter of lord Grey of Wilton, and dying 4 Mariæ, left Anſelme his eldeſt ſon and heir forty-ſix years old; which Anſelme dying without iſſue 5 Eliz. was ſucceeded by his brother William Gyſe, who married Mary, the daughter of William Ratſey of Colmore. John Gyſe, ſon and heir of William, married Jane, daughter of Richard Pauncefoot of Hasfield, and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir William Gyſe, who married to his firſt wife, Margaret, daughter of Chriſtopher Kenn, of Somerſetſhire, and after ſerving the office of high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, in the year 1608, died in 1642. William Gyſe, eldeſt ſon of ſir William by Margaret his firſt wife, married Cicely, daughter of John Dennis of Pucklechurch. He reſided at Brockworth, and was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in the year 1647, and dying in 1653, was buried at Elmore.

Sir Chriſtopher Gyſe, ſon and heir of William, purchaſed the manor of Rendcombe of the Berkeley family, and was created a baronet by king Charles the Second, in the year 1661. He married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Lawrence Waſhington, of Gaiſden in Wiltſhire, and dying in 1670, was buried at Brockworth. Sir John Guiſe, ſon of ſir Chriſtopher, married Elizabeth, daughter of John How, of Compton, eſq; and ſerved in ſeveral parliaments as knight of the ſhire for this county. Sir John Guiſe, ſon and heir of ſir John, married firſt, —— daughter of ſir Nathaniel Napper of Dorſetſhire, by whom he had one ſon, John; ſecondly, Anne, one of the daughters and coheirs of ſir Francis Ruſſel, of Strenſham in Worceſterſhire, baronet, but by her had no iſſue. He repreſented the county of Glouceſter in ſeveral parliaments, and died about the year 1732. Sir John Guiſe, only ſon of ſir John, married Jane, the daughter of —— Saunders, of Mungwell in the county of Oxford, eſq; by whom he had iſſue two ſons and two daughters. Sir William Guiſe, ſecond and only ſurviving ſon of ſir John, is the preſent lord of the manors of Brockworth, Elmore, and Rendcombe, and one of the preſent repreſentatives of this county in parliament.

built by ſir Giles, or by ſir Edmond Tame, is not agreed, but all accounts allow that it was built by one of that family; and E. T. the initials of the latter perſon's name are in the window of the ſouth chancel. There is a crucifix ſtill remaining intire on the eaſt wall of the chancel, having remarkably eſcaped the obſervation of the parliament's party in the great civil wars, who deſtroy'd every thing they found of that kind.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

At the eaſt end of the ſouth chancel, which belongs to the lord of the manor, is a large pyramid of black and white marble, intended as a monument for the late ſir John Guiſe and his lady, but the inſcription is not yet engraved.

Cloſe to the above, round the verge of a tomb, it is thus to be read, in capital letters relieved on the marble,

Here lyeth Elenor Iermye firſt married to Robert Roe, eſq; & ſecondly to Sr Ry: Berkeley Knt. Dyed: 17: March: 1629.

There is a ſcutcheon at the head of the tomb, bearing, [Argent] a lion rampant [gules] a creſcent for difference, ſuppoſed for Jermye. Againſt the eaſt wall of the rector's chancel, are two handſome monuments, with the following inſcriptions:

This is followed by the underwritten poor verſification,

Robert, that always was both good and iuſt;
Of high deſcent, years ſince return'd to duſt:
Who on his God at home, and Church did call;
Was ever Loyal, and Epiſcopal.
The beſt of Huſbands; and ſo loving was
That he to Fathers been a pattern has.
And now prepared for her long repoſe,
His Wife Rebecca by his ſide lies cloſe:
A tender Mother, of a Godlike mind;
Was to her Children all, and neighbours kind:
A pious dame, ſtill ready to fulfill
Her God's, and her obligeing Huſband's will.
Thrice happy ſouls, They never can miſs reſt,
Who ſtriving here each other to love beſt,
Were then with peace, and now in heav'n are bleſt.

Near to this place lies interr'd the Body of JANE Daughtr of ROBERT BERKELEY of Rendcombe Eſqr by REBECCA his Wife, Deſcended from an Antient and Noble Family. She was of a Meek Temper, and obliging Behaviour, Dutiful to her Parents, Pious and Exemplary in her life and Converſation, & a true Daught: of the Church of England. In Short She was free from all the Modiſh Vices, and Failings of her Sex and Age; and Endued with all thoſe Virtues and Graces that could render her Life charming & deſirable on Earth, or could qualify and diſpoſe her for the Rewards of Heaven. She died in the 19th Year of her Age, Anno Dom. 1672. This monument was erected by Rebecca her eldeſt ſiſter, out of her tender Love and Affection.——Arms, Berkeley as above.

Benefaction.

Sir Thomas Roe gave an eſtate of 25*l.* a year, to the pariſh of Cirenceſter, for putting out apprentices, &c. but ordered that a boy out of this pariſh ſhould receive the benefit once in three or four years, if preſented to the truſtees at Cirenceſter.

RISINGTON (GREAT.)

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, ſeven miles ſouth from Stow, five north-eaſtward from Northleach, and about twenty-five eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is bounded by part of Oxfordſhire on the eaſt, by the river Windruſh on the weſt, by the other Riſingtons to the north, and by part of Great Barrington to the ſouthward of it. It conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture on the ſide next the river, with very good arable land in the higher ſituations.

It is ſometimes called Broad Riſington. Riſedone, Riſedune, and Riſendune, which are the ſeveral manners in which the name was antiently written, ſignify that the village lies on the ſide of a riſing ground, which is exactly the ſituation of it, with an agreeable proſpect of the vale beneath, through which the river Windruſh flows, in its courſe to Burford and Witney.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Rotbert de Todeni holds Riſedone in Sale-'maneſberie hundred. Ulf held it. There are 'thirteen hides taxed. In demean are three plow-'tillages, and twenty-three villeins, and ſix bor-'dars, with ten plow-tillages. There are eight 'among the ſervi and ancillæ, and a mill of 10*s.* 'and one burgage in Glouueceſt' of 3*d.* [rent.] 'It was worth 12*l.* now 10*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 76.

The above mentioned Robert de Todeni died ſeized of the manors of Riſendone, Horedone, Saperton, and Frampton, in the year 1088, and was ſucceeded by William his ſon and heir, who took the name of de Albini, with the addition of Breto, to diſtinguiſh himſelf from William de Albini, chief butler of the realm.

The manor did not continue long in the family of Todeni, for Alard le Fleming was ſeized of it and of Saperton in the reign of king John, and both thoſe manors continued in his deſcendants down to the reign of king Richard the Second. Henry le Fleming, ſon of Alard, died 5 H. 3. and was ſucceeded by John le Fleming, his ſon and heir, who was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire

31 H. 3. and dying without iſſue, was ſucceeded by his kinſman Alard le Fleming, whoſe widow Anne was afterwards married to Henry de la Lay. A Quo warranto was brought againſt them for marrying without the king's licence, but the writ was diſcharged, on producing a licence from king Henry the Third.

The laſt Alard le Fleming left two daughters, coheireſſes; Anne, (or as ſhe is called in the eſcheator's inquiſition, Florence,) the eldeſt, was married to William de Inſula, or de Liſle; and Joan, the other daughter, was married to Henry Hoeſe, or Huſſey. Which ſaid William and Henry were jointly ſeized of the manor of Great Riſindon in right of their wives, as appears by the ſheriff's return of all the vills in the county with their reſpective lords, made in obedience to the king's writ, 9 E. 1. From this time they and their deſcendants held this manor and that of Saperton jointly, for many ſucceſſive generations.

William de Inſula, or de Liſle died 3 E. 2. ſeized of a moiety of the manor of Great Roſindon in right of Florentia his wife, and left William, his ſon and heir by his ſaid wife, twenty-eight years old, (Eſch.) who alſo died ſeized of the ſame moiety 19 E. 3. His ſon, Walter de Liſle, with Joan his wife, levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Broad Riſington to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille; remainder to ſir Henry Hoeſe in taille, remainder to Elizabeth, the daughter of ſir Henry, 21 E. 3. and died 31 E. 3. as did Joan his widow, in the forty-ninth year of the ſame reign, ſeized of the ſame moiety in dower. William de Liſle, ſon of Walter, was ſeized thereof, with a moiety of the advowſon of the church, 51 E. 3. and dying 8 R. 2. was ſucceeded by John Liſle, eſq; his ſon and heir.

I now return to Henry Hoeſe, or de Huſſey, who had married Joan, one of the coheireſſes of Alard le Fleming, and in her right, was ſeized of a moiety of this manor 9 E. 1. He was ſeveral times ſummoned to parliament among the barons in the reigns of E. 1. and E. 2. and died ſeized of [a moiety of] the manor of Ruſyndon 6 E. 3. Dugd. Sir Henry Huſſey, his ſon and heir, levied a fine of a moiety of the manor and advowſon of Broad Riſington to the uſe of himſelf for life; the remainder to Henry his ſon, and to Elizabeth, the daughter of John de Bohun, in ſpecial taille; remainder to Richard, brother of Henry, in taille; remainder to Elizabeth, the daughter of Henry, in taille; remainder to John de Huntingfield, and his heirs, 21 E. 3. and died 7 R. 2. Anchoret, his widow, was ſeized of two acres of land in Riſington, and of a moiety of the manor of Saperton, in dower, at the time of her death, 13 R. 2.

The manor came afterwards to the Grevils. John Grevil died ſeized thereof 23 H. 6. and his ſon, John Grevil, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of it 14 H. 7. William lord Sandys and Margaret his wife were ſeized of the manor of Broad Riſington. He died 32 H. 8. and livery was granted the ſame year to Thomas lord Sandys, his ſon; upon whoſe death, William lord Sandys, ſon of Thomas, had livery of the manor granted to him 9 Eliz.

About this time the manor came to the Brays of Great Barrington. Edmund Bray, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and it continued in his family 'till it was purchaſed of Reginald-Morgan Bray, eſq; about the year 1734, by lord chancellor Talbot, for the uſe, and with part of the fortune, of Mary, daughter and heireſs of Adam de Cardonnel, eſq; now counteſs Talbot, who is the preſent lady of the manor. Her ladyſhip's paternal arms are, Argent, two chevronels azure, between three trefoils vert.

Lands in Broad Riſington belonged to the Ciſtercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire; and ſir John Lovel and others were ſeized of one meſſuage, one plow-tillage, 3*s.* yearly rent, and half a yard-land in Riſington, in truſt for that abbey, 16 R. 2. Theſe lands, after the diſſolution of the abbey of Bruern, were granted to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton 1 Mariæ.

A tenement and lands in Great Riſington belonged to a houſe of the knights hoſpitallers of St. John at Jeruſalem in Burford, and were granted to Edmond Hermon 35 H. 8. The advowſon of the church belonged to the ſame knights, but was excepted in this grant to Edmond Hermon.

Richard Gilpyn and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Riſington Great 19 R. 2. Thomas de Lee and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Broad Riſington to the uſe of themſelves 20 R. 2. Lands in Broad Riſington belonged to ſir William Berkeley, upon whoſe attainder they were granted to Jaſper duke of Bedford 1 H. 7. and John Walters and Thomas Carpenter obtained another grant of them 1 Mariæ.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 250*l.* a year. Lady Talbot is patroneſs, and the reverend Richard Hayes, M.A. is the preſent incumbent.

Henry le Fleming levied a fine of the advowſon of Riſington to the uſe of Alice, widow of John le Fleming, 51 H. 3.

Four yard lands and a half belong to the glebe.

Knightly Chetwood, D.D. and dean of Glouceſter, who was preſented to this rectory in the year 1686, built the parſonage houſe for the benefit of his ſucceſſors; but it has been greatly improved by Mr. Upton and Mr. Hayes, the late and preſent incumbents.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, is large, and built in the form of a croſs, with a ſtrong low tower in the middle, in which are ſix bells, and a gallery at the weſt end. In three niches in the wall of the ſouth porch, are the figures of our Saviour on the croſs, and one of his diſciples on each ſide of him; and in the chancel is a place formerly uſed for auricular confeſſion.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 75 houſes, and about 277 inhabitants, whereof 36 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptiſms were 74, burials 37, and the number of inhabitants is now about 252, which ſhews the place to be very healthy.

Riſington (Little,) or Riſington Baſſet.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, four miles ſouth from Stow, ſix north-eaſtward from Northleach, and about twenty-five eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on the ſouth by Great Riſington, on the north by Wick Riſington, on the eaſt by Weſtcot, and on the weſt by Bourton on the Water.

The name has been already explained under the preceding pariſh; but the cognomen was given it from the family of the Baſſets, to whom the manor antiently belonged.

Moſt of the lands lie in a valley on the banks of the Windruſh, but the village itſelf is ſeated on a pleaſant ſlope, with a fine aſpect to the ſouth-weſt.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Roger de Laci holds Riſedune in Salemaneſ-
'berie hundred, and Hugh holds it of him.
'There are eight hides taxed. Aluuard, and 'Aſchill, and Aluuard, and Uluui, held it for four 'manors. In demean are ſeven plow-tillages, and 'four villeins, with two plow-tillages. There
'are twelve ſervi, and two ancillæ. There is a 'mill of 10*s.* It is worth and was worth 7*l.* and
'10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Roger de Laci taking part with Robert Curthoiſe againſt king William the Second, his eſtates were ſeized by the latter, and given to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother, who leaving no ſurviving iſſue, they paſſed to Gilbert, ſon of his ſiſter Emme, who afterwards aſſumed the name of Lacy.

Soon after this time, Ralph Baſlet, chief juſticiar of England, purchaſed, among other large eſtates, the manor of Little Riſington, which he gave to Gilbert a younger ſon. Thomas Baſſet, ſon and heir of Gilbert, was juſtice itinerant for Glouceſterſhire, and married Alice, the daughter of — Dunſtanvil. Gilbert Baſſet, ſon and heir of Thomas, married Egeline, daughter of —— Courtney; and veſting the knights templers with lands in this pariſh, he died 7 Joh. leaving an only daughter and heireſs, married to Richard de Comvil.

Robert de Briwes, or Brus, was poſſeſſed of the manor 53 H. 3. and died ſeized of it 4 E. 1. Robert Burnel, biſhop of Bath and Wells, the next lord of this manor, purchaſed a charter of free warren 9 E. 1. and dying in the 21ſt year of that reign, was ſucceeded by Philip Burnel, his nephew and heir. The family of Burnel is deſcended from ſir Robert Burnel, who came into England with the Conqueror, and died in the laſt year of that reign. His heirs ſettled at Acton Burnel in Staffordſhire, where they had a caſtle, which was honoured by an aſſembly of parliament in the reign of Edward the Firſt; and the famous ſtatute of Acton Burnel, ſo often mentioned by our hiſtorians, was ſo called from being enacted at that place. The above mentioned Philip Burnel married Maud, the daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, and dying 22 E. 1. was ſucceeded by Edward his ſon and heir, who came of age 1 E. 2. and had then livery of his lands. He was ſummoned as a baron to parliament 5 E. 2. and died without iſſue in the 9th year of the ſame reign, ſeized of the manor of Little Riſyndon, which he held jointly with Alina, or Aliva, his wife, of the king in capite, as of the honour of Wallingford, by the ſervice of half a knight's fee. The manor then paid 10*l.* a year to the abbeſs and convent of Godſtow, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition, which found that Maud, his ſiſter, the wife of John Lovell, was his heir; but the manor was aſſigned to Aliva, the widow of Edward lord Burnel, in dower.

John de Handelo married Maud, ſiſter and heir of Edward lord Burnel, and widow of John lord Lovell; and they joined in levying a fine of this manor to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to Nicholas their ſon, 17 E. 3. John de Handelo, after the deceaſe of his wife, held this eſtate by the courteſy of England 'till his death 20 E. 3. Nicholas de Handelo had livery of the manor on the death of his father, and aſſumed the name of Burnel from his mother. He was ſummoned as a baron to parliament 24 E. 3. and dying 6 R. 2. left ſir Hugh lord Burnel his ſon and heir, who married Joyce, daughter and heireſs of ſir John Botetourt. He was one of the lords that received the reſignation of the crown from king Richard the Second, and died 8 H. 5. ſeized of the manor of Riſindon Baſſet, and other great eſtates. Edward Burnel, only ſon of ſir Hugh, married Alice, daughter of the lord Strange, and died in the lifetime of his father, leaving three daughters, coheireſſes to their grandfather; Joyce, married to Thomas Erdington; Margery to Edmond Hungerford; and Catherine, afterwards married to sir John Ratcliffe.

The heirs male of Nicholas, son of Maud Burnel, by John de Handelo, being thus extinct, the manor reverted to the heir of Maud by her first husband, John lord Lovel, who was William lord Lovel, her great grandson. He died seized of this manor 33 H. 6. and was succeeded by John his son, who married Joan, sister of William viscount Beaumont, and died 4 E. 4. Francis lord Lovel, son of John, married Anne, daughter of Henry lord Fitz-Hugh. He was very much in favour with king Richard the Third, and equally hated by the people. Of him, and two others, Catesby, and Ratsby, the following distich was commonly repeated:

The Cat, the Rat, and Lovel the Dog,
Rule all England under the Hog.

It fared with him, as it has often done with favourites exercising undue influence over their sovereign, for he was attainted 1 H. 7. for divers misdemeanors, and fled out of the kingdom; but returning, was slain near Newark 3 H. 7. leaving no issue. His two sisters, Joan, married to sir Brian Stapleton, and Fridiswid, married to sir Edward Norris, could not inherit, on account of their brother's attainder, wherefore this manor came to the crown.

It was afterwards granted to Thomas duke of Norfolk, by whose attainder it came again to the crown, and was granted to Paul Withepool and other citizens of London, as security for money borrowed, 36 H. 8. John Fettiplace, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards purchased by seven persons, who held it in common, and is now divided among several freeholders, and held of the honour of Ewe Elm in Oxfordshire.

There was a manor, or at least a reputed manor in this parish, which belonged to the Benedictine nunnery of Godstow in Oxfordshire, and was granted, after the dissolution of religious foundations, to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain, 34 H. 8. The knights templers were seized of lands in this parish 2 E. 3. Certain lands in Little Risington belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and were granted to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton 1 Mar.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 145*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, and the reverend John Dachair, D.D. is the present incumbent.

There was formerly a composition between the rector of this church and the abbey of Osney concerning tithes. An acre of furze, an acre of arable, and half an acre of pasture belong to the church-wardens.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a small aile on the north side, and a tower, with one bell.

At the beginning of this century, there were 30 houses, and about 170 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 16 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. The people are something increased since the above period, and are now about 176 in number.

RISINGTON (WICK)

Is a small parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, three miles south from Stow, six north-eastward from Northleach, and about twenty-five eastward from Gloucester.

It lies on the slope of an easy hill, which bounds a pleasant little valley to the southward of it. This part of the country being at a great distance from any coal mines, has induced several gentlemen to bore, and sink pits in their estates in search of that necessary fossil, and particularly the late Mr. Dickenson persevered for three years in experiments of that nature. The attempt was laudable, but the business terminated in disappointment to himself and the whole neighbourhood. This gentleman built a handsome house that gives dignity to the estate, and ornaments the village. It is called Wick-Hill, and stands at a small distance from the turnpike-road from Stow to Burford, commanding a most agreeable prospect of the valley, and particularly of the pleasant village of Bourton on the Water.

The soil of this parish is very fertile, and the lands pretty equally divided between arable and pasture, but the village seems to have nothing more to distinguish it, beside the particulars already mentioned.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following record was overlooked by sir Robert Atkyns:

'Rotbert de Olgi holds Risendvne in Salemanes-'berie hundred. There are ten hides taxed. 'Siuuard held four plow-tillages in demean, and 'twelve villeins, and two bordars, with five plow-'tillages. There are eight servi, and two mills 'of 20*s.* It was worth 10*l.* now 8*l.*' D.B. p. 76.

Robert de Briwes was seized of the manors of Little Risington and Risington Wyke 53 H. 3. and died 4 E. 1. at which time he was likewise seized of the church of Wike Risindon. The sheriff returned that the abbat of Evesham and William Lucy were lords of Wyke in Salmonesburye hundred 9 E. 1. Thomas Spencer and Walter de Burghton were seized of it, probably in trust, truſt, 5 E. 3. for it was afterwards veſted in the Lucies, and ſir Thomas Luci died ſeized of Riſindon Wike 3 H. 5. as did William Luci, eſq; 6 E. 4.

The manor paſſed ſome time afterwards to the Stratfords. John Stratford died ſeized of Riſindon Wike 7 E. 6. and livery was granted the ſame year to Henry Stratford, his couſin and heir. George Stratford was lord of this manor in the year 1608, in whoſe family it continued for more than a century afterwards; Mr. Coxe, by purchaſe after the death of Mr. Dickinſon, is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of Wick-Hill.

John Rouſe and others were ſeized of lands in Wike Riſindon 49 E. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 150*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Woodroffe is the preſent incumbent.

Robert le Bruſe, or de Briwes, was ſeized of this church 4 E. 1. as was Edward Burnel 9 E. 2. at which time the inquiſition found that the advowſon was worth 202*s.* Sir Hugh Burnel was ſeized of the ſame advowſon 8 H. 5. and the biſhop of Bath and Wells, lord Hungerford, and Thomas duke of Norfolk have likewiſe preſented.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and has a tower at the weſt end, which was built by —— Wakefield, who lies buried in the chancel.

ROCKHAMPTON

LIES in the vale, in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, about two miles north from Thornbury, five ſouth from Berkeley, and twenty-two ſouthward, inclining to the weſt, from the city of Glouceſter.

The ſoil is rich, and moſtly in paſturage, but the parts next the river Severn, which bounds the pariſh on the weſt, are ſubject to inundations, which ſometimes do conſiderable damage. A ſmall ſtream riſes here, and empties itſelf into the Severn, at Shepardine.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Oſbern Gifard holds Rochemtune, in Langeleie 'hundred, of the king. There are three hides 'taxed. Dunne held it in the time of king Ed-'ward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'ſix villeins, and ſeven bordars, with three plow-'tillages. There are five ſervi, and twenty acres 'of meadow, and a ſalt-pit at Wich [paying] 'four ſeams of ſalt, a wood one mile long, and 'half a mile broad. It is worth 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

The above Oſbern Gifard, or Giffard, was a noble Norman, who attended king William the Firſt in his invaſion of England, and for his ſervices, was rewarded with the manors of Rochemtune, Stoche, Brimesfelde, and Aldeberie, in this county.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield purchaſed a charter of free warren in the manors of Badgworth, Stonehouſe, Rockhampton, Stoke-Giffard, and Tetbury, in this county, as already related under Brimpſfield, 9 E. 1. and his claim to court leet and waifs in Rockhampton was allowed, in a Quo warranto brought againſt him in the 15th year of that reign. He was ſucceeded by his ſon John Giffard, the laſt of that name, (commonly called John the Rich) who taking part with the barons againſt the Spencers, his caſtle of Brimpsfield was demoliſhed, his lands ſeized, and he himſelf being made priſoner at the battle of Burroughbridge, was attainted and executed at Glouceſter as a traitor. The manor was thereupon granted to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, 17 E. 2. But after the depoſition and murder of king Edward the Second, this manor and Brimpsfield were granted to John Maltravers, for his ſervice in that bloody affair, and to him John de Callew, heir to the Giffards by a daughter, releaſed all his right. This manor was taken from John Maltravers, on account of his being convicted of divers miſdemeanors, and the inheritance of it was granted to Maurice, ſecond ſon of Maurice lord Berkeley, 11 E. 3. but John Maltravers having found means to make his peace with the king, was reſtored to this eſtate, of which he died ſeized, together with the advowſon of the church, 38 E. 3.

The manor nevertheleſs reverted to the Berkeleys, in conſequence of the above grant to Maurice Berkeley, and continued in his family 'till ſir William Berkeley fled beyond ſea, after the battle of Boſworth-field, and was attainted 1 H. 7. for his attachment to king Richard the Third; whereupon the manors of Rockhampton and Sheppardine, with many others, were granted to Jaſper duke of Bedford, and his heirs male, the ſame year.

But

But ſir William Berkeley being afterwards received into the king's favour, obtained a reverſionary grant of this, and many of his other eſtates, after the duke of Bedford's entail, 4 H. 7. and upon the death of that nobleman, without iſſue, 11 H. 7. came again into poſſeſſion of them, and died in the 16th year of the ſame reign. Richard Berkeley of Stoke-Giffard, ſon of ſir William, died ſeized of Rockhampton 5 H. 8. leaving John, his eldeſt ſon and heir, three years old, who likewiſe held this manor at the time of his death, in the 37th year of that reign. Richard Berkeley, ſon and heir of ſir John, had livery of the manors of Stoke-Giffard and Rockhampton 6 E. 6. and died 2 Jac. 1.

This manor came afterwards to the Willoughbies. Henry Willoughby had livery of it 4 Eliz. Edward Hill of Alveſton was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Pinfold and Mr. Hoſkyns are the preſent lords of the manor.

William Warine held lands in Rockhampton 38 E. 3. William Warren of St. Briavel's, a deſcendant from him, held lands in Rockhampton, of which he died ſeized 14 Eliz. and Warren Goughe, his grandſon, had livery thereof in the 21ſt year of the ſame reign, and together with Dorothy his wife, levied a fine of lands in Rockhampton and Shepardine, in Michaelmas term 12 C. 1.

William Goughe of Woollaſton died ſeized of lands in Rockhampton 5 E. 6. and was ſucceeded by his grandſon George Goughe, ſon of William, who was then ſixteen years old, and had livery of his lands 21 Eliz. as appears by the Ouſter le Mayne ſued out in that year. It may not be improper to take notice that the family name is Goughe, or Gough, not Goffe, as ſir Robert Atkyns has it, which is pronounced Gove, and ſignifies a blackſmith in the Britiſh language. A gentleman of this family being ſo unfortunate as to have his name written Goffe, agreeable to the Engliſh orthography, had a good eſtate given away from him, through the inadvertency of the writer.

John Wither was ſeized of lands in this pariſh, which he left to Margaret his daughter and heireſs, married to Thomas Seger, and died 36 Eliz. Two tenements in Rockhampton belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and were granted to Theophilus Adams and Robert Adams 25 Eliz.

HAMLETS. 1. Rockhampton, of which already.

2. Newton. Philip Jones died ſeized of two meſſuages, and divers lands in Newton in Rockington, alias Rockhampton, Mar. 23, 41 Eliz. and left John Jones, his ſon and heir, eighteen years old. Eſch.

3. Shepardine, lying three miles weſtward from the church, on the bank of the Severn, and conſiſting principally of marſh-land. Here was once a chapel, in which Thomas lord Berkeley founded a chantry 25 E. 3. It has long been converted to profane uſes, but ſtill retains the name of Shepardine chapel. And at this place there was formerly a paſſage over the Severn, but it is now wholly diſuſed.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 100*l.* a year. Mr. Jenner is patron, and the reverend Henry Jenner, M.A. is the preſent incumbent.

Eighteen acres in ſeveral grounds, and eight acres and a half of meadow, belong to the glebe, as ſatisfaction for all tithes in the meadow. Seventy acres of land in the common field are tithe free.

The church, dedicated to St. Oſwald, is ſmall, and has a tower at the weſt end, in which are three bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 26 houſes, and about 120 inhabitants in the pariſh, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 4. Atkyns. But it appears from the regiſter, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 48 baptiſms, and 29 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, there are entered 38 baptiſms, and 35 burials. RODBOROUGH.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Longtree, about three miles weſtward from Minchin-Hampton, one ſouthward from Stroud, and ten ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The lands are pretty equally divided into paſture and arable, and a ſmall brook, riſing at Avening and Horſley, runs through it, and falls into the Froome at Dudbridge, a little below Stroud.

It ſtretches along the north and weſt ſides of a lofty hill, at the top of which the Coteſwold-country commences, whence the great road leads through Hampton, and ſo down this hill to both the paſſages over the Severn next below Glouceſter; on which account Hampton is ſometimes called called Hampton-Road; and Rodborough, which was once a part of that pariſh, and is ſtill in ſome meaſure dependent on it, derives the former part of its name from the ſame Road, but the latter part was taken from the Berg, or Camp, by which the road is carried.

The beautiful villa or ſeat of ſir Oneſiphorus Paul, baronet, called Hill-houſe, erected a few years ago by his late father, is ſituated on an eminence in this pariſh, with a pleaſant proſpect of the river which runs from Nailſworth, of the village of Woodcheſter, and of the populous country towards Stroud and Painſwick. This gentleman's father, the late ſir Oneſiphorus Paul, was appointed high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, and knighted, in the year 1760, and on the 3d of September, 1762, was created a baronet of Great Britain.

Near the ſummit of Rodborough-hill, facing the weſt, ſtands the Fort, a pleaſure-houſe, built ſcarce twenty years ago, after the manner of a caſtle, by George Hawker, eſq; the preſent proprietor. From this place there is a moſt agreeable proſpect of the river Severn, and part of the vale through which it paſſes. There is a large tract of rich country in the fore ground of the landſcape, interſperſed with good houſes, gardens, and highly cultivated plantations and incloſures; and theſe are improved with the beautiful colouring of clothes on the tenters, accompanied with a variety of other objects peculiar to a clothing country. Here the fancy glows, and agreeable ideas riſe of the benefits and extenſiveneſs of trade and manufactures, which flouriſh moſt in free countries; and of the affluence and riches which are at once incitements to, and the rewards of integrity and induſtry.

Mr. James Winchcombe, an eminent clothier, has built a good houſe at a place called Bownham's, ſituate on the brow of the hill northward, where he enjoys a fine healthy air, and a pleaſant proſpect of a well inhabited valley, extending ſeveral miles along the Stroud river from the Golden Valley in Chalford, and gradually opening as it approaches the vale below Stroud.

I have not heard of any very curious natural productions at preſent exiſting in this pariſh; but Richard Clutterbuck, born here in the year 1638, was a perſon of extraordinary endowments. Mr. Timothy Nourſe ſaw him in the year 1698, and relates the following particulars, which I have in his own hand writing. At three years old, this perſon enjoy'd only ſuch a portion of ſight as enabled him to diſcern a difference between white and black, and at twelve he was totally dark, and ſo continued to his death; notwithſtanding which he walked up and down all the uneven ground in the neighbourhood, (and no ground can be more uneven) without a guide. He could tell when an hour-glaſs was run out by his hearing, which was ſo acute as to diſcover the loweſt whiſper in an adjacent room. He was a curious mechanic, and made oatmeal-mills, and pepper-mills, and could make a wheel for a cloth-mill with great advantage. He took a watch in pieces and mended it, and made a handſome chain for his own watch. He made violins, baſs-viols, and citterns, and a ſet of virginals with double jacks, and other improvements which were of his own invention; and play'd on each of thoſe inſtruments. He taught muſic according to a ſcale of his own forming, and cut his notes upon pieces of wood. He ran a race of two hundred yards length, after being turned three times round, in many difficult circumſtances, and could not be deceived. Theſe are ſome of the particulars of this extraordinary man, whom Dr. Plott takes notice of amongſt his curioſities, in his Natural Hiſtory of Staffordſhire.

Sir Leonard Holiday, lord mayor of London in the year 1605, was a native of this place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Rodborough is not to be found in Domeſday, but is included in the account of Hampton. It belonged antiently to a family who took their name from it, of whom Thomas de Rodburg was lord of the manor of Lye, as well as Rodborough, and high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 1 & 4 E. 3. William de Rodborough, ſon and heir of Thomas, ſucceeded him in his eſtates, and dying without iſſue 10 R. 2. Agnes his ſiſter, married to John Browning, meſne lord of Notgrove, was his heir, and had livery of them the ſame year. Richard Browning, ſon and heir of John and Agnes, dying alſo without iſſue 21 H. 4. the manor of Rodborough deſcended to Cicely his ſiſter, married to ſir Guy de Whitington of Pauntley, who died ſeized of the manors of Notgrove, Lye, and Rodborough, in right of his wife, 20 H. 6. Thomas Whitington, the fifth in lineal deſcent from ſir Guy, died ſeized of this manor 38 H. 8. leaving ſix daughters coheireſſes, whereby it paſſed out of the name of Whitington.

Philip Sheppard, of Hampton, eſq; ſon of Samuel Sheppard, died ſeized of it in the year 1713, and Edward Sheppard, of Hampton, eſq; a direct deſcendant from him, is the preſent lord of this manor. See his arms, &c. under Avening.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that Roger Gulden levied a fine of lands in Rodborough and Minchin Hampton to John de Pearle and others 14 R. 2. John Pentour and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Rodborough and Hampton to their own uſe 22 R. 2. John Frye, ſon and heir of John Frye, levied a fine in like manner of lands in Minchin Hampton and Rodborough to John Moody, eſq; 4 E. 4. and he alſo levied another fine of lands in Rodborough and Rookſmore to William Elland 7 H. 7. Lands in Rodborough belonged to the nunnery of Sion in Middleſex, and were granted to Andrew lord Windſor 34 H. 8. Thomas Rogers of Wotton-Baſſet was ſeized of lands in Rodborough by deſcent from his mother 15 Eliz. and he had a poſthumous ſon, Thomas.

There are places of the following names in this parish, beside those already mentioned, viz. Dudbridge, Walbridge, Froomill, Spilman's-Court, Rookſmore, and Lightpill.

Of the Church, &c.

The church lies in the deanery of Stonehouſe, and is a chapel of eaſe to Minchin Hampton, to which it is annexed. The rector of Hampton, by a decree in chancery in the reign of king James the Firſt, is obliged to provide a curate to officiate in this chapel.

Here is a lecture every Sunday morning, endowed with lands, which at preſent yield 56*l.* a year, and are ſpecified under the account of Benefactions. Brazen Noſe college, Oxford, has the appointment of the lecturer, who is generally one of the fellows of that college. Of late years, the rector of Hampton, by agreement, has provided a curate to ſerve the church, and preach the lecture.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen. It has an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a pinnacled tower at the weſt end. The pariſh acknowledges Hampton for the mother church, by the payment of 6*s.* 8*d.* a year towards the repairs of it.

At the eaſt end of the church is a monument for Doctor Stanfield, the greatly reſpected lecturer of this pariſh, and rector of Woodcheſter, who left behind him a great reputation, and whoſe memory is ſtill revered in theſe parts. Under his influence and direction, the clothiers of this pariſh and neighbouring bottoms, by their contributions in cloth and money, intirely clothed the regiment raiſed by ſir John Guiſe, at the revolution in 1688. On the monument is the following inſcription:

Benefactions.

William de Notelyn, and William de Rodborough, gave lands in Biſley called Boerats, Hanſteeds, and Florens, in the reign of king Richard the Second; Hugh de Notelyn of Rookſmore gave lands in King's Stanley in the year 1398; Edmund de Rodborough gave lands called Dunyards and Hanſteeds in the year 1432; and Margery Brimſcomb gave other lands in Biſley in the year 1436; all which were for the maintenance of divine ſervice in the chapel of Rodborough, and for repairing the ſaid chapel. And by a decree in chancery, 2 Jac. 1. certain lands called Dunyards, Hanſteeds, Amberley, and Biſham, and and a wood called Rodborough-wood, lying and being in the pariſhes of Biſley, King's Stanley, Hampton, and Rodborough, were veſted in feoffees for the above purpoſes, 5*l.* a year for repairing the chapel, the remainder for a lecture every Sunday morning.

Thomas Halliday, clothier, gave 100*l.* for ever for teaching three poor boys to read and write, &c.

Note, there is the tithing of Rodborough, in the pariſh of Minchin Hampton, to which the following benefactions properly belong, viz. Mr. Nathaniel Cambridge, Hamborough merchant, who died in 1697, gave 1000*l.* for educating poor boys of Woodcheſter and Rodborough, in reading, writing, and accounts; with which money Saintloe-farm, in the tithing of Rodborough, was purchaſed, and a free ſchool has been eſtabliſhed at Saintloe.

Mr. John Yeats, of Hampton, clothier, and Mr. Benjamin Cambridge, gave 100*l.* each, which ſums are laid out on lands in King's Stanley, for the uſe of the ſame ſchool. And Mr. Richard Cambridge of London, gave 100*l.* to the children of Saintloe ſchool, to be employ'd as his truſtees may think fit.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were, according to him, 160 houſes, and about 750 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 26, burials 34. But the two laſt particulars are very injudiciouſly given, and differ widely from the average numbers of baptiſms and burials. In the year 1756, the burials were 27, and the whole number of ſouls 1481.

RODMARTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Longtree, ſomething more than five miles weſt from Cirenceſter, and above four miles eaſtward inclining to the north from Tetbury, fifteen miles ſouth from Glouceſter, and about eight north from Malmeſbury in Wiltſhire. It is ſituate in a fine, healthy, open country, on the north-weſt ſide of the Roman way leading from Cirenceſter to Bath, which ſeparates it from part of Wiltſhire.

The pariſh conſiſts moſtly of arable land, is totally without wood land, and ſeems almoſt peculiarly unfortunate in having no continual brook or ſtream of water running through it. It is ſuppoſed to have derived its name from its lying on the Roman way, and being on one ſide a boundary of the county; for mer, contracted from merc, ſignifies a boundary; ſo that Rod-mar-ton, (or Red-mer-tone, which is the antient manner of writing the name) ſignifies a boundary town upon the road.

It is a place of conſiderable antiquity, as appears by a teſſellated pavement diſcovered by ſome people at plow, in the year 1636; and Mr. Yate, who was a learned and judicious perſon, and at that time rector of the church, has entered it on record in the pariſh regiſter, from which the following paſſage is literally taken: Hoc anno [1636] in agris in loco Hocberry vocato, dum ſulcos aratro ducunt, diſcooperta ſunt teſſellat. pavimenta, tegulæ quibus ferrei clavi infixi ſubrutæ, nummi quoque ænei Antonini et Valentiniani Imp. Incolæ mihi dixerunt, ſe æneos et argenteos nummos ſepius ibidem reperiſſe, neſcientes quid rei eſſent: A patribus autem audiviſſe, Rodmarton ab illo loco tranſlatam olim ubi nunc eſt poſitam eſſe. Aparet autem ſtationem aliquam Romanorum ibidem aliquando fuiſſe. Which may be thus tranſlated: This year [1636] in a field called Hocberry, as the people were at plow, the plow-ſhare turning up ſome tiles, diſcovered a teſſellated pavement, and they found alſo ſome braſs coins of the emperors Antoninus and Valentinian. The inhabitants told me that they had oftentimes found braſs and ſilver coins, but did not know what they were, and that they had heard their anceſtors ſay, that Rodmarton was formerly removed from that place to where it now ſtands. However, it appears that there was once a Roman ſtation there.

It ſeems this pavement was covered with ſlates, and perhaps other rubbiſh, with a view to its preſervation; for ſince coverings of the ſame kind have been found upon ſeveral other teſſellated pavements, it ſeems not to be a matter of mere chance or accident, but a cautionary method taken by the Romans themſelves when they left this iſland, upon a proſpect of their return hither again.

About the year 366, the Picts and Scots had broke in upon the Roman territories, and committed innumerable outrages, inſomuch that Theodoſius was ſent over hither to prevent a general inſurrection and revolt, as it was feared that the Britons were not a little diſpoſed to join the enemy. And this place lying upon the Roman way, at a convenient diſtance from Corinium, now Cirenceſter, which was a place of ſtrength, and of great conſequence to the Romans, they placed a garriſon here, to give early notice of the approach of any formidable body of the enemy, and to curb the inſolence of ſuch ſmall parties of them as ſhould ſtraggle in their way. This is conſiſtent with their practice in other places of leſs note, where teſſellated pavements have been found, found, and which are ſuppoſed to have belonged to the houſe of ſome principal officer of the garriſon.

The Roman generals, amongſt their other baggage, uſed to carry about with them a quantity of lapilli, or teſſellæ, made of bricks or tiles, not much bigger than dice, ſufficient to pave the place where they ſet the Prætorium, or general's tent, or at leaſt ſome part of it, which is particularly related of Julius Cæſar, by Suetonius, in his Life of that general. And we learn from Salmaſius, in his Commentary on Suetonius, and from Pliny, in his Natural Hiſtory, that ſuch of theſe as were made of ſmall ſquare marbles, of various natural colours, were called Lithoſtrata; but if of ſmall bricks, artificially tinged with colours, they were diſtinguiſhed by different names, as Pavimenta Teſſellata, or Opus Muſivum. But it is ſaid that they had all one common name, Aſarota, from their not being to be ſwept, but wiped with a ſponge.

What figures were repreſented on the pavement I have been ſpeaking of is uncertain, as it is intirely deſtroy'd, and the regiſter gives no further particulars.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars:

'Hugo Maminot holds Redmertone in Langetrew hundred of Giſlebert biſhop of Liſieux, [in Normandy,] and he holds it of the king. There are two hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and one villein, and two bordars, and a prieſt, with one plow-tillage. There are two ſervi. It was worth 4 l. and is now worth 3 l. Leuuinus held it of king Edward.' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

But in the ſame record it is written, 'Oſward holds of the king Redmertone in Langetreu hundred. There are three yard-lands taxed. He held the ſame in the reign of king Edward. There is one plow-tillage. It was worth 20 ſol. now 10 ſol.' Ibid. p. 79.

This Oſward was one of the king's thanes, whoſe eſtate was the ſmaller of the two at that time in Redmertone, but it is not poſſible to ſhew the deſcent of them diſtinctly from each other. All that can be done, is to ſet down the few records relating to this diviſion of the pariſh, in the order of time wherein they were made.

This manor was held of the honour of Glouceſter, by one knight's fee, 47 H. 3. The ſheriff returned that John Maltravers, the abbat of Kingſwood, John Bardone, Stephen de Chiltham, and Peter de la Mare were lords of the vill of Rodmerton 9 E. 1. Peter de Braoſe, or Breuſe, purchaſed a charter of free warren in Rodmerton 29 E. 1. and dying 5 E. 2. left Thomas, his ſon and heir, ten years old. Thomas de Berton died ſeized of Rodmerton 49 E. 3. as did John Langley, of Rodmerton and Torleton 10 H. 4. William Fitz-Warren was ſeized of the manor and advowſon of Rodmarton, and of lands in Torleton, and levied a fine of the ſame to ſir Ralph Boteler and John Edwards, and to the heirs of John, 19 H. 6.

Robert Cox was lord of this manor in the year 1608; ſir Walter Long was proprietor of it in the year 1710; but Charles Coxe, of Kemble in the county of Wilts, eſq; is the preſent lord of it. His arms are, Sable, a chevron between three harts attires, each fixt to its proper ſcalp, argent.

Lands in Rodmerton did belong to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and were granted to John Pope, 37 H. 8.

HAMLETS. 1. Culkerton. There were three ſmall eſtates in this hamlet at the time of the general ſurvey. Of one it is ſaid, 'The ſame 'William [de Owe] holds Culcortorne, and Her-'bert holds it of him. Scireuold held it in the 'reign of king Edward. There are three yard-'lands and five acres. In demean is one plow-'tillage, and three ſervi. It is worth and was 'worth 35 ſol. Radulphus de Limeſi held this 'land; but it was never Aleſtan's.' D. B. p. 73.

The particulars of another are recorded as follow: 'The ſame Durand [de Glowec'] holds 'Culcortone, and Roger Ivri holds it of him. 'There are two hides, and two yard-lands and an 'half. Grim held it. There are two plow-tillages 'in demean, and ſix villeins, with three plow-'tillages. It is worth and was worth 4 lib.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

The third eſtate is thus deſcribed: 'The ſame 'Roger [de Lueri] holds Culcortone. Aluric held 'it, and Anſchitil held it of him. There is one 'hide and a half. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and four ſervi. It was worth 20 ſol. 'but it is now worth 30 ſol.' Dom. Book, p. 75.

This manor belonged to the knights templers, who purchaſed a charter for court leet, waifs, and felons goods in the reign of king Henry the Third, and their claim to theſe privileges was allowed 15 E. 1. Culkerton was held of William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon 28 E. 3 It afterwards came to the Monoxes. Richard Monox died ſeized thereof 5 Mariæ. His ſon Thomas Monox, had livery granted to him the ſame year. Sir William Webb was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Charles Coxe of Lypiat, was lord of it about 1710, and his grandſon, Charles Coxe, of Kemble, eſq; is the preſent proprietor.

Adam de Smethelie granted one meſſuage, and one yard-land in Culkerton, to the abbey of Kingſwood, 5 E. 2.

Milo, conſtable of Glouceſter, gave the tithes of Culkerton to the church of Lanthony, in the year 1137.

2. Haſleden. The greater part of this hamlet is in Rodmarton, the reſt in Cherington. It contains only one farm-houſe. Here are two large tumuli, or barrows, that have never, that I know of, been opened. In Domeſday-book it is thus recorded: 'The ſame Roger [de Lueri] holds 'Haſedene in Langetrewes hundred. There are 'three hides and three yard-lands taxed. Elnoc 'held

'held it in the reign of king Edward. There are 'four plow-tillages in demean, and ſeven half 'villeins, and one bordar, with three plow-tillages, 'and ſeventeen ſervi, and half a mill of 30*d.* and 'fifteen acres of meadow. One Roger held this 'manor of the biſhop of Baieux for 16*l.* After-'wards the biſhop gave it to the ſame Roger with 'the farm.' Domeſday-book, p. 75.

Reginald de St. Waleric, whoſe family name was taken from the port of St. Valerick in Normandy, and whoſe anceſtors came over with the conqueror, was lord of Haſleden about the year 1140. Having been diſſeized of this manor for rebellion againſt king Stephen, he recovered it again, and built a monaſtery for Benedictine monks at this place; but the monks removed hence, for want of water, to Tetbury, where they were not likely to be much better ſupply'd. Thence afterwards they moved, for want of wood, to Kingſwood, where they continued 'till that abbey was diſſolved. The abbey of Kingſwood held Haſleden grange and Culkerton 12 H. 4.

The abbey barn at Haſleden is ſtill remaining, within the eaſt porch of which is this inſcription: ANNO DNI: M°CC°XC°: ÞЄNRICI: ABAtIS: XIX°: FUIt: ISttUM: CONStRUCt. i.e. This was built in the year of our Lord 1290, and in the 19th year of Henry the abbat.

The abbat of Kingſwood paid a yearly penſion of two pounds for lands at Culkerton and Haſeldene, to the prior of Lanthony, ſeveral receipts for which are mentioned in the prior's regiſters.

It is remarkable that the inhabitants of this hamlet have no ſeat-place in either of the churches of Rodmarton or Cherington, wherein it lies; but it is ſaid they have a ſeat at Kingſwood.

This large farm or grange is now the property of lord Ducie.

3. Torleton. Part of this hamlet lies in the pariſh of Cotes. At the time of the general ſurvey, this hamlet lay in the hundred of Cirenceſter. In Domeſday-book it is expreſſed after this manner: 'William de Ow holds one hide in 'Tornentone, in Cireceſtre hundred, and Herbert 'holds it of him. Leuric held it in the reign of 'king Edward, and he might go where he pleaſed. 'There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four 'ſervi. It was worth 40 ſol. It is worth 20 ſol.' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

John Langley was ſeized of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Torleton 18 E. 2. This is now a corps to a prebend of the church of Saliſbury. John Ebden, D.D. a prebendary in that church, was owner of this manor in the year 1608. John Coxe, eſq; is the preſent leſſee, and it has been in that name for many generations. Here is a chapel, but divine ſervice is diſcontinued.

Tithes in Torleton, with the chapel, lately belonging to the Benedictine nunnery at Rumſey in Hampſhire, founded by king Edgar in the year 907, were granted to Giles Pool 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouſe. It is a rectory worth 200*l.* a year. Samuel Lyſons, A.M. is the preſent patron and incumbent. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Oſney in Oxfordſhire. Mr. Yate, a rector of this pariſh, in the year 1641, recovered the tithes of Torleton, having proved it to have been a member of Rodmarton in the 14th year of king Edward the Third.

A yard-land in each field belongs to the glebe.

The church hath two ailes, and a ſpire in the middle. In the north aile were formerly the arms of the family of the Wyes, and the name of Allen in a window of the ſouth aile; whence it ſeems probable that ſome perſons of theſe families either built, or were large contributers towards the building of the reſpective ailes.

Note, this monument was put up many years before Mr. Yate's death, as I find by a memorandum which he made himſelf in the regiſter. i.e. Menſe Decembri hujus anni mortalitatis memor, ipſe mihi poſui tale monumentum in Cancello. He died Jan. 13, 1668.

Within the rails in the chancel, on a blue ſtone,

In the ſouth aile, againſt the wall, is a handſome marble monument, with this inſcription:

Near this place lie the Remains of the Reverend John Coxe M.A. Rector of North Cerney in this county, and of this pariſh. He was what his holy Profeſſion called upon him to perſwade others to be. The duties he conſtantly taught he as conſtantly tranſcribed into his own practice, and was therefore an eminent example of all thoſe virtues that ought to be endearing to mankind (which was the chief view) that he knew well pleaſing to his God. Reader, if thou canſt be prevailed upon to learn from him how to live, thou wilt ſecure to thyſelf the ineſtimable bleſſing of dying the death of the Righteous. He died on the 14th of February, in the year of our Lord 1730, and the 75th of his age.——Arms, at top, Sable, a chevron between three bucks attires with the ſcalps argent.

In the north aile are ſeveral flat ſtones over the family of the Coxes. On one of them, Here lyeth the body of Mary the daughter of John Coxe, Gent. dec^d. and wife of George White, Gent. who departed this life the 12th Day of November, 1693.

Heavens grant it to the world no ill preſage,

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when his account of this pariſh was publiſh'd, there were 37 houſes, and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. But the following is a true ſtate of the regiſter. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were 38 baptiſms, and 31 burials. In a like ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, the births were 100, and the burials 43. The exact number of houſes is 56, of inhabitants 241; ſo that upon an average of ten years, the proportion of annual burials to the number of ſurviving inhabitants, is nearly as 1 to 56; an inconteſtible proof of the healthy ſituation of this place, where the inhabitants are increaſing very faſt.

RUDFORD

IS a ſmall pariſh, lying one part in the hundred of Botloe, the other in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's Barton, five miles diſtant ſouth-eaſtward from Newent, nine north-eaſt from Mitchel Dean, and four north-weſtward from Glouceſter.

The pariſh is bounded on the north by the river Leden, and a ſmall brook which riſes at Tainton runs through it, in its courſe to that river. Rudford may be ſo called from the Road at the Ford, or from the Redneſs of the ſoil there; for red was called Rud by our Saxon anceſtors. But if neither of theſe conjectures ſhould be ſatisfactory to the reader, it does not occur to me upon what other occaſion the name was given it.

The ſoil is deep and good, but it is in a bad ſtate reſpecting cultivation. The greater part is paſture, with orcharding and arable. The manor and moſt of the lands are held by leaſe under the church of Glouceſter, whence it happens, that, except the manor houſe, there is ſcarcely a habitable dwelling in the village. I mean not to reflect on that reverend body, for it is in general the caſe with the eſtates held under all fluctuating proprietaries, whoſe intereſt in ſuch eſtates being only for a ſhort duration, they will not be at the expence of improvements from which they cannot expect to reap ſuitable advantages. This is an evil which can only be lamented, as perhaps it does not admit of a remedy.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Madoch holds Rudeford, in Botelau hundred, 'of the king. He held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are two hides. In demean are 'two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and four 'bordars, with three plow-tillages; and a mill 'paying as much corn [annonam] as can be earned 'by it. It is worth and was worth 40*s.*' D. B. p. 80.

King William the Second gave Rodesford to the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter, when Serlo was abbat. Winebald de Balun, a great baron, with the conſent of Roger his ſon, gave the manor of Rudford to the ſame church, in the year 1126. The abbat of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manors of Rudford, Leden, and Mude Leden, and his right to free warren was allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

The abbey continued poſſeſſed of the manor 'till the diſſolution, when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. Mr. Edward Holder is the preſent leſſee of the manor under the dean and chapter. His arms are, Sable, a chevron between three anchors argent.

HAMLET. High Leden is a hamlet in this pariſh, and in the hundred of Dudſton and King's Barton. Richard de Wigmore gave his lands in Hyneledene, with the groves, paſtures, meadows, and all appurtenances, which had belonged to Jeoffry de le Dene, to the abbey of Glouceſter, in the year 1239. And king Edward the Third, by his charter, dated 23 Dec. in the 28th year of his reign, granted to the abbey of Glouceſter, free warren in all their demean lands in Hyneledene.

The tithes of High Leden were granted to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Foreſt deanery, worth 80*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons, and Mr. George Biſhop is the preſent incumbent.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a tower at the weſt end.

RUERDEAN

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in the Foreſt diviſion, two miles ſouth-weſtward from Mitchel Dean, five ſouthward from Roſs in Herefordſhire, and about fourteen weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on the eaſt by Great and Little Dean, on the north by Herefordſhire, on the ſouth by the Foreſt, and on the weſt by the river Wye, which ſeparates it from Welch Bicknor, a detached pariſh in Monmouthſhire.

It is called Ruerdean, (ſuppoſed to be a corruption of Riverdean) becauſe it is ſituated upon the river Wye, and to diſtinguiſh it from the neighbouring places of Mitchel Dean and Little Dean. All theſe places abound with pit-coal and iron ore, of which more is delivered under the general account of the Foreſt.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book takes no notice of this manor, as diſtinct from the other Deans, whence I conclude that they became ſeparate manors ſince that record was compiled.

William de Alba Mara died ſeized of an eſtate called Ruerdean 40 H. 3. Thomas Deverty held the ſame, and St. Briavel's caſtle, 21 E. 1.

The ſheriff returned that Alexander de Byknore and William Hatheway were lords of the vill of Rewardyne 9 E. 1. Alexander de Byknore held one meſſuage in Ruerdean and Ludbrook, with the bailiwicks of Ruerdean and St. Briavel's caſtle in the foreſt of Dean, 34 E. 1.

A manor in Ruerdean belonged to the abbey of Flaxley, at the diſſolution, and was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton 36 H. 8. It was ſoon after conveyed to the Baynhams. Thomas Baynham and Joſeph Baynham were lords of this manor in the year 1608, from whoſe family it paſſed to the Vaughans. John Vaughan, eſq; was lord of the manor about the beginning of this century, and the ſiſters and coheireſſes of Richard Clark, of the Hill, in Herefordſhire, eſq; are the preſent proprietors of the manor.

Hatheways was a diſtinct manor, antiently, and for many generations, enjoyed by a conſiderable family of the ſame name. Thus the ſheriff returned that William Hatheway was lord of Rewardyne, as before recited, 9 E. 1. The eſcheator's inquiſition found that William Hatheway died 10 E. 2. ſeized of ſeveral lands and tenements in Ruardyne, which he held of Alexander de Bykenore, paying 4*s.* 9*d.* yearly, and left William Hatheway his ſon and heir. Thomas Hatheway died ſeized thereof 5 R. 2. and William Walleyn was ſeized of a tenement called Hatheways, 11 E. 4. This eſtate came afterwards to the Baynhams, and the diſtinction of the manors was by that means loſt by unity of poſſeſſion.

Walter de Clare was ſeized of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Ruerdean, 18 E. 2. Alexander Carent was ſeized of a mill, and of a yearly rent in Ruerdean, 50 E. 3. and John Carent, his ſon, was ſeized of the ſame mill, and of a yearly rent of 26*s.* 8*d.* in Ruerdean 6 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Roſs, worth 15*l.* a year, to which the vicar of Walford in Herefordſhire preſents. Mr. Jones is curate. The ſmall tithes belong to the miniſter, and the great tithes to the præcentor of Hereford.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, is large, and has a handſome ſpire at the weſt end.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 100 houſes in the pariſh, and about 500 inhabitants, 12 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 13. The preſent number of inhabitants is about 758.

SAINTBURY.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, about two miles weſtward from Campden, five ſouth-eaſt from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, and about twenty-ſix north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The preſent manner of writing the name is a deviation from the antient and true orthography, and proceeded originally from want of knowing the true ſignification of it. In Domeſday it is written Suineberie, (i. e. Suine's, or Swain's Camp,) and it was ſo called from the Berg, or Camp, not far above the church, where the intrenchments are ſtill viſible, which the inhabitants call Caſtle-Bank.

This camp, which has ſo fixed its name on the pariſh, ſeems to have been dependent on another very large one, higher up on the top of the hill, incloſing near ſixty acres of ground, raiſed probably by the ſame people, and ſtill remaining pretty perfect; but the latter lies in the adjoining pariſh pariſh of Willerſey. Suine, or Swain, to whom theſe intrenchments are attributed, was undoubtedly one of thoſe Daniſh locuſts who for many years carried deſolation wherever they went, and raiſed moſt exorbitant contributions all over England, and occaſioned that grievous tax called Dane Geld, which was at length ſtatedly levied on the people, and continued for ſeveral ages before the nation could get rid of it.

The village of Saintbury is ſituated on the north-weſt ſide of the great hill country, facing the vale of Eveſham, with a ſteep aſcent from the houſes to the church. It conſiſts of a few farm houſes and cottages, but affords nothing worth the traveller's attention.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Haſcoit Muſard holds Suineberie in Witelai 'hundred of the king. Chenuicelle held it. There 'are ten hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, 'and eighteen villeins, and three bordars, with 'nine plow-tillages, and ten among the ſervi and 'ancillæ, and a mill of 6*d*. It was worth 12*l*. 'now 10*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

Of the above Haſcoit Muſard, many particulars are ſet down under Miſerden. Richard Muſard was ſon and heir of Haſcoit, and Haſcoit the ſecond, was ſon and heir of Richard, and held fifteen knights fees 12 H. 2. He died 33 H. 2. and was ſucceeded by Ralph his ſon and heir, who had livery of this manor 2 R. 1. and paid 100*l*. for his relief. He married Iſabel, the widow of John de Nevill, without the king's licence, and paid 100 marks for his tranſgreſſion. He was a baron, and built the caſtle of Miſerden, and was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire from the 17 Joh. to 9 H. 3. and died in the 14th year of the laſt mentioned reign.

Walter de Abbytot was ſeized of this manor 1 Joh. but it is probable that it was only in truſt, for the manor continued in the Muſards for ſeveral generations after.

Robert Muſard, ſon of Ralph, entered upon his lands without ſueing forth livery, wherefore his caſtle of Miſerden, and all his eſtates, were ſeized into the king's hands, but were ſhortly after reſtored upon compoſition. He died without iſſue 24 H. 3. leaving Ralph Muſard, his brother and heir, a minor, whoſe wardſhip was granted by the crown to Jeffery Deſpencer, in conſideration of 500 marks. Ralph had livery of his lands 31 H. 3. and died in the 49th year of that reign, leaving Ralph his ſon and heir, who died ſeized of this manor and of Muſarden 1 E. 1. John Muſard, the next poſſeſſor, died 17 E. 1. Maſculine Muſard became ſeized of this manor 28 E. 1. and in the 31ſt year of that reign granted it to the abbey of Eveſham; but he continued in poſſeſſion 2 E. 2.

It appears by the records, that this eſtate was afterwards in lay hands, but they could only be tenants, or truſtees for the abbey. Thus we find that Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and others, were ſeized of Seinbury in truſt, 24 E. 3. and John Rouſe, and others, held the ſame 49 E. 3.

The abbey of Eveſham was ſeized of the manor of Seinſbury, and of the impropriation of the church, in the reign of king Richard the Second, and continued in poſſeſſion 'till the general diſſolution of religious houſes.

The manor, and two mills, lately belonging to the abbey of Eveſham, were granted to Richard Bartlet 35 H. 8. whoſe ſon, Richard Bartlet, had livery 20 Eliz. He married Alice, daughter of —— Ruding of Worceſterſhire, and left Henry, his eldeſt ſon and heir, who married the daughter of —— Dutton, of Dutton in Cheſhire, but died without iſſue. Sir Thomas Bartlet, brother of Henry, had livery of this manor 25 Eliz. He married Mary, daughter of ſir John Dauntiſer, and was ſucceeded by John Bartlet, who married Jane, daughter of Robert Kelway of Dorſetſhire.

From the Bartlets the manor paſſed to the Brawnes. Sir Hugh Brawne was lord of it in the year 1608, and the three coheireſſes of the family of Brawne were proprietors of it at the beginning of this century. Hugh Brawne, eſq; was lord of this manor at the time of his death, in the year 1726. It has ſince been purchaſed by Mr. Joſeph Roberts, who is the preſent proprietor.

An eſtate in this pariſh, ſometimes alſo called a manor, conſiſting of lands and tithes, belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. Other tithes in Saintbury, alias Senebrig, belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 170*l*. a year. The rev. Mr. Hudſon Boyce, the preſent rector, has two turns in the preſentation, and the lord of the manor has the third.

The manor having belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, the demeans thereof are free from tithes.

A piece of ground is aſſigned to the miniſter, in ſatisfaction for incloſures.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and has a chapel on the north, and a ſteeple on the ſouth ſide, in which are ſix bells.

Salperton, or Cold Salperton,

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Bradley, twelve miles north from Cirenceſter, ſix ſouth-weſtward from Winchcombe, four north-weſtward from Northleach, and ſixteen eaſtward from Gloucester.

It lies very high and bleak on the Coteſwold, for which reaſon it obtained the addition of Cold. Notwithſtanding this expoſed ſituation, agriculture is carried on with a ſpirit and ſucceſs that do honour to the occupiers, and ſhame the indolence of many of the vale country farmers, who, with every advantage of a richer ſoil, and milder air, trudge on in the old beaten track of their anceſtors, almoſt without an attempt at improvement. It is diſguſting to ſee ſome of the beſt land in the county lie in a miſerable, unimproved ſtate, while the Coteſwold-hills, naturally bleak and barren, have, within a few years paſt, been rendered fruitful by judicious management, and the occupiers are become a thriving and opulent people.

The downs and common fields in this pariſh have been lately incloſed, greatly to the intereſt of the landholder, and no leſs to the advantage of the labouring people, becauſe thoſe lands, now chiefly converted to tillage, afford more conſtant and abundant employment for the labouring poor than in their former condition.

A ſmall ſtream riſes here, and runs down to Sherborne, in its courſe to the Windruſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It was worth 9*l.* now 7*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

Among the particulars of the eſtates of the church of Worceſter, it is ſaid, 'Of the land 'belonging to this manor [Clive] Ralph holds four 'hides in Sapletone of the church.' Ibid. p. 70.

The knights templers were ſeized of the manor, and had a grant of court leet, waifs, and felons goods from king Henry the Third, which they pleaded in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and thoſe privileges were then allowed. The ſame knights continued ſeized of the manor 2 E. 3. when it was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon.

The manor was afterwards granted to the Benedictine nunnery of Stodely in Oxfordſhire, founded by Bernard de St. Waleric in the reign of king Henry the Second, and valued, at the diſſolution, at 102*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.* After the diſſolution, the manor was granted to Wincheſter college, to which it ſtill belongs. Thomas Browne, eſq; is the preſent leſſee of the manor, and proprietor of all the freehold lands in the pariſh. He has a very good ſtone-built houſe near the church, where he reſides.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow, worth 8*l.* a year from the impropriator. Mr. Browne is patron and impropriator, and Mr. Lawrence is the preſent incumbent. The living has been twice augmented with the queen's bounty.

Robert de Chandos, who came in with the Conqueror, gave the advowſon of the church of Salperton to the monks of Lyra in Normandy. The impropriation was afterwards appropriated to the uſe of the nunnery of Stodely; and upon the diſſolution of that houſe, it was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt, 35 H. 8. The fee of the impropriation was veſted in Mr. Bee, about the beginning of this century, and was ſold, by him, to Mr. Coſley of Briſtol; of whom it was purchaſed by the earl of Weſtmoreland, and ſold to Thomas Browne, eſq; the preſent proprietor, who pays 4*s.* a year out of it to the crown.

About ſeventy years ago, when ſir Robert Atkyns collected the materials for his Hiſtory, there were in this pariſh 15 houſes, and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly birth 2, burials 1. But ſince that period, the condition of this country has been greatly altered. The downs and commons, which were eaſily managed by two or three ſhepherds and herdſmen, have been incloſed, and converted to tillage; and new cottages have been erected, ſo that the preſent number of houſes is 23, of inhabitants 155.

SANDHURST, or SANTHURST.

THIS pariſh lies in the Vale, in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton, thirteen miles eaſt from Newent, ſeven ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and three north from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the north by Norton, on the eaſt by Twigworth, on the ſouth by Longford, and on the weſt by the river Severn.

The ſoil is ſandy next the river, and being anciently overgrown with wood, gave occaſion to the name of the pariſh, which is ſuppoſed to be compounded of Sand, and of the Saxon word ȝeȝȝc, a wood. The reſt of the pariſh is much inclined to clay, and conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſturage, with about a hundred acres of arable in common field.

Walſworth is a very handſome ſeat in this pariſh, belonging to Samuel Hayward, eſq; who has a good eſtate here, and in ſeveral other parts of the county. The houſe is new, with proper offices, and the gardens are well laid out, and very pleaſant. He has favoured the public with an elegant engraving of it, to decorate this work.

Not far from this houſe, there is a ſpring of medicinal or purging water, like the Cheltenham ſpaw, but it is ſometimes dry in the ſummer. And there is alſo a ſalt-ſpring, upon the diſcovery of which, about twenty years ſince, a pit was opened to a conſiderable depth, with an intention of erecting a ſalt-work; but not proving ſo ſtrong as was expected, that project was then dropt, and the mouth of the pit ſtopt up with bricks to prevent accidents.

Part of Wainlode's-hill lies in Sandhurſt, the reſt in Norton. It does not riſe to any great height, but ſtretching along the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the Severn, affords an extenſive proſpect over that part of the vale country, which lies flat and low, and therefore, in wet ſeaſons, is ſubject to inundations from the river.

Two brooks, which riſe at Shurdington and Witcombe, after uniting their ſtreams, fall into the Severn near Ablode's Court. The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Tewkeſbury, and ſo to Worceſter, paſſes through the pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Edmar, a thane, held three manors in Dudeſtan 'hundred, Herſefel, Athelai, and Sanher. That 'ſame man could give or ſell his land to whom 'he pleaſed. This eſtate claimed to be taxed but 'for two hides [pro ii hidis ſe defendebat]. In demean are eight plow-tillages, and four villeins, 'and four bordars, and thirty ſervi, with five 'plow-tillages. There is meadow ſufficient for 'the plowed land.'

'Earl Herald took away theſe five eſtates '[Herſefel, Athelai, Sanher, Herſecome, and 'Broſtrop] after the death of king Edward, and 'Robert de Lurei put them to farm for 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*' Domeſday-book, p. 67.

This manor, ſoon after the Norman conqueſt, belonged to the family of de Willington, from whom the manor houſe obtained the name of Willington-Court. Ralph de Willington and Olimpias his wife gave ſix ridges of land behind Ablode Court in this pariſh to the abbey of Glouceſter 12 H. 1. The ſheriff returned that John de Willington and the abbat of St. Peter at Glouceſter were lords of Sandhurſt 9 E. 1. John de Willington had a charter of free warren in Sandhurſt 4 E. 2. and died ſeized of this manor, and thoſe of Ablington in Bibury, Poulton in Awre, Frampton Cotterel, and Yate, 12 E. 3. Sir Ralph de Willington, ſon of John, held the ſame manors, and Weſtonbirt, at the time of his death 22 E. 3. whereupon livery was granted the following year to Henry his ſon, who was living 26 E. 3. John de Willington, ſon of Henry, was ſeized of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Frampton Cotterel, Sandhurſt, and Moreſlade, adjoining to Sandhurſt, WALLSWORTH-HALL.

T. Bonner delin. et Sculpr. 1772.

To Samuel Hayward Esq.r of WALLSWORTH HALL, in the County of Gloucester.

This Plate is Inscribed by his most obliged humble Servant

S. Rudder.

2 R. 2. and his ſon, Ralph de Willington, was lord of the ſame manors, and of Culverden in this pariſh, at the time of his death 6 R. 2. Joan his wife ſurvived him, and was endowed with the third part of the manor of Sandhurſt. She was afterwards married to Thomas Weſt, whom ſhe likewiſe ſurvived, and died ſeized of her third part, and of tenements in Moreſlade, 6 H. 4. Ralph, ſon and heir of Ralph and Joan de Willington, died 19 R. 2. poſſeſſed of the other two thirds of the manor, and was ſucceeded by his brother John de Willington, who died without iſſue 20 R. 2. ſeized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Weſtonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, Sandhurſt, and Culverden and Moreſlade in Sandhurſt, all in the county of Glouceſter, which thereupon came to Joan, his ſiſter and heireſs, who was married to John Wrath. John Wrath, ſon of John, and of Joan de Willington, died without iſſue 13 H. 4. and ſir John Wadham was ſeized of this manor the ſame year; but he could be only in truſt, for the laſt mentioned John Wrath left his two ſiſters coheireſſes to his great eſtate; Elizabeth, married to ſir William Poulton, and Iſabel, the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the ſixth part of this and other manors, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to Iſabel the widow of William Beaumont. They dying without iſſue, Iſabel became poſſeſſed of the whole family eſtate, which after the death of her ſon John Beaumont, without iſſue, deſcended to Iſabel her daughter, who died unmarried 2 H. 6. ſeized of the manors of Ablington, Poulton, Yate, Weſtonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurſt, all which were the patrimony of her anceſtors the Willingtons.

Sir Thomas Beaumont, kinſman and next heir to Iſabel, ſucceeded her, and dying 29 H. 6. this manor deſcended to his ſon, ſir William Beaumont, (in ſome records ſtiled William Beaumont, eſq;) who died in the thirty ſecond year of the ſame reign. Philip Beaumont, brother and heir of William, died 13 E. 4. ſeized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Weſtonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurſt, of all which Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, John Baſſet and Elizabeth his wife, John Beaumont, clerk, John Chicheſter and Margaret his wife, and John Croker and Anne his wife, levied ſeveral fines 16, 18, & 20 H. 7. to Richard biſhop of Durham, and other biſhops and great perſons, (among whom was Giles lord d'Aubeny) probably for the uſe of the king.

This and the before recited manors were granted to Giles lord d'Aubeny, who died ſeized of them 6 H. 8. and livery was granted to his ſon Henry lord d'Aubeny the ſame year. They afterwards reverted to the crown, and were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, upon whoſe attainder they came again to the crown. James Baſſet obtained a grant of the manors of Yate, Ablington, Weſtonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurſt, 4 Mariæ, and the grant was confirmed to Arthur Baſſet 7 Eliz.

The manor of Sandhurſt came afterwards to the Winſton's. Philip Winſton, of Willington Court, died in the year 1672, and lies buried in the church. John Viney, eſq; was lord of the manor of Sandhurſt-Willington at the beginning of this century, and John Viney, eſq; a deſcendant of the above John, is the preſent proprietor.

Ablode's Court, written Abbelode in the time of king Edward the Firſt, is another reputed manor, ſituate on the ſouth ſide of the pariſh, and was ſo called, becauſe it belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and lies at the place where a brook empties itſelf into the Severn; for to ſuch a confluence the name of Lade, or Lode, was frequently given by our Saxon anceſtors.

King Henry the Firſt granted lands in Ablode, and the grove of Barton, called Paygrove, to the abbey of Glouceſter, in exchange for the place where the tower of the cathedral now ſtands, which was then an orchard belonging to the monks. The ſame king, in the 9th year of his reign, further granted to the abbey ſix ridges of land behind Ablode's Court. Ralph de Willington and Olimpias his wife gave ſix other ridges of land behind Ablode's Court to the ſame abbey 12 H. 1.

The ſheriff returned, that the abbat of St. Peter of Glouceſter was lord of a moiety of Sandhurſt 9 E. 1. and it is probable that the abbat's part was what is now called Ablode. The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Abbelode 17 E. 3. and had three carucates of land there, worth 14*s.* each; rents of aſſize worth two marks; profits of the ſtock 10*s.* compoſition for work and taxes 6*s.* total 4*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* and the ſame houſe had free warren in all their demean lands there 28 E. 3.

The manor continued in the abbey 'till the general diſſolution, after which it was granted, together with half a wood called Woolridge in Ablode, to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter 33 H. 8.

By an ordinance of parliament, Apr. 3, 1648, the ſeite or farm of the manor of Ablode, which belonged to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, and the yearly rent thereof, being 22*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* was ſettled upon the mayor and burgeſſes of that city, for the ſupport of preaching miniſters. But after the Reſtoration of king Charles the Second, this ordinance was annulled, and the dean and chapter were reinſtated in the manor of Ablode, which is now in leaſe from them to George-Auguſtus Selwyn, eſq; whoſe arms are given under Matſon.

Bruerne, is another antient manor in this pariſh, ſuppoſed to have been ſo called from the French word Bruyer, a heath, which might have been perfectly deſcriptive of its condition at the time the name was given it. A fair for cattle was formerly held here.

'Ældred archbiſhop [of York] claims Brewere, 'one member of this manor [Bertune]. There 'are three yard-lands, and three men. Milo 'Criſpin holds it.' Domeſday-book, p. 67.

'Milo Criſpin holds three yard-lands in Bruurne 'in Dudeſtan hundred. Wigot held them. There 'is one plow-tillage in demean, and ſeven bordars, 'with two plow-tillages, and half a fiſhery. It 'was worth 40*s*. now 30*s*.' Ib. p. 78.

In the extracts out of the pipe rolls in the exchequer, formerly ſent to the ſheriffs of the city of Glouceſter for levying certain ſums, it is ſaid, De Almerico de Parco de firma duarum virgatum terræ in Brawer 12 den. This Almeric of the Park was lord of the manor of Brawer in the reign of king Henry the Third. John le Boteler was ſeized of the manor of Bruarne, and of the Barton near Glouceſter 15 E. 1. at which time his right to ſeveral privileges in this manor was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto. John le Boteler of Lanſart held the ſame 2 E. 3. Beatrix le Boteler was ſeized of Bruarne, which ſhe held of the manor of Berton 33 E. 3. John Boteler of the Park held the manors of the Park in Haresfield, Morecot in Minſterworth, Bruarne, and Kingſholme, 36 E. 3. Elianor le Boteler held Bruerne and Kingſholme 46 E. 3. John Kenn died ſeized of the manors of Hardwick, la Bruerne in Sandhurſt, the Park in Haresfield, and Morecot in Minſterworth 6 H. 4. The late Thomas Vernon, eſq; died about the year 1775, poſſeſſed of this eſtate, by purchaſe from the deſcendants of the late general Carpenter.

Culverden, is another antient manor in this pariſh, the lordſhip of which is very extenſive. It has already been ſhewn, in the deſcent of the manor of Sandhurſt, that Culverden was part of the poſſeſſions of the antient family of de Willington, and it ſeems very probable that it paſſed through the ſame hands with Sandhurſt, down to the reign of king Henry the Seventh.

Chriſtopher Throckmorton died ſeized of Culverden 5 H. 8. and William his ſon had livery thereof, and of twenty meſſuages in Sandhurſt, the ſame year. Livery of the manor of Culverden was granted to Thomas Throckmorton 9 Eliz.

It came afterwards to the family of Bell, and was purchaſed, after the death of Mr. William Bell of Glouceſter, by Samuel Hayward, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor, who has built a handſome ſeat at Wallſworth, as mentioned in the introductory part of this account. His arms are, Argent, on a bend ſable, between two roſes gules, a roſe between as many fleurs de lis Or; on a chief of the ſecond a lion paſſant of the fourth.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that Robert le Savage held lands in Sandhurſt 44 H. 3. Adam de Ardeen was ſeized of lands in Sandhurſt and Culverden 56 H. 3. Robert de Aſton held lands in Sandhurſt 23 E. 3. of which John de Aſton, his ſon, died ſeized 7 R. 2. John Gaby, alias Withely, was poſſeſſed of one meſſuage, forty-two acres of arable, and ſix acres of meadow in Sandhurſt, 15 R. 2. Edward Brug held lands in Sandhurſt 16 H. 4. and Edward Brug, eſq; died ſeized of lands and tenements in the ſame place 15 H. 6. Two yard-lands in Sandhurſt belonged to the Auguſtin nunnery of St. Mary and St. Margaret at Dartford in Kent, which was founded by king Edward the Third, in the year 1373, and valued, at the diſſolution, at 400*l*. 8*s*. a year. Theſe lands were granted to Thomas Babington 36 H. 8. at which time they were in the poſſeſſion of Richard Amenell. Other lands in Sandhurſt, then in the tenure of Richard Gibbs, were granted to William Wit and William Bryton 2 Mariæ. Richard Wight died ſeized of ſix acres of meadow in Sandhurſt 44 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 63*l*. a year, including 30*l*. a year given by Mr. Giles Coxe, for a lecture ſermon every Sunday morning. The biſhop of Briſtol is patron and impropriator.

The rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Santhurſt belonged to the monaſtery of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and were granted to the biſhoprick of Briſtol 34 H. 8. and valued, in a ſurvey taken about that time, at 10*l*. 19*s*. Willis.

The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence, and conſiſts of the nave and chancel, with a low tower, in which are ſix bells, at the weſt end. The pews are in the old taſte, but in exceeding good preſervation. The church is fitted up with three handſome galleries, and the chancel has lately been repaired and ornamented at a very conſiderable expence, by the munificence of Samuel Hayward, and Thomas Vernon, eſq^rs.

Benefactions.

Giles Cox, of Ablode's Court, gent. in the year 1626, by his will, gave 30*l. per ann.* for a lecture ſermon in this church. He likewiſe gave a portion of rent iſſuing out of an eſtate in Upton St. Leonard's, (being originally the ſum of 5*l.*) to be divided among the poor labourers of this pariſh that receive no alms.

William Hayward, of Willington's Court, gent. built a gallery in the church; and in the year 1646, gave 5*l.* towards building the vicarage houſe; the Book of Martyrs, in two volumes; and a large ſilver bowl for the communion ſervice. He likewiſe ſubjected his eſtate to a rent charge of 3*l.* a year to find bread and wine for a monthly ſacrament for ever.

Thomas Church, gent. gave a houſe in Glouceſter, of the yearly rent of 2*l.* 10*s.* which is to be received by the churchwardens and overſeers, and by them to be diſtributed (after deducting 2*s.* 6*d.* for chief rent and their trouble) to twenty-four poor perſons of this pariſh not receiving alms.

Richard Cox, gent. and —— —— gave ſix acres of land in the pariſhes of Norton and Down Hatherley, and one acre in this pariſh, for the repair of the church houſe; or if that ſhould not want repairing, then for ſome other charitable uſe.

Mr. Shewell gave the intereſt of 40*l.* to buy coal for the poor.

In the year 1562, there were 42 houſholders in the whole pariſh; about the beginning of the preſent century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 60 houſes, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 8. The people are now reduced to about 260 ſouls.

SAPERTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Biſley, five miles diſtant north-eaſtward from Minchin-Hampton, five weſt from Cirenceſter, and fourteen ſouth-eaſt from Glouceſter.

The little river Froome runs by, and ſeparates Biſley from Saperton, and gives name to Frampton, a hamlet in this pariſh, ſtretching along the ſide of that river.

This village enjoys a healthy air, but it has long ſince been deprived of its greateſt ornament, the large and handſome manor houſe, which ſtood near the church, and was formerly the reſidence of the Atkyns family.

In the month of February, 1759, there was a large quantity of Roman coins found near a place called Lark's Buſh, in the hamlet of Frampton, by a waggon caſually paſſing over and breaking the urns that contained them. They had ſuffered by ruſt as little as could be expected from lying ſo long under ground, for they are ſuppoſed to have been placed there by the Romans. They were ſoon diſperſed into many hands, but no perſon, I believe, collected a more compleat ſeries of them than Mr. James Dallaway, who has favoured me with the following particulars.

Not far diſtant from the place where the above coins were depoſited, are the remains of a camp, where it is ſuppoſed thoſe ſoldiers were poſted to whom the money belonged. When this treaſure was hid is uncertain, but ſome probable conjectures may be formed of the occaſion of it.

It was a prudential maxim with the Romans to conceal their money before they were drawn out to battle, or went on diſtant expeditions, leſt any part ſhould fall into the hands of the enemy; and becauſe the ſoldiery had relaxed in this neceſſary precaution, it is related by Sparcian, that Peſcennius Niger publiſhed an edict, commanding them to carry no gold nor ſilver coin with them at any ſuch time. This money, therefore, muſt have been concealed immediately before ſome engagement or expedition, from which the owners never returned; or elſe, perhaps, was hid at the time of the final departure of the Romans out of Britain, which happened in the year 476, when, by their troubles at home, they were unable to return any more.

Upon a high ſpot of ground, a little ſouth-eaſtward of the camp, ſtood an antient beacon, wherefore the field is called the Beacon-field, and the turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Minchin Hampton and Stroud leads through it, cloſe by the beacon-hill.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Under the title Terra Roberti de Todeni it is recorded after this manner:

'Robert de Todeni holds Sapeltorne and Frantone, in Biſelege hundred. There are five hides in each. Ulf held them. There are ſeven plow-tillages in demean, and ſeventeen villeins, and nine bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There are thirteen ſervi, and two mills of 6*s.* and a wood half a mile long, and two furlongs broad. Theſe two manors together were worth 14*l.* in the time of king Edward, and are now worth 16*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

The above Ulf might poſſibly be the fourth ſon of king Harold, who had a ſon of the name of Ulf, or Wolfe, according to Speed. In ſir Robert Atkyns's quotation from Domeſday, it is ſaid, He was third Son of King Harold, and therefore in the Reign of King William the Conqueror, he was deprived of theſe manors, and confined, &c. But the record ſays no ſuch thing, and the whole paſſage printed in Italics was injudiciouſly inſerted by the compiler of the Ancient and Preſent State of Gloceſterſhire.

Robert de Todeni gave a plow-tillage in Saperton to the priory which he had founded at Belvoir in Lincolnſhire, to pray for the ſoul of Adela his wife. He died ſeized of Great Riſindon, Horedon, Saperton, and Frampton, in Glouceſterſhire, in the year 1088, and the manors of Saperton and Frampton deſcended from him to the ſeveral proprietors, as it is related of Great Riſington, down to the time of king Richard the Second, when one moiety thereof was veſted in William de Liſle, who died 8 R. 2. and Anchoret, widow of Henry Huſſey, the elder, was endowed with the other moiety of Saperton, and died in the 13th year of the ſame reign.

Sir William Nottingham purchaſed both the moieties, and died without iſſue, ſeized of the intire manor, 2 R. 3. leaving it to Elizabeth his wife, for her life, the reverſion in truſtees.

Richard

Richard Poole, of Cotes, ſon of John Poole, of the antient family of that name in Cheſhire, married Elizabeth, the widow of ſir William Nottingham, and purchaſed the inheritance of the manor from the truſtees, 7 H. 7. and was high ſheriff of the county in the 13th year of the ſame reign. Sir Leonard Poole, ſon of Richard, ſucceeded to this manor, and marrying Katherine, daughter of ſir Giles Brydges, died 30 H. 8. Sir Giles Poole, ſon of ſir Leonard, married Elizabeth, one of the ſix daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas Whitington of Pauntly. He ſerved the office of high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, in the year 1565, and died in 1588. Sir Henry Poole ſucceeded his father ſir Giles in this manor, and was eminent for his great houſekeeping and hoſpitality. He married Anne, daughter of ſir William Wroughton, and having ſerved the office of high ſheriff 31 Eliz. died in 1616, and lies buried under a noble monument in Saperton church. Sir Henry Poole, ſon of ſir Henry, was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 8 C. 1. and married Beatrix, daughter of Grey lord Chandos. He was ſequeſtered for his attachment to the royal cauſe in the great civil war, and paid 1494*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* compoſition for his eſtates. Sir William Poole, ſon of the laſt ſir Henry, married Marial, daughter of lord Tracy, and was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir Henry Poole, who was the laſt male heir of his family, and ſold the manor of Saperton, in the year 1660, to

Sir Robert Atkyns,[a] knight of the Bath, and chief baron of the court of exchequer, who died in the year 1709, and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Robert Atkyns. He died in 1711, and the manor of Saperton paſſed out of his family, by purchaſe, to Allen firſt earl of Bathurſt, whoſe ſon, Henry earl of Bathurſt, lord high chancellor of Great Britain, is the preſent lord of this manor. His lordſhip's pedigree and arms are given under Cirenceſter.

Saperton was held of Cicely dutcheſs of York, mother to king Edward the Fourth, as of the manor of Biſley.

HAMLETS. 1. Frampton, which lies weſtward from the church, and belonging antiently to the Manſels, was called Frampton Manſel, to diſtinguiſh it from two other pariſhes of the name of Frampton, in this county. Henry earl of Bathurſt is lord of the manor.

2. Hayly is another ſmall hamlet in this pariſh, lying a mile ſouth-weſtward from the church. It is a manor within a manor, and belongs to Charles Coxe, of Kemble, in the county of Wilts, eſq; whoſe arms are given under Rodmarton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, improved of late to about 200*l.* a year, by incloſing the pariſh, and allotting lands to the rectory in lieu of tithes. The earl of Bathurſt is patron, and James Benſon, LL.D. and chancellor of this dioceſe, is the incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Kenelm, and built in the form of a croſs, with a ſmall ſpire in the middle.

The parſonage houſe was built by Mr. Davis, a rector of this church, about ſeventy years ago; but it has been ſince repaired, and greatly improved, by the honourable and reverend Allen Bathurſt, the late incumbent, who died Aug. 21, 1768, and lies buried in the chancel.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a noble monument in the north croſs aile, for ſir Henry Poole and his lady, who are repreſented kneeling, with books before them, and richly habited in the dreſs of their time. A marble table bears this inſcription:

Here Reſteth the Bodies of Sir Henry Poole Knight & of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Sir William Wroughton of Broadehintō in The Cōty of Wilts Knight By Whome hee had Iſſu 3 Sonns & 4 Daughters, That is to ſay, Deuereux, Gyles, & Henry, Elinor Francis Dorothey & Anne, Elinor married Sir Richard Fettiplace of Bezelſleigh in the County of Barck[r] Knight Francis

[a] The family of Atkyns formerly reſided in Monmouthſhire. Thomas Atkyns lived in the reign of king Edward the Third, and dying in London, was buried in the church of St. Peter Cheap, in the year 1401, 2 H. 4. Richard Atkyns, ſon of Thomas, followed the profeſſion of the law, in Monmouthſhire, and Thomas Atkyns, his ſon, was of the ſame profeſſion. Richard Atkyns, ſon of Thomas, died 11 H. 7. and Thomas Atkyns, his ſon, died 4 H. 8. He was ſucceeded by David Atkyns, who married Alice, daughter of and was an eminent merchant in Chepſtow, from whence he moved to Tuffley, near Glouceſter, and died in the year 1552. Thomas Atkyns, ſon of David, married Margaret, daughter of John Cook of London, and was judge of the Sheriff's court there. He argued the firſt caſe in Plowden's Commentaries, and dying before his father, in the year 1551, was buried in Aldermanbury church, in London.

Richard Atkyns, ſon of Thomas, was under age at his father's death, and was granted in ward to Thomas Wendy, eſq; phyſician to king Edward the Sixth. He was found by inquiſition to be ſeized of the manors of Tuffley, Hempſted, Morecot in Minſterworth, and Brickhampton in Churchdown, held of the king in capite; and of lands in Sodbury, Beteſley, and Tudenham, all in the county of Glouceſter. He married Elianor, daughter of Thomas Marſhe, of Wareſley in Huntingdonſhire, eſq; and was one of the judges of Wales, and one of the council of the Marches there, and dying in the year 1610, was buried at Hempſted, where there is a handſome monument erected to his memory. Sir Edward Atkyns, third ſon of Richard, (whoſe elder brothers and their iſſue have ſince been extinct) married Urſula, daughter of ſir Thomas Dacres, of Cheſhunt in Hertfordſhire, and died one of the barons of the court of exchequer, at the age of 82 years. When king James the Second removed ſome of the judges for denying his diſpencing power, he replaced them with others of more pliant tempers, of whom this ſir Edward was one. Sir Robert Atkyns, ſon of ſir Edward, was created knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles the Second, and was chief baron of the court of exchequer. He purchaſed the manor of Saperton of ſir Henry Pool, in the year 1660. He married, firſt, Mary, daughter of ſir George Clerk, of Watford in Northamptonſhire; ſecondly, Anne, daughter of ſir Thomas Dacres, ſon of ſir Thomas, and dying in 1709, aged 88, was ſucceeded by his ſon, ſir Robert Atkyns. Sir Robert, the ſon, married Loviſe, daughter of ſir George Carteret, of Hawnes in Bedfordſhire, and was the author of that well known book, the Ancient and Preſent State of Glouceſterſhire, printed in the year 1712, but he did not live to ſee it publiſhed, for he died in 1711.

It is remarkable that there has been always one of this name and family preſiding in ſome of the courts of judicature in this kingdom above three hundred years. Atkyns.

In the ſouth aile is a very handſome freeſtone monument for ſir Robert Atkyns, with his effigy in white marble, in a recumbent poſture, leaning on his left elbow. Behind him, on a marble table, is this inſcription:

In memory of S^{r}. ROBERT ATKYNS of Pinbury Park in Gloceſter Shire Knight, Son of S^{r}. ROBERT ATKYNS, one of y^{e} Iuſtices of y^{e} Court of Common Pleas in y^{e} Reign of K. C. II. afterwards Lord Chief Baron of y^{e} Exchequer and Speaker of y^{e} houſe of Lords and Grand Son to S^{r}. EDWARD ATKYNS who was one of y^{e} Barons of y^{e} ſaid Court.

While He lived He was beloved and honoured, and when He died y^{e} loſs of him was lamented by all who knew his private and his publick Vertues.

He was always Loyal to his Prince, Loving to his Wife, Faithful to his Friends, Charitable to y^{e} Poor, Kind & Courteous to his Neighbours, Iuſt to All, Sober and Serious in his Converſation, and a Peace-Maker to his utmoſt Power.

His obligeing Vertues endear'd him to his Country, who choſe him for their Repreſentative in Parliament as often as He would accept of their Choice. He lived with great indifference for life, and without y^{e} fear of Death: and dyed of a Dyſentery at his Houſe at Weſtminſter, on y^{e} XXIX day of November, in y^{e} year of our Lord MDCCXI, and of his Age LXV. He left behind him LOVISE Lady ATKYNS, Daughter of S^{r}. GEORGE CARTERET of Hawns in Bedford-Shire, his moſt dear and ſorrowful Widow, who erected this monument to his memory, though He left behind him one more durable, The Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſter-Shire.

Under a niche in the eaſt wall of the north aile, is the effigy in freeſtone of a man in armour, girt with a ſword, and over him are the arms of Poole. There is no inſcription, except the date, 1574.

Benefactions.

Leonard Poole, eſq; gave the church-houſe, two acres of arable in each field, and one beaſt paſture, for the uſe of the church. Nathaniel Butler, who was preſented to this rectory in the year 1603, gave 10*s.* a year, of which 6*s.* 8*d.* for a ſermon on the 5th of November, the remainder for the poor. By a decree in chancery, an eſtate worth 23*l.* a year has been purchaſed with money left by lord chief baron Atkyns, and lady Atkyns; 5*l.* of which is allotted for a charity ſchool, the remainder to be given in bread to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 60 houſes in the pariſh, and about 320 inhabitants, of whom 12 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. The people are ſince decreaſed to about 300.

IS a very ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Whitſton, about four miles ſouth-eaſtward from Newnham, ſix northward from Durſley, and nine ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is bounded on the eaſt by the Froome, which ſeparates it from Moreton Valence and Whitminſter; on the weſt by Frethorn; on the north by the great river Severn, and on the ſouth by the pariſh of Eaſtington.

A conſiderable proportion of the pariſh is arable, the reſt is rich paſturage and meadow ground.

The air is rendered impure and unwholeſome by the copious vapours and exhalations riſing from the Severn, and from the low lands that are conſtantly drowned by floods and ſpring tides, which particularly affect Saul, Moreton, and Frethorn. Yet here I was told, that this village was perfectly healthy, tho' it appeared to be far otherwiſe, from the pallid countenances of thoſe I converſed with, who allowed, however, that the two other above-mentioned neighbouring villages were greatly afflicted with agues and aſthmatic diſorders. On the contrary, the good people of Moreton aſſured me, that they were themſelves free from thoſe diſorders, but that Saul and Frethorn were very ſubject to them. Thus wiſely has providence reconciled mankind to their various ſituations, which Mr. Pope has elegantly expreſſed in the following lines:

Aſk where's the North? at York 'tis on the Tweed:
In Scotland, at the Orcades; and there
At Greenland, Zembla, and the Lord knows where.
No Creature owns it in the firſt Degree,
But thinks his Neighbour further gone than he.

Ethic Epiſt. B. 2.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The ſheriff returned, that the abbat of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, and Galfrid de Frethorne, were lords of the vill of Salley, in the hundred of Wyſton, 9 E. 1. Galfrid de Fretherne died 14 E. 2. at which time he was ſeized in fee of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Fretherne. Eſch.

The manor came afterwards to the Staffords of Thornbury, and continued for many generations in that family. Sir Hugh Stafford was ſeized of the manor of Salle 1 H. 6. It came afterwards to the Lloyds of Wheatenhurſt. George Lloyd, eſq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Richard-Owen Cambridge is the preſent proprietor.

Lands and tithes in Saul, which belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Glouceſter, to which the vicar of Standiſh preſents. Mr. Davis is the preſent incumbent. The curate has ſmall tithes, and ſome glebe, worth about 7*l.* a year. The living has been augmented with with the queen's bounty, and by a benefaction from Mr. Hodges, with which money an eſtate has been purchaſed at King's Stanley, worth 30*l.* a year.

The tithes of Saul belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and were granted to the biſhoprick 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6. The impropriation, worth 60*l.* a year, is in leaſe to Mr. King.

The church is a ſmall building, with a low embattled tower at the weſt end, in which is one bell. It is dedicated to St. James, on whoſe feaſt day an annual fair was formerly held here.

There is a memorial on a tomb in the churchyard, for Thomas Swanley, who died in 1653, and for others of that family. The arms on the tomb are, A feſs undy between three unicorns heads erazed.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £. 34 19 6

At the beginning of the preſent century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houſes in the pariſh, and about 130 inhabitants, whereof 7 were freeholders. There are now 29 families, and 151 inhabitants.

SEISINCOT

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the upper diviſion of Kiftſgate hundred, four miles northward from Stow, ſix ſouthward from Campden, and about twenty-ſeven north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name of this place was antiently written Chieſnecote, and Cheſnecote; and ſince Cheſne, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, ſignifies an Oak, and Coed is Britiſh for a Wood, there is reaſon to ſuppoſe that the name ſignifies the Oak Wood, and expreſſes the antient ſtate of the place; yet there is nothing in the preſent condition of it to confirm this etymology.

The pariſh was totally depopulated in the great civil war, and is intirely deſtitute of antiquities and curioſities. The village conſiſts at preſent of ſix or ſeven houſes, which ſir William Juxton built for the uſe of the farmers, when he was lord of the manor.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This pariſh was divided into ſeveral manors at the time of the general ſurvey; one of them lay in the old hundred of Celfledetorne, the others in Witelai, but both thoſe hundreds are now comprized in that of Kiftſgate.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Chieſnecote in Celfledetorne hundred, and Walter holds it of him. There are two hides and a half. Leuuin and Leuui held it for two manors. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four bordars. It was worth 40*s.* and is now worth 60*s.*' D. B. p. 76.

'Walter the Deacon holds Chefnecote in Witelai hundred of the king. There are four hides and a half. Goduin held it, and could go where he 'pleaſed, [i.e. was perfectly a free man.] There 'are two plow-tillages in demean, and eight 'villeins, with ſix plow-tillages, and ten ſervi. 'It is worth and was worth 3*l.*' Ibid. p. 77.

'Urſo de Abetot of Wireceſtre holds one hide 'in Cheiſnecote, in Witelai hundred. Eluuin 'held it for a manor, and paid tax. There is one 'plow-tillage in demean, and four ſervi. It was 'worth 40*s.* now 10*s.*' Ibid. p. 78.

'Haſcoit Muſard holds one hide in Cheiſnecote 'in Witelai hundred, and pays tax. Uluuin held 'it for a manor. There is one plow-tillage, and 'one bordar. It is worth and was worth 10*s.*' Ibid. p. 78.

'Hunfridus de Medehalle holds one hide in 'Cheiſnecot, in Witelai hundred. Aluui held it 'for a manor, and paid tax. In demean were two 'plow-tillages, and ſix ſervi, and one bordar, and 'it was worth 50*s.* but it is now worth only 12*d.* 'on account of the meadows.' Ibid. p. 79.

Urſo de Abetot, hereditary ſheriff of Worceſterſhire, left Emeline, an only daughter and heireſs, who was married to Walter de Beauchamp, whereby this manor came to the Beauchamps, and continued in that family for many generations. William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſon of William de Beauchamp, and of Iſabel, the ſiſter and heireſs of William Manduit de Hanſlape, earl of Warwick, died 52 H. 3. ſeized of the hamlet of Cheiſnecot. William de Beauchamp, ſon of the laſt William, died 26 E. 1. and Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his ſon and heir, had livery the ſame year, and died 9 E. 2. leaving Thomas, his infant ſon, only two years old. He died 43 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his ſurviving ſon and heir, who died ſeized of Seiſincote 2 H. 4. whereupon the manor deſcended to his ſon Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and lord Bergavenny, who died 17 H. 6.

The manor of Seiſincot was ſoon afterwards veſted in the Grevils. Sir John Grevil died ſeized of it, and of the hundred of Kiftſgate, 20 E. 4. Ludowick Grevil was lord of the manor, and reſided here in the reign of queen Elizabeth. The memory of this man ſeems to be preſerved only to be execrated for his rapacious avarice, and inhuman barbarity. He invited to his houſe one Web, who had been his ſervant, but was now grown rich, and there treacherouſly cauſed him to be aſſaſſinated in bed, by two domeſticks, and afterwards, by means of a forged will, got poſſeſſion of the whole eſtate of his murdered gueſt. But one of the aſſaſſins, afterwards in liquor, dropping ſome hints that he could hang his maſter, ſo alarmed Grevil, that he procured the other to diſpatch him alſo. Divine providence, however, would not permit theſe complicated acts of wickedneſs to remain long unpuniſhed. Grevil was arraigned and executed for his crimes, who ſtood mute to preſerve his eſtates in the family; but his family never flouriſhed afterwards, and ſoon fell to decay; as if heaven would ſhew that the horrible crimes of murder and forgery draw after them a curſe on poſterity for ſeveral generations.

Sir Edward Grevil was lord of the manor in the year 1608. Sir William Juxton, nephew of Dr. William Juxton, archbiſhop of Canterbury, was poſſeſſed of it in the reign of king Charles the Second, and ſold it to lord Guilford. The earl of Guilford is the preſent lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate in the pariſh.

A conſiderable eſtate here belonged to a family of the ſame name with the pariſh, for Thomas Cheſnecot died ſeized of one meſſuage, and two plow-tillages in Cheſnecot 33 E. 1. Alice his widow was married to Henry de Duffeld, and they joined in a fine, acknowledging the eſtate to be the right of Maud, daughter and heireſs of Thomas de Seiſincote. She was afterwards married to Peter de Wallingford.

John de Minera, and Alice his wife, granted lands in Cheſneton to William Camera, and Alice his wife, 20 H. 3. Nicholas de Sherborne was ſeized of one plow-tillage in Seiſincote 15 E. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow, and in the gift of the earl of Guilford, who pays about 8*l.* a year to the incumbent, and lets his eſtates tithe free. The living was augmented by lot in the year 1737. The pariſh was depopulated, and the church demoliſhed, during the civil wars, in the reign of king Charles the Firſt.

The glebe lands and tithes belonged antiently to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, and were granted to Anthony Stringer, and John Williams, 34 H. 8. Other tithes in Seiſincot belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

SEVENHAMPTON.

THIS large pariſh lies in the hundred of Bradley, in a lofty part of the Coteſwold country, about five miles eaſtward from Cheltenham, four ſouth from Winchcombe, and thirteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The village, like moſt others on the Coteſwolds, is ſeated in a bottom, ſheltered by bold riſing grounds, and the lands are principally in tillage. The river Coln riſes in two heads, here and at Whittington, and after paſſing by, and giving name to ſeveral villages, as Coln Dennis, Coln Rogers, Coln Aldwins, falls into the Thames below Fairford.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The Domeſday account of this pariſh is given under Preſbury, on which it was once dependent, and was therefore ſometimes called Preſbury on the Hill.

The manor of Sevenhantone belonged to the biſhop of Hereford at the time of the general ſurvey, and Peter biſhop of that ſee had free warren in Preſbury and Sevenhampton 25 H. 3. and obtained a confirmation of that privilege 14 R. 2. In a taxation of the temporalties of the ſee of Hereford, in a MS. in the Cottonian Library, Tiberius, C. x. F. 76. is the following entry. Item apud Pulcomb & Sevenhampton, de reditu 7l. 5s. 1d.ob. & 3 caruc. terre & valet caruc. 20s. Et unum molendinum aquaticum, quod valet 1 marc. et de placitis & perquiſitis 20s.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſays, that Elizabeth Courtney, counteſs of Devonſhire, died 11 H. 8. ſeized of this manor, which thereupon deſcended to Elizabeth, her grandaughter and heir, married to ſir Arthur Plantagenet, who had livery granted them the ſame year. But that ſeems moſt likely to be the manor of Brockhampton in this pariſh, or perhaps ſome lands only, and not the manor, for the latter continued in the biſhoprick of Hereford 'till long afterwards, as appears by a grant of ſeveral particulars made to Scory biſhop of that ſee, by queen Elizabeth, March 23, 1562, in the fourth year of her reign, in conſideration of ſeveral manors therein mentioned, of which Sevenhampton was one.

Lands in Sevenhampton, which formerly belonged to the biſhoprick of Hereford, were granted to Chriſtopher Hatton 18 Eliz. Mr. Robert Lawrence died ſeized of the manors of Sevenhampton and Brockhampton in the year 1700. Mr. Anthony Lawrence was proprietor of the manor of Sevenhampton when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory. It belonged afterwards to Walter Lawrence, eſq; and is now veſted in Mr. Walter Lawrence, who has a good eſtate in the pariſh, and reſides there. His arms are, Argent, a croſs raguly gules.

HAMLET. Brockhampton is a conſiderable hamlet in this pariſh, formerly belonging to the antient family of de Croupes. Edward Croupes, ſon of Richard de Croupes, died ſeized of the manors of Upper Dowdeſwell, Whittington, and Brockhampton, 35 E. 3. The manor was afterwards veſted in the Lawrences, of whom it was purchaſed by ſir William Dodwell, whoſe only daughter and heir, Mrs. Tracy, relict of Thomas Tracy, of Sandiwell in this county, eſq; is the preſent lady of the manor.

Puckham

Puckham is the name of a place in this pariſh, antiently written Pulcumb, which belonged to the biſhop of Hereford. Puckham-farm is now the property of Mr. Reddall.

The prior of Lanthony had free warren in this pariſh 21 E. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Winchcombe. The incumbent receives 10*l.* a year out of the impropriation, which formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and is now veſted in Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Hinckſman, who pay a ſmall quit-rent for it to the biſhop of Hereford. The living was augmented with Mr. Aylworth's benefaction, and by the queen's bounty, about the year 1733. There is no houſe for the curate.

The church is built in the form of a croſs, with a low embattled tower in the middle. It is dedicated to St. Andrew, and was built by John Camber, for whom there was the following inſcription upon a ſtone in the wall of the chancel, Hic iacet Iohēs Camber, qui obiit xxvi Feb. 1448.

At the beginning of this century, there were 47 houſes in the pariſh, and about 180 inhabitants, of whom 8 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. There are now 63 families, and about 288 inhabitants.

SHENINGTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, about five miles weſtward from Banbury in Oxfordſhire, ſix eaſtward from Shipſton upon Stour in Warwickſhire, and about thirty-nine north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The ſouth and eaſt ſides of this pariſh are bounded by Oxfordſhire, and the north and weſt by Warwickſhire; being intirely disjoined, and many miles diſtant from the county to which it belongs.

Part of Edgehill lies in this pariſh, and is rendered famous by the engagement fought on the 23d of October, 1642, between the forces of king Charles the Firſt and his parliament. Mr. Jago wrote a poem in blank verſe, intituled Edgehill, which was publiſhed about the year 1764.

It

It is both deſcriptive and hiſtorical, comprehending the villas and towns which lie round about the hill he profeſſes to celebrate.

From the top of Shunlow-hill in this pariſh, there is a very pleaſant and extenſive proſpect into the counties of Oxford, Warwick, Glouceſter, Northampton, Bucks, Worceſter, Salop, and Stafford.

Two ſmall ſtreams run from hence, and fall, at laſt, one into the Severn, the other into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book, under the title Terra Regis, recounts the particulars of the extenſive manor and lordſhip of Tewkeſbury, and ſays,

'Ten hides in Senendone belong to the ſame 'manor [Teodecheſberie]. There are four plow-'tillages, and eight villeins, and four bordars, 'and five radcheniſters, with eight plow-tillages. 'There are twelve ſervi, and a mill of 3*s*. This 'eſtate is taxed for ſeven hides. In the time of 'king Edward it was worth 20*l*. now 8*l*. It is 'in the king's hands, and Robert de Olgi farms it.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The records relating to this pariſh, which was divided into two manors, are very confuſed and deficient, therefore as it would be difficult, if not impoſſible, to apply them with preciſion, they are ſet down in order of time.

The manor of Sheningdon was held of Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 47 H. 3. John de Suor held this manor, with free warren, 15 E. 1. and John le More was ſeized of a manor in this pariſh, with free warren, the ſame year.

The family of the Peches held Shenington for ſeveral generations. John Peche died ſeized thereof 47 E. 3. and left two daughters his coheireſſes; Joan dying without iſſue, Margaret, the ſurviving daughter, married to ſir John Montfort, of Coleſhill in Warwickſhire, became ſole heir. Catherine the widow of ſir John Peche, William Montford [probably ſir John Montfort] of Coleſhull, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Shenington to the uſe of Catherine for life, the remainder to William and Margaret in taille, 12 H. 4.

John Saliſbury was ſeized of Shenington 11 R. 2. Joan the widow of —— Ruſtin of Norfolk, was ſeized of the manor of Shenington 7 H. 5.

Gerald earl of Kildare, and Elizabeth his wife, had a grant of the manor of Shenington, and of the advowſon, to them and their heirs males, 18 H. 7. which was confirmed 2 H. 8. Henry Fitz-Gerald, ſon of Gerald, granted the manor to his brother ſir Thomas Gerald, who died ſeized thereof 23 H. 8. and livery was granted to James Fitz-Gerald, ſon of ſir Thomas, 24 H. 8.

The manor of Shenington, and the advowſon of the rectory, were granted to John Coke, and John Baſſet, 4 E. 6. and it is recited in the grant, that the manor was lately John Fitz-Gerald's.

John Wigate, upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor of Shenington granted to him 20 Eliz.

Richard Pigot died ſeized of the manor 12 Eliz. and Robert Pigot, ſon and heir of Richard, dying unmarried, it came to Agnes, his ſiſter and heireſs.

Mr. Richard Gooding was lord of one manor in the pariſh at the beginning of this century, and it now belongs to Mr. Sheldon. Oriel college, Oxford, has another manor.

Henry le Fend and Iſabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Shenindon to William Giffard, archbiſhop of York, 7 E. 1. By another fine levied 20 E. 1. a third part of lands in Shenendon is acknowledged to be the right of Henry le Fend and of Iſabel his wife. John de Shokereſwell and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Shokereſwell and Shenendon, to John de Doweneved, 27 E. 1. John le Strange, of Knokyn, held one meſſuage, three yard-lands, and five acres of meadow in this pariſh 3 E. 2. John le Strange, of Walton, and Mabel his wife, levied a fine of lands in Shenington to Roger le Strange, and others, to the uſe of Philip le Strange, 15 E. 2. Henry Vyell and Alice his wife levied a fine of a rent in Shenington, to the uſe of Joan Scovile for life, the remainder to Henry Vyell and Alice, 3 H. 4. James Veel and Joan his wife levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Shennington to ſir Reginald Bray, and others, 17 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 160*l*. a year, of which the earl of Litchfield is patron.

The advowſon of the rectory belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and was granted by the crown to Richard Andrews and Thomas Hyſley 36 H. 8. and was afterwards veſted in Mr. Sheldon.

The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and has a tower at the weſt end, in which are five bells.

SHERBOURN.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Slaughter, three miles diſtant eaſt from Northleach, five weſt from Burford in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-three eaſt from Glouceſter.

It

The village is ſituated on a brook, or Bourn, which riſes at Farmington, and being augmented in its courſe by ſome fine, clear ſprings, at the top of this pariſh, empties itſelf, a little below, into the Winruſh, near Barrington. It was undoubtedly this Bourn that gave name to the place, which was called Sherbourn, not becauſe it lies on the border of the Shire, as ſome have imagined, (for that is not the fact) but from the clearneſs of the water, for the Saxon word Scinebunn, in old writings, is tranſlated by Fons Clarus. Shakeſpeare, Milton, and other good writers, uſed the word Sheer, for pure, clear, neat, unmixed; and tho' it is now grown almoſt obſolete, yet we ſtill apply it to wit, in the like ſenſe or ſignification.

There is an eaſy deſcent on each ſide to this little river, and the ſlopes are covered with a beautiful verdure. Not two hundred yards diſtant, on the ſouth ſide, ſtands Sherbourn-Houſe, the ſeat of James Dutton, eſq; where the antient family of that name has reſided upwards of two hundred years. It conſiſts of two quadrangles. That on the eaſt, where the offices are, is the moſt antient building, ſuppoſed to have been one of the ſeats formerly belonging to the abbats of Winchcombe, who held the manor of Sherbourn 'till the diſſolution. The weſt quadrangle conſiſts of the principal apartments, and the grand entrance into the court, or area, is by a large gateway. The ſouth ſide, and part of the eaſt ſide of this ſquare, were built by Inigo Jones, but the reſt is about the age, and very much in the ſtile, of the public ſchools at Oxford.

Over the gateway, on the weſt ſide, are the Duttons arms, in freeſtone, with quarterings of the arms of other antient families, which by marriage they have a right to uſe.

There are two parks belonging to this ſeat, one adjoining to the houſe, the other lies at a little diſtance from it, with a beautiful lodge-houſe, and a paddock-courſe near it.

Of this ſeat, ſir Robert Atkyns has given a plate in his Ancient and Preſent State of Gloceſterſhire, but it is not a true repreſentation. One ſide of the weſt quadrangle does not appear in the engraving, tho' the houſe was exactly as it now ſtands, when that book was publiſhed. And beſides, the palliſadoes, gardens, and other decorations in the plate, are all imaginary, and never had exiſtence.

This ſeat will very ſhortly undergo conſiderable alterations. The late Mr. Dutton new built the coach-houſes and ſtables, which form a noble ſquare, but he was prevented by death from doing any thing further. The preſent proprietor has obliged the editor and the public with a beautiful plate of this ſeat, as it will appear when the deſign is compleated.

James Bradley, D.D. and Regius Profeſſor of Aſtronomy, who died in the year 1762, was a native of Sherbourn, but was buried at Minchin Hampton, in this county, where is an inſcription to his memory, on a braſs plate fixt to a tomb in the church-yard.

There is nothing further remarkable in this place, only it may not be amiſs to obſerve, that a bill is now depending in parliament for incloſing the common fields here, which, properly executed, will greatly improve and beautify the country.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe 'holds Scireburne in Salemones hundred. There 'are thirty hides, of which ten are free, as be-'longing to the court. There are five plow-'tillages in demean, and forty villeins, and ſeven 'bordars, with twenty-two plow-tillages. There 'are twelve ſervi, and four mills of 40*s*. and 'thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 20*l*. in 'the time of king Edward, and is now worth 14*l*.' Domeſday, p. 71.

This manor was diſcharged from the hundred court 8 H. 3.

The abbey of Winchcombe purchaſed a charter of free warren in Shirburn 35 H. 3. and aſſigned the manor to the abbey of St. Ebrulph in Normandy, 12 E. 2. Yet the firſt-mentioned abbey retained an eſtate here, for Richard Buſhel was ſeized of one meſſuage, two tofts, and of paſture for eight cows, in Winchcombe and Shirbourn, in truſt for the abbey, 18 R. 2.

After the diſſolution of religious foundations, this manor, and the rectory and advowſon of Sherbourn, were granted to ſir Chriſtopher Alleyn, who joins with Ethelreda his wife, and levies a fine of them to Thomas Dutton,[b] eſq; 6 E. 6. whoſe deſcendants have enjoy'd them ever ſince.

A mea-

[b] This family is of great antiquity. It appears by the antient roll of the barons of Halton in Cheſhire, that at the time of the conqueſt, Hugh Lupus, earl of Cheſter, brought with him out of Normandy one Nigell, a nobleman, and his five brothers, viz. Hudard, Edard, Wolmere, Horſwyne, and Wolfaith. And the ſame Nigell gave to Hudard, or Odard, the townſhip of Great Aſton, and a moiety of Weſton, in Cheſhire, pro uno feodo militis. This Odard was ſeated at a place called Duntune, in the ſame county, which was given him by Hugh Lupus, from whence his deſcendants took the ſurname of De Duntune, or Dutton, as appears by ſeveral deeds of great antiquity among the evidences of the Dutton family; and Hudard's ſword has paſſed over from heir to heir, as an heir-loom, and is ſtill very carefully preſerved.

Hugh, ſon of Odard, had thoſe lands, which he held, as it were in capite, of the earl of Cheſter, confirmed to him by Randle the Second, earl of Cheſter, about the latter end of the reign of Henry the Firſt.

Hugh de Dutton, ſon of Hugh, had thoſe lands which his father held of the baron of Halton confirmed to him by William ſon of Nigell, conſtable of Cheſter, and by William ſon of William, when they viſited Hugh de Dutton the elder, on his death-bed at Kekwick, about the end of the reign of king Henry the Firſt: and thereupon Hugh de Dutton, the father, gave to William the elder, his coat of mail, and his charging-horſe; and Hugh, the ſon, gave to William the younger, a palfry and ſparrow-hawk. This Hugh had iſſue Hugh, eldeſt ſon; Adam de Dutton, from whom the Warburtons are deſcended, who took their name from Warburton in Cheſhire, the place of their reſidence in the reign of Edward the Second; Geffrey de Dutton, another ſon, anceſtor of the Chedhills of Chedhill, and Aſhleys of Aſhley, who aſſumed thoſe names from the places of their reſidence, according to the cuſtom of antient times.

Hugh de Dutton, the third of that name, and great grandſon of Odard, married —— daughter of Hamon Maſſy, of Dunham Maſſy, in the reign of king Henry the Second, and had iſſue

A meadow in Sherbourn belonged to the priory of St. John the Evangeliſt in Burford, (which priory was valued at 13*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*) and was granted to Edmund Herman 35 H. 8.

Of

Hugh Dutton, who married Muriel, daughter of Thomas le Diſpencer, by whom he had Hugh, who died without iſſue, Thomas, John, and Adam; and a daughter Alice, married to William Boydell, of Dodleſton. Randle, ſurnamed Blundevill, the ſixth earl of Cheſter from Hugh Lupus, had been ſucceſsful in many conflicts againſt Llhewellin prince of North Wales, but was at laſt ſurprized, and forced, for his preſent ſecurity, to take refuge in the caſtle of Rothlent in Flintſhire, to which the Welch laid ſiege. In this diſtreſs, Randle diſpatched a meſſenger to his conſtable, Roger de Lacy, ſurnamed Hell, for his fierce ſpirit, to come to his relief with what forces he could collect. The news of the earl's diſtreſs reached Cheſter on Midſummer-day, which being the time of the principal fair, Roger de Lacy collected a rude multitude out of the city of Cheſter, compoſed of coblers, players, fidlers, and debauched perſons of both ſexes, and marched with them to the earl's relief. The Welch ſuppoſing a great army to be coming, raiſed their ſiege, and fled precipitately to their own country. In commemoration of this ſignal piece of ſervice, the earl granted to Roger de Lacy authority over all the ſhoemakers, fidlers, &c. within the county, and the city of Cheſter. Some time afterwards, John, conſtable of Cheſter, ſon of Roger de Lacy, who had reſcued the earl, reſerving to himſelf and his heirs authority over the ſhoemakers, granted the patronage of the reſt to his ſteward, Hugh de Dutton, of Dutton, and his heirs, (not Ralph de Dutton, as ſir Robert Atkyns has it) as will more clearly appear by the grant, which follows:

Sciant preſentes & futuri, quod ego Iohannes Conſtabularius Ceſtriæ dedi & conceſſi, & hac preſenti charta mea confirmavi Hugoni de Dutton, & heredibus ſuis, Magiſtratum omnium Leccatorum & Meretricum totius Ceſterſhiriæ, ſicut liberius illum Magiſtratum teneo de Comite; ſalvo jure meo mihi & heredibus meis. Hiis teſtibus, Hugone de Boidele, Alano fratre ejus, Petro de Goenet, Liulfo de Twamlow, Adam de Dutton, Gilberto de Aſton, Radulfo de Kingſley, Hamone de Bordington, Alano de Waleie, Alano de Mulinton, Willielmo filio Ricardi, Martino Angevin, Willielmo de Sævill, Galfrido & Roberto filiis meis, Blethero, Herdberd de Waleton, Galfrido de Dutton.

This grant was made about the end of the reign of king John, from which time this family have exerciſed their juriſdiction with many ludicrous ceremonies; for on every Midſummer-day the heir of Dutton, or his ſteward, rides through the city of Cheſter, attended by all the fidlers in the county in proceſſion, playing on their ſeveral muſical inſtruments, to St. John's church; and after divine ſervice, the cavalcade proceeds to the court houſe, where laws and ordinances are made for their better government; and here all the fidlers take out licences, none being permitted to follow their profeſſion in that county without them.

A writ of Quo warranto was brought againſt Lawrence Dutton, of Dutton, eſq; 14 H. 7. to ſhew cauſe why he claimed that all the minſtrels of Cheſhire, and the city of Cheſter, ſhould meet before him at Cheſter, on the feaſt of St. John Baptiſt yearly, and give unto him Quatuor Lagenas Vini et unam Lanceam, i. e. four flaggons, or bottles, of wine, and one lance; and that every minſtrel ſhould pay unto him, at the ſaid feaſt, four-pence half-penny. And why he claimed from every whore in Cheſhire and the city of Cheſter, Officium ſuum exercente, i. e. following her profeſſion, four-pence yearly, to be paid at the feaſt aforeſaid, &c. Whereunto the ſaid Lawrence Dutton pleaded preſcription.—And here it muſt be obſerved, that in the ſtatutes for puniſhing rogues and vagabonds, 39 Eliz. cap. 4. and 1 Jac. 1. cap. 25. the licenced fidlers of Cheſhire are excepted; and care is taken, by an eſpecial proviſo, that no clauſe in thoſe acts ſhall prejudice the right of John Dutton, of Dutton, eſq; which he or his anceſtors have lawfully enjoyed in the county and city of Cheſter.

Sir Thomas Dutton, ſecond ſon of Hugh and Muriel, married Philippa, daughter and heir of Vivian de Sandon, or Standon, by whom he had Hugh, Thomas, and Robert; and two daughters, Margaret, married to William Venables, ſon and heir of Roger Venables of Kinderton, in the year 1253; and Katherine, married to John, ſon of Vrian de Sancto Petro. Sir Thomas was ſheriff of Cheſhire 1268, and died in the beginning of the reign of king Edward the Firſt.

Sir Hugh Dutton, of Dutton, knight, ſon and heir of ſir Thomas, married Joan, daughter of ſir Vrian de Sancto Petro, vulgo Sampier, and by her had iſſue Hugh, William, and Robert; and a daughter Margaret. Sir Hugh, the father, died in the year 1294, and was ſucceeded by Sir Hugh Dutton, his ſon and heir, born at Dutton, Dec. 8, 1276, 5 E. 1. He married Joan, daughter of ſir Robert Holland, of Holland in Lancaſhire, by whom he had Thomas, William, Geffery, and Robert; and died in the year 1327, 1 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Dutton, of Dutton, knight, ſon and heir of ſir Hugh, was fifteen years old on Whit-ſunday, 1329. He purchaſed thoſe lands in Dutton which had belonged to Halton fee; and likewiſe thoſe lands in the ſame place which formerly belonged to Boydell of Dodleſton, and ſo became poſſeſſed of the whole townſhip of Dutton. He was made ſeneſchal, governor, and receiver of the caſtle and honour of Halton in Cheſhire, by William Clinton, earl of Huntingdon; and of his lands and manors in Cheſhire and Lancaſhire, all which the earl farmed to him for 440 marks yearly, by his deed, dated at Maxſtock, 19 E. 3. He was ſheriff of Cheſhire 30 & 33 E. 3. and married to his firſt wife, Ellen, eldeſt daughter and one of the coheirs of ſir Peter Thornton, of Thornton, by whom he had ſir Peter, who died without iſſue 35 E. 3. Thomas; Lawrence, his ſucceſſor, who likewiſe died without iſſue; Edmund, the continuer of the family; Henry; and William. His ſecond wife was Philippa, widow of ſir Peter Thornton, but not the mother of his firſt wife. Sir Thomas died in the year 1381, 4 R. 2. aged 66.

Edmund Dutton, fourth ſon of ſir Thomas, married Joan, daughter and heir of Henry Minſhull, of Church Minſhull, and by her had iſſue ſir Peter, who was heir to his uncle ſir Lawrence, and continued the elder branch of the family ſeated at Dutton; Hugh, ſecond ſon, from whom the Duttons of Sherbourn are deſcended; Lawrence, and Thomas; and two daughters, Agnes, married to William Leyceſter, of Nether Tabley; and another daughter, Ellen.

Hugh Dutton, ſecond ſon of Edmund, married Petronilla, daughter and heir of Ralph Vernon of Hatton, by whom he had four ſons, John, Lawrence, Randle, and Hugh; and a daughter Elizabeth, married to Richard Manley of Manley.

John Dutton of Hatton, eldeſt ſon of Hugh, was mayor of Cheſter 30 H. 6. and married Margaret, daughter to William Atherton, of Atherton in Lancaſhire, by whom he had iſſue, Peter, Richard, and Geffrey; and two daughters, Cicely, and Ellen.

Peter Dutton of Hatton, ſon and heir of John, in the year 1464, married Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter and one of the coheirs of Robert Groſvenor of Holme, by whom he had Peter, eldeſt ſon, who married Elenor, daughter of Robert Fouliſhurſt, of Crew in Cheſhire, (and whoſe ſon, ſir Piers Dutton, became heir to the lands of Dutton, on the death of Lawrence Dutton, of Dutton, eſq; without lawful iſſue, in the year 1526,) and Ralph Richard, and Randle.

Richard Dutton, third ſon of Peter Dutton of Hatton, the elder, married Mary, daughter of ——— Mainwaring of Croxton, by whom he was father of Ralph Dutton, who had two ſons, William, his heir, and Richard, who ſettled at Cloughton in Pickering in Yorkſhire, and was anceſtor of the Duttons of Cloughton.

William Dutton of Cheſter, eldeſt ſon and heir of Ralph, married Agnes, daughter of John Conway of Flintſhire, and had iſſue

Thomas Dutton, who purchaſed the manor of Sherbourn of ſir Chriſtopher Alleyn, 6 E. 6. He married three wives; by the firſt, Mary, daughter of Robert Taylour, of Glouceſterſhire, he had one daughter Anne, married to John Warneford, of Glouceſterſhire: By his ſecond wife, Anne, daughter of Stephen Kyrton, alderman of London, and relict of ſir Thomas Wyther, knight, he had iſſue William, his heir, Thomas, and Elenor. Thomas Dutton, of Sherbourn, died in the year 1581, aged 74, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon,

William Dutton, of Sherbourn, eſq; who had livery of the manor and advowſon of Sherbourn the ſame year his father died. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in 1590, and 1601, and having married Anne, daughter of ſir Ambroſe Nicholas, knight, lord mayor of London, deceaſed in the year 1618, leaving iſſue by his lady three ſons, John, Ralph, and Giles.

John Dutton, of Sherbourn, eldeſt ſon of William, married firſt, Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Henry Baintun, of Brumham in Wiltſhire, by whom he had one ſon, over whoſe education he appointed Oliver Cromwell to be guardian, and the protector nominated a tutor to diſcharge his important truſt; but the ſon died young. He had alſo three daughters, two of whom ſurvived him, viz. Elizabeth, married to George Colt, eſq; and Lucy, married to Thomas Pope earl of Down. To his ſecond wife, he married Anne, fourth daughter of John King, biſhop of London, who out-lived him, and was afterwards wedded to ſir Richard How. John Dutton died Jan. 14, 1656, in the 63d year of his age, and was buried at Sherbourn.

Sir Ralph Dutton, knight, died before his elder brother John. He was gentleman of the privy chamber in extraordinary to king Charles the Firſt, and high ſheriff of this county in 1630. His eſtate, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, was ſequeſtered in the great rebellion, and he was forced to fly beyond ſeas, but being driven back by contrary winds, in his paſſage from Leith to France, he was caſt on Burnt Iſland, and there died in 1646. He married Mary, daughter of ſir William Duncombe, of London, by whom he had iſſue William, and Ralph.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, as it is ſaid in biſhop Benſon's viſitation book, but in the deanery of Fairford, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, and is worth about 40*l.* a year. James Dutton, eſq; is patron, and Mr. Twining is the preſent incumbent.

The vicarages of Sherbourn and Winruſh were conſolidated into one preſentment in the year 1776, and a bill is now depending in parliament, whereby the lands belonging to the vicarage of Sherbourn are to be given up, and others of equal value to be allotted to the glebe at Winruſh in lieu of them. The vicarage houſe at the former pariſh is to be taken down, and another built for the incumbent at the latter, and the lands laid contigious to it. The buſineſs was not compleated when this account was printed, but will be further advanced before that of Winruſh goes to the preſs, where a more perfect account may be expected.

The church is newly built, at the ſole expence of the late James-Lenox Dutton, eſq; and conſiſts of the nave only, with a portico on the north ſide, ſupported by two freeſtone pillars, of the Doric order, and has a handſome ſpire at the weſt end.

Sir John Dutton, baronet, ſon of ſir Ralph by his ſecond wife, married firſt, Mary, only child of ſir Ruſhout Cullen, of Upton in Warwickſhire, baronet, by whom he had no iſſue; ſecondly, Mary, daughter of Francis Keck, of Great Tew, in the county of Oxford, eſq; and by her had an only daughter, who died an infant. Sir John himſelf deceaſing without iſſue, in the year 1742-3, bequeathed his eſtates to James-Lenox Naper, eſq; of the kingdom of Ireland, his ſiſter's ſon, who aſſumed the name and arms of Dutton. He married two wives; by the firſt he had one ſon John, who died unmarried before his father. By his ſecond wife, Jane, daughter of Edmund Bond, of Newland, in this county, eſq; he left iſſue three ſons, James, William, and Ralph; and four daughters, Anne, married to Samuel Blackwell, of Williamſtrip, in this county, eſq; Mary, married to Thomas Maſter, of Cirenceſter, eſq; Frances, married to Charles Lambart, of Beaupark in the kingdom of Ireland, eſq; and Jane, married to Thomas-William Coke, of Longford in Derbyſhire, and Holkham in Norfolk, eſq; one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Norfolk. James-Lenox Dutton died in the year 1776, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſurviving ſon,

James Dutton, eſq; who married Elizabeth, the youngeſt ſiſter of the before-mentioned Thomas-William Coke. He is the twenty-third in lineal deſcent from Hudard, or Odard, the Norman, who came into England with king William the Firſt, and is the preſent lord of the manor of Sherbourn, where he reſides. His arms are, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent; 2d and 3d, Gules, a fret Or.

N. B. This is extracted from the elaborate and well authenticated pedigree of Dutton of Dutton, compiled about the year 1669, from original records and other evidences, by ſir Peter Leyceſter, bart. of Nether Tabley in Cheſhire, and continued down to the end of the year 1694, by George Ven, vicar of Sherbourn. All ſince that time falls within the reach of memory.

SHIPTON MOIGN and DOVEL

IS a pleaſant, healthy village, in the hundred of Longtree, three miles ſouth from Tetbury, three north-weſtward from Malmeſbury in Wiltſhire, and about twenty-one ſouthward from Glouceſter.

The pariſh is bounded on the eaſt by Wiltſhire, and a ſmall ſtream, which riſes at Weſtonbirt, runs through it, and falls into the Avon at Malmeſbury.

Shipton, antiently written Sciptune, is of doubtful original. Sir Robert Atkyns conjectured that it was ſo called from the ſheep kept here. But Scip may be the name of the proprietor whoſe town it was. Moign and Dovel are additional names, of later date, taken from the families of Le Moygn, and De Dowe, who were owners of the reſpective manors ſo called, and were given to diſtinguiſh them from two other places of the name of Shipton, in this county.

The village is ornamented with two gentlemen's ſeats, of which one belongs to the reverend Mr. Nowel, who, in right of his wife, is lord of the manor. It is of freeſtone, built about half a century ago, with baluſtrades over the Attic ſtory, and the family arms of Hodges in a large ſhield (Azure, a feſs between three creſcents argent) are placed in the centre of the principal front, facing the north.

The other is the antient ſeat of the Eſtcourts. It is a large old houſe, with a great gate-way in front, and has a venerable and reſpectable appearance. This is at preſent the ſeat and reſidence of Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq; who is preparing to build a new houſe on his eſtate at Long Newton, near Tetbury.

This pariſh is diſtinguiſhed for having been the birth-place of John Oldham, an ingenious perſon of the laſt age, who was the author of a well known, and much admired book of poems, and died in the prime of life, in the year 1683, aged 30.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book takes notice of three manors in this pariſh, but the accounts of the two moſt conſiderable were overlooked by ſir Robert Atkyns. They are ſet down under the title Terra Mathiu de Moretanie, and are thus deſcribed in the record:

'Maci de Mauritania holds Scipetone in 'Langetrewes hundred, of the king. Strang, the 'Dane, held it. There are ten hides taxed. In 'demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins, 'and two bordars, with four plow-tillages. There 'are four ſervi, and a mill of 10*s.* and paſture 'worth 2*s.* It was worth 15*l.* now 8*l.*'

'The ſame Maci holds Scipetone in Lange-'trewes hundred, and Rumbald holds it of him. 'There are ten hides taxed. John held it in the 'time of king Edward. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and four villeins, and eight bor-'dars, with four plow-tillages. There are four 'ſervi, and a mill of 12*s.* and paſture worth 2*s.* 'It was worth 15*l.* now 8*l.*'

'The ſame Maci holds one hide there, and 'Rumbald holds it of him. Aluuin held it, and 'could go where he pleaſed, and Rainbert Flan-'drenſis likewiſe enjoyed it. There is one plow-'tillage in demean, and one villein, and one bor-'dar, with half a plow-tillage. It was worth '20 ſol. now 14 ſol.' Domeſday, p. 79.

There was another manor, thus deſcribed in the antient ſurvey:

'The ſame William [de Ow] holds Sciptone in 'Langetreu hundred, in the ſame manner as 'Ralph de Limeſi held it. Wlui held it in the 'time of king Edward. There are two hides. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and two bor-'dars, and eight ſervi. It is worth and was worth '40 ſol. Wluui could go where he pleaſed. Hugh 'holds it of William.' Ibid. p. 73.

William le Moygne was ſeized of a manor in this pariſh 5 H. 3. which he held of the crown by the ſervice of keeping the king's larder; and he pur-purchaſed a charter of free warren in all his lands in Glouceſterſhire in the 37th year of the ſame reign. Walter de Stukeley, ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, in obedience to the king's writ, returned into the exchequer the names of all the vills in the county, with their reſpective proprietors; and in his liſt it is ſaid, that Johanna le Moyn, Margaret Gifford, William Skay, and William de Dowe, were lords of the vill of Shipton Moynt, in Langtree hundred 9 E. 1. This return ſeems to have been preparitory to the writs of Quo warranto that were brought againſt almoſt every conſiderable landholder in the kingdom, by king Edward the Firſt, in the fifteenth year of his reign, in order to oblige them to ſhew by what title they held their eſtates, or enjoyed certain privileges therein. However neceſſary ſuch a method of preceeding might have been in certain caſes, it was made uſe of by that king, who was chief lord of many manors, and other eſtates, as an expedient to fill his own coffers, by extorting exorbitant fines from the ſubject for freſh grants, where the title-deeds and evidences reſpecting eſtates were loſt or deſtroyed, as was frequently the caſe, during the civil commotions that diſtracted the kingdom in his father's reign. And as the fines for renewal were arbitrary, and generally exceſſive, this meaſure was regarded by the ſubject in a light little better than confiſcation by lawleſs violence.

A writ of Quo warranto was brought againſt William le Moygne, ſon of William, to oblige him to ſhew by what right he enjoyed divers privileges in Schipton, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. and he died ſeized thereof in the 23d year of the ſame reign. Henry le Moygne, ſon of the laſt William, was ſeized of the manor and advowſon of Shiptone Moygne 1 E. 2. and dying 8 E. 2. the eſcheator's inquiſition found that John le Moygne was his ſon and heir; but Joan, the widow of Henry, was endowed with the manor; upon whoſe death, 14 E. 3. livery was granted to Robert le Moygne, ſon of Henry, the ſame year. Sir Henry Moigne, ſon of Robert, ſucceeded his father, and died ſeized of Shipton Moigne and Hullecot [Hull-court] 49 E. 3. Sir John Moigne, ſon and heir of ſir Henry, died ſeized of the manor of Shipton Moign, and left Elizabeth, his only daughter and heireſs, who carried this eſtate by her marriage with William de Stourton, into that name and family. Upon occaſion of this alliance, the Stourtons took for their creſt, A demy monk, with a penitential whip in his hand, alluding to the name of Moign, which ſignifies a monk.

William de Stourton, deſcended from an antient family reſiding at Stourton in Wiltſhire, was ſeized of Shipton 21 R. 2. in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter of ſir John Moigne, and died 1 H. 5. John de Stourton, ſon of William, was under age at his father's death, and had not livery of this manor until 9 H. 5. He was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 18 H. 6. and having been created a baron in the 28th year of that reign, died ſeized of Shipton Moign, Hull-court, and Hamvelle, alias Vetham, or Veelham near Berkeley, and was ſucceeded by William lord Stourton, who had livery of this manor the ſame year. He married Margaret, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of ſir John Chidiock, and died 17 E. 4. likewiſe ſeized of Shipton, and of Veelham near Berkeley. John lord Stourton, ſon and heir of William, had livery of the manor upon the deceaſe of his father, and dying 2 R. 3. William lord Stourton, his ſon, had livery the ſame year, and having married the ſiſter of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, died 14 H. 8. William lord Stourton ſucceeded his father, but dying ſoon after, Edward lord Stourton, his brother, had livery 16 H. 8. and died ſeized of Shipton Moign in the 27th year of the ſame reign. William lord Stourton, ſon of Edward, had livery of this manor 33 H. 8. and dying 2 E. 6. left Charles lord Stourton, his ſon, who was hanged at Saliſbury for murder, 3 Mariæ.

The manor came very ſoon after to the family of Hodges, or as they are ſometimes called Hedges. John Hodges, or Hedges, eſq; upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor of Shipton Moyne 20 Eliz. and died ſeized of Shipton Moyne and Shipton Dovell, and of the advowſon of the church, in the 40th year of the ſame reign. He was likewiſe ſeized of the neighbouring manor of Eſton Grey, in Wiltſhire, and of the advowſon of that church, at the ſame time. The eſcheator's inquiſition found that Shipton Moyne and Shipton Dovell, and the advowſon of the church, were held of the queen in capite, by the 40th part of a knight's fee, and were worth 21 l. 2 s. 0 d. ob. clear of all repriſes. Thomas Hodges, ſon and heir of John, was twenty-one years old and upwards at the taking of the inquiſition, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in 1622. Another Thomas Hodges, eſq; was lord of the manor, and died in the year 1696. He married Edith, youngeſt daughter of Thomas Eſtcourt, of this pariſh, eſq; who ſurviving him, died in the year 1717. Thomas Hodges, eſq; ſon of the laſt-mentioned Thomas and Edith his wife, dying under age, in the year 1708, this manor and eſtate came to his younger brother, Eſtcourt Hodges, eſq. The reverend Walter Hodges was lord of this manor, and the laſt male heir of his family. He was provoſt of Oriel college, Oxford, and vice-chancellor of that univerſity, and died in the year 1757, aged 62. The reverend Mr. Nowel, in right of his wife, one of the coheireſſes of the Hodges family, is the preſent lord of the manor, and reſides here.

There is another very conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh, belonging to the antient family of the Eſtcourts, who have reſided in this place upwards of 300 years, and ſeem to have taken their name from a manor they enjoyed here, called Le Eſtcourt, becauſe it lay eaſtward of the before-mentioned manor.

John Eſtcourt died ſeized of a manor in Shipton Moigne 14 E. 4. And it appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition, taken 42 Eliz. that Thomas Eſtcourt, of Shipton Moigne, eſq; died Oct. 25, 41 Eliz. ſeized of a manor, and lands in Shipton Moigne called Le Eſtcourt, worth 8 l. per ann. which he held of Thomas Hedges, gent. as of his manor of Shipton Moigne. And of another manor and lands in Shipton Moigne, worth together 40 s. which he held of the queen in common ſoccage, as of her manor of Eaſt Greenwich in Kent; and of the manor of Wynſton, in the county of Glouceſter, worth 5 l. which he held of Anthony Hungerford, as of his manor of Wynſton. And that in the 39th year of the ſame reign he had enfeoffed Ralph Sheldon, and others, with his manor or farm and lands at Combſend; and with lands in Old Sadbury, Little Sadbury, Dodington, Tormarton, and Yate, in this county, in truſt, by way of jointure for Mary, daughter of William Savage, and wife of Thomas Eſtcourt, his ſon and heir apparent. Thomas Eſtcourt, the father, died ſeized alſo of other very conſiderable eſtates in Long Newton, Weſtport, Malmeſbury, Burton Hill, Sherſton, Sherſton Magna, Pynckeney, Willeſley, Chippenham, Rowden, Waddeſwycke, Box, and Haſelbery, all in the county of Wilts, and left Thomas his ſon thirty years old at the time of his death. Walter Eſtcourt, eſq; ſon of Thomas, died in the year 1726, and left this manor and eſtate to Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq; upon whoſe death, in 1746, the manor came to Edmond Eſtcourt, eſq; his only brother and heir. He married Anna-Maria, third daughter and coheireſs of Charles Yate, late of Colthrope in this county, by whom he had one daughter, Anna-Maria, who was married to the late Thomas Earl, of Malmeſbury, eſq; deceaſed; but he bequeathed the bulk of his ample fortune to Thomas Eſtcourt, eſq; ſon of Matthew Eſtcourt, of Cam in this county, who is the preſent lord of this manor, and proprietor of many great eſtates in this pariſh and elſewhere. His arms are, Ermine, on a chief indented gules three eſtoiles Or.

Jeffry Pulham granted two yard-lands in this place to the abbey of Cirenceſter, 32 E. 1. Lands in Shipton Moign, belonging to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to John Dudley and John Aſcough 17 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth 160 l. a year. Mrs. Nowel is patroneſs, and Mr. Huntely is the preſent incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt, conſiſts of the nave and two ailes, with a tower, in which are five bells.

Seated here for ſome Ages paſt;
Bequeathed his Eſtate to the latter,

Through the participation of his diſtinguiſhed Merit.
An Intention ſo great, ſo glorious, in the bountiful Teſtator

Worthy of better Times, a kind of Prodigy in theſe.
Steady from Conviction of Mind,

With a Zeal uninſtigated by Profit; [Welfare,
He conſidered private Happineſs as dependant on the publick

His Thoughts, his Words, his Actions

In the wide Sphere of his Extenſive Fortune,

As Reaſon, Piety and Prudence demanded,
Tenants, Neighbours, Strangers,
Felt it;
And from an unſought, but not neglected Gratitude,
For he took pleaſure in ſeeing others pleaſed,

On this monument are the arms of Eſtcourt, as before.

In the ſame chancel there is a very ſtately tomb, without any inſcription, ſaid to be intended for Judge Eſtcourt and his lady, who are repreſented lying along in full proportion, with hands lifted up in the poſture of prayer. Round the tomb are ſeven ſons, and one daughter, kneeling; all in the dreſs of the age of queen Elizabeth. Over the figures is a large canopy, ſupported by three handſome pillars on each ſide; and in front are two ſcutcheons, one of which bears the arms of Eſtcourt; the other, Quarterly, 1ſt & 4th, Eſtcourt; 2d & 3d, Sable, a feſs between three falcons heads erazed Or. And at the top of the canopy, Baron and femme, 1. SHIPTON OLIFFE

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Bradley, five miles diſtant eaſt from Cheltenham, ſix north-weſtward from Northleach, and fourteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It lies on the Coteſwold hills, and has nothing curious of any ſort to diſtinguiſh it. The etymology of Shipton is uncertain; but Oliffe, or Olive, is an addition taken from a family of that name, who were owners of the manor, and reſided in the pariſh for ſeveral generations.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor belonged to the archbiſhop of York, at the time of the general ſurvey, wherein it is thus recorded, under the title Terra Thome Archiepi, viz.

'Gundulf held, and [ſtill] holds, Scipetune, in 'Wacreſcumbe hundred, [as] one manor of one 'hide, and pays tax. There is one plow-tillage 'in demean, and it is worth 8 ſol. He holds it 'of archbiſhop Thomas.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

This manor is not always diſtinguiſhed in the records from the neighbouring pariſh of Shipton Solers, which neceſſarily occaſions confuſion.

John de Turbervil died ſeized of this manor 17 Joh. In the ſheriff's return of all the vills in this this county, 9 E. 1. there is mention of one Shipton only, in the hundred of Bradley.

It came afterwards to the Olliffs, who continued in poſſeſſion 'till the end of the ſeventeenth century, when Ralph Olliff, gent. ſold it to William Peachy, eſq; whoſe two daughters, Margaret Peachy, and Suſanna Peachy, are the preſent ladies of the manor.

Lands in Shipton belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and were granted to Cicely Pickerel 17 Eliz.

HAMLET. Hampen is a hamlet in this pariſh, in which there were two eſtates mentioned in Domeſday. 'Pin held one manor, of one hide, 'in Hagepine, in Wacreſcumbe hundred, and it 'paid tax. Anſger holds it of archbiſhop Thomas, 'and has one plow-tillage in demean. It was 'worth 20*s*. and is now worth 10*s*.' p. 70.

'William the ſon of Baderon holds Hagenepene 'in Wacreſcumbe hundred, and Goisfrid holds it 'of him. Eduui held it, and there were five 'hides. There are two plow-tillages in demean, 'and ſix villeins, with three plow-tillages, and 'there are four ſervi. This land pays tax. It 'was worth 100*s*. now only 60*s*.' p. 74.

Theſe eſtates were afterwards diſtinguiſhed by Upper and Lower Hampen. King Henry the Third granted court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Shipton, (by which I underſtand Hampen in Shipton) to the knights templers, whoſe right to thoſe privileges was allowed in the proceedings on a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. They were ſeized of Shipton near Withington (i. e. Hampen in Shipton) 2 E. 3. and the manor was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3. The order of knights templers was ſuppreſſed in England, and their eſtates given to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem; and at the general diſſolution of the knights hoſpitallers, this eſtate was granted to Edward Fiennes, lord Clinton and Say, and to Robert Tyrwit, 35 H. 8.

But there was another eſtate at Hampen, dignified with the title of a manor, held of the archbiſhop of York, by Thomas Lane, who died ſeized of the ſame 37 H. 8. and left Thomas his ſon eighteen years old. Hampen was afterwards the property of Lionel Rich, of Upper Dowdeſwell, eſq; out of whoſe family it paſſed lately, by purchaſe, to Mr. Van Notten, of London.

William Docket, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Over Hampen, and Nether Hampen, to Edward Tame, 19 H. 7. Lands in Hannypen belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and were granted to William Sharington 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, according to the biſhop's viſitation book; but was formerly accounted to lie in that of Winchcombe. It is worth 85*l.* a year. The ladies of the manor are patrons, and Mr. Chapone is the preſent incumbent.

Tithes in Shipton Oliffe, formerly belonging to Glouceſter abbey, were granted to ſir Edward Warner 4 Eliz. and are now the property of Thomas Browne, eſq.

The church is ſmall, with a croſs aile on the ſouth ſide, and a low ſpire at the weſt end.

There are memorials in the chancel, for Gyles Olliff, gent. who died in 1699, aged 72; Ralph Olliff, gent. who died in 1702, aged 39; Gyles and Robert Olliff, ſons of Ralph Olliff, gent. who died in 1696 and 1697 reſpectively; and for ſeveral other perſons of that family, whoſe inſcriptions are now obliterated.

SHIPTON SOLERS

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Bradley, about five miles eaſtward from Cheltenham, ſix weſtward from Northleach, and fourteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſevered in the middle, by the intervention of Shipton Oliffe, and the lands of both pariſhes are very much intermixed. The turnpike-road from Glouceſter, to Oxford and London, leads through the pariſh, where there is a good inn, called Frogmill, on the eaſt bank of the river Coln, which ſeparates it from Withington.

Solers is the name of an antient family of eminence, who owned the manor, and had other conſiderable property in Glouceſterſhire, about the time of king Edward the Second.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There were ſeveral eſtates in Shipton, at the time of the general ſurvey.

'William Leuric holds three hides, leſs one 'yard-land, in Scipetune in Wacreſcumbe hun-'dred, and pays tax. Goisfrid holds them of him. 'Oſgot held them. There is one plow-tillage in 'demean, and a prieſt, and one villein, and four 'ſervi, without any plow-tillage. It was worth '40*s*. now 20*s*.' Domeſday, p. 74.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Sciptune in Wacreſ-'cumbe hundred, and Radulf holds it of him. 'Eduui held it. There are three hides and a half 'taxed.

'taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'three villeins, with two plow-tillages, and four 'ſervi, and ten acres of meadow. It was worth '4*l.* now 40*s.*' Ibid. p. 77.

'Hugh Laſne holds Sciptune in Wacreſcumbe 'hundred. There are five hides taxed. Uuluard 'held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'four villeins, and one bordar, with two plow-'tillages. There are five ſervi, and a mill of 10*s.* 'It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' Ibid. p. 78.

'Ansfrid de Cormelies holds three yard-lands in 'Sciptune, in Wacreſcumbe hundred. Bil held them 'for a manor, and paid tax. There is one plow-'tillage in demean. It is worth and was worth '10*s.* This Bil could go where he pleaſed. Ib. p. 78.

Sir Robert Atkyns ſays, Walter de Lacy 'gave 'ſixteen manors in Gloſterſhire to Ansfrid de 'Cormeiles, who had married his niece. This 'Shipton was one of thoſe manors, of which Ans-'frid de Cormeile was ſeized at the time of the 'general ſurvey, by virtue of the gift from Walter 'de Lacy.' But ſir Robert was not aware that his aſſertion is a flat contradiction to the authority of Domeſday, where, under the title Terra Ansfridi de Cormeliis, it is ſaid, Theſe lands [i.e. Pantelie, Chilecot, Chitiford, and Hege,] and Wineſtan, and Tanteſborne, above-written, Ansfrid received of Walter de Laci, when he married his niece. But he holds the other eſtates of the king; among which Shipton was one.

Richard de Cormeile was ſon and heir of Anſfrid, and dying 23 H. 2. his wife, Beatrix, ſurviving him, enjoyed this manor in dower; but after her death, it deſcended to Walter de Cormeile, ſon of Richard, who left three daughters coheireſſes. Margaret, the eldeſt daughter, was married to Hugh Poher, and died 20 H. 3. leaving iſſue two daughters coheireſſes, the elder married to Robert Archer, and the younger wedded to Simon Solers, who held this manor in right of his wife, and from him it obtained the name of Shipton Solers.

Thomas Solers was ſon and heir of Simon, and John Solers, ſon of Thomas, died ſeized of Shipton 4 E. 2. from which time I find no mention of this family at Shipton.

John Tyrrel held the manor of Shipton Solers 34 E. 3. which paſſed afterwards into the family of the Twiniho's, who were proprietors of this manor for ſeveral generations. Edward Twiniho, the laſt heir male, died 22 H. 8. and left two daughters coheireſſes, who had livery of it the ſame year. Anne, the elder daughter, was married to Henry Heydon; and Catherine, the younger, wedded to John Daunſey.

This manor was aſſigned to the Heydons. Edward Heydon, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608; and the heireſs of that family carried it by her marriage to William Peachy, eſq; who was owner of it when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it; and was ſucceeded by his ſon William, whoſe ſon, William Peachy, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, but reſides at Petworth in Eſſex. His arms are, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, within a bordure ingrailed azure. 2d and 3d, Azure, a bordure ingrailed argent.

A meſſuage in this pariſh, which belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, was granted by the crown to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35 H. 8.

What ſir Robert Atkyns ſays of the knights templers being ſeized of Shipton, ſhould not, as I apprehend, be applied to this manor; but to Hampen in Shipton Oliffe, where they had an eſtate, which was granted away by the crown, at the general ſuppreſſion of knights hoſpitallers, as mentioned in the proper place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 65*l.* a year, of which Mr. Peachy is patron, and Mr. Chapone is the preſent incumbent.

Two yard-lands belong to the glebe.

A portion of tithes in Shipton Solers, which belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted to the biſhoprick 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church is ſmall, with a low turret at the weſt end.

SHURDINGTON

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, about five miles ſouthward from Cheltenham, ſix northward from Painſwick, and about ſix eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is pleaſantly ſituated under the weſt ſide of that ridge of hills which ſeparates the Vale from the hill country, and ſhelters it from thoſe chilling eaſterly winds that generally prevail in the ſpring. A ſmall brook runs from hence into the Severn at Sandhurſt.

There is a large tumulus, or barrow, in this pariſh, which was opened by ſome workmen, not many years ago, to dig for ſtone, and having ſunk to the depth of about ſixteen feet, they diſcovered a ſtone ſepulchre, ſeven feet long, and four broad, and in it a perfect ſkeleton. The bones were freſh and firm, and the teeth white as ivory. Over the head hung a helmet, which was ſo intirely corroded by ruſt, that it fell to pieces on the ſlighteſt touch. I am informed that there was nothing beſide the helmet, with the remains of the corps in the tomb, that could lead to any diſcovery, except ſome characters, which thoſe who ſaw them read for One thouſand; as if deſigned to point out the year when the corps was interred, anſwering to the 21ſt year of the reign of king Ethelred, commonly called the Unready. This was probably the corps of ſome great man, ſlain in the war between our own countrymen and the piratical Danes, who in the nineteenth year of that king's reign, ſailed up the mouth of the Severn, and made inroads up the country, perhaps to theſe parts.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It was found by inquiſition, taken 8 E. 2. that the manor of Scherneton, with view of frank pledge, was held of Gilbert de Clare, the laſt earl of Glouceſter and Hertford of that name, at the time of his death. Peter de la Mere held this manor, with free warren, 12 E. 2. and John Maltravers was ſeized thereof the ſame year. John Maltravers, the elder, died ſeized of this manor 31 E. 3. whereupon ſir John Maltravers, his ſon, had livery the ſame year, and died 38 E. 3. Agnes, the widow of John Maltravers, died ſeized of the third part of this manor, which ſhe held in dower, 49 E. 3. John lord Maltravers, ſon of the laſt John, died 5 R. 2. and Henry Maltravers, his only ſon, deceaſing without iſſue, the manors of Shurdington, King's Stanley, Woodcheſter, and Stonehouſe, came to Elianor, ſiſter and heireſs of Henry Maltravers, who being married to John Arundel, ſometimes called John Fitz-Alan, ſecond ſon of Richard earl of Arundel, carried thoſe manors into that name and family. Eleanor Maltravers, after the death of John Arundel, was married to Reginald lord Cobham, who was ſeized of Shurdington, in her right, 4 H. 4. and ſhe continued to hold the manor 'till her death, 6 H. 4.

John Fitz-Alan, ſon of John, and grandſon of John Fitz-Alan and Elianor, the heireſs of the Maltravers's, became earl of Arundel, by the death of Thomas earl of Arundel without male iſſue. He was ſlain near Beauvois in France, and by an inquiſition taken 13 H. 6. was found to have died ſeized of the manors of Shurdington, Stonehouſe, Stoke Archer, King's Stanley, and Woodcheſter, in Glouceſterſhire, beſide great eſtates in other counties. Humphry earl of Arundel, ſon and heir of John, was ſix years old at his father's death, and dying ſoon afterwards, William earl of Arundel, his uncle, was next heir, and had livery of this manor 18 H. 6. But Elianor, the widow of John earl of Arundel, held the manor in dower. She was afterwards married to ſir Richard Poinings, and ſir Walter Hungerford, ſucceſſively, and died 33 H. 6. The before-mentioned William earl of Arundel married Joan, daughter of Richard Nevil, earl of Saliſbury; and dying 3 H. 7. was ſucceeded by his ſon, Thomas earl of Arundel, who married Margaret, daughter of Richard Widevile, earl of Rivers, and died ſeized of the manors of Shurdington, Archerds, King's Stanley, Stonehouſe, and Woodcheſter, 16 H. 8. William earl of Arundel, ſon of Thomas, had livery of theſe manors the ſame year, and having married Anne, ſiſter to Henry earl of Northumberland, died ſeized of all the above-mentioned manors, 35 H. 8.

The archbiſhop of York was ſeized of the manor of Shurdington 14 E. 3. and it ſeems that the great perſons before-mentioned held it of the archbiſhops; for in the grant of the manor to ſir Thomas Chamberlayne, 6 E. 6. it is mentioned to have belonged to the archbiſhop of York.

Edmond Chamberlayne, of Maugerſbury, eſq; great grandſon of ſir Thomas, was lord of it about the year 1691, and dying in 1755, was ſucceeded by his only ſon Edmond, upon whoſe death, in the year 1774, the manor deſcended to the reverend John Chamberlayne, his eldeſt ſon and heir, who is the preſent lord of the manor. His pedigree and arms are given under Maugerſbury, in the pariſh of Stow.

Henry de Pet held one plow-tillage in Great Shurdington, of John Giffard of Brimpsfield, and was ſeized of it 1 E. 3.

HAMLET. Uphatherly has been conſidered by ſome as a diſtinct pariſh, but it is now eſteemed a hamlet in Shurdington. It has its own conſtable, and overſeer of the poor. John de Chanſy held the hamlet of Atherley, of the honour of Wallingford, by the ſervice of half a knight's fee, 6 E. 2. and held a court, the perquiſites of which were valued at 12*d*. Eſch. Robert Preſbury was ſeized of lands in Uphatherly 18 E. 2. John Moor, the younger, levied a fine of lands in Uphatherly, to the uſe of Thomas Lane, 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, within the deanery of Winchcombe, and is annexed to Badgworth. Jeſus college, Oxford, and Chriſt college, Cambridge, have the impropriation.

The tithes of Shurdington belonged antiently to the Benedictine nunnery of Uſke, in Monmouthſhire, and were granted, together with the chapel of Uphatherly and South Hatherly, to James Gunter and Walter Lewis, 37 H. 8.

Tithes in Shurdington and Uphatherly, lately belonging to the nunnery of Uſke, were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz.

The chapel is dedicated to St. Paul, and has a handſome ſteeple at the weſt end, and an aile on the north ſide, called Hatherly aile, which is kept in repair by the inhabitants of the hamlet of Uphatherly.

Benefactions.

Nicholas Blount gave 40*s*. a year for ſix ſermons. William Mills, yeoman, gave 5*s*. a year to the poor, charged on lands in Little Shurdington.

SIDDINGTON St. MARY

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, one mile ſouth from Cirenceſter, ſix north-weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and eighteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded by Cirenceſter on the north and weſt, by Lower Siddington and South Cerney on the eaſt, and by part of Wiltſhire on the ſouth.

The greater part of the pariſh is in tillage, the reſt is good meadow and paſture ground.

The antient and ſignificant name is Sudintone, or Suditone, that is, the South-town, in reſpect of Cirenceſter; but it is moſt uſually called Upper Siddington. Both the Siddingtons formerly made but one vill, tho' the manors were held independently of each other, and often by different owners; for which reaſon the ſheriff, in his return of all the vills of this county, 9 E. 1. mentions one Siddington only, under which both manors were included, for he ſays, Sodington, et ſunt Dni eiuſd. vill. Hugo de Spencer, et Johannes de Langley, et Gualter de Langley; that is, Sodington, and Hugh de Spencer, and John de Langley, and Walter de Langley are lords of the ſame vill.

Doctor George Bull, was rector of this place, and afterwards biſhop of St. David's. He told Doctor Parſons, chancellor of this dioceſe, a remarkable anecdote of the longevity of his pariſhioners here, ten of whom he had buried, whoſe ages together made about a thouſand years, and two of them were one hundred and twenty-three years old each.

Cotemporary with doctor Bull, was one John Roberts, alias Hayward, who lived here upon a little eſtate of his own, which is ſtill the property of a deſcendant from him, of the ſame name, now a merchant in London. That man was of a religious turn, and ſeems to have been the chief in theſe parts, of the people called Quakers. In the reign of king Charles the Second, when perſecution for religion ran high, he drank a potion of that bitter cup, as appears by the memoirs of his life, written by his ſon, and publiſhed in 1725. Biſhop Nicholſon, however, before whom he was many times cited, is repreſented in that narrative to have been a perſon of greater moderation than moſt of his brethren, and was far from being diſpleaſed with the moral principles, plain dealing, and ſenſible anſwers of that man, tho' he could not conſiſtently approve ſome of his religious notions.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The ſame Humphry [the chamberlain] holds 'two hides in Sudintone, in Cireceſtre hundred, 'and Anſchitil holds them of him. Aluuard held 'them for a manor. There is one plow-tillage 'in demean, and two bordars, with half a plow-'tillage, and a mill of 5*s.* [rent]. It is worth and 'was worth 40*s.* He that held it could go where 'he pleaſed.' Domeſday, p. 79.

'The ſame William [the ſon of Baderon] holds 'one hide in Suditone in Cireceſtre hundred. 'Oſuuid held it in the time of king Edward, and 'could go where he pleaſed. There is one plow-'tillage in demean, and four ſervi. It is worth 'and was worth 24*s.*' Ibid. p. 73:

The ſheriff returned that Hugh de Spencer was lord of this manor 9 E. 1. as already obſerved, and it is very probable that his family continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the latter part of the next reign, for the manor of Over Soddington was granted to Edmond earl of Kent, 1 E. 3. ſubject to a reſerved rent of 23*l.* and it is recited in the grant to have lately belonged to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger. Edmond earl of Kent being attainted of treaſon, and executed at Wincheſter by the villainous contrivance of Roger Mortimer, earl of March, in the year 1330, this manor, together with great part of that nobleman's eſtate, was granted to Jeffery Mortimer, third ſon of the earl of March, 4 E. 3. who enjoyed his ill-got poſſeſſions but for a few months, when Roger Mortimer being himſelf attainted, and executed at a place called the Elms, about a mile from London, the ſentence of Edmond earl of Kent was reverſed, his widow admitted to the enjoyment of her jointure, and his ſon, John earl of Kent, was reſtored in blood, and became poſſeſſed of this manor, of which he died ſeized 26 E. 3. without iſſue; and Elizabeth his widow held it in dower, and died 12 H. 4.

Sir Edward le Diſpencer, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurſt, were ſeized of the manor of Soddington, 49 E. 3. probably in truſt for the widow of John earl of Kent.

Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, deſcended from the heireſs of the earls of Kent, died ſeized of this manor without iſſue, 3 H. 6. and Joan his ſiſter, then the widow of ſir John Grey, had livery thereof 4 H. 6.

The manor came ſoon afterwards to Walter Langley, lord of Lower Siddington, whoſe widow, Iſabel, died ſeized of both thoſe manors 14 E. 4.

Henry Kettleby was ſeized of Over Soddington, and Nether Soddington, in right of Iſabel his wife, (perhaps the heireſs of the Langleys) who died 31 H. 8. and John Kettleby, their ſon, had livery granted to him 32 H. 8. Andrew Kettleby died died 1 Jac. without iſſue, ſeized of the manors of Over Suddington, and Nether Suddington, then worth 19*l.* 10*s.* a year clear, which he held of the king in capite, and by will gave all his lands in Glouceſterſhire, and Wiltſhire, to his wife Jane, and her heirs. Eſch.

From the heir of Kettleby, the above-mentioned manors paſſed, by purchaſe, to the Danvers family, 5 Jac. Henry Danvers, earl of Danby, was lord of both manors in the year 1608, and ſold them to ſir Henry Poole, in the 13th year of the ſame reign. Sir William Poole ſettled the manor and hundred of Cirenceſter, and the manors of Upper and Lower Siddington, on Anne his daughter, who was married to James earl of Newburgh. Charles earl of Newburgh, their ſon and heir, left the above manors to Frances his widow, in fee; and ſhe ſold them, about the year 1695, to ſir Benjamin Bathurſt. Allen, firſt earl of Bathurſt, ſon and heir of ſir Benjamin, dying in the year 1775, theſe manors deſcended to his ſon, Henry earl of Bathurſt, the preſent proprietor. For his lordſhip's pedigree and arms, ſee Cirenceſter.

John de Langley, at the time of his death, 18 E. 2. was ſeized of one meſſuage, one plow-tillage, and fourteen acres and a half of meadow in Over Soddington, in truſt for a chantry in the church of Lower Soddington. Richard Urdle levied a fine of lands in Siddington Over, to John Young and William Lypiat, 18 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter. This and the vicarage of Siddington St. Peter, are worth together 210*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron of both livings, and John Waſhbourne, M. A. is the preſent incumbent.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to St. Mary, and has a ſmall chapel on the north ſide, which was likewiſe dedicated to the ſame ſaint, as may be gathered from two verſes againſt the ſouth wall, which were legible a few years ago, but now obliterated, viz.

Cælos aſſumpt. cū nato virgo Maria
Crimina tu cuncta dilue virgo pia.

At the eaſt end is a niche, where the ſtatue of the ſaint ſtood; and the whole chapel was ornamented with a profuſion of painting, carving, and ſhort ſentences and verſes, which are decay'd, except the following lines in old characters, painted on the inſide of the door, which are very legible:

Prima parit Chriſtum Iacobum ſecunda ſecundum
Et Ioſeph iuſtum peperit cum Symone Iudam

SID-

SIDDINGTON St. PETER

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, one mile ſouth from Cirenceſter, ſix north-weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and eighteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſeated on a flat, on the banks of the Churn, which runs through the pariſh; and it is commonly called Lower Siddington, in contradiſtinction to the adjoining village of Upper Siddington, which lies on a pleaſant elevation at the diſtance of about half a mile. The pariſh has likewiſe been diſtinguiſhed by the addition of Langley, which it received from the family of that name, who were lords of the manor for many generations, and had a large manſion houſe near the church; but it has been long ſince razed to the ground, and nothing remains to ſhow where it ſtood, but part of the moat with which it was ſurrounded.

During the winter, and the former part of the ſpring, the farmers here lead the water over the meadows, (which they call drowning) by means of ſluices from the river Churn, after the example of their neighbours at Driffield, under which pariſh I have given the method of doing it, with a view to promote the public good.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The ſame Haſcoit [Muſard] holds Sudintone, 'in Cireceſtre hundred. There are ten hides 'taxed beſides the demean. Erneſi held it. In 'demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, 'and ten bordars, with a prieſt, having five 'plow-tillages and a half. There are ſeven ſervi, 'and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 10*l.* 'now 8*l.*' Domeſday, p. 78.

From the above Haſcoit Muſard, who accompanied king William the Firſt in his invaſion of England, this manor deſcended, like Miſerden, down to 1 E. 1. when Ralph Muſard died ſeized of it. Jeffry de Langeley held Southington and Weſton the following year, and Walter de Langley, ſon of Jeffry, was lord of the manor of Sodington 8 & 9 E. 1.

It was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 15 E. 1. againſt whom a writ of Quo warranto was then brought, to ſet forth his right to the privilege of a court leet in Siddington; and he pleaded a grant to his anceſtor Richard de Clare, 47 H. 3. and his claim was allowed.

John de Langley, ſon of Walter, was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 1 E. 2. and died ſeized of this manor in the 18th year of the ſame reign. William de Caroſwell, and Mary his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Nether Sodington to the uſe of themſelves for their lives, the remainder to Jeffry Langley, ſon of Jeffry, in taille, 4 E. 3. Joan, the widow of John Trillow, died ſeized of Nether Sodington 49 E. 3. It muſt be ſuppoſed that ſhe had been the wife of Jeffry Langley, and held the manor in dower. John Langley, grandſon of John, was ſeized of Soddington Langley, alias Nether Soddington, Rodmarton, and Torleton, 10 H. 4. Jeffry Langley held Sodington of Edmond earl of March, 3 H. 6. and John Langley, eſq; died ſeized of it, and of a manor in Turk Dean, in the 39th year of that reign. The manors of Upper and Nether Sodington, and Turk Dean, came next to Walter Langley, whoſe widow, Iſabel, died ſeized of them 14 E. 4. and from that time both the Siddingtons have been enjoy'd by the ſame proprietors. The earl of Bathurſt is the preſent lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 30*l.* a year, and has the ſame patron and incumbent as Siddington St. Mary, under which pariſh the outgoings are ſet down; except that the vicarage pays 7*s.* 8*d.* yearly to the crown, for tithes and glebe in Cheſterton.

Jordan de Clinton gave the manor of Sodington, conſiſting of lands and tithes, with their appurtenances, to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem. The impropriation was veſted in Mr. Coxwell of Turk Dean, at the beginning of this century, and paſſed afterwards to ſir John Nelthorp, of whom it was purchaſed, in the year 1776, together with the impropriation of Cheſterton, in Cirenceſter, by the earl of Bathurſt, the preſent proprietor.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It has a handſome chapel on the north ſide, and an unfiniſhed tower, with three bells, at the weſt end of the chapel.

The chapel was built by Edmund Langley, in honour of the ſalutation of the virgin Mary. It is a handſomer ſtructure than the church, from which it is ſeparated by pillars. There is a cut through the ſtone-work that divides the chancel from the body of the church, that the people in the chapel might ſee the elevation of the hoſt.

In the upper part of the eaſt window of the chapel, there are three large figures painted in the glaſs, of which only that of the virgin mother remains intire; and under their feet it is thus written: Orate: p: aiabs: edmūdi: lāgley.—et: iohē: et elizabeth: ux: ei': qui:—hāc: capellā: ī honor: ſalutacionis: bē. marie: fecit:

Beneath are ſeveral of the Langleys, kneeling, with books before them, and the family arms on their ſurcoats, viz. Gules, a ſaltire Or. Their reſpective names are written over their heads, viz. Benet Langley armig. Richard, William, William, William, Waltr, Edmude. There are ſeveral ſcutcheons of arms cut in ſtone, and fixed in the walls, and over the pillars; but they are filled up with white-waſh, ſo that only the two following can now be diſtinguiſhed; 1. (Argent) a feſs, in chief three pellets. 2. Quarterly, per feſs indented (Or and ſable.) both which coats have likewiſe been born by perſons of the name of Langley.

The eaſt window of the chancel is likewiſe ornamented with paintings, repreſenting ſeveral of the ſame family, and others, in compleat chain armour, kneeling, and the following names inſcribed on the glaſs, viz. Galfrus langel', Iohes, Galfrus, Iohanna, Iohes fil' Iohis fili Iohis langel'. Iohes Worth, miles, and his arms, A feſs, in chief three pellets.

There is a ſcutcheon in the ſouth window of the chancel, bearing Argent, two chevronels gules, in chief a label of five points azure, with the name, Nichole de Semour . . . . .

In the north window is this coat, Paly of ſix, Or and azure, with the name, Thom. Gurney . . . .

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a large grey marble ſtone in the chancel, which had once the effigy of a man in armour upon it, ſaid to have been intended for one of the Langleys, but the braſs is now torn off.

Upon a white marble in the chancel, is this inſcription:

Here lyeth the Body of THOMAS DEACON, Eſq^r.
late of ELMSTREE in the Pariſh of TETBURY and County of GLOUCESTER who Departed this life the 24^th Day of April in the Year of our LORD and in the 46^th Year of his Age.

Arms, at top, [Argent] a croſs between four lions rampant [ſable], on a chief [azure] three roſes proper.

A neat table of white marble, againſt the ſouth wall, bears this inſcription:

ALLEN LORD BATHURST.
He was born the 12^th: of Auguſt 1711,
And died the 23^d: of January 1767.
He married ELIZABETH BRUCE,
Second Daughter of CHARLES EARL of Aileſbury, on the 14^th of December 1732.
He was a true Friend to the Poor.
This Monument is erected by his affectionate Widow.

Arms, at bottom, Sable, two bars ermine, in chief three croſſes paty Or, for Bathurſt. On a ſcutcheon of pretence, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Or, a ſaltire and chief gules, in a canton argent a lion rampant azure, for Bruce earl of Aileſbury. 2d and 3d,

Sir Robert Atkyns has not given the ſtate of population as it ſtood at the beginning of the preſent century; but there are now 35 houſholders, and 153 inhabitants.

SIDE.

THIS ſmall pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, about ſeven miles diſtant north-weſtward from Cirenceſter, four northward from Biſley, and ten ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It was called Side, from its lying on the ſides and ſlopes of hills; for the country hereabout is remarkably uneven and turgid, as at Edgworth and Miſerden. The lands are chiefly arable, with ſome paſture ground, and woodlands, in which the herb Valerian is found in great plenty.

It is ſeparated from Brimpsfield by a ſmall rivulet, which is one of the heads of the river Froome, that runs to Stroud, and gives name to ſeveral places lying in its courſe towards the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The manor is thus deſcribed in the antient ſurvey:

'Ansfrid de Cormeile holds Side, in Reſpigete 'hundred, and Turſtin holds it of him. Leuuin 'held it of king Edward. There are three hides 'which pay tax. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and one villein, with a prieſt, and three bordars, 'with one plow-tillage, and ſix ſervi, and four 'acres of meadow. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*s.*' Domeſday, p. 78.

This manor came to the Giffards of Brimpsfield, ſoon after the Norman conqueſt, and continued in that family 'till the reign of king Edward the Second, when John Giffard of Brimpsfield was ſeized of the manor of Side and Walliſwood, and of the advowſon of the church; but joining with the earl of Lancaſter, and other barons, in endeavouring to expel the Spencers, he was taken priſoner at the battle of Burroughbridge, in Yorkſhire, attainted, and executed at Glouceſter as a traitor.

Upon Giffard's attainder, the manor was granted to Hugh le Diſpencer the elder, with remainder to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, 15 E. 2. The Spencers, however, enjoyed it but for a ſhort time, and then fell a ſacrifice to the fury of an injured people, the father being executed at Briſtol, and the ſon at Hereford, in the year 1326, 20 E. 2.

The manor of Side was ſoon after granted to John Maltravers the younger, as a reward for murdering king Edward the Second, and he procured a fine of it from John de Callew, who was heir to the Giffards by a daughter, 4 E. 3. But Maltravers did not long enjoy the reward of his villainy, for he was ſoon convicted of high miſdemeanors, and obliged to fly into Germany, where he lurked for many years; 'till having found means to perform ſome ſignal ſervice for king Edward the Third, he threw himſelf at his feet, and obtained a pardon for the murder of the late king, and was reſtored to ſome of his eſtates. But this manor had been before granted to the Berkeleys, and Thomas lord Berkeley, the third of that name, was ſeized of it, and founded a chantry in his manor of Side, in the reign of king Edward the Third.

Sir John Berkeley was ſeized of Side, and of the advowſon of the church, held of the manor of Brimpsfield, 6 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſton was poſſeſſed of the manor in the 38th & 39th years of the ſame reign, and died ſeized of it 14 E. 4. as did ſir William Berkeley 5 E. 6. and John Berkeley, ſon of ſir William, had livery of it the following year.

Robert

Robert Partridge died ſeized of the manor of Side, alias dict. Side et Leckehampton, 42 Eliz. Eſch. John Partridge, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608, and conveyed it to ſir William Sandys, in truſt. Mr. Nathaniel Ridler, of Edgworth, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It paſſed afterwards to Nigel Kingſcot, of Kingſcot, eſq; whoſe nephew, —— Kingſcot, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of it.

Of the Church, &c.

This is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 40*l.* a year, of which the lord of the manor is patron.

The church is a ſmall building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a low tower at the weſt end. There was formerly a chantry in this church, which was founded by William de Side, who took his name from the pariſh.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 17 houſes, and about 70 inhabitants in the pariſh, 3 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. The preſent number of houſes is only 11, and the people are decreaſed to 47.

SISTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Pucklechurch, ſeven miles diſtant north-eaſtward from Briſtol, eight northward from Bath, and about thirty-ſix ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituate in the Vale, and conſiſts principally of rich paſture ground. A rivulet riſes here, and runs to Bitton, the next pariſh, where it falls into the Avon.

Siſton Houſe is the ſeat of Trotman, eſq. It conſiſts of an extenſive front, and two large wings, and is ornamented with a great number of arms of families which the Dennys's have a right to quarter with their own; for the houſe was built by one of that family, about the time of king Charles the Firſt, as appears by the ſtyle of the architecture, and has undergone no alterations. It is not ſeen at any great diſtance, tho' ſeated upon a little eminence, as it is approached to from the ſouth and weſt; but the beſt front faces eaſtward.

Moon's Court, or Mound's Court, was an antient ſeat belonging to the Stranges, who reſided there for ſeveral hundred years; and tho' now a farm houſe, it is rendered famous by queen Catherine Par keeping her court there, ſeven or eight weeks, after viſiting Bath and Briſtol.

This pariſh conſtitutes part of the foreſt of Kingſwood, where coal is found in the greateſt plenty; and I have it on the authority of Dr. Parſons's Manuſcript Collections, which he finiſhed about the end of the laſt century, that at a place called Berry, in this pariſh, there was then lately diſcovered a vein of tin-ore, intermixed with grains of ſilver. I made ſome enquiry concerning this matter, without being able to get any further information from the preſent inhabitants, who know nothing of it; and therefore I conclude, that the vein was very inconſiderable, and either exhauſted in working, or would not bear the expence of it, and ſo became neglected and forgotten.

There is a large work, in the hamlet of Warmly, for converting copper into braſs. They fetch the Lapis Calaminaris uſed in that proceſs from Mendip-hill, in Somerſetſhire. There are alſo five or ſix furnaces for making of Speltre. This work now belongs to a company in Briſtol; but it was carried on, 'till lately, in a more extenſive manner, by gentlemen, who, about the year 1770, ſold it to the preſent proprietors. Under the firſt maſters, the machinery was put in motion by water, and there was a fire engine to return into the pond that water which had paſſed thro' the works. But the engine is now taken down, and part of the manufacture carried on at the adjacent works in the pariſh of Bitton.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The ſame Roger [de Berchelai] holds Siſtone, 'in Pulcrecerce hundred. Anne held it. There 'are five hides taxed. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and eight villeins, and ten bordars, 'with four plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, 'and eight acres of meadow. It is and was 'worth 100 ſol.' Domeſday, p. 75.

—— Serlo died ſeized of this manor, and left his two ſiſters coheireſſes, Agatha, the wife of Henry ——, and Juliana, the wife of William de Stratton; but Anne, the widow of Serlo, had the manors of Siſton, Campden, and Whittington aſſigned to her in dower, 4 H. 3. at which time ſhe was the wife of Hugh de Stratton.

Siſton came ſoon after to the Walerans. Robert Waleran married Maud, the daughter of Ralph Ruſſel, of Durham in this county, and purchaſed a charter of free warren in Siſton 31 H. 3. He was governor of St. Briavel's caſtle, warden of the foreſt of Dean, and four times ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in that reign, and died without iſſue 1 E. 1. Robert Waleraund, uncle of John Waleraund, died ſeized of the manor of Siſton 2 E. 2. which he held only for the life of his ſiſter Cecilia. And the eſcheator's inquiſition found that the manor manor was holden of the heir of William de Berkeley, by the ſervice of one knight's fee; and that it ought to devolve to Alan Plokenet, ſon of Alan Plokenet, ſon of Alice, daughter of Iſabel, daughter of Thomas de Rochesford and Agatha his wife, who was the daughter of Roger de Berkeley, and had Siſton given to her in free marriage by her father. Alan Plokenet, whom ſir Robert Atkyns, by miſtake, calls Alan Blakeman, held Siſton 19 E. 2.

Sir Peter Corbet died ſeized of this manor 36 E. 3. He had married the daughter of Walter of Glouceſter, and with her had the manors of Alveſton and Urcot, which paſt, by the marriage of Margaret his daughter and coheireſſes, to ſir Gilbert Dennis, who was ſeized of the manors of Siſton, Alveſton, and Erdecot, 44 E. 3.

Richard Dennis levied a fine of the manor to ſir Maurice Dennis, 7 E. 6. Sir William Dennis was ſon of ſir Maurice; and Maurice Dennis, ſon of ſir William, died ſeized of the manor 5 Eliz. and left Walter Dennis his brother and heir, who was then ſixty years old, and had livery of this eſtate the ſame year.

Henry Billingſley, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It was veſted in Samuel Trotman, eſq; at the beginning of this century, and deſcended to Thomas Trotman, whoſe ſon, Trotman, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor, and reſides here. His arms are, Argent, a croſs between four roſes gules.

Henry Gildeney, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Siſton, to Henry Harſhfield, clerk, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, 7 H. 5. John Kemys died ſeized of lands here, 16 E. 4. and Roger Kemys, his ſon and heir, was found to be a lunatick, 21 E. 4. Sir John Bar was ſeized of an eſtate in Siſton 22 E. 4.

HAMLETS. 1. Warmly. 2. Breach Yate, which lies one part in Abſton and Wick, the other in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 130*l.* a year. Mr. Trotman is patron, and Chriſtopher Haynes, M. A. is the preſent incumbent.

The preſent church is ſmall, and dedicated to St. Anne, the mother of the virgin Mary. There were formerly two others in the pariſh; one dedicated to St. Bartholomew, which was the mother church, the other to St. Cuthbert, biſhop of Lindisfern, now called Holy Iſland, on the coaſt of Northumberland, to whom many miracles were attributed in the dark ages of ignorance and popiſh ſuperſtition. The wakes, or feaſt days, of all three churches are obſerved by the inhabitants to this day.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory, there were 98 houſes in the pariſh, and about 450 inhabitants, 12 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. I have not been able to obtain any ſatisfactory information concerning the preſent ſtate of population.

SLAUGHTER (LOWER)

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of its own name, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Stow, ſix northward from Northleach, and twenty-three north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name was antiently written Scloſtre, that is, Sclo's Place, for I have ſhewn, in ſeveral inſtances, that tre, ſignifies a Place.

George Whitmore, eſq; has a ſeat here, with handſome coach-houſes, and ſtables, newly built. The houſe is ſituated in the midſt of the village, which conſiſts of one ſtreet, with a pretty trout river running through the middle of it; and a pin lying on the gravelly bed of the river, may be ſeen through the tranſparent ſtream, which makes it very pleaſant in the ſummer. This ſtream falls into the Winruſh, near Bourton on the Water, and is one of the heads of that river.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the antient ſurvey, are the following particulars:

'Roger de Laci and his mother hold Scloſtre, 'in Saleſmaneſberie hundred. There are three 'hides. Offa and Leuuin held it for two manors, 'and might go where they would. There are 'four plow-tillages in demean, and four bordars, 'and eight ſervi, and a mill of 12*s.* [rent]. It 'is worth and was worth 6*l.* One of theſe three 'hides paid 10*s.* tax every year for the king's uſe.' Domeſday, p. 75.

This manor, ſoon after the conqueſt, belonged to the alien priory of Mountberg in Normandy, the poſſeſſions of which houſe being taken away by act of parliament, 2 H. 5. this eſtate, together with the manor of Cheltenham, and the hundreds of Salemaneſberie and Cheltenham, paſſed to the nuns of Syon in Middleſex. Maud, abbeſs of Syon, levied a fine of this manor, and of the hundred of Salemaneſberie, to the biſhop of Exeter, to the uſe of the nunnery of Syon, 22 H. 6. and that houſe had a confirmation of the above particulars 1 E. 4.

Upon the diſſolution of religious foundations, this manor came to the crown, in which it continued, tinued, 'till it was granted in fee, together with the hundred of Slaughter, to George Whitmore, eſq; by king James the Firſt, in the 8th year of his reign.

Richard Whitmore, ſon of George, married Katherine, daughter of John George, of Baunton, eſq; and dying in the year 1667, being then high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon, Richard Whitmore, eſq; to whom the manor of Lower Slaughter belonged at the beginning of this century. The late lieutenant general William Whitmore, (next brother to ſir Thomas Whitmore, knight of the Bath) died in the year 1771, and was ſucceeded by his ſon, George Whitmore, eſq; the preſent lord of the hundred and manor of Slaughter, and proprietor of many good eſtates in the county. His arms are, Vert, fretty Or.

Thomas Everdon, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Lower Slaughter and Upper Slaughter, to William Wiggeſton, and others, 19 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, but annexed to Bourton on the Water. The patronage is veſted in All Souls college, Oxford, and Mr. Vernon is the preſent incumbent.

The advowſon of the chapel of Lower Slaughter was granted to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton, 21 Eliz. and paſſed, like Bourton on the Water, to the preſent patrons.

The church is ſmall, but neat, having been lately freſh pewed, and otherwiſe repaired. The inhabitants buried at Bourton on the Water 'till within theſe ſeven or eight years, but they have ſince obtained right of ſepulture, and now bury here.

Monument and Inſcription.

A flat ſtone in the north aile bears the following inaccurate inſcription:

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, when ſir Robert Atkyns drew up his account of his pariſh, there were 32 houſes, and about 150 inhabitants, 11 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. There are now 39 families in the pariſh, and the people are increaſed to 194, by actual numeration.

Slaughter (Upper) and Eyford.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of its own name, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſt from Stow, ſeven miles north from Northleach, and twenty-three north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Several large ſprings riſe in the upper part of it, and run through the village to Lower Slaughter, and at length empty themſelves into the Winruſh.

The pariſh is divided into farms, and has no gentleman's ſeat within it; for Eyford, which has ſometimes, tho' improperly, been conſidered as a hamlet belonging to it, is extraparochial; yet I ſhall ſo far follow the example of other topographers, as to place the account of it after this pariſh.

There are no antiquities here, but nature has diſplay'd herſelf in a moſt extraordinary manner, in the growth and ſize of a child, the ſon of Mr. John Collet, a gentleman farmer of this village. He was not eight years old in February, 1777, when this account was taken; but meaſured over the breaſt, fifty-two inches round, and round the thigh twenty-eight inches. His height I cannot exactly aſcertain, but when I ſaw him, it appeared to be about four feet nine or ten inches. He has a jolly, manly countenance, and florid complexion; is healthy, active, ſprightly, and ſenſible, and is much diſpleaſed with the curioſity of ſtrangers coming to ſee him.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor was part of the antient demeans of the crown, as appears by the following tranſlation from Domeſday:

'King Edward held Scloſtre in Salemaneſberie 'hundred. There were ſeven hides, and three 'plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and 'eleven bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There 'are ſeven ſervi, and two mills of the rent of one 'mark of ſilver; and meadow of [the rent of] 10s. 'and 10s. [rent iſſuing] out of one of theſe hides, 'and 5s. for the dogs. The ſheriff paid what 'he would for this manor, in the time of king 'Edward, ſo that they [the inquiſition] know 'not how to value it. Now the ſheriff hath added 'one plow-tillage there, and five bordars, with 'one plow-tillage; and he now pays for the 'manor itſelf, and for the hundred, 27*l.* by tale.' Domeſday, p. 67.

Edward de Bona Vera held Sclaughtre with its appurtenances 5 Joh. Thomas Baſſet held twenty librats of land in Sloutres, Wales, and Cotes, which were in the poſſeſſion of Edward de Bona Vera, 4 H. 3.

But it was afterwards veſted in the crown, for king Henry the Third, in the 36th year of his reign, granted the manors of Cheltham and Sclaugtre, and the hundreds of Cheltham and Salemaneſberie, with free warren, to the abbey of Fiſchamp in Normandy, in exchange for lands in Winchelſea and Rye in Suſſex. Their claim to free warren and other great privileges in Cheltenham and Slouſter was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and they purchaſed a licence from the crown, in the 18th year of the ſame reign, to ſell the above-mentioned manors and hundreds. The abbey, however, did not part with this manor, but continued poſſeſſed of it 5 E. 2. and it appears by the records that it was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3.

Upon the diſſolution of alien priories, this eſtate was diſpoſed of to ſeveral religious houſes. A meſſuage in Slaughter belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, and was granted to Edward Powel 36 H. 8. A meadow, called the Hay-meadow, which belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, was granted to ſir Philip Hobby 37 H. 8. Lands in Slaughter, called No Man's Lands, belonged to the biſhop of Hereford, and were granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter 16 Eliz.

The antient family of the Slaughters were lords of the manor for many generations, and took their name from the pariſh, in which they reſided upwards of three hundred years.

John Slaughter, eſq; of Over Slaughter, died in the year 1583, and Paris Slaughter, his ſon and heir, died in the year 1597. Chambers Slaughter, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, Another Chambers Slaughter died in the year 1718, and William Slaughter, eſq; ſon of a third Chambers Slaughter, was lord of this manor, and died in the year 1740. From this family the manor and advowſon paſſed, by purchaſe, to Mary, daughter and ſole heireſs of ſir William Dodwell, of Sevenhampton, knight, afterwards married to the late Thomas Tracy, of Sandiwell in this county, eſq; deceaſed, and ſhe is the preſent lady of the manor.

About ſeventy years ago, when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 70 houſes, and about 150 inhabitants, of whom 12 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. The preſent number of families is 84, and the people having been numbered, are found to be increaſed to 178.

EYFORD.

THIS little place lies in the hundred of Slaughter, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Stow, twelve north-weſtward from Burford in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-two north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It adjoins to the pariſh of Upper Slaughter, within which ſir Robert Atkyns underſtood it to be a hamlet; but he was miſtaken in that particular. The antient grants and evidences ſtile it the pariſh of Eyford, and declare it to be Parochia de ſe, and the conſtant uſage ſupports its claim to independency. It is extraparochial, having no church, and maintains its own poor.

Eye, ſays the above-mentioned learned hiſtorian, ſignifies water, and Eyford is the ſame with Waterford. The turnpike-road from Stow to Glouceſter leads through it, and the place unqueſtionably took its name from the road croſſing the rivulet, formed by the union of ſeveral fine ſprings of water, which riſe here, and run purling down to Slaughter.

On the weſt ſide of this ſtream, in a little ſequeſtered valley, ſtands a pleaſant villa, with large gardens, canals, and beautiful plantations and pleaſure-grounds, now the ſeat, and ſometimes the reſidence of John Dolphin, eſq; but formerly the retreat of the duke of Shrewſbury; where, in a ſummer-houſe, built over a caſcade, long ſince fallen into ruins, the inimitable Milton wrote part of his Paradiſe Loſt. The duke ſometimes retired hither, being delighted with the ſolitarineſs of the place, and the pleaſantneſs of the neighbouring country for recreations. King William the Third made the duke a viſit, and was wonderfully taken with his ſolitude and privacy, ſo different from a royal court, that he thought himſelf out of the world.

Before the Norman conqueſt, this place was a diſtinct manor, which is next to be conſidered.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Eyford eſtate conſiſts of one thouſand two hundred and fifty acres of land, of which Domeſday gives the following particulars:

'Haſcoit Muſard holds Aiforde in Salemaneſ-'berie hundred. There are five hides, which pay 'tax. Erneſi held it. There are two plow-'tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, and one 'bordar, with five plow-tillages; and there are 'eight among the ſervi and ancillæ. It is worth 4*l.*' Domeſday, p. 78.

Richard de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, held Heyford 47 H. 3. The ſheriff returned to the treaſurer and barons of the exchequer that Roger de la Mare was lord of Hayford, in the hundred of Salmoneſberie, 9 E. 1.

John le Rous, and others, held this manor, and the advowſon of the church, 49 E. 3. in which year John le Rous of Raggeleye, William Gille, clerk, William Alewy, chaplain, and Richard Patty, chaplain, obtained a licence of the king to grant to the abbat and convent of Eveſham, and their ſucceſſors for ever, the manor of Eyford, with the appurtenances, and the advowſon of the church of the ſame manor, and one meſſuage, three yard-lands and a half, and nine acres of land, and ſix acres of meadow, with their appurtenances, in Stow St. Edward's, Malgareſbury, Burghton, and Wykeryſyndon, worth together twelve marks and nine ſhillings per annum, as it was found to be by the eſcheator's inquiſition; and the abbat and convent had a licence at the ſame time to empower them to take this eſtate.

After the diſſolution of the abbey of Eveſham, Eyford, called the pariſh of Eyford, part of the poſſeſſions of that abbey, was granted by the crown to ſir Philip Hobby, knight, 11th May, 37 H. 8. Sir Thomas Hobby, knight, brother to ſir Philip Hobby, died ſeized of Eyford 9 Eliz. His widow was married to lord Ruſſel, whom ſhe ſurvived, and after his death ſhe demiſed Eyford to the earl of Huntingdon, and the lord treaſurer Burleigh, 18th Jan. 34 Eliz. all which particulars appear by authentic evidences in the poſſeſſion of the preſent owner.

The earl of Worceſter was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards purchaſed by Mr. Andrew Wanley, and deſcended from him through ſeveral generations, 'till it came to the late William Wanley, eſq; who died ſeized of Eyford in the year 1762. After his death, it paſſed, by purchaſe, to John Dolphin, eſq; of Shenſtone in the county of Stafford, who has made a large addition to, and greatly improved the houſe, and frequently reſides here. He married Margaretta Eeles, daughter of Iſaac Eeles, of Amerſham in the county of Bucks, eſq; by whom he hath iſſue two ſons, and two daughters. His arms are, Azure, three dolphins nayant Or.

There were, moſt probably, about thirty inhabitants in this place at the time of the general ſurvey, in the Conqueror's reign, for the villeins and bordars were thirteen, who had five plow-tillages; and there were eight other plow-tillages, which the ſervi and ancillæ had between them, ſo that they may be eſtimated at fifteen or ſixteen more. But ſir Robert Atkyns ſays, 'this place 'was appropriated to the abbey of Eveſham, for 'a ſtipend to teach youth, in the year 1472, at 'which time it had no inhabitants.' So deſtructive had the civil wars between the Yorkiſts and Lancaſtrians been to this country, as to depopulate whole villages. Eyford now conſiſts of two houſes, two families, and twenty-five ſouls.

SLIMBRIDGE.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Berkeley, ſix miles diſtant north from the town of that name, four north-weſt from Durſley, and eleven ſouth from Glouceſter.

The name is written Hiſlinbruge in Domeſday, the ſignification of which I don't underſtand.

It is bounded on the north-weſt and north-eaſt by the rivers Severn and Cam, and conſiſts chiefly of rich paſture and meadow land, with ſome arable, and produces good cheeſe and cyder.

Here is a large tract of land called the Dumballs, but more commonly the New Grounds, conſiſting of above a thouſand acres, which have been gained from the Severn many ages ago, and belong to the earl of Berkeley, becauſe his manors extend to the middle of that river. King Charles the Firſt, by his attorney general, commenced a ſuit in the exchequer againſt lord Berkeley, for thoſe lands; but after the jury was impannelled, and evidence begun, the attorney general dropt the ſuit.

I could never learn when this acquiſition was firſt made from the river, and perhaps it is not any where recorded. The like has happened at Lidney, on the other ſide, but lower down the river. And the ſame has been in much greater degree in other countries. One Hubert Thomas, who was ſecretary to the elector palatine of the Rhine, in his deſcription of the country of Liege, affirms, that the ſea once came up to the walls of Tongres, now ſaid to be about fourſcore miles diſtant from it; which he proves (among other reaſons) by the great iron rings then to be ſeen there, to which the ſhips were uſed to be faſtened. So Michael Hoſpitalis, giving an account of the preſent ſtate of a place, antiently the Forum Julij, on the coaſt of Narbonne in France,

Apparet moles antiqui diruta portûs
Atqui ubi portus erat, ſiccum nunc littus & horti.
The ruins of an antient port are ſeen,
And lands and garden grounds where ſhips have been.

Theſe great changes were moſt likely occaſioned by earthquakes or volcanos, which have happened in diſtant parts of the globe, and of which it is impoſſible for us to eſtimate the effects, or to aſcertain how far their influence extends.

But to return to Slimbridge. Againſt one ſide of the New Grounds, next the river, the earl of Berkeley (I believe the grandfather of the preſent earl) built a vaſt wall of large ſtones, firmly cramped together, to break the violence of the waves, and to preſerve the land from being waſhed away by floods and high tides. This work is called the Hock Crib.

Great numbers of cattle are depaſtured upon theſe grounds; and it is thought that the herbage has ſtronger nutritive powers, and makes cattle fat ſooner, than the graſs of common meadows. Here grows the true Samphire in great plenty, which is much eſteemed in pickling, and ſometimes uſed in medicine.

There is another very large piece of rich ground in this pariſh, called the Wharfe, or Warthe. It is in common all the year, and, as well as the Dumballs, ſubject to floods and ſpring-tides. If it could be incloſed, it would be worth 1500*l.* a year.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This was a member of the manor of Berkeley, at the time of the general ſurvey, as it is expreſſly mentioned in Domeſday, where it is ſaid, that 'Roger [de Berkeley] holds two hides in Hiſlin-'bruge, belonging to the manor of Berkeley.'

Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeized of Slimbrugge in the year 1281, 9 E. 1. and his grandſon, Thomas lord Berkeley, held it 17 E. 3. and died ſeized of it in the 35th year of the ſame reign. Maurice lord Berkeley, ſon of Thomas, died ſeized of Slimbruge 42 E. 3. of the wounds he had received ten years before at the battle of Poictiers.

Ralph Walers was ſeized of this manor 49 E. 3.

Thomas lord Berkeley, ſon of Maurice, held the manor 6 R. 2. and Nicholas Barſtable was ſeized of Slimburg 13 H. 4. but it ſeems to have been only in truſt for Thomas lord Berkeley, who did not die 'till July 13, 1416, at which time he was poſſeſſed of the manor, and of a tenement called Sage's Place, in Slimbridge.

Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, married Elizabeth, the only child of Thomas lord Berkeley, and by that means became poſſeſſed of this manor, and many others in Glouceſterſhire, notwithſtanding a ſpecial entail and fine in favour of James lord Berkeley. He had iſſue, by Elizabeth his wife, three daughters, Margaret, married to John Talbot, earl of Shrewſbury; Elianor, married to Edmund duke of Somerſet; and Elizabeth, married to George Nevil, lord Latimer; and died poſſeſſed of this manor 17 H. 6.

Sir Edward Ingoldſthorp was ſeized of Slimbridge 35 H. 6. probably in truſt, for

Margaret

Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury, eldeſt daughter of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and Elizabeth his wife, died ſeized of Slimbridge, Goſſington, Hurſt, Cambridge, Arlingham, &c. 7 E. 4.

William lord Berkeley, created earl of Nottingham, and earl marſhal, levied a fine of this manor, and of the manor and caſtle of Berkeley, and other great eſtates, to the uſe of king Henry the Seventh, and his heirs males; by virtue of which fine they came to the crown, and continued in it 'till the death of Edward the Sixth, when they reverted to Henry lord Berkeley, the fifth in lineal deſcent from Maurice, brother of William lord Berkeley, who had livery granted to him 1 Mariæ; and from him the manor of Slimbridge deſcended to Frederick-Auguſtus, earl of Berkeley, the preſent lord of the manor.

HAMLETS, and places of diſtinct names.

1. Hurſt. Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeized of the manor of Hurſt 9 E. 1. and was ſucceeded by his ſon, Thomas lord Berkeley, who was ſeized of it in the 17th, and died in the 35th year of the reign of king Edward the Third. Maurice lord Berkeley, ſon of Thomas, died ſeized of it 42 E. 3. It paſſed afterwards to the crown by fine, as already related under Slimbridge, Berkeley, &c.

2. Sages, probably ſo called from a family of the name of Sage, one of whom gave lands in Brickhampton in Churchdown, to the abbey of Hayles, 6 E. 2. This manor likewiſe belonged to the Berkeleys, but was not conveyed to king Henry the Seventh. Thomas lord Berkeley died ſeized of it 24 H. 8. and Thomas lord Berkeley, his ſon, had livery of it the ſame year.

3. Church-end.

4. Moor-end.

5. Goſſington. Lands in this place belonged to the abbey of Kingſwood, and were granted to ſir Baptiſt Hickes, 7 Jac.

6. Kingſton.

7. Slimbridge Street. Slimbridge Wharfe was given, by one of the Berkeley family, to the abbey of St. Auguſtin in Briſtol; and after the diſſolution of that houſe, it was granted to the biſhoprick of Briſtol 34 H. 8. A tenement in Slimbridge belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and was granted to ſir Baptiſt Hickes, 7 Jac. Nicholas Hawling was ſeized of lands in Slimbridge 36 E. 3.

8. Cambridge, lies on the little river Cam, from which it takes its name. Huntingdon, Hoveden, and Florence of Worceſter, make mention of a great victory obtained here by king Edward the Elder over the plundering Danes, whom he attacked as they returned from an excurſion, loaded with booty, and killed many thouſands of them on the ſpot, together with Healfden, Cinvil, and Inguer, three of their princes. Here was formerly a chapel, in which Thomas lord Berkeley founded a chantry 17 E. 3. Lands in this place, which belonged to the chantry in the chapel of Cambridge, were granted to ſir Oliver Cromwell, 5 Jac.

William lord Berkeley, by the name of earl marſhal, and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge, to Edward Willoughby and Robert Legg, 3 H. 7. in order to convey them to the king. Thomas Baker levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge to John Eſterfield, John Walſh, John Heming, Richard Bolton, and Thomas Broom, 9 H. 7. Thomas Laney and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge and Goſſington to Edmund Tame 16 H. 7. John Woodard levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge to John Bower; and William Bridgman and Anne his wife levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge and Goſſington, to Francis Cotherington, 3 E. 6. John Pleydell levied a fine of ſeven meſſuages in Slimbridge, Ham, Hinton, and Berkeley, to his ſon, in fee taille, 31 Eliz. Eſch.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 300*l.* a year. The patronage is veſted in Magdalen college, Oxford, and the reverend Mr. John Stone is the preſent incumbent.

The patronage of the church was antiently in the Berkeley family, and was granted to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard's, by Roger de Berkeley. But Thomas de Bredon, abbat of Glouceſter, afterwards releaſed the advowſon of Slimbridge to Thomas lord Berkeley, in conſideration of lands near Cam, called Lorlynge, or Lorrenge, as the reader may ſee more at large under Stanley St. Leonard's.

The rector pays 10*l.* a year to Magdalen college, for choir-muſic on the top of the college tower on May-day.

Twelve acres of arable land, and about thirteen acres of ſmall incloſures, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt. It is a very neat one, newly pewed, and conſiſts of the nave, and two ſide ailes, with a gallery, and a handſome lofty ſpire at the weſt end.

The Berkeley arms are painted in the windows of the chancel and ſouth aile. And in the ſouth window of the chancel, Quarterly, Per pale and per feſs indented, ermine and gules.

There were two chantries in the pariſh, dedicated to St. Catherine, and St. John Baptiſt. One of them was founded by Thomas lord Berkeley, in the chapel of Cambridge, in this pariſh, 17 E. 3. The laſt incumbents were John Browne, who had a penſion of 4*l.* and William Willington, who received a penſion of 5*l.* in the year 1553. Willis. Lands belonging to one of theſe chantries, were granted to Ralph Sherman, by king E. 6.

James Berkeley, third ſon of Thomas lord Berkeley, was rector of Slimbridge, and afterwards conſecrated biſhop of Exeter, in the year 1326. Henry Stokeſley, preſented to this rectory in 1509, and conſecrated biſhop of London in 1536, diſtinguiſhed himſelf as a violent perſecuter of the proteſtants, in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. Owen Oglethorpe, likewiſe rector of this church, was advanced to the biſhoprick of Carliſle in 1556, by queen Mary. He crowned queen Elizabeth Jan. 15, 1559, being the only biſhop that could be prevailed on to aſſiſt at the ceremony; but he was deprived the ſame year, with thirteen other popiſh biſhops, for refuſing to comply with the laws enacted in favour of the reformation.

At the beginning of this century, there were 120 houſes in the pariſh, and about 560 inhabitants, 40 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. Atkyns. The preſent number of ſouls is eſtimated at about 800.

SNOWSHILL.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſeven miles north-eaſt from Winchcombe, five ſouth-weſt from Campden, and twenty-three north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

A fine ſpring riſes in the village, and being joined with others a little below, they form a ſmall brook, which falls into the Avon near Eveſham.

The pariſh is ſituated on the high part of the Coteſwold country, and conſiſts chiefly of arable land; but the village and church ſtand in a little bottom, and are not to be ſeen, except from the brow of thoſe high lands which encompaſs them.

Near the north-eaſt border of it, in the fineſt open hunting country imaginable, the honourable John-Coventry Bulkeley has built an elegant houſe, called Spring Hill, ſtanding upon an eminence, with a large piece of paſture ground ſloping from the front, which he has improved to a good verdure, and adorned the face of this naked country with fine plantations of beech and fir, that before produced nothing but furze. Part of this gentleman's eſtate lying in Snowſhill, gave me an opportunity of taking notice of his ſeat, which, however, ſtands juſt without the boundaries of the county, in the pariſh of Broadway, in Worceſterſhire.

Snowſhill was incloſed by parliamentary authority, about the year 1761. Were the manor houſe in a better ſituation, it would be called handſome. It is occupied by the principal farmer; but not many years ago, it was the reſidence of a family of the name of Sambach, who have now left the county.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor is ſaid to have been given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by Kenulph, or Kenwolf, the thirteenth king of Mercia, who died in the year 819, and was buried in that monaſtery, of which he was the founder. And it was part of the poſſeſſions of that abbey at the time of the antient ſurvey, as appears by the following extract from Domeſday:

'The church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe holds 'Snaweſille, in Holefordes hundred. There are 'ſeven hides taxed. In demean are three plow-'tillages, and twelve villeins, and two bordars, 'with ſix plow-tillages. There are ſix ſervi. It 'is worth and was worth 100 ſol.' Domeſday, p. 71.

The abbey was ſeized of this manor 35 H. 3. and the ſame year purchaſed a charter of free warren, which privilege was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. The abbat and convent of Winchcombe aſſigned the manor to the monaſtery of St. Ebrulf, at Utica in Normandy, 12 E. 2. but it returned to them again, moſt probably by another grant, at the time when alien monaſteries were diveſted of their lands in England, 2 H. 5. and it continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey of Winchcombe, 'till that houſe was diſſolved.

King Henry the Eighth aſſigned the manor of Snowſhill to queen Catherine, in part of her dower. After her death it was granted, by king Edward the Sixth, to John earl of Warwick, afterwards created duke of Northumberland, and executed executed for treaſon in the beginning of the reign of queen Mary. Henry Willoughby had livery of the manor granted to him 4 Eliz. And John Warren died ſeized of it 19 C. 1. William Sambach, eſq; was lord of the manor of Snowſhill when ſir Robert Atkyns wrote his Hiſtory; and from him it deſcended to his ſon, William Sambach, eſq; who died without iſſue, in the year 1743.

This manor and eſtate was purchaſed in 1759, by Samuel Blackwell, eſq; who ſold it, ſoon afterwards, to John Small, of Clapham in Surrey, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor, whoſe family arms are emblazoned p. 471.

William Fravileſworth held lands in Snowſhill 33 E. 3. as did John Daſton 6 E. 4.

Brockhampton is a ſmall hamlet in this pariſh, conſiſting of two farms.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is annexed to Stanton. It is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 85*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Reginald Wynniat is patron, incumbent, and impropriator.

The impropriation belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe; and a portion of tithes, lately belonging to that houſe, was granted to ſir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

The manor of Stanton, and the free chapel of Snowſhill, were granted by the crown, 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. to John Elliot, who obtained a licence to alienate them to Thomas Doleman the ſame year; and John Doleman, ſon of Thomas, had livery of the advowſon of this church 15 Eliz.

Two hundred and two acres of land were allotted to the rector, at the incloſing of the downs and common fields, in lieu of all tithes in Snowſhill, except of the two farms in Brockhampton; and thoſe lands are now let at 85*l.* a year.

The church is ſmall, and has a tower at the weſt end, ornamented with pinnacles and battlements.

SODBURY (CHIPPING.)

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, twelve miles diſtant north-eaſtward from Briſtol, ſeven north-weſtward from Marſhfield, thirteen north from Bath, and thirty ſouth from Glouceſter.

It lies in the Vale, about a mile weſtward of the great Howby hill, (which is part of that chain that ſtretches lengthways through the county) and is watered by a little brook which runs from hence into the Froome, and ſo to Briſtol.

There are three places, all lying together, of the name of Sodbury, which they take from the camp on Little Sodbury hill; and in general, the termination bury, in the names of places, is taken from the Saxon beorg, a camp, or fortification, as I have frequently obſerved in the courſe of this work. If Sopeberie, as I find it in Domeſday, were the true reading, it would lead me to conjecture, that Sope was the name of ſome conſiderable perſon in theſe parts, to whom the manor belonged; and this opinion is in ſome meaſure ſtrengthened by the name of another place, a few miles diſtant, being Sopworth; which, in all likelihood, belonged to the ſame perſon. But if it ſhould be alledged, that the name is ill written in the antient record, and that Sodbury is the true orthography, then it may ſignify the South Camp, for Sod is often put for South. And in that caſe, I ſhould ſuppoſe it to have been ſo called on account of its ſituation from the Caſtles, another camp, lying about a mile northward, upon the edge of Horton-hill. The prenomen, Chipping, has been already explained under Campden, and it remains only to obſerve, that it was firſt added to the name of this place, after the market was eſtabliſhed here, in the reign of king Henry the Third, and ſerved to diſtinguiſh it from the other Sodburies.

This is a ſmall market town, conſiſting of two ſtreets, lying ſomething in the form of the letter L, upon the turnpike-road from Briſtol, through Oxford, or Abingdon, to London; and is lately much improved in its buildings. The market, which is held on Thurſday, is very little frequented, being nothing more than a few neighbouring people aſſembled in the public houſes. The town lies in a great dairy country, and formerly the market is ſaid to have been very conſiderable for cheeſe; but things are diverged from their proper point, and markets in general are reduced to almoſt nothing, owing to factors, jobbers, and foreſtallers buying up the great neceſſaries of life at the farm and dairy houſes. It is a pernicious, if not an illegal practice, fraught with with many evils, and particularly injurious to market towns, which are taxed higher than villages, and made ſubject to many charges unknown to the latter; but are thus more and more deprived of the means of bearing them. Here are two fairs in the year, held on Holy Thurſday, and on the 24th of June, for cattle and pedlery.

There is a great deal of travelling through the town to Briſtol, and waggons are continually paſſing through it to the coal pits, which lie two or three miles further weſtward, whence many parts in Glouceſterſhire, Wiltſhire, and even ſome places in Berkſhire, are ſupply'd with coal. And the whole tract of country from Sodbury and Lanſdown hills weſtward, as far as the city of Briſtol, ſeems to be full of that neceſſary foſſil.

Here, alſo, is an excellent ſort of lime ſtone, called the White-lays, of a blue caſt, very compact and ponderous, and burns into a ſtrong lime, as white as ſnow. Conſiderable quantities of this lime are ſent into various parts of the country, not only on account of its goodneſs, but it is rendered cheap, alſo, from the low price of coal.

Here is no prevailing manufacture at preſent. One maſter clothier employs a few hands, but the women and children have ſufficient ſpinning-work brought them from other parts.

This town was made a corporation by charter, in the year 1681, whereby the government of it was veſted in a mayor, ſix aldermen, and twelve burgeſſes, with a high ſteward, recorder, and town-clerk; and a court of record was erected for trying all manner of perſonal ſuits, actions of debt, &c. ariſing within the borough, and not exceeding the value of five pounds. But this weight of honour was too great to be ſuſtained by ſo weak and feeble a body, and ſo the charter was annulled by proclamation, at the requeſt of the inhabitants themſelves, as I am informed, in the year 1688; and from that time the town recurred to its antient government by a bailiff, who is annually choſen by the lord of the manor, or his ſteward, out of three perſons returned to him by the jury at the leet.

By very antient grants from two perſons, who were lords of the manor in the reigns of king Henry the Second and king John, (as will be more particularly ſhewn under the account of the manor) the bailiff, and bailiff burgeſſes, (who are ſuch as have been bailiffs) have the diſpoſal of two eſtates, of which one is called the Stub Riding, conſiſting of about one hundred acres. And annually on the 14th of May, they grant the ſummer paſture of it, under ſuch regulations as they think proper, for ſixty-eight cow-beaſts, to perſons who have inhabited the town fourteen years; one paſture to each.

The other eſtate, called the Meadow Riding, is divided into eighty-one lots, or portions, beſides two others, called the Bailiff's Piece, and the Hayward's Piece. Each of thoſe eighty-one lots, being more than a ſtatute acre, they leaſe out to certain perſons for the lives of the leſſees, and for the lives of their widows.

The lord of the manor receives five pounds yearly out of the Ridings, and the vicar of Old Sodbury 1 l. 13 s. 4 d. in lieu of tithes. The bailiff, beſides his allotment, receives 50 s. and the cuſtom is, for him to provide an ox, and two barrels of ale, at an annual feaſt on St. Stephen's day, to entertain the inhabitants.

The moſt memorable tranſactions at this place have been of the melancholy kind. Here one John Piggot was burnt at the ſtake, to ſatisfy the ſanguinary ſpirit of the popiſh religion, in the ſecond year of the reign of queen Mary; and two other perſons, John Barnard, and John Walſh, were ordered to be apprehended and proſecuted, becauſe they often came to the town, and ſhowed Piggot's bones, with a deſign of animating the people to a perſeverance in the reformed religion. It is alſo related in Fox's book of Martyrs, that doctor Whittington, who was vicar-general for ſome part of this dioceſe, having condemned a woman to death for hereſy, about the ſame time, and attending himſelf at the execution, a bull that had broke out of the town, ran furiouſly to the place, and without doing the leaſt injury to any other perſon, killed the doctor on the ſpot, and carried his entrails away upon his horns.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This belonged to the antient demeans of the crown, and was part of the manor of Old Sodbury at the time of the general ſurvey, wherefore there is no diſtinct account of it in Domeſday, which was finiſhed in the fourteenth year of the Conqueror's reign. Sometime afterwards, king William gave this manor to Odo earl of Champagne, his near kinſman, who attended him in the invaſion of England, and for his good ſervice was rewarded with the earldom of Holderneſs in Yorkſhire, and with that of Albermarle in Normandy.

Stephen, ſon of Odo, ſucceeded his father in theſe earldoms, and marrying Hawiſe, daughter of Ralph de Mortimer, died ſeized of this manor. William was ſon and heir of Stephen, and was ſurnamed Le Groſs from his great corpulency. He had made a vow to go a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, but growing very fat, obtained a diſpenſation from the pope to releaſe him from the performance of it. He was a great benefactor to this place, and granted to the burghers of Sodbury the like liberties which the burghers of Briſtol enjoyed, with licence for every burgher to have common for one heifer in the place now called the Ridings, which they ſtill enjoy; and dying 25 H. 2. left Hawiſe his only daughter and heireſs. She carried her great poſſeſſions by marriage, firſt, to William de Mandeville, earl of Eſſex, who dying without iſſue, ſhe was married, ſecondly, to William de Fortibus, an admiral, and very gallant officer, by whom ſhe had a ſon, called alſo William de For-tibus. She was married, a third time, to Baldwin de Betune, earl of the iſle of Wight, whom ſhe ſurvived, and died 16 Joh. She was ſucceeded by her ſon William de Fortibus, whoſe original confirmation of the aforeſaid privileges to the burgeſſes of Sodbury the editor has ſeen, and it is now in the poſſeſſion of the bailiff of the town; but time has impaired the parchment itſelf, ſo that the writing is deſtroyed in ſome parts. By that confirmation it appears that he aſſumed the name of Craſſus. It runs thus, ... Will. Craſſus primogenitus filius Willi Craſſi junioris ſalutem. Noveras nos conceſſiſſe & hac preſenti carta n'ra confirmaſſe burgenſibus noſtris de Sobbur' et heredibus ſuis totum quod Willus Craſſus primogenitus avunculus noſter eiſdem fecit & per cartam ſuam confirmavit, videlicet, Quod habeant et teneant omnes libertates que ſpectant et pertinent ad leges de Britoill, &c. &c. &c.

About this time, William Green of Sodbury, by his deed without date, gave Gaunt's fields to the burgeſſes of Sodbury. And at the ſame time Jurdan Biſhop, who was lord of Little Sodbury, granted them common of paſture for cattle in Dymerſhed and [c]Norwood. Theſe grants are ſuppoſed to have been made in the reign of king Henry

[c] The original grant runs thus:

The townſmen's privileges were diſputed by the lord of the manor of Little Sodbury, in the reign of king Edward the Sixth, and both parties appealing to the council of the Marches, the following order was made to ſettle the right, viz.

Apud Chipping Sodbury decimo die Septembris anno Regni Regis Edwardi Sexti, ſexto.

WHEREAS great controverſie and debate before this time hath riſen and been depending between John Wirrett the younger, bailiff of Chipping Sodbury, Richard Norris, and Thomas Smith, and all other the burgeſſes and inhabitants of the town of Chipping Sodbury, within the ſaid county of Glouceſter, complainants, and Maurice Welch of Little Sodbury within the county of Glouceſter aforeſaid Eſq; and other his tenants and inhabitants of Old Sodbury, within the ſaid county of Glouceſter, of, for, and concerning certain common which the ſaid burgeſſes and inhabitants of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid pretend and claim to have in certain parcels of ground now incloſed, called the Nokes and Hangers, and in a certain paſture called the Leyes, and in another parcel of ground called the Kinley, and of and in certain parcels of ground called the Meadows and Marſhes, which ſaid parcels of ground be the inheritance of the ſaid Maurice Welſh, and be parcels of the manor of Old Sodbury aforeſaid. Whereupon the ſaid bailiff and burgeſſes before this time have made their complaint to the lord reſident and others the king's majeſty's council in the marches of Wales: Whereupon the ſaid Maurice Welſh and other defendants made their anſwers, and ſo the ſaid parties deſcended to an iſſue concerning the premiſſes. By their books of record remaining before the ſaid council, it doth appear, for the trial whereof divers witneſſes have been produced by the ſaid parties before the ſaid council and there examined, whoſe ſayings and depoſitions in that behalf do likewiſe remain before the ſaid council of record; which matter being well weighed and conſidered by the ſame council, the ſaid lord preſident and council, by the mutual aſſent of the ſaid parties, directed the king's majeſties letters hereunto annexed, dated the 10th day of July, in the ſixth year of our ſovereign lord's reign king Edward the ſixth, to ſir Walter Dennis, knight, David Brook, the king's ſerjeant at law, ſending them the ſaid books, together with the ſaid letters, giving them authority by the ſame letters to call the ſaid parties before them, and thereupon to conſider the whole matter with the circumſtances thereof, and to make ſome final end between the ſaid parties concerning the premiſſes: By virtue whereof, we the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, calling before the ſaid parties, have, by good advice, peruſed the contents of the ſaid books, and deliberately heard the allegations of the ſaid parties, and thereupon conſidered the ſame, earneſtly travailing therein, Have and do, by their mutual aſſent, conſent and agreement of the ſaid Maurice Welſh, and the ſame bailiff and burgeſſes, and by virtue of the ſaid letters to us directed, and for the avoiding of further ſuit and trouble that otherwiſe might enſue, grow and ariſe between the ſaid parties concerning the ſaid premiſſes, do make this our preſent order, final and determinate end, in manner and form following, that is to ſay: We order and decree by the authority aforeſaid, and by the aſſent and full agreement of the ſaid Maurice Welſh, that the ſaid burgeſſes and inhabitants that now be, or hereafter ſhall be, of the town of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, ſhall from henceforth have, uſe and enjoy common for their cattle in the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, in all places of the ſame waſte, ſit, lying and being without the hedge of the ground called Little Sodbury Park, and lately diſparked, and in the way or lane leading unto the Yate that divideth and incloſeth the ſaid waſte ground from the common meadow of Old Sodbury aforeſaid, in like manner and form as they have had and uſed the ſame in times paſt, and ſhall likewiſe uſe, and enjoy, have common for their cattle in the ſaid ground called Kinggroves wood, and likewiſe upon the conſideration hereafter expreſſed, it is further ordered by the aſſents aforeſaid, that the ſaid burgeſſes and inhabitants which now be, or hereafter ſhall be, of the town of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, ſhall have their common in one parcel of ground called the Gaunt's field, in Old Sodbury aforeſaid, as they have at this preſent time, or have uſed or had moſt uſually within the ſpace of xxth years next before the date hereof: Further it is ordered and decreed by the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, Eſq; that the ſaid burgeſſes that now be, or hereafter ſhall be, in the ſaid town of Chipping Sodbury, ſhall not at any time hereafter claim, have, or uſe any common for their beaſts or cattle in any lands ſeveral or waſte ground, commonly called the Hangers, the Nokes, the Kinly, the Leys, the Marſhes, the Meadows, or elſewhere, ſet, lying and being in the eaſt part or eaſtward from the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, and from the eaſt part and eaſtward from the ſaid ground called Kinggrove wood, nor eaſtward from the Yate before reherſed. And foraſmuch as on the examination of the matter concerning the premiſſes, it appeared to us the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis and David Brook, that before this time there were certain grounds incloſed in the Meadows and Marſhes aforeſaid, by the aſſents of the copyholders aforeſaid, which ſeverally and particularly were limitted and appointed to the copyholders hereafter mentioned, which grounds do at this preſent remain ſtill incloſed, and are occupied in ſeveral by the ſame copyholders, whereof there was very little in quantity appointed and limitted to any cottager, cottageholder, or half yard-land within Old Sodbury aforeſaid, by reaſon whereof the ſame cottages were impaired by loſs of ſuch common as they pretended to have in the meadows and marſhes aforeſaid, and the ſaid copyholders thereby much bettered and amended; it is therefore ordered by the authority aforeſaid, and by the aſſent of the ſaid Maurice Welſh, and alſo his aſſent for his tenants as much as in him lieth, or may do, that the copyholders of the ſaid manor of Old Sodbury hereafter named, and all ſuch as hereafter ſhall have and hold ſuch copyhold lands as they now have, ſhall not at any time after the feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel, which ſhall be in the year of our lord God MDLiij uſe, have, or enjoy any common for any manner of cattle in the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, and that the cottagers of the manor of Old Sodbury which now be, or hereafter ſhall be, dwelling in the cottages or half yard-lands where they now dwell, ſhall have reaſonable common after the rate of their cottages or half yard-land in the waſte ground called Horwood, any thing before expreſſed to the contrary notwithſtanding. And furthermore, for a furthur quietneſs to be had between the ſaid parties, it is ordered by their aſſents, and the aſſent of the aforeſaid Maurice Welſh, that the ſaid bailiffs and burgeſſes of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, for the time being, ſhall yearly chuſe a Hayward from time to Henry the Third, becauſe John Biſhop, who was grandſon to Jurdan Biſhop, was ſeized of Little Sodbury as early as 9 E. 1.

The earl of Albemarle was ſeized of Sodbury, with fairs and markets, 10 H. 3.

William de Weyland was afterwards ſeized of this manor, with which Marcella, his wife, was endowed. She ſurviving him, was married to John de Bradeſton; and Thomas de Weyland, ſon of William, acknowledged their right by a fine levied 4 E. 1. But Thomas de Weyland had been poſſeſſed of this eſtate before that time, which he held jointly with Margery his wife, and had markets and fairs, court leet and gallows granted to him 55 H. 3. and was ſeized thereof 8 E. 1. and pleading his right in a writ of Quo warranto, his claim was allowed in the fifteenth year of the laſt-mentioned reign.

Sir Edward Burnell died ſeized of this manor, and Elianor his widow was endowed with it, and with the borough, of which ſhe died ſeized 37 E. 3. Edward Burnell, ſon and heir of ſir Edward, had livery of the town, and of two fairs, the ſame year.

Hugh le Diſpencer, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Sodbury, to the uſe of themſelves in fee, 38 E. 3. and Edward lord Diſpencer, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurſt, held it, and died ſeized thereof, and of the borough of Chipping Sodbury, 49 E. 3.

It paſſed ſoon afterwards into the family of the Stanſhaws. Elizabeth Stanſhaw was ſeized of the manor of Chipping Sodbury 13 H. 4. as was John Stanſhaw, at the time of his death, 37 H. 6. He was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon, Robert Stanſhaw, who died ſeized of it 12 E. 4.

The manor paſſed to the Walſhes in the time of king Henry the Seventh, and was ſold out of that family, in the reign of king James the Firſt, to Thomas Stephens, eſq; attorney-general to prince Henry and prince Charles. Winchcombe. Henry Hartley, eſq; one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Berks, is the preſent lord of the manor, of whoſe family and arms, ſome account may be ſeen under Little Sodbury.

John Cotherington, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to Humphry, John, and Thomas, their ſons, ſucceſſively, in taille; the remainder to Margaret Baſiles, late wife of ſir Peter Baſiles, in taille; the remainder to the king, 49 H. 6. which was the year when that king, for a ſhort time, recovered the crown. Richard Forſter, and John Moor and his wife, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to the uſe of John Walſh, 1 & 6 H. 7. John Stanſhaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to William Fream, and others, 12 H. 7.

A gild was founded in this borough, and dedicated to St. Mary, in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, of which John Glover was the laſt incumbent, and received a penſion of 4*l.* a year, in 1553. The lands belonging to this gild were granted to Miles Patrick 2 E. 6. who granted them, the ſame year, to Richard Pate, who alſo granted them, 5 Mar. to the burghers of Sodbury, part for a town-hall, and part for an almſhouſe. An information was brought in the court of exchequer 14 Eliz. for lands in Sodbury, called Town-lands, formerly belonging to the diſſolved gild, which information was diſmiſſed upon a full

In witneſs whereof to this our preſent order filed unto this book, and ſent unto this honourable council, we the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, the king's ſerjeant at law, have ſeverally put to our ſeals, and ſubſcribed our names to this our order, made the xth day of September, in the ſaid ſixth year of the reign of our ſaid ſovereign lord Edward the Sixth, by the grace of God, of England France and Ireland king, defender of the faith, and in earth of this church of England, and alſo of Ireland the ſupream head.

The church is a chapel of eaſe to Old Sodbury.

The church conſiſts of the nave and two ailes, of the ſame length with the body, and a large gallery. It is handſome, but not uniformly pewed. There was a chantry in this church, called Borler's chantry, of which William Williams was the laſt incumbent, and received a penſion of 6*l.* in the year 1553. Willis.

There is an antient tomb, without inſcription, at the end of the north aile. It belongs to the Walſhes, as appears by their arms thereon, viz. Azure, five mullets in ſaltire Or.

In the ſame part of the church, are ſeveral memorials on braſs plates, for the family of the Burcombes, of which the following is the moſt obſervable:

Farewell, vain World, What Good in thee is found,
Where Sickneſs, Sorrow, Sinne and Shame abound?

SODBURY (LITTLE)

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Grumbald's Aſh, one mile diſtant eaſtward from Chipping Sodbury, ſix north-weſtward from Marſhfield, and about twenty-nine ſouth from Glouceſter.

A ſmall part of the pariſh lies in the hill country, on the borders of which, on the brow of the hill, is a very ſtrong camp, of an oblong form, ſtill remaining as perfect as when originally made. It has a double agger, thrown up very high, except on the weſt ſide, where it overlooks the vale, and there it is ſingle, becauſe the hill is ſo ſteep, that the camp was thought inacceſſible from that quarter. It is about three hundred and twenty yards long, as I found by pacing it, and two hundred broad. The interval, or ditch, between the aggera, is twenty-two yards wide, and the way into it is towards the eaſt. Some think it a Daniſh camp, others will have it to be Roman, forming their opinions merely from the conſtruction of it, as it is no where taken notice of in hiſtory, and no coins, or other things, have been found in or near it, to determine the point: But this we know, from Leland, that king Edward the Fourth's army occupied it a little before the battle of Tewkeſbury.

Juſt below this camp, on the ſide of the hill fronting weſtward, ſtands the manor houſe, an antient building, formerly the ſeat of the Stephens's, a very reſpectable family, that has been long reſident in this county. It is now the property of Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, eſq; who is deſcended, on his mother's ſide, from that family. From this houſe, there is an extenſive proſpect over the vale, as far as the Briſtol channel; and four clumps of large trees, growing above it, are objects particularly obſervable, and taken notice of, through a large extent of country on that ſide the hills.

A dreadful thunder ſtorm fell on this ſeat in the year 1556, when Maurice Walſh, eſq; was lord of the manor. The lightning entered at the parlour door, and forced its way out at the window on the oppoſite ſide of the room, when Mr. Walſh and his family were at dinner. One of the children was killed on the ſpot, and ſix others, with the unfortunate father, were ſo much hurt, that they all died of the ſhock in leſs than two months afterwards.

The learned William Tyndale lived in this houſe with ſir John Walſh, as tutor to his children, about the time of king Henry the Eighth, where he tranſlated the New Teſtament into the Engliſh language, and wrote ſeveral books to promote the reformation, which drew a ſtorm upon his head, not leſs dreadful than that before-mentioned, tho' of a different nature. He fled from his perſecutors into the low Countries, but was purſued by the intemperate zeal which diſtinguiſhed thoſe times, and impriſoned in Filford caſtle in Flanders, under whoſe walls he was burnt for hereſy, in the year 1556.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The particulars of this manor, taken from the antient ſurvey, are miſplaced by ſir Robert Atkyns to the pariſh of Old Sodbury. The following is a literal tranſlation from the original language of the record, with which the reader may compare it, as it ſtands in the 73d page of this book:

'Hugo Maminot holds Sopeberie in Grimbolde-'ſtou hundred, of the ſame biſhop [of Liſiaux 'in Normandy]. Aluuard held it in the time of 'king Edward. There are five hides taxed, and 'two plow-tillages in demean, and four villeins, 'and two bordars, with two plow-tillages. There 'are four ſervi, and twenty acres of meadow, and 'a little wood. It was worth 8*l.* and is now 'worth 4*l.*'

Jurdan Biſhop held the manor of Little Sodbury in the reign of king Henry the Third, and granted common of paſture to the burghers of Chipping Sodbury, as particularly mentioned in the account of that place. He was cotemporary with William Craſſus, and was a witneſs to his confirmation of privileges to the town of Chipping Sodbury. The ſheriff returned, that John Byſhoppe was lord of Sudbury 9 E. 1. and he continued poſſeſſed of it in the 15th year of the ſame reign, when he defended the privileges of his manor, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto.

This manor paſſed afterwards to the Diſpencers, who held it in the reigns of king Edward the Second and king Edward the Third.

Richard de Alerdine, and Edith his wife, levied a fine of it 11 R. 2. After whom it came to the Stanſhaws, Stanſhaws, who continued poſſeſſed of it down to the reign of king Edward the Fourth.

Richard Forſter was ſeized of this manor in the beginning of the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and joined with Thomas Moor and his wife in levying a fine of the manor of Little Sodbury, and of the advowſon of the church of St. Adeline there, to John Walſh of Olveſton, who had married Elizabeth his daughter and heir; by virtue of which fine this manor paſſed into the family of the Walſhes, 1 H. 7.

Sir John Walſh, ſon and heir of John Walſh, married Anne, daughter of ſir Robert Pointz, and having ſerved the office of high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 18 & 27 H. 8. died ſeized of Little Sodbury in the 38th year of the ſame reign, leaving Maurice his ſon thirty years old, who had livery of the manor the ſame year, and married Bridget, daughter of —— Vauſe. Nicholas Walſh, was ſon of Maurice, and ſucceeded him in the manor of Little Sodbury. He was high ſheriff of this county 4 Eliz. and having married Mary, daughter of ſir John Berkeley, died in the 20th year of that reign. Henry Walſh, ſon and heir of Nicholas, had livery of the manor of Little Sodbury on the death of his father, and was killed by Edward Winter, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Walter Walſh, couſin of Henry Walſh, and ſon of another Henry, who was a younger brother of Nicholas before-mentioned, was lord of the manors of Little Sodbury and Old Sodbury, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and continued poſſeſſed of them in the year 1608.

The manors of Little Sodbury and Old Sodbury paſſed by purchaſe, from the heir of the Walſhes, to Thomas Stephens, eſq; third ſon of Edward Stephens of Eaſtington, in the reign of king James the Firſt. This Thomas Stephens was eminent in the profeſſion of the law, being attorney general to the princes Henry and Charles. By his wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheireſs of John Stone of London, he had three ſons, Edward, the eldeſt, who ſucceeded him in the manors of Sodbury; John, the ſecond, anceſtor of the Stephens's of Lypiat; and Nathaniel. Thomas Stephens died in the year 1613, and was ſucceeded in the manors of Sodbury by his eldeſt ſon Edward, who married Anne, the daughter of —— Crew, and ſerved the office of high ſheriff of this county 10 C. 1. Sir Thomas Stephens, ſon and heir of Edward, married Katherine, the daughter of —— Combs, and was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in the years 1644 & 1671. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas Stephens, eſq; who married Anne, the daughter of —— Neale.

From him the manor and eſtate deſcended to Edward Stephens, after whoſe death, in the year 1728, they came to Robert Packer, eſq; as heir at law, whoſe mother was a daughter of Richard Stephens of Eaſtington.

Robert Packer married Mary, one of the daughters and at length ſole heireſs of ſir Henry Winchcombe, of Bucklebury in the county of Berks, baronet, ſon of ſir Henry Winchcombe, baronet, by Frances, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas earl of Berkſhire, and had iſſue four ſons, Winchcombe-Howard, John, Robert, and Henry, who all died without iſſue; and one daughter, Elizabeth, ſecond wife to David Hartley, M.D. a perſon of great abilities, extenſive learning, and diſtinguiſhed eminence in his profeſſion. He was ſon of the reverend John Hartley, and was lord of this manor in right of his ſaid wife Elizabeth, by whom he had iſſue one ſon, Winchcombe-Henry, and one daughter, Mary.

His ſon, Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, and one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Berks, where he has ſeveral eſtates, particularly Donnington and Bucklebury, at the latter of which he reſides. His arms are, Argent, on a croſs azure, voided in the center, four cinquefoils Or, and in the firſt and fourth quarters a martlet ſable. CREST, A martlet ſable holding in its mouth a croſs croſlet fitchy of the third.

The records ſhew, that John Smith held lands in Little Sodbury. John Smith was his ſon and heir, and dying ſeized of them 9 C. 1. left John his ſon nine years old.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 100 l. a year. Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, eſq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Coats is the preſent incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Adeline. It is a low building, with an aile on the north-eaſt, belonging to the lord of the manor. There is no chancel, and the inhabitants bury at Old Sodbury, for which 10*s. per ann.* is paid to the miniſter.

SODBURY (OLD)

IS a pariſh in the hundred of Grumbald's Aſh, about one mile diſtant north-eaſt from Chipping Sodbury, ſix north-weſt from Marſhfield, and twenty-nine ſouth from Glouceſter.

One part of it ſtretches over that ridge or chain of hills that divides the Coteſwold country from the vale, and the other lies in the vale. It affords nothing obſervable in natural hiſtory or antiquities, except part of the camp deſcribed under Little Sodbury, which lies within its boundaries. The turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Bath runs through the pariſh, and a ſmall brook from hence empties itſelf into the Froom.

The etymology of the name is given under Chipping Sodbury, which was originally a part of this pariſh, and is now intirely encompaſſed by it; wherefore this was called Old Sodbury, with reſpect to the former.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The particulars which Domeſday gives of this manor, are totally omitted in ſir Robert Atkyns's Hiſtory, and part of thoſe belonging to Little Sodbury are placed, by miſtake, in their room. The following is a tranſlation of the record:

'Brictric the ſon of Algar held Sopeberie in 'Edereſtan hundred. In the time of king Edward 'there were ten hides, and four plow-tillages in 'demean, and twelve villeins, with five plow-'tillages; and four bordars, and eighteen ſervi, 'and one park, and a mill of 5*s*. [rent]. The 'ſteward hath lately added one mill of 40 den. 'There is a wood one mile long, and one broad. 'Hunfrid pays for this manor 16*l*. 10*s*. One 'yard-land in Wiche belongs to it, which paid 'twenty-five ſextaries of ſalt. Urſus the ſheriff 'has ſo oppreſſed the men, that now they cannot 'pay the ſalt.' Domeſday, p. 68.

This manor antiently belonged to the earls of Glouceſter and Hertford, and continued by deſcent in that family, 'till the reign of king Henry the Seventh. During this long ſucceſſion, it paſſed by female heirs into the great families of Diſpencer and Beauchamp, and at laſt ended in Anne, the great heireſs and ſiſter of Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick. She was married to Richard Nevil, generally called the Stout earl of Warwick, who being ſlain in Barnet field, fighting for the houſe of Lancaſter, this Anne, his widow, became obnoxious to the ſucceeding reigns: But upon the turn of affairs, by the ſucceſs of king Henry the Seventh, that ſubtle prince prevailed on her to ſettle the greateſt part of her vaſt inheritance on him and his heirs, and accordingly ſhe levied a fine to that purpoſe 3 H. 7.

King Henry the Eighth gave the manor of Old Sodbury to ſir John Walſh, who had been his champion, and it continued in the family of the Walſhes 'till it was purchaſed, in the reign of king James the Firſt, by Thomas Stephens, attorney general to prince Henry. From him it deſcended, like Little Sodbury, down to Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor.

Several other perſons were ſeized of lands in this pariſh, as appears by records of the following dates. John de la Wild held lands in Sodbury 10 E. 3. Elizabeth Stanſhaw died ſeized of lands in Old Sodbury 13 H. 4. John Stanſhaw held lands in Old Sodbury 37 H. 6. which were held by Robert Stanſhaw, together with an eſtate called Kengrove, 12 E. 4. John Stanſhaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Old Sodbury to William Freem 12 H. 7.

The capital meſſuage of Old Sodbury belonged to the college of Weſtbury, and was granted to ſir Ralph Sadleyr 35 H. 8.

Hamſteed, an eſtate in this pariſh, formerly belonged to the monaſtery of Bradenſtoke in Wiltſhire. It was granted, by the name of the manor, grange, or farm of Hampſteed, to Anne, widow of ſir Adrian Forteſcue, for her life, and after to her ſon, John Forteſcue, in fee, 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. It was ſold by that family to Edward Stephens, eſq; 9 C. 1. Sir Thomas Stephens ſold it to William Clutterbuck, in 1675; after which it was purchaſed by —— Okey, from whoſe family it paſſed, by purchaſe, to the truſtees of Henry Woolnough, eſq; and it is now the property of John-Hugh Smyth, of Long Aſton in the county of Somerſet, eſq; in right of Elizabeth his wife, ſole daughter and heireſs of the ſaid Henry Woolnough. His arms are, Gules, on a chevron between three cinquefoils argent, as many leopards faces ſable.

Lygrove is a conſiderable eſtate in this pariſh, where was a good houſe, now in decay, and a park. John Cotherington, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Lygrove, to the uſe of themſelves for life, the remainder to Humphry, John, and Thomas, ſucceſſively in taille, the remainder to Margaret Baſile, late wife of ſir Peter Baſile, in taille, 49 H. 6. Lygrove eſtate is now the property of Mr. Hartley.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 300*l*. a year. The dean and chapter of Worceſter are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Duvall is the preſent incumbent. The chapel of Chipping Sodbury is annexed to it.

In the year 1218, the biſhop of Worceſter gave the rectory of Old Sodbury to the monaſtery of Benedictine monks at Worceſter, founded originally by king Ethelred, for ſecular canons; but Oſwald placed the Benedictines in it in the year 991. The advowſon, which had belonged to the ſame monaſtery, was granted to the chapter of Worceſter 33 H. 8. confirmed 6 Jac. and ſtill continues in the ſame.

The church has two croſs ailes, and a low tower at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. It is the mother church to Chipping Sodbury, but yields the ſuperiority in ſize, beauty, and convenience to her rival daughter.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north aile, which is the burying place of the Stephens's, under two niches, lie the effigies in ſtone of two perſons, with their legs acroſs, after the manner of the knights templers, and ſcutcheons on their arms, but the bearings are not not diſtinguiſhable, and there is no tradition concerning them.

Againſt the north wall of the ſame aile, upon the table of a marble monument, it is thus written:

Here lyeth the Remains of EDWARD STEPHENS of Little SODBURY, Eſq^r.
Who had all the Vertues that adorn
A Gentleman, a Magiſtrate and a Chriſtian;
In his Sincere Piety to GOD,
In his impartial Juſtice and Benevolence to Mankind,
In his Fidelity and Zeal for his Friend,
In an Inſtructive Converſation,
And a particular Happineſs of Addreſs,
Which never failed to gain him the Good will
Of all that approached him;
IN SHORT,
In every Religious, in every ſocial Virtue,
He was a Pattern equalled by few, Excelled by none.
He dyed the 6^th Day of April, MDCCXXVIII,

Upon this monument are the following arms, Baron and femme. Upon a flat ſtone is this memorial:

3. Tuffley. This place lies in the pariſh of St. Mary de Load, in the city of Glouceſter, but in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton. It is a place of conſiderable extent, about two miles ſouth-eaſt from the city, conſiſting of rich meadow and paſture, and very good arable land. In the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, Tuffelege was held by the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter, as a member of the great manor of Bertune, of which the particulars from Domeſday are ſet down p. 206. It had been alienated from the church of Glouceſter, but was again recovered to them by Oſborn biſhop of Exeter, when Serlo was abbat, and king Henry the Second confirmed it to them by his charter. It continued in the abbey of Glouceſter 'till that houſe was diſſolved, and was then granted to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, 33 H. 8. But the tithes of Tuffley, and a paſture called Sudgrove, late belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8.

The Atkyns's were antiently tenants of the manor, and of a large eſtate in this place, where they had a good houſe and park, which they held for ſeveral generations, by leaſe under the dean and chapter. Colonel Richard Atkyns, the laſt of that name who was poſſeſſed of this eſtate, ſuffered much for his loyalty to king Charles the Firſt. He raiſed a troop of horſe at his own charge, and was afterwards ſequeſtered, and paid 140*l.* compoſition. He was ſon of Richard Atkyns, of Tuffley, Tuffley, eſq; who married Mary, the daughter of ſir Edwin Sandys, and not the daughter of lord Sandys of the Vine, as ſir Robert Atkyns repreſents it, for ſhe was ſiſter to colonel Henry Sandys, the father of that lord Sandys, as appears by a well authenticated pedigree of the Sandys family, communicated to me by William Bayntun, of Gray's Inn, eſq; who married Catherine, eldeſt daughter of Windſor Sandys, lord of the manors of Miſerden and Winſton in this county.

4. Wolſtrop, antiently written Wolricheſthorp and Wolverſtrop. This place is extraparochial, and lies in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, about two miles from Glouceſter, adjoining to the pariſh of Quedgley, and is bounded on the north-weſt by the river Severn. Robert de Pont de Larch held Wolricheſthorp 30 H. 3. and granted the ſame, with Lanwarrine, to William de Valencia, earl of Pembroke; and king Henry confirmed the grant in the 36th year of his reign. William le Walſh died ſeized of Wolverſtrop 3 E. 3. which was held by Giles Walſh, of Richard lord Talbot and Anchoret his wife, by the eighth part of a knight's fee 20 R. 2. and it was held of Gilbert Talbot 7 H. 6. Here Thomas Hayward, eſq; has a pleaſant ſeat, and a large eſtate in this and other places. SOUTHROP.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwell's Barrow, eight miles diſtant ſouth-eaſt from Northleach, five ſouth from Burford in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-ſix eaſt from Glouceſter. It conſiſts chiefly of arable land, and the river Lech runs through it to Leachlade, where it empties itſelf into the Thames.

There are four manors deſcribed in Domeſday by the name of Lecce, all lying on the river of the ſame name. Three of them are now called Northleach, Eaſtleach-Martin, and Eaſtleach-Turville; and this is the fourth, which, for diſtinction, obtained the name of Southrop, from its being ſituated more ſouthward than the others; for Southrop ſignifies the South Village.

The air of this village is wholeſome, and the ſoil, tho' light, produces good corn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following are the particulars of this manor from the antient ſurvey:

'Walter the ſon of Ponz holds Lece in Bric-'ſtuoldes hundred of the king. There are ten 'hides taxed. Earl Tofti held it. There are 'four plow-tillages in demean, and ſixteen villeins, 'and ſix bordars, and a prieſt, with eight plow-'tillages. There are twelve ſervi, and a mill of '10s. [rent] and twenty acres of meadow. It 'was worth 12*l.* and is now worth 15*l.*' Domeſday, p. 77.

Robert Creping and Nicholaa his wife held the manor and advowſon 31 H. 3. and Benedict Blakenham, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of the manor to the uſe of themſelves 1 E. 1. which ſaid Benedict obtained a licence to alienate two plow-tillages in Southrop to Henry de St. Philebert 26 E. 1.

John de St. Philebert, ſon of Henry, was ſeized of Southrop, with free warren, 10 E. 2. and died 7 E. 3.

Henry de Grey died ſeized of a manor in Southorpe 8 E. 2. which he had of John the kinſman and heir of Robert de Grey, and held it by the ſervice of one fourth part of a knight's fee; and ſir Ralph Grey, ſon of Henry, levied a fine of thoſe lands 22 E. 3.

John de St. Philebert, ſon of John, levied a fine of Southrop to the king 27 & 31 E. 3. and the king granted the ſame (lately belonging to John de St. Philebert, as the grant expreſſly mentions) to William Herney and Mary his wife, and to the heirs males of their bodies, 50 E. 3. The ſame year, alſo, the king granted one plow-tillage in Southrop, held by John Short for life, to William Herney and Mary his wife, and to their heirs males. Mary the wife of William Herney ſurvived him, and died ſeized of Philebert's Court, and Grey's Court, in Southrop, 7 H. 4.

Robert Leverſedge died ſeized of this manor 4 E. 4. and it was granted by the king to Robert Horſely, for life, in the twelfth year of the ſame reign. The crown granted it, as part of the dutchy of Lancaſter, to Peter Bradſhaw, 3 Jac. and it was again granted to Robert earl of Saliſbury 5 Jac. Sir Thomas Row was lord of this manor in the year 1608, which paſſed ſoon afterwards to Wadham college, in Oxford, to which it now belongs.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth 100*l.* a year. It is in the preſentation of Wadham college, and Mr. Baldwin is the preſent incumbent.

Alice

Alice de Clermont gave the church of Southrop to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, in Clerkenwell, London, which grant was confirmed by Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford.

The church is ſmall, without any thing to diſtinguiſh it, except a monument in the ſouth aile for ſir Thomas Conway and his lady, with his arms, viz. Sable, on a bend cotized argent, a roſe proper between two annulets; but there is no inſcription. Sir Thomas had been lord of this manor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 38 houſes, and about 170 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. There are now, by an exact ſurvey, 47 families, and 216 ſouls.

STANDISH.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Whitſton, four miles diſtant north-weſtward from Stroud, eight north from Durſley, and ſeven ſouth from Glouceſter.

It conſiſts of rich paſture ground, with ſome arable and woodlands, and produces excellent cheeſe and good cyder.

Here was antiently a pretty large houſe, with ſeveral offices, belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter. It was called the Almery of Standiſh. Part of it ſtill remains, and particularly the arches of the gateway. An old building, which belonged to that houſe, ſtands intire on one ſide of the church-yard, ſtrongly ſecured by buttreſſes; and the farm houſe, cloſe by the church, ſeems to be a part of the old Almery, of which the reader, turning to p. 141 of this book, may ſee many particulars.

There is a ſpring in Standiſh park, called the Red Well, which moſt probably runs thro' a bed of iron ore, as it tinges the ſtones with a red ochry colour; and it incruſts ſticks, and other ſubſtances lying in the courſe of its waters, with a ſtony ſubſtance. Theſe waters may be beneficial in diſorders for which preparations of iron are preſcribed.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Beornulph king of Mercia, in the year 821, gave fifteen hides in Standiſh under Ezinbury to the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter, which was then occupied by ſecular canons. Eldred archbiſhop of York afterwards became poſſeſſed of the manors of Stanedis, Otintune, and Lece, (now called Northleach,) as a ſecurity for the money he had expended in the repair of the monaſtery of Glouceſter, a little before the Norman invaſion; and Thomas archbiſhop of York held Stanedis at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears from a paſſage in Domeſday, of which the following is a literal tranſlation:

'Archbiſhop Eldred held Stanedis, in Witeſtan 'hundred. It was [part] of the demean of St. 'Peter of Glouueceſtre. There were fifteen hides 'in the time of king Edward. There are three 'plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and 'fourteen bordars, with ſixteen plow-tillages; 'and ſeven radecheniſters, having ſeventeen plow-'tillages. There are eight ſervi, and half a fiſhery; 'a wood half a mile long, and one furlong broad.

'In the time of king Edward the whole manor 'was worth 16*l.* now [only] 12*l.* Archbiſhop 'Thomas holds it, and it pays tax in the ſame 'manner.

'The abbat of Glouuec' holds two hides of the 'land of this manor, and he ought of right to 'hold them.

'Earl Hugh holds one hide unjuſtly. Durand 'the ſheriff holds three hides which earl William 'gave to Roger his brother. Archbiſhop Thomas 'claims them.' Domeſday, p. 70.

The before-mentioned Thomas archbiſhop of York reſtored this manor to the abbey of Glouceſter, about the year 1094-5, and that houſe continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution of the monaſtery. But it had been held by meſne lords, as in the 7th of H. 8. when John Huntley was tenant under the abbey.

Edward duke of Somerſet had a grant of the manor 1 E. 6. and after his attainder, it was granted to ſir Anthony Cook, in the 6th year of the ſame reign.

Sir Henry Winſtone was lord of it in 1608. Sir Ralph Dutton, baronet, was ſeized of it at the beginning of this century; and from him it deſcended to his great grandſon, James Dutton, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor. His pedigree and arms are given under Sherbourn, the place of his reſidence.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Colthrop, or Coldrup, which is ſeparated from the reſt of the pariſh by the intervention of part of Haresfield. Thomas Crook held Coldthrop 10 E. 3. Charles Yate, eſq; was proprietor of it, and had a good ſeat here, about the beginning of this century. He was the youngeſt ſon of William Yate, eſq; and married, to his ſecond wife, Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter of Richard Yate of Arlingham, and dying in the year 1721, left iſſue, by his ſaid wife, ſix daughters coheireſſes. Elizabeth, the eldeſt, and Sophia, the fourth daughter, died unmarried:—Dorothy, the ſecond, was married to Powell Snell, of Guiting Grange in this county, eſq; by whom ſhe had three ſons, Powell, John, and Charles; and one daughter, Dorothy:—Anna-Maria, the third daughter, was married to Edmund Eſtcourt, of Shipton Moign, eſq; whoſe only child, Anna-Maria, was wedded to William Earle, late of Malmeſbury in the county of Wilts, whom ſhe ſurvived, and died in the year 1775:—Caroline, the fifth daughter, was married, firſt to Jacob Elton, ſon of ſir Abraham Elton, baronet; and ſecondly, to John Aſpinel, eſq; ſergeant at law, but died without iſſue by either:—Henrietta, the youngeſt, was the wife of Mr. Richard Warren, of Briſtol, by whom ſhe had one daughter. Charles Snell, third ſon of Powell Snell, eſq; and Dorothy his wife, ſold this eſtate to Mr. Samuel Niblet, of the city of Glouceſter, who is the preſent proprietor of it. Colthrop, and part of Hardwick make one tithing.

Livery of a cloſe in Coldrup was granted to John Bound 4 Eliz.

2. Putloe. Livery of this manor was granted to ſir John Lutterel 1 Eliz. It is now the property of James Dutton, eſq.

3. Standiſh Morton. 4. Little Haresfield. 5. Oxlinch; all which belong to Mr. Dutton. Lands in Nether Oxlinch belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet 1 E. 6.

6. Part of Pitchcombe, which is intirely ſeparated from the main body of the pariſh, by the interpoſition of Randwick. This eſtate belonged to John Bridgman, of Prinknaſh, at the beginning of the preſent century, and is now veſted, by purchaſe, in Mr. Page, of Painſwick in this county.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 230*l.* a year, and in the patronage of the biſhop of Glouceſter.

The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is ſmall, but neatly pewed with Dutch oak, and has a handſome ſpire at the weſt end.

There is an old monument for ſir Henry Winſtone, but the inſcription and arms are covered with white waſh.

About the beginning of the preſent century, there were 123 houſes in the pariſh, and about 500 inhabitants, of whom 14 were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. Atkyns. Here the ſmall farms have been joined together, and the cottages ſuffered to fall down, which has obliged the poorer ſort of people to remove to other places, and reduced the number of inhabitants to about 400.

STANLEY, or KING's STANLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Whitſton, three miles diſtant ſouth-weſtward from Stroud, ſeven north-eaſtward from Durſley, and ten ſouth from Glouceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion, that Stanley is derived from the Saxon Stan, a ſtone, and leaz, a paſture ground, as though it were a ſtony ſoil; but the pariſh in general conſiſts of ſtrong, deep land, not at all conſiſtent with that explanation. It is probable, that in the time of the Saxons, the capital manſion-houſe being of ſtone, (a thing not then very common in the vale country) gave name to the pariſh; for Leaz ſignifies a place, and Stanleaz, the Stone-place, i.e. the houſe; as we ſometimes ſay the manor place for the manor houſe. And I am the rather of this opinion, ſince other villages and towns derive their names from the ſame thing. Thus Stanley, and Stonehouſe, the name of an adjoining village, tho' different in ſound, have a like ſignification; and both are ſimilar to Bodmin, Britiſh, the name of a town in Cornwall.

This is ſuppoſed to have been the reſidence of one of the Mercian kings, wherefore it was called King's Stanley, to diſtinguiſh it from the pariſh of Leonard Stanley, next adjoining.

Part of the village is called the Borough, for which two bailiffs are annually choſen, who execute the office of conſtable within its precincts. In it, ſtands a building which the inhabitants ſay was once a jail, and a piece of ground, now belonging longing to the rectory, is called Hanging Close, where it is ſaid criminals were formerly executed. Theſe are as ſo many ſhadows of particular privileges, which I ſuppoſe the place antiently enjoy'd when it was a borough, and of greater conſequence than at preſent, for ſo it appears to have been by the names of Pig-ſtreet, High-ſtreet, &c. mentioned in old writings.

The poor people are chiefly employ'd in the clothing buſineſs, which is the general manufacture of this part of the county.

Here are two meadows, called Selſley-meadow, and Stanley-meadow, each containing about fifty acres, which after the hay is taken off, are common to all the inhabitants.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The manor was given to Walter Deſpencer by king Henry the Second, to whom he was [d]uſher of the chamber. This Walter was [d]eldeſt ſon of Thurſtan le Deſpencer, the ſon of William le Deſpencer, who were both of them [d]ſtewards to king Henry the Firſt; and Robert Deſpencer, father of William, bore the ſame office under king William the Conqueror, with whom he came into England, and received the name of [e]Deſpencer, i.e. ſteward, from his employment. Walter died without iſſue, and was ſucceeded by his ſecond brother, Almerick le Deſpencer,[f] who was ſheriff of Rutlandſhire 34 H. 2. & 1 R. 1. and being ſteward to the latter, enjoyed, of his gift, the manor of King's Stanley. And in the 5th year of the reign of king John, he had a confirmation in fee of the lordſhips of Wurdie and Stanley in the vale of Glouceſter; which lordſhip of Wurdie king Henry the Second had formerly given to Walter, brother of Almerick, for his homage and ſervice, paying for the ſame a pair of gilt ſpurs, or 12*d.* yearly into the exchequer, on the feaſt of St. Michael the archangel, and to be held by the ſervice of half a knight's fee. He married Amabel, daughter of Walter de Cheſnei, or Chenei, by whom he had iſſue three ſons, Thurſtan, Almerick, and Philip.

Almerick le Deſpencer, the ſecond ſon, enjoyed the manor of Stanley, but joining with his brother Thurſtan, and other barons, in taking up arms againſt king John, his lands were ſeized, and granted by that king to Oſbert Giffard, his own natural ſon[g].

Sir Robert Atkyns ſays that this Almerick le Deſpencer was ſeized of King's Stanley, and had a grant of free warren, fairs, and markets 53 H. 3. which he pleaded in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. and died in the 34th year of the ſame reign; and that Almeric, ſon of the laſt Almerick, was ſeized of two yard-lands, and of eight acres in this place 4 E. 2. But it appears by a liſt of all the vills in the county, and their reſpective lords, which was returned into the exchequer by Walter de Stukely the ſheriff 9 E. 1. that John Gifford was then ſeized of the vill of Stanſley Regis, in the hundred of Wyſton. He married Maud, the widow of William Longeſpee, and died 27 E. 1.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield, ſon of John and Maud his wife, was ſeized of the manor of King's Stanley, of the advowſon of the church, and of Walliſwood 6 E. 2.

Stephen Mareſchall held the manor, and one meſſuage, and one yard-land therein, 7 E. 2.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield laſt mentioned, continued ſeized of King's Stanley 16 E. 2. but being taken in open rebellion againſt that king, at the battle of Burroughbridge in Yorkſhire, he was executed at Glouceſter as a traitor, and his lands confiſcated. John lord Maltravers obtained a grant of this manor, and procured a fine of it to be levied by John Calew, heir to John Giffard by a female. He was ſoon after convicted of ſundry miſdemeanors, whereupon his eſtates were ſeized, and this manor, with ſeveral others, was granted to Maurice, ſon of Maurice lord Berkeley, 11 E. 3. but Maltravers being again received into the king's favour, recovered this manor in the 27th, and died ſeized of it in the 31ſt year of the ſame reign. John lord Maltravers, ſon of John, ſucceeded his father, and died 38 E. 3. but Agnes, the widow of John lord Maltravers the elder, was endowed with this manor, and died 49 E. 3.

A third John lord Maltravers, ſon of the laſt John, died ſeized of the manor of King's Stanley 5 R. 2. and his ſon Henry deceaſing without iſſue, the manor came to Elianor, ſiſter of Henry, who by her marriage with John Fitz-Alan, or Arundel, ſecond ſon of Richard earl of Arundel, carried it into that name and family.

John Arundel, ſon of John and Elianor, had likewiſe a ſon John, who became earl of Arundel, on the deceaſe of Thomas earl of Arundel without iſſue male. He was ſlain near Beauvois in France, and by an inquiſition taken 13 H. 6. was found to have been ſeized of King Stanley, Stonehouſe, Shurdington, Archers [Stoke Archer,] and Woodcheſter in Glouceſterſhire, beſides great eſtates in other counties.

Elianor the widow of ſir Walter Hungerford, late wife of ſir Richard Poinings, and formerly the wife of ſir John Arundel, and mother of John earl of Arundel, held this manor in dower 'till her death 33 H. 6.

Humphry earl of Arundel was ſon and heir of John, but dying under age, the honour and manor of King Stanley came to his uncle, William earl of Arundel. He married Joan, daughter of Richard Nevil, earl of Saliſbury, and dying 3 H. 7. was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas earl of Arundel, who married Margaret, daughter of Richard Widvile earl of Rivers, and died ſeized of King Stanley 16 H. 8.

William earl of Arundel, ſon of Thomas, had livery of the manors of King's Stanley, Stoke Archer, Shurdington, and Woodcheſter upon the deceaſe of his father; and having married Anne, ſiſter ſiſter to Henry earl of Northumberland, died 35 H. 8. Henry earl of Arundel, ſon of William, had livery of King's Stanley the following year, and died 22 Eliz. He was a zealous friend to queen Mary, and greatly inſtrumental in her advancement to the throne; an action laudable perhaps in the intention, but direful in its conſequences, and productive of thoſe ſhocking barbarities which marked the ſhort but tragical reign of that female zealot; when fire and faggot were thought the fitteſt inſtruments to promote that religion whoſe diſtinguiſhing characteriſticks are patience, meekneſs, and univerſal philanthropy; when the biſhops Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer were burnt at the ſtake; men that for learning, piety, and exemplary manners, were the moſt illuſtrious of their age, an honour to the nation wherein they lived, and whoſe names will be remembered with veneration by lateſt poſterity. But to return:

The manor was in the crown 6 Jac. and was granted the next year to George Walter, and John Williams, in truſt for William Garraway, and others. It came ſoon afterwards to the Ducie family, and lord Ducie is the preſent lord of the manor.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that John de Clavile died ſeized of half a yard-land in King's Stanley 4 E. 2. and his ſon John de Clavile was likewiſe ſeized of the ſame lands 11 E. 3.

John Notelin was ſeized of lands in King's Stanley; and Joan, his widow, was endowed with them, and died 14 E. 3. John Notelin, ſon of John, died ſeized of the ſame lands 36 E. 3. and John Notelin, his ſon, likewiſe died ſeized of them 1 R. 2. Another John Notelin, a deſcendant from the laſt-mentioned John, died ſeized of an eſtate in King's Stanley 29 H. 6.

Hugh Twiſel held one meſſuage, twenty-four acres of arable, and two acres of meadow in King's Stanley 7 R. 2. John Twiſel died ſeized of lands here 32 H. 6. and John Twiſel, ſon of John, died poſſeſſed of the ſame lands 11 E. 4. John Barton, and Richard Ruſſel and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of lands in King's Stanley to William Cale 1 E. 6. Thomas Rogers of Wotton Baſſet, ſon and heir of Agnes, died ſeized of lands in this pariſh 15 Eliz. leaving Thomas, a poſthumous ſon, his heir. Lands in King's Stanley, which belonged to Henry earl of Arundel, were granted to Chriſtopher Hatton 18 Eliz.

weeping genii, one holding an inverted torch, the other an olive branch, both ſitting on a vaſe. Beneath, on a table, it is thus written:

Benefactions.

Lady Hungerford, who was born in this pariſh, gave two ſilver bowls, and two ſilver patens, for the communion ſervice. Thirty ſhillings a year are given to teach poor children to read; and the income of an eſtate which lets for about 7*l.* a year is left one half for the ſame purpoſe, the remainder for clothing widows and old people.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns's account, there were 250 houſes in the pariſh, and about 1100 inhabitants, of whom 60 were freeholders; yearly births 22, burials 19. The average of annual burials is now 32, and there are at preſent 1257 inhabitants; ſo that about one in 42 dies annually.

STANLEY St. LEONARD's.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Whitſtone, four miles diſtant ſouth-weſt from Stroud, ſix north-eaſt from Durſley, and eleven ſouth from Glouceſter.

It is bounded by King's Stanley on the eaſt, Eaſington on the weſt, Stonehouſe to the north, and Woodcheſter on the ſouth; and is ſituated on the north ſide of a lofty wood, called Bucholt, which in the Saxon language ſignifies the Beech-wood, and without doubt did antiently, as it does at preſent, conſiſt chiefly of the beech tree. The greater part of the pariſh is rich paſturage and orcharding, and produces good cheeſe, and ſtout cyder.

The etymology of Stanley is given in the preceding pariſh. This was called Leonard Stanley, (from a priory here, dedicated to St. Leonard) to diſtinguiſh it from the adjoining pariſh of King's Stanley.

King Edward the Second granted a charter of a weekly market, to be held on Saturday, at Stanley St. Leonard's; and of two annual fairs, one on the 6th day of November, which is St. Leonard's day; the other on the Saturday after the 15th of July, which is St. Swithin's day; theſe being the ſaints to whom the priory and the pariſh church were reſpectively dedicated; and that charter was renewed in the year 1620.

This was the only market-town in the hundred, and was formerly more populous than at preſent, having been much reduced by a dreadful fire, which happened in May, 1686, and almoſt conſumed it. There was a brief, ſoon after, for the benefit of the poor ſufferers; but the national revolution taking place about that time, and men's minds being employ'd on greater concerns, the cataſtrophe was too much neglected, and not one ſixth part of the money collected was remitted to the pariſh, nor was the remainder ever accounted for by the farmers and officers of briefs at that time. It continues, however, to rank as a market town in our books and maps, and has a right to hold markets and fairs, but wants intereſt and conveniencies to bring people together. In ſhort, the market has been long ſince diſuſed, and is totally loſt. The houſes ſtand in a diſcontinued, ſtragling form, and the only appearance of its having been a market town, is a little ſhed, which was the market houſe, ſtill remaining about the middle of the place.

There was a ſmall monaſtery founded here, dedicated to St. Leonard, of a prior and canons, as they are expreſſly called, in archbiſhop Theobald's confirmation of ſeveral gifts to them, a tranſlation of which I have inſerted in the Appendix, N°. 24. And here it is proper to obſerve, that only the former part of that confirmation, as far as the word appurtenances, (which ſtands in the twelfth line, as I have printed it) is given in ſir Robert Atkyns's Hiſtory; and that what follows in that book, is the latter part of king Henry the Second's charter to the priory of Newent, which, by ſome unaccountable miſtake, was joined to it, and makes an incongruous medley of two diſtinct writings.

It is not abſolutely certain who was the founder of this priory, but it has been commonly attributed to Roger de Berkeley, who gave it the advowſons of the ſeveral churches of Ozleworth, Cowley, Erlingham, Uley, and Slimbridge; and in the year 1146, gave the patronage of the priory, with all its rights, to the abbey of Glouceſter, with the conſent of Sabrith, or Sabrath, the prior of the monaſtery, and the reſt of the monks, and with the approbation of Simon, biſhop of Worceſter, whereby it became a cell of Benedictine monks to that abbey. And in the year 1156, the ſame Roger de Berkeley gave the church of Cam, with the appurtenances, to this priory, and a grove called Fyſacre; which were afterwards confirmed by king Henry the Third, and by John, biſhop of Worceſter. But this Roger de Berkeley could not be that Roger who came in with the Conqueror, to whom ſir Robert Atkyns (p. 25.) has attributed ſeveral of theſe donations. Robert de Berkeley, ſon of Maurice, gave alſo to this priory, a mill in Cowley[h], and a meſſuage with lands, belonging to the ſame mill, in the reign of king Henry the Second.

There was afterwards a law-ſuit commenced concerning the church of Slimbridge, between Thomas lord Berkeley, and Thomas de Bredon, abbat of Glouceſter, which was adjuſted by compoſition. Maurice lord Berkeley, grandſon of Harding, had founded an hoſpital at Lorwing, or Lorling, by the name of the Maſter and brethren of Lorwing, and endowed it with lands there; which hoſpital, lands and appurtenances, Thomas lord Berkeley gave to the priory of Stanley, in conſideration whereof the church of Slimbridge was releaſed to him 8 H. 3. And thus it happened, that Lorenge-farm became appurtenant to this pariſh, tho' ſeven or eight miles diſtant from the body of it; and the occupiers of the farm have paid the parochial taxes, and ſerved the offices to this pariſh time immemorially; but the land-tax goes in aid of the pariſh of Cam, to which Lorenge is contiguous.

Sir Robert Atkyns, in his Hiſtory of Glouceſterſhire, and Mr. Stevens, in his Supplement to the Monaſticon, were both miſtaken, in repreſenting Geoffry Mandevil, earl of Eſſex, as a great benefactor to this priory; in which they have confounded it with that of Stonely in Huntingdonſhire, of the order of St. Auguſtin, founded by William Mandeville, earl of Eſſex, who lived in the year 1180; whereas this priory of Stanley St. Leonard's was of the Benedictine order.

I have no where found a catalogue of the priors, nor can I make out a liſt of them from the papers which have fallen into my hands. Doctor John Croſſe was prior here in 1189, and not in 1449, as ſir Robert Atkyns has it. He lies interred in the ſouth aile of the church, with an old monkiſh inſcription on the ſtone, (as I have it in ſome manuſcript papers concerning the priory) and tho' the date has been effaced for above a century paſt, yet it appears, from the moſt probable accounts of him, that he died in 1199. The inſcription was as follows:

Qui jacet hoc tumulo Doctor John Croſſe nominatur
Ille Prior Stanly Sancti fuerat Leonardi
Hunc ſancto rotulo ſcribat Deus et tueatur.

This priory was diſſolved with the abbey of Glouceſter; but before that event took place, there being only two monks in the priory, king Henry the Eighth, by a letter, dated June 11, in the 30th year of his reign, deſired that thoſe monks might be recalled to the abbey, and that the abbat and convent would grant a leaſe of this cell, for ninety-nine years, to ſir William Kingſton, knight; which was done accordingly, July 18, at the yearly rent of 36*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* with ſome few reſervations, as appears by abbat Malvern's manuſcript. The annual revenues of the priory, at the diſſolution, amounted to 126*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* according to Speed's account; and the clear value was 106*l.* 17*s.* according to a table of valuations in Stevens's Supplement.

The ſcite of the cell of Stanley, formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, and all the lands in England belonging to that cell, were granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton, reſerving a rent of 40*s.* per ann. 36 H. 8. Sir Anthony conveyed them, by licence of alienation, to Anthony Bourchier, eſq; 2 E. 6. Mr. Bourchier conveyed them to John Sandford, on the 2d of Feb. 3 E. 6. and they were then properly enrolled in chancery, as appears by evidences and writings in the poſſeſſion of Robert Sandford, eſq; the preſent owner of the ſcite of the priory. He is deſcended from an antient family in Shropſhire, who ſprung from the ſame ſtock with the Sandfords in Weſtmoreland, mentioned by Leland, among the familes of note there in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, one of whoſe deſcendants, Thomas Sandford, eſq; of Hougil-caſtle in that county, was created a baronet 17 C. 1. Anſelm Sandford was ſon of the above-mentioned John Sandford, and upon his father's death, had livery of the priory of Stanley, and of the manor of Stonehouſe, in this county, 13 Eliz. Robert Sandford, gent. was a direct deſcendant from Anſelm. He died in the old priory of Stanley, which was the ſeat of his family, in 1719; and was ſucceeded by his only ſon Robert Sandford, eſq; who reſided at Stratton, and was an acting magiſtrate in the commiſſion of the peace for the county of Glouceſter, which office he diſcharged with judgment and integrity upwards of forty years; and dying in 1769, he was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert Sandford, eſq; the preſent proprietor of the priory, and lord of the manor of Stanley. His arms are, Per chevron, ſable and ermine, in chief two boars heads couped Or.

The old priory houſe was taken down about thirty years ago, and the outward walls of a good houſe were built on the very ſpot of ground whereon it ſtood; but the inſide is not yet finiſhed.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The earlieſt account of this manor is thus recorded in the antient ſurvey:

'Radulf de Berchelai holds Stanlege in Blacelew 'hundred. There are four hides and a half. 'Godric and Wiſnod held it for two manors. 'There are two plow-tillages in demean, and ſix 'villeins, and fourteen bordars, with twelve plow-'tillages. There are five ſervi, and ten acres of 'meadow. It was worth and is worth 100*s.*' Domeſday, p. 75.

Henry de Berkeley was ſeized of the manor of Stanley St. Leonard's, and of the advowſon of the church; and his right to certain privileges formerly granted to him, was allowed in the proceedings on a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. John Berkeley of Durſley, and Hawiſe his wife, levied a fine of this manor, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, 5 E. 3. and were ſeized of it 19 & 22 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley held lands in Stanley St. Leonard's 2 & 6 R. 2.

Maud de Cantelupe, deſcended from the Berkeleys, died ſeized of this manor 4 H. 4. Richard Cheddre married a daughter of Robert de Cantelupe by Maud his wife, and by her had a daughter and and heireſs, married to Thomas Wekys, who, in right of his wife, died ſeized of this manor 13 E. 4. Nicholas Wekys died alſo ſeized of it 5 Mar. and livery was granted to Robert Wekys, his grandſon and heir, the ſame year.

The manor paſſed afterwards to the Whitmores, a Staffordſhire family, who enjoyed it for a conſiderable time, 'till it was purchaſed not long ago of the late William Whitmore, of Slaughter in this county, by Robert Sandford, the father of Robert Sandford, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor, of whoſe family and arms, I have given a ſhort account under that of the priory.

Roger Barber was ſeized of four meſſuages, and three ſhops, in Glouceſter and Stanley St. Leonard's, for the uſe of the abbey of Glouceſter, 16 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouſe. It is a donative, and was for many years an impropriation, ſubject only to the annual payment of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to the curate. There uſed to be a leaſe granted by the impropriator, of moſt of the tithes, except of the priory lands, to the curate; which ſeldom amounted to more than 36*l.* a year; but the church has received a double augmentation from queen Anne's bounty, with ſome further additions from the impropriator and others, about forty years ago; ſo that by the purchaſe of an eſtate, and the ſettlement of the greater part of the tithes of the pariſh, except of the priory lands, the benefice is now worth 60*l.* a year neat, and is ſubject to epiſcopal juriſdiction. Robert Sandford, eſq; is patron, and his brother, the reverend John Sandford, D.D. is the preſent incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. It is built in the form of a croſs, and the tower, which is very large, ſtands in the middle of it, containing four great bells, and a clock. There are private receſſes between the outer and inner walls of the tower, the uſe of which is not certainly known; and there was formerly a high ſpire on the top of it.

Upon flat ſtones in the chancel, are the four following memorials:

Here lyeth the Body of Ralph Sandford B. A. of Trinity College in Oxford,
Third Son of Robert Sandford, Eſq;
of Stratton in this County.
A Youth of amiable Diſpoſitions
And of an Exemplary Conduct.
Earneſtly deſirous of Knowledge,
He purſued his Studies with a laudable Induſtry, yet confined not his Search to Knowledge alone,
But joined with his Improvements in uſeful Learning
The more valuable Attainments of Piety & Virtue.
As he lived under the habitual Influence of Religion
So was he ſupported by it in Death:
He met the Approaches of it with Peace & Compoſure,
Declaring his Confidence in the Merits of Xſt's Blood,
And his intire Reſignation to the Will of God.
Reader, imitate thou the Example of his Life
That thy laſt End may be like his.
He died June 10th, 1749, Aged 23.

There is an elegant latin inſcription for Henry Riſhton, A.M. who died in the year 1741, and for his wife Elianor, who were both buried here, and who gave 200*l.* for the uſe of the poor of this pariſh for ever, which has been laid out in the purchaſe of land here, and the profits of it are applied to that uſe by the patron and incumbent, who are perpetual truſtees.

There is alſo a monument in the church for Mr. Nathaniel Badger, clothier of this pariſh, who dying in 1707, ſettled 40*s.* a year for ever, to be paid out of lands in Slimbridge, for the eſtabliſhment of a charity ſchool in this pariſh, to teach children to read, &c. which, with ſome additions by ſubſcription, is at preſent kept up by the miniſter, who is truſtee for this purpoſe.

There were, about ſeventy years ago, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, 90 houſes, and about 400 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 17 were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. The number of ſouls at preſent is about 512.

STANTON, or STAUNTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſeven miles diſtant ſouth-weſt from Campden, ſeven north from Winchcombe, and twenty-two north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

One part of it lies in the Vale, the other on the ridge of hills that divides the vale from the Coteſwolds. Here are no curious natural productions, nor any antiquities, except a large camp on Shunborow-hill, fortified with double intrenchments, and overlooking the vale, but to what age or people it owes its exiſtence, is utterly unknown.

This place was probably called Stanton from the ſtone-quarry on the ſide of the hill.

The parſonage houſe is a very good one. It was built by the reverend Mr. Henry Izod, as appears by his arms on the chimney-piece in the hall.

A ſmall brook runs from hence into the river Iſbourn, which empties itſelf into the Avon below Eveſham.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor is ſuppoſed to have been given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by its founder, Kenulph king of Mercia, who died in the year 819; and it continued in the poſſeſſion of that houſe at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears by a paſſage from Domeſday, of which the following is a tranſlation:

'The church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe 'holds Stantone in Greteſtanes hundred. There 'are three hides. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and fourteen villeins, with ſeven plow-'tillages. There are three borders, and ſix ſervi, 'and ſix acres of meadow. A wood one mile 'long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and 'was worth 3*l.*' p. 71.

The abbey of Winchcombe purchaſed a charter of free warren in Stanton and Snowſhill 35 H. 3. and their right to that privilege was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Peter de Stanton was tenant of the manor 16 E. 1. The abbey of Winchcombe aſſigned the manors of Stanton and Snowſhill to the abbey of St. Ebrulph at Utica in Normandy, 12 E. 2.

Upon the general diſſolution of abbies, this manor came to the crown, and was aſſigned as part of the jointure of queen Katherine, and holden, together with the advowſon of the church, as of her manor of Eaſt Greenwich.

The king and queen granted their houſe in Stanton, and the manor, with its rights and members, to John Elliot, to hold by the fourth part of a knight's fee, 4 & 5 Ph. & M. and Elliot, abtaining a licence of alienation, conveyed them to Thomas Doleman the ſame year. John Doleman, ſon of Thomas, had livery of the manor, and of the advowſon of the church of Snowſhill, 15 Eliz. Matthew Doleman, of London, haberdaſher, was ſeized of the manor, and of lands here, which he ſold to William Jackſon, alias Boothe, Thomas Warne, Nicholas Kirkham, Humphry Wrighte, Nicholas Izode, and others.

William Jackſon died in the year 1602, ſeized of part of the demean lands of the manor, of common of paſture in Dukemead and Berry Wormington, of the Sheephouſe, and of the tithes of Sheephay; which particulars, except the tithes, were part of the late manor of Stawnton; and William Jackſon, ſon and heir of the ſaid William, was upwards of forty years old at his father's death, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition 2 Jac.

Mr. Izod had a good eſtate here, which he gave by will to Reginald Wynniat, eſq; from whom it deſcended to his ſon, the reverend Reginald Wynniat, M.A. who has lately purchaſed ſeveral others in the ſame place, ſo that he is now poſſeſſed of the greater part of the pariſh; but all courts and royalties have been long ſince neglected. For his arms ſee Dimmock.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 180*l.* a year. The rev^d. Mr. Reginald Wynniat, M.A. is patron, incumbent, and impropriator.

The chapel of Snowſhill is annexed to this church, and the advowſon of them was lately given in exchange, by the reverend Lionel Kirkham, B.D. with the preſent patron, for the rectory of Salford in Oxfordſhire.

The rector has one fourth of the great tithes, and the impropriator has the other three parts. The demean lands are free from tithes.

One yard-land belongs to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and built in the form of a croſs, with a ſteeple at the weſt end.

STANTON or STAUNTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of St. Briavell's, in the Foreſt diviſion of the county, five miles eaſt from Monmouth, two weſt from Colford, and twenty-three ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is full of iron ore, the getting of which is the chief employment of the labouring people, who make very good wages at it.

The name of the village is derived from the Saxon Stan, a ſtone, and ton, a common termination; but whether it was ſo called from the ſtony ſoil, or from a ſtone of a prodigious ſize ſtanding here, I ſhall not determine. This ſtone is placed as it were on a point, ſo as to fill the beholder with apprehenſions of its being ready to fall. It is ſuppoſed to have been a Rocking Stone, placed here in the time of paganiſm, and if ſo, it is the only one of that kind in Glouceſterſhire; but it has now loſt its motion. There are various opinions concerning theſe ſtones. Some have ſuppoſed them to be rude, pagan deities, which the people worſhipped on particular occaſions; but I rather think the Rocking Stone was not the immediate object of worſhip. The more probable opinion ſeems to be, that it was an inſtrument in the hands of the prieſt to aſſiſt his authority in matters of moment and difficulty; who, the better to affect his purpoſe, taught the people, by example and precept, to approach it with great veneration and reſpect. Being ſo nicely adjuſted as to move with eaſe, it ſeemed calculated to decide any queſtion that might be put, by its motion one way or the other, agreeably to the will of the perſon officiating; and ſo of anſwering the purpoſe intended by the antient oracles among the Greeks and Romans.

This village ſtands at the bottom of a high hill, which overlooks the town of Monmouth, and part of the counties of Monmouth and Hereford.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Turſtin the ſon of Rolf holds Stantone in 'Blachelaue hundred. There are five hides. Tovi 'held it of king Edward. In demean are two 'plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and ſix bordars, 'with ten plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, 'and two mills of 35 ſol. and ten acres of meadow; 'a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. 'It is worth and was worth 100 ſol. Tovi holds 'two hides of this land by the gift [elemoſina] of 'king William.' Domeſday, p. 78.

An inquiſition taken 15 E. 1. before William de Saham, Richard de Boyland, Roger Toveday, and John de Mettingham, itinerant juſtices for the county of Glouceſter, recites, That Thomas

Walding de Stanton ought to hold the vill of Stanton with the bailiwick, of the king, in capite, viz. one carucate of land, which paid 26*s.* 8*d.* a year; and that Richard de la More then held it, together with the bailiwick, but the jurors knew not how.

John Walding held this manor 13 E. 3. He is ſoon afterwards called John de Stanton, and held the manor and bailiwick of Stanton in the foreſt of Dean, with its fees and profits, in the 16th, and died ſeized thereof in the 22d year of the ſame reign. Thomas Walding de Stanton died ſeized of the manor, and of the advowſon of Stanton, 8 R. 2. and another Thomas Stanton died ſeized of Stanton 16 E. 4.

The manor came afterwards to the family of Baynham. John Baynham died ſeized of it 20 H. 8. William Baynham, ſon of John, had livery of it 26 H. 8. and levied a fine of it, and of Newland, 6 E. 6.

From the Baynhams it came to the Brains, a reſpectable family in this part of the county. Robert Brain, upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor 1 Eliz. George Winter, eſq; younger brother of ſir William Winter of Lidney, married Anne, one of the ſiſters and coheireſſes of Robert Brain, and in her right was ſeized of this manor, and died poſſeſſed of it, and of Dyrham and Hinton in this county, in the year 1581. John Winter, ſon of George, had livery of Stanton, Dyrham, and Hinton, the ſame year his father died. He commanded the Elizabeth, of eighty tons burthen, as vice admiral under ſir Francis Drake, in his famous voyage round the world in 1577, but he did not accompany him thro' the expedition, for being ſeparated from the admiral in a violent ſtorm, on the 8th of October, 1578, he repaſſed the ſtraits of Magellan, and returned to England.

The Halls were afterwards lords of the manor. Benedict Hall, ſon of Henry-Benedict, and grandſon of Benedict Hall, of Highmeadow, eſq; was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. His only daughter and heireſs, Beata-Maria-Thereſa, was married to ſir Thomas Gage, created viſcount Gage of Caſtle-Iſland in the county of Kerry, and baron Gage of Caſtlebar in the county of Mayo, Sep. 14, 1720. She deceaſing in the year 1749, was buried at Newland, and his lordſhip likewiſe dying in 1754, was buried at Firle in Suſſex, and was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his eldeſt ſon, William-Hall viſcount Gage, the preſent lord of the manor of Stanton. His lordſhip married Elizabeth, daughter of Sampſon Gideon, eſq; and ſiſter of ſir Sampſon Gideon, of Spalding in Lincolnſhire, baronet, and has a fine ſeat at Highmeadow, one part (as it is ſaid) in this pariſh, the other in that of Newland, under which head it has already been taken notice of. His lordſhip's arms are, Per ſaltire ſaphire and pearl, a ſaltire ruby. CREST. On a wreath, a ram proper, armed and ungued topaz. SUPPORTERS. Two greyhounds tenne, gorged with coronets of fleurs de lis topaz. MOTTO. COURAGE SANS PEUR.

William Hall, who married Juliana Nurſe, died ſeized of lands in Staunton, Aſhrug, and Highmeadow 37 H. 8. and left Chriſtopher his ſon twenty-three years old. James Bell died ſeized of lands in Newland, and of a cloſe in Aſhrydge in this pariſh 43 Eliz. Eſch.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the foreſt deanery, worth about 70*l.* a year, of which lord Gage has the patronage.

The advowſon of the rectory of Stanton was granted to William Rigg and Peter Gering 5 Mar. and it was again granted to Richard Robſon 6 Eliz. Miſtakes often ariſe from two places being of the ſame name; thus, what ſir Robert Atkyns ſays of queen Katherine being endowed with this rectory, and of the grant to John Elliot and Alexander Cheſnal 4 Mar. muſt be underſtood of Stanton in Kiftſgate hundred.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a double building, ſupported by pillars, and has a handſome tower in the middle, adorned with pinnacles.

STANWAY.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper part of Tewkeſbury hundred, ſeven miles diſtant ſouth-weſt from Campden, ſix north from Winchcombe, and twenty-one north-eaſt from Gloucester.

The great road from Tewkeſbury to London leads up Stanway-hill, from which the place took its name, for Stanway, ſignifies the ſtony road.

The abbats of Tewkeſbury had a country ſeat here, ſituated a little eaſtward of the church. It was rebuilt and enlarged by abbat Richard Cheltenham, tenham, in the time of king Henry the Seventh, and Leland calls it a fayre Mannour Place, in the ſucceeding reign. The preſent manor houſe is large and handſome, ſituated on the ſlope of the hill, with good gardens, and a caſcade of water, ſeen from the vale below at the diſtance of ſeveral miles. It was built by ſir Paul Tracy, in the reign of king James the Firſt, and was the ſeat and reſidence of Robert Tracy, eſq; 'till the time of his death, in the year 1767. The famous doctor Dover, who inſtituted the Coteſwold Games, died at this houſe in the year 1742, and was buried, at his own requeſt, in the vault belonging to the Tracy family. No gentleman reſides at Stanway-houſe at preſent.

A ſmall brook, called the Leame, runs from hence into the river Iſbourn, which empties itſelf into the upper Avon, near Eveſham; and another ſpring, riſing in the higher part of the pariſh, runs into the river Winruſh, and ſo into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It is ſaid that this manor was given to the abbey of Tewkeſbury by the two brothers Odo and Dodo, who founded that monaſtery in the year 715. It was part of the poſſeſſions of the ſame abbey at the time of the general ſurvey, as appears by the following extract from the record:

'Seven hides in Stanwege belong to the church '[of Tewkeſbury]. There are two plow-tillages 'in demean, and eight villeins, and two bordars, 'with eight plow-tillages. There is a monaſtery, 'and five [plow-tillages] among the ſervi and 'ancillæ, and a ſalt pit at Wich, and eight acres 'of meadow. A wood three furlongs long, 'and one broad. In the time of king Edward it 'was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.*' Domeſday, p. 68.

From this time I find no further mention in the records of the monaſtery at Stanway.

King William the Second granted to the abbey of Tewkeſbury court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Stanway, which grant was pleaded and allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Thomas de Cannings was tenant of the manor 9 E. 3.

This eſtate continued in the abbey of Tewkeſbury 'till the diſſolution of monaſteries, and was then granted by the crown to William Tracy, of Toddington, eſq; anceſtor of the preſent lord Tracy. He ſettled it on Richard Tracy, his ſecond ſon, who married Barbara, daughter of Thomas Lucy, of Charlecot in Warwickſhire, and was high ſheriff of this county 3 Eliz. Sir Paul Tracy, baronet, ſon and heir of Richard, married Anne, daughter of ſir Ralph Shakerly, and ſerved the office of high ſheriff of this county 11 Jac. 1. Sir Richard Tracy, ſon of ſir Paul, married Anne, daughter of ſir Thomas Coningſby, of Hampton in Herefordſhire, and was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 4 C. 1. Sir Humphry Tracy, ſucceeded his father ſir Richard, and ſerved the office of high ſheriff 15 C. 1. His attachment to the royal cauſe in the great civil war, which diſtracted the kingdom in that reign, occaſioned the ſequeſtration of his eſtates by the victorious party, nor did he recover the poſſeſſion of them 'till he had paid 1600*l.* compoſition. Upon his death, without iſſue, in the year 1651, the manor of Stanway devolved to his next brother, ſir Richard Tracy, who alſo died without iſſue, and was ſucceeded by ſir John Tracy, his younger brother; but he likewiſe deceaſing without iſſue, in the year 1677, left the manor of Stanway to Ferdinando Tracy, younger ſon of John third lord Tracy, who married —— daughter of ſir Anthony Keck, lord commiſſioner of the great ſeal, and left John Tracy, eſq; his only ſon and heir. He married Anne, daughter of ſir Robert Atkyns, lord chief baron of the exchequer, by Anne his ſecond wife, daughter of ſir Thomas Dacres of Hertfordſhire, and was lord of this manor at the beginning of the preſent century. By his ſaid wife Anne he had iſſue five ſons, Robert and John, twins; Ferdinando, Anthony, and Thomas; and five daughters, Anne, Catherine, Martha, Elizabeth, and Frances. Robert Tracy, eſq; ſucceeded his father John, and marrying Anna-Maria, daughter of ſir Roger Hudſon, knight, died at Stanway without iſſue, Aug. 26, 1767. And Edward Devereux, lord viſcount Hereford[1], in right of his lady, Henrietta-Charlotte, daughter of the late Anthony-Keck Tracy, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor of Stanway.

HAM-

[1] This noble family derive their ſurname from Evereux, a town in Normandy. The firſt of them who ſettled in England was Robert, youngeſt ſon of Walter earl of Roſmar. This Robert, who in antient records is ſometimes ſtiled de Ebrois, and de Ebroicis, accompanied William duke of Normandy in his invaſion of England, and had an only ſon and heir, Reginald d'Evereux, whoſe ſon and heir, William d'Evereux, had to his wife Helewyſe, who ſurvived him, and gave to the monks of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, certain lands called the Hyde, in Herefordſhire, which were given her in marriage by Walter de Laci.

Euſtace d'Evereux, ſon of William, impleaded Herbert Waleran for one knight's fee in Kington, 5 Joh. Stephen, only ſon of Euſtace, having attended the king in his wars againſt the Welch, as appears by the Clauſe Rolls 7 H. 3. had ſcutage of his tenants in the counties of Glouceſter and Hereford. By Iſabel his wife, he had a ſon William d'Evereux, who was one of the barons marchers, and was ſlain fighting againſt the king in the battle of Eveſham, 49 H. 3. By Maud, ſiſter to Walter de Gifford, he had an only ſon William, who paid a compoſition of three years value to have livery of his father's lands. He was ſummoned to parliament in 1298, and, by Alice his wife, left a ſon ſir William d'Evereux, knight, whoſe ſon, ſir Walter d'Evereux, knight, by Margery his wife, had iſſue ſir John d'Evereux, his heir, and ſir William d'Evereux, ſeated at Bodenham and Whitechurch in Herefordſhire, of whom hereafter.

Sir John married Margaret, daughter of John Vere, earl of Oxford, and having ſerved under the Black Prince in France and Spain, and in various wars by ſea and land, was made a knight banneret, and inſtalled knight of the garter 9 R. 2. He filled many places of great truſt and honour, and was ſummoned to parliament among the barons, from the 8th to the 16 R. 2. He died in 1394, leaving iſſue one daughter Joan, and one ſon ſir John d'Evereux, who married Philippa, daughter of Guy de Bryan, and died without iſſue.

I now return to ſir William Devereux, of Bodenham and Whitechurch, before mentioned, who by Anne his wife, daughter of ſir John Barre, had iſſue ſir Walter Devereux, who married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Crophull, and left iſſue four ſons and two daughters, viz. Walter, John, Richard, Thomas, Elizabeth, and Margaret. Walter, the eldeſt, marrying Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Thomas Bromwich, knight, had iſſue ſir Walter, his ſon and heir, and a daughter Elizabeth; which ſir Walter,

About ſeventy years ago, here were 49 houſes, and about 240 inhabitants, of whom 7 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. Atkyns. The people at preſent are eſtimated at about 260.

Walter, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of ſir John Merbury, knight, had iſſue ſir Walter, his heir; ſir John; and two daughters, Anne and Sibil.

The laſt mentioned ſir Walter married Anne, ſole daughter and heir to William lord Ferrers of Chartley, and was ſummoned to parliament by the title of lord Ferrers, 1 E. 4. and had a grant the ſame year of ſeveral manors, &c. in recompence of his ſervices in the wars againſt king H. 6. He was ſlain, Aug. 22, 1485, in Boſworth-field, fighting for king Richard the Third, leaving iſſue three ſons, ſir John, ſir Richard, and ſir Thomas; and one daughter Elizabeth.

John, the eldeſt ſon, was ſummoned to parliament from the 3d to 12 H. 7. and wedding Cecilie, ſiſter and heir of Henry Bourchier, earl of Eſſex, had iſſue by her Walter, his only ſon, and one daughter Anne, married to Henry lord Clifford. Which Walter, for his gallant behaviour in the king's wars, was elected one of the knights companions of the garter, 15 H. 8. and afterwards, in further recompence of his great prudence, loyalty, and valour, was advanced to the dignity of viſcount Hereford, to him and his heirs males for ever, 4 E. 6. He had iſſue by Mary, daughter of Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorſet, three ſons, viz. Henry, who died unmarried; ſir Richard Devereux, who died before his father; and ſir William Devereux, who, by his firſt wife Jane, daughter of John Scudamore, of Home Lacy in com. Hereford, eſq; having no male iſſue, after her deceaſe married Margaret, daughter of Robert Garniſh, of Kenton in Suffolk, by whom he had iſſue ſir Edward Devereux, of Caſtle Bromwich, in the county of Warwick, of whom hereafter as continuator of the male line.

Sir Richard Devereux, by Dorothy his wife, eldeſt daughter of George the firſt earl of Huntington, had iſſue two ſons, Walter and George; and two daughters, Elizabeth and Anne, and dying in his father's life-time, 1 E. 6. Walter, his ſon, became 2d viſcount Hereford, and was created earl of Eſſex 14 Eliz. By Lettice his wife, daughter of ſir Francis Knolles, knight of the Garter, he had iſſue three ſons, Robert, his ſucceſſor; Walter, ſlain at the ſiege of Rouen, without iſſue; Francis who died young; and two daughters, Penelope and Dorothy.

Robert, the eldeſt ſon, 3d viſcount Hereford and 2d earl of Eſſex, the famous favourite of queen Elizabeth, was beheaded in 1601, leaving iſſue by Frances his wife, daughter and heir to ſir Francis Walſingham, one ſon and two daughters, viz. Robert, Frances, and Dorothy, who were reſtored in blood 1 Jac. 1. whereby

Robert, the ſon, ſucceeded as 4th viſcount Hereford, and 3d earl of Eſſex, and was general of the parliament's forces in the reign of king Charles the Firſt. His lordſhip dying without ſurviving iſſue male, in 1646, the earldoms of Eſſex and Eu became extinct; but the title of viſcount Hereford devolved on ſir Walter Devereux, eldeſt ſurviving ſon of ſir Edward Devereux, of Caſtle Bromwich, before mentioned, only ſon of ſir William Devereux, by his ſecond wife, Margaret Garniſh: which ſir Edward Devereux, by Catherine his wife, daughter of Edward Arden, of Parkhall in Warwickſhire, had ſix ſons and four daughters. Ambroſe, the eldeſt, died unmarried; the others were ſir Walter; William; ſir George, the continuator of the male line; Edward, who died unmarried; and Henry: The daughters were Margaret, Anne, Howard, and Grace.

Sir Walter Devereux, the ſecond ſon, ſucceeded to the title of viſcount Hereford, in 1646. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Knightley, of Borough-hall, in the county of Stafford, eſq; and had iſſue by her five ſons, Eſſex, Leiceſter, Walter, Edward, and John; of whom the firſt, third, fourth, and fifth died without iſſue.

Leiceſter, the ſecond ſon, ſucceeded as 6th viſcount Hereford. He had iſſue, by Elizabeth his firſt wife, daughter and heir to ſir William Withipole, knight, one daughter Frances, married to William viſcount Tracy. And by Priſcilla, his ſecond wife, daughter of John Catchpole, of the county of Suffolk, eſq; left iſſue two ſons, Leiceſter and Edward; and two daughters, viz. Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Anne, miſrepreſented in Collins's Peerage (V. 6, p. 213) as the wife of John-Symes Berkeley, eſq; and mother of the preſent dutcheſs dowager of Beaufort; whereas he married Elizabeth, relict of Edward the 8th viſcount Hereford, as appears by his memorial in the church of Stoke-Giffard, in this county.

Leiceſter, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded as 7th viſcount Hereford; but dying in 1682-3, being then about nine years of age,

Edward Devereux, his brother, became 8th viſcount Hereford. He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to Walter Norborne, of Calne in the county of Wilts, but died without iſſue in 1700, and in him the male iſſue of this branch became extinct.

I return therefore to ſir George Devereux, fourth ſon of ſir Edward Devereux; which ſir George, by Blanch his wife, daughter and heir of ſir John Ridge, of Ridge in Shropſhire, left an only ſon and heir, George, who by his wife Bridget, daughter and heir to Arthur Price, of Vaynor in Montgomeryſhire, eſq; had two ſons, Price, his heir apparent; and Vaughan Devereux, eſq; ſeated at Nantaribba in the laſt mentioned county, and the continuer of the male line. Price, the eldeſt ſon, died in his father's life-time, leaving, by Mary his wife, daughter of —— Stephens, of the city of Briſtol, eſq; an only ſon,

Price, the 9th viſcount Hereford, who married Mary, ſecond daughter of Samuel Sandys, of Ombersley-court, in the county of Worceſter, eſq; by whom he had iſſue one ſon, Price Devereux, born in 1694; and one daughter, Mary; and dying in 1740, aged 77, was ſucceeded by his ſaid only ſon,

Price Devereux, 10th viſcount Hereford. His lordſhip was twice married, but died in 1748, without iſſue; wherefore the honour deſcended to the male heir of Vaughan Devereux, eſq; who, as before recited, was ſeated at Nantaribba in the county of Montgomery, and by Mary his wife, daughter of —— Fox, eſq; left a ſon Arthur Devereux, who married two wives; firſt, a daughter of Evan Glynn, of Glynn, eſq; and by her had two ſons, Arthur, buried at Forden in 1737, without iſſue; and Vaughan, who died an infant in 1712. By his ſecond wife Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Glynn, eſq; he had iſſue

Edward, 11th viſcount Hereford, who took his ſeat in the houſe of peers in 1750. His lordſhip married Catherine, daughter of Richard Mytton, of Gartle in the county of Montgomery, eſq; by whom he had iſſue three ſons and two daughters, viz. Arthur Devereux, born in 1740, and died in 1743; Edward, the preſent viſcount Hereford; George, Bridget, and Catherine. And dying in 1760, his lordſhip was ſucceeded by his ſaid eldeſt ſurviving ſon, Edward, now 12th viſcount Hereford, who married Henrietta-Charlotte, daughter of Anthony-Keck Tracy, eſq; and in her right is lord of the manor of Stanway. His lordſhip's arms are, Argent, a feſs gules, in chief three torteauxes. CREST. In a ducal coronet Or, a talbot's head argent, eared gules. SUPPORTERS. On the dexter ſide, A talbot argent, eared gules, with a ducal coronet of the ſecond. On the ſiniſter, A Rein-deer of the laſt, attired, gorged with a ducal coronet, and chained Or. MOTTO. BASIS VIRTVTVM CONSTANTIA. His lordſhip's chief ſeat is at Nantaribba, in the county of Montgomery.

This pedigree is extracted from Collins's Peerage, where the reader may ſee the authorities.

STAPLETON.

STAPLETON.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Barton Regis, three miles diſtant north-eaſt from the city of Briſtol, nine weſt from Marſhfield, and thirty-three ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is a very pretty village, with ſeveral good houſes, of which the following are the chief:

Heath Houſe is ſituate on a great eminence, about half a mile on the north ſide of the turnpike-road to Briſtol. The terras commands an exceeding fine proſpect of Stoke Houſe, of the village of Stapleton, and of the above-mentioned city, with the pretty villas and populous country about it. The proſpect is cloſed by Lanſdown and Sodbury hills on one ſide, and by Dundery and the Somerſetſhire hills on the other; and in the intermediate ſpaces of this extenſive landſcape, are beautiful and well cultivated incloſures and plantations, thro' which the river Froome, with various meanders, takes its courſe to Briſtol, and forms the quay of that port. There is nothing, for healthineſs of air, can exceed this ſituation, in which reſpect it may emulate even Stoke itſelf. This houſe and eſtate belong to Mrs. Whitchurch, the ſole heireſs of the family of the Walters, who have reſided in this pariſh ever ſince the ſecond year of the reign of king Edward the Sixth.

Oldbury Houſe is the ſeat of Thomas-Hayward Winſtone, eſq; who reſides there. Near to it, upon the hill, is a ſmall camp, which gave name to the place.

At Ridgway Doctor Drummond has a good houſe, pleaſantly ſituated in the road leading to Chipping Sodbury, a little more than two miles diſtant from Briſtol.

Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Hart, and Mr. Harford have very handſome houſes, and pleaſant gardens, in the village of Stapleton, and others may poſſibly deſerve mention that have eſcaped particular notice.

Here is a well, whoſe waters guſh out from many places in a perpendicular direction, like a boiling caldron, and has been uſed as a cold bath, with great ſucceſs, in diſorders for which cold bathing is preſcribed; however, my inquiries concerning it will not authorize me to attribute to this water any greater virtues than cold ſprings poſſeſs in general. This is called the Boiling-well, and is ſo copious as to drive a mill at about a quarter of a mile from its ſource.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There is no particular mention of Stapleton in Domeſday, wherefore it muſt be included in the account of ſome other manor. Sir Robert Atkyns, in the 26th page of his Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire, ſpeaking of Robert de Todeni, ſays, 'He was poſſeſt of eighty one Mannors, 'whereof Riſendon, Horton, Stapleton, and 'Frampton were in Gloſterſhire. He gave a 'Plow's Tillage in Stapleton to the Priory which 'he had founded at Belvoir, to pray for the Soul of 'Adela his Wife.' But this is all miſtake reſpecting Stapleton, of which it does not appear that Robert de Todeni was ever poſſeſſed; but Saperton and Frampton in the hundred of Biſley, were antiently the eſtates of Robert de Todeni.

This manor belonged to the Berkeleys of Stoke Giffard for a long courſe of time. Richard Berkeley, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Sir Maurice Berkeley ſold out divers tenements to the citizens of Briſtol, and others, but reſerved the royalty, which is now veſted in her grace the dutcheſs dowager of Beaufort, ſiſter and heireſs of the late Norborne Berkeley, lord Botetourt, a more particular account of whoſe family is given under Stoke Giffard.
